ACCUSTOMED in the present day to the highest degree of civil and religious liberty that man perhaps can ever expect to enjoy, free to express our opinions without the terrors of the stake or the tortures of the rack, to awe us into silence, or force us into dissimulation, it is with a mixture of curiosity and indignant surprise that we cast back our glance over a space of centuries, and see our ancestors struggling in all the mazes of ignorance and the labyrinths of superstition, alike passive under the mental tyranny of their monkish rulers and the bodily servitude of their despotic lords.

But every thing in this world changes, and excessive tyranny only more effectually prepares the way for perfect freedom. The minds of men in some degree induced to reason by the measures of Henry the Eighth, were no longer to be blinded by false pretences or intimidated by impotent threats; and the commencement of the Reformation dawned steadily and beautifully through the mists of papistic craft that the mental sloth of ages had permitted to accumulate.

It is difficult for us to imagine the despotic control at that time exercised over the whole faculties, whether physical or mental, of our ancestors; and it requires some effort to picture to ourselves the revivifying effect that must have attended the spreading of the reformed doctrines. Men, who had seldom exerted their reasoning powers, were at once invited to discuss theological difficulties, and to solve the deepest mysteries of religion: and as by the reformed tenets every matter was open for discussion, there were few bounds set to inquiry; but various tenets and various opinions were as quickly spread, as eagerly adopted.

At this critical moment a translation of that Book, by all allowed to be the only proper guide of conduct, the only safe chart by whose aid man could hope to steer through the stormy seas and dangerous shoals with which his course is surrounded, was published and set forth:

and its effect in hushing controversy and silencing factious clamour, may not unaptly be compared to that of the sun, when he breaks through the fast flitting clouds, and shining forth, dispels them by his brightness; and day, beautiful day, reigns in all its splendour.

The light that thus broke through the mental darkness of the reign of Henry the Eighth, fed as it was by the Holy Word of God, burnt purely and steadily; and although adverse winds and hostile gusts shook its flame for a time during the reign of Mary, they could not extinguish it, but left it to throw its calm and heavenly rays on our own and future ages.

That translation of the Bible is now for the second time reprinted,* and words of ours are not necessary either to point out its worth or to extol its merit, to cite it for its interest or celebrate it for its rarity—but it goes forth once again into the world as the labour of a man eminent for his piety and learning, as a faithful version of the original Scriptures, and as one of those means to which we may gratefully ascribe the establishment of our present national religion.

THE name of our venerable translator seems to have been derived, not from his parents, but from his birthplace. Yorkshire, according to the best authorities, was his native county; and there can be no reasonable doubt that he was born in the parish of Coverham, in the district of Coverdale, in the North Riding. The year 1488 is given as the date of his birth, but the month and day cannot be ascertained. An obscurity, which no research has been sufficient to dispel, rests on his parentage and early education: we may presume that he spent his boyish days among the tranquil scenes of his native place, familiar with its sloping hills, verdant meadows, and cheerful trout streams, which, as they spread before the eyes of this active minded lad, would arouse many a beautiful thought, and inspire many a happy feeling. Coverham Abbey was situated in the neighbourhood of his birthplace, and perhaps it was by some of the brotherhood of that establishment that young Miles of Coverdale was instructed in the elements of learning.*

At what period he left Yorkshire we are not informed, but in early life he entered the Monastery of the Augustines at Cambridge, of which he afterwards became a brother. Previous to the visit of Erasmus in the year 1511, learning appears to have been at a low ebb at Cambridge; afterwards it revived, having received an impulse from the influence of that extraordinary man: great hostility, however, was manifested by many in the university towards his efforts for the revival of literature, for when the Greek Testament, which he had edited, first appeared in Cambridge, it was absolutely forbidden by the heads of one of the colleges. "They object to us," said Erasmus, "the feigned authority of synods, and magnify the great peril of the Christian faith, and the danger of the church, which they pretend to support with their shoulders, which are much fitter to prop a waggon." Among the scholars who mainly contributed to the restoration of sound learning in the university, Dr. Robert Barnes, who entered the Augustine Monastery in 1514, and became prior and master in 1523, stands preeminent. He cultivated a taste for classic literature, devoted himself to the study of the Scriptures, and after his conversion, became a leading champion of the Reformation. Coverdale, being one of the order of the Augustine friars, was associated with this distinguished individual, and probably derived great advantage from his friendship and instructions.

The priory of the Augustines rapidly advanced in literary reputation under the presidency of Barnes. Foxe says "he caused the house shortly to flourish with good letters, and made a great part of the house learned (who before were drowned in barbarous rudeness), as Master Cambridge, Master Field, Master Coleman, Master Burley, Master Coverdale, with divers others of the university that sojourned there for learning's sake."† Divine Providence was thus preparing our translator, by his habits of study and his distinguished attainments in scholarship, for the great work which has immortalized his name.

The principles of evangelical truth which were embraced by Barnes gradually spread, and many in the university began to rally round him and adopt his views. Drawn together by devout sympathies, they were accustomed to assemble for study, conference, and prayer; and that they might do this as much as possible unnoticed by their enemies, they chose as their place of resort, a house called "the White Horse," which had a private back entrance, convenient for the men of St. John's and King's College, who appear to have formed a considerable part of the assembly. One's imagination lingers over that old "White Horse," with its antiquated apartments, as a kind of infant school, where those babes in Christ were trained up under the care of the Great Teacher, for subsequent usefulness and honour. These meetings, however private, could not fail to attract attention; the house was contemptuously called "Germany," on account of its being thus associated with the principles of Luther; and circumstances at length required that the friends of truth should publicly declare themselves. Hence, on Christmas eve, Sunday 24th December, 1525,* Barnes preached at St. Edmund's Church, Trinity Hall, and boldly avowed his dissent from the superstitious and despotism of Rome. He took occasion in his discourse to make an attack on Cardinal Wolsey, and, if we are to believe what was said by his accusers, to ridicule his golden shoes, his pole-axes, pillars, golden cushions, crosses and red gloves. A vein of humour, and a habit of satirical and witty allusion to the manners of the times, and the abuses in the church, were in those days regarded as by no means unseemly in the pulpit, and were frequently indulged in with great effect by the advocates of the Reformation. The playful sallies, and the hard arguments of Barnes were offensive to the friends of Popery and to the proud cardinal, and very shortly after the delivery of this famous sermon we find the preacher in trouble. He was apprehended, conveyed to London, and brought before Wolsey: convicted of heresy, the alternative was offered—to abjure or burn—poor human nature shrunk from the fiery ordeal, and in an evil moment Barnes signed his recantation.

"Master Coverdale" is mentioned by Foxe as one of the friends who accompanied the prior of the Augustines to London, stood by him in his trials, and assisted in the preparation for his defence the night before he met the cardinal. Such conduct indicates his faithful attachment to Barnes, and shows that he felt a strong sympathy with him in his religious views: but neither his master nor himself, at that time, saw the whole of the truth upon the grand points of the popish controversy. Coverdale was only feeling his way by degrees out of those paths of theological error in which he had been accustomed to walk. So far as he perceived the light, he was prepared to follow it.

Another name of a far different character here becomes connected with Coverdale's history. He was introduced to Cromwell, and the friendship of that extraordinary person led to very important consequences. The patronage of one who was then a favourite with Wolsey, and afterwards so distinguished a favourite with Henry VIII, must have greatly contributed to Coverdale's personal safety amidst the dangers that threatened the advocates of the Reformation; and, moreover, the pecuniary assistance, which there is no doubt that he received from the same quarter in his literary studies, and in his work of translation, were of great value; but though we are disposed to give Coverdale credit for honesty and courage, we admit that it is possible he was for awhile somewhat fettered by his connection with this remarkable man. There is a letter from Coverdale to Cromwell, preserved among the State Papers, without date, which evidently belongs to the commencement of their acquaintance; perhaps it was written in the year 1527, or somewhat earlier.†

* See Foxe's Acts and Monuments. Townsend's edition, Vol. IV. Note 751. The correctness of this date is there established.

† The commissioners date it 1532, but they observe very justly, that it belongs to the commencement of Cromwell's patronage of Coverdale. Mr. Anderson, in his 'Annals of the Bible,' dates it 1531, but Cromwell's patronage had commenced much earlier, for we have a letter to him in August, 1527, from which it appears that Coverdale was then well known to Cromwell, if not in his employ. At the time this letter was written Coverdale was an Augustine Friar, but in 1528 he had thrown off the Augustine habit, and become a secular priest—a circumstance inconsistent with the late date assigned to this letter, unless as Mr. A. supposes, Coverdale afterwards resumed his friar's habit, which is a perfectly gratuitous and very improbable supposition. There seems no reason for referring the expression, "beginning to taste of Holy Scriptures," to the commencement of Coverdale's translation, but simply to his early studies of the sacred volume.

"MOST SINGULAR GOOD MASTER,

"With due humility, I beseech unto your Mastership all godly comfort, grace, and prosperous health. For so much as your goodness is so great toward me, your poor child, only through the plenteousness of your favour and benevolence, I am the bolder of your goodness, in this my rude style, if it like your favour, to revocate to your memory the godly communication which your Mastership had with me, your orator, in Master Moor's house upon Easter Eve, amongst many and divers fruitful exhortations, specially of your singular favour, and by your most comfortable words, I perceive your gracious mind towards me.

"Wherefore, most honourable Master, for the tender love of God, and for the fervent zeal that you have to virtue and godly study, (cordis genibus provolutus,) I humbly desire and beseech your goodness, of your gracious help. Now I begin to taste of Holy Scriptures; now, honour be to God I am set to the most sweet smell of holy letters, with the godly savour of holy and ancient doctors, unto whose knowledge I cannot attain, without diversity of books, as is not unknown to your most excellent wisdom. Nothing in the world I desire, but books as concerning my learning. They once had, I do not doubt but Almighty God shall perform that in me, which He, of his most plentiful favour and grace, hath begun. Moreover, as touching my behaviour, your Mastership's mind once known, with all lowliness I offer myself, not only to be ordered in all things as shall please your wisdom, but also as concerning the education and instruction of others, alonly to ensue your prudent counsel; for whatever there is in you of counsel, nothing is impolitic, nothing but what is divine; for whatever you do, you do nothing inconsiderately, and you never boast that you are a chief philosopher: of the dew of heaven (after the manner of Jacob) you have obtained the chief blessing. From your mighty stream I long to drink, because, in your presence, I would not speak in a common manner. Farewell, thou ornament of literature, of councils, and of all virtues!

"From the Augustine's this May-day. Your child and beedman in Jesu Christ,

"FRERE MYLES COV'DALE."*

From this letter it appears, that Coverdale had recently been introduced to the rising favourite, and had received from him tokens of kindness which inspired his gratitude and confidence. Cromwell was favourable to the Reformation, and had devoted himself in early life to the reading of the New Testament. Coverdale wanted books to assist him in the study of the Scriptures, and the drift of the letter seems to be a delicate application for Cromwell's aid in that respect. The tone of submission and flattery adopted by Coverdale, was one of the vices of the age, in which he was too prone to indulge; and when comparing him with his great contemporary Tyndale, in this point of view, it is remarkable how superior the latter appears. The house in which the interview took place is supposed by Mr. Anderson† to have been Sir T. More's, and this connection between Coverdale and Sir Thomas, suggests another reason for the security which our translator enjoyed in those perilous times. He was still at Cambridge in the Augustine Priory, on the 25th of August of the same year, when he wrote the following letter to his patron:—

"In my most lowly manner, I commend me unto you, evermore desiring to hear of the preservation of your prosperity. So it is, I was required by Mr. George Lawson to deliver this writing to your Mastership mine ownself; notwithstanding, such an impediment hath chanced, that I must desire favour on your behalf for my excusation. For Master Moor's kinsman is not all well at ease, for he labours, it is certainly thought under fever, the fever being of that species that in regard to food, he foolishly turns away from it like a lunatic, but now it is discovered that he is almost rid of it. Wherefore, I beseech you to have me excused, and if I knew that my coming to London might stand with your favour, truly the bird was never gladder of day than I would be to come. But briefly, I am ready at your commandment, for it remains with you to command as you will the abilities of your Miles.

"As for the rest, there is nothing divulged with us that is new, except the rumour among our order that one of our masters is accused of homicide, another is dilated for heresy, and a third is reported of the crime of theft, namely Master Stocks, junior; of which affair I will certify you afterwards, on its being made manifest. I have nothing more to say, every blessing attend you and yours. This may Christ the mighty grant, to whom be honour and dominion for ever.

"From Cambridge 27th August, 1527.

"Yours MILO COVERDALUS."*

This letter would seem to show that Coverdale was at that time in Cromwell's employ, and it expresses a readiness to obey his commands, which would have been more to the writer's credit had it been somewhat qualified. But in Coverdale's mind the truth through "the sweet smell of holy letters" was progressing: the superstitions and errors of popery were seen with increased vividness, and the mental exercises and conflicts of our translator led, eventually, to the renunciation of the friar's cowl, and the bold and warm-hearted preaching of the reformed faith. In the blood-stained register of the Bishop of London, we find the following confession by Thomas Topley, an Augustine Friar, which throws light on the course adopted by Coverdale at this crisis in his history. "My mind," says the confessor, "was much troubled with the said book 'Wicliff's Wicket,' which did make the sacrament of Christ's body, in form of bread, but a remembrance of Christ's passion, till I heard Sir Myles Coverdale preach, and then my mind was sore withdrawn from the blessed sacrament, insomuch that I took it then for the remembrance of Christ's body. Furthermore he said and confessed, that in the Lent last past, as he was walking in the field at Bumstead, with Sir Myles Coverdale, late friar of the same order, going in the habit of a secular priest, who had preached the fourth Sunday in Lent at Bumstead (29th March, 1528), they did commune together of Erasmus' works, and also upon confession. This Sir Miles said, and did hold that it was sufficient for a man to be contrite for his sins betwixt God and his conscience, without confession made to a priest, which opinion this respondent thought to be true, and did affirm and hold the same at that time. Also he saith, that at the said sermon made by the said Sir Myles Coverdale at Bumstead, he heard him preach against worshipping of images in the church, saying, that men in no wise should honour or worship them, which likewise he thought to be true, because he had no learning to defend it."† Coverdale had now taken a decided step:—faithful to his convictions, he confessed his Saviour before men. Perhaps it was with a lively remembrance of the treatment he had received in the early part of his history as an avowed reformer, that he wrote the following passage in his preface to a work entitled, 'The Old Faith.' "Alas! and woe to this unthankful world, for like as a great number that be in prison of Satan, will not come forth when they are called, and the door set open, but go on still stumbling in darkness when the lantern of light is offered them; even so if any man play a wise man's part, and do as he is warned by God's word, he shall have a sort of apish people, a number of dizzards, and scornful mockers; which because the man will not dance in the devil's morrice with them, nor keep their company in the bondage of sin and vice; neither run with them into like confusion, as St. Peter calleth it, laugh him to scorn, and blear out their tongues at him, even like fools and coxcombs of the world. And like as when a poor wretch cometh out of prison, he shall have more to stand gazing and gaping upon him, than to do him good, or to help him to his fees: even so now that God of his mercy hath called us out of Satan's prison, and from the school of false doctrine, my lord's fool, with his companions, standeth staring upon us, and mocketh us because we sit not still with other prisoners. There goeth a fellow of the new learning, saith one; there is one of these new-fangled gossellers, saith another; that is one of the new brethren, saith a third, he followeth the new faith."‡

The bold step taken by Coverdale, and the confession made by Topley, belong to the year 1528; and the next year we find the former on the continent in company with the illustrious Tyndale; according to Foxe's statement, meeting there by appointment, and assisting him in preparing the translation of the Pentateuch for the press; for which his recent studies in Holy Scripture, and his well known acquaintance with the original languages, which must surely have been commenced before this period, had in a good degree qualified him. The immediate cause of his leaving

England, does not appear; but coupling the fact of his departure early in 1529, with the decided course he was pursuing in 1528, the common supposition that it was with a view to his personal safety, seems by no means improbable.*

In the year 1526, copies of Tyndale's version were stealthily brought over from the continent, and were scattered throughout England. The priest, the layman, the scholar, and the peasant, sought and obtained the blessed book, and many and touching are the tales related respecting its circulation and its use. Sometimes it was read in the secret chamber by the midnight lamp, or in the fields and forests far away from the haunts of men; and sometimes it was concealed from the prying search of enemies in warehouses, under heaps of flax; in cottages under the boarding of the floor; and in many other ways which pious ingenuity devised. The portion of God's word which the people now possessed, quickened their desire for the rest of the sacred volume; and the influence of Anne Boleyn, who for a time reigned supreme in the king's affection, disposed Henry to relax somewhat his severe opposition to the circulation of the Scriptures in English. Crammer, who was raised to the primacy in 1533, publicly expressed his earnest desire to see the Bible in the hands of his fellow countrymen, and in the winter of 1534, four days before Christmas, stood up in the Chapter House of Old St. Paul's, amidst a convocation of the clergy, and moved that the king should be petitioned to grant a translation of the entire Scriptures into the English language.† The year 1535 may therefore be regarded as a critical era in the religious history of our country; when the people were waiting for the word of life, and some of the obstacles in the path of its progress were melting away.

Coverdale was the first to meet the existing spiritual want of his country. Where he went after he left Tyndale cannot now be shown; there is a chasm in his history from that time to the year 1535: but his publication then of the whole Bible, shows that during the interval, Providence had been preparing him for the performance of a great work. Judging from the result of his toil given to the world, we may fairly infer that he had been spending some years in study; which, whether it had direct reference or not to such an undertaking, certainly fitted him for it, and provided him with materials for its execution. The history of the origin and progress of his translation is involved in great obscurity. Three or four points only can be satisfactorily ascertained, the rest are left to probable conjecture. He states himself, in his prologue to the edition of the Bible published in 1550, that he undertook, as he was desired in the year 1534, to set forth this special translation. And he also states in his prologue to the translation the following particulars:—"Considering how excellent knowledge and learning an interpreter of Scripture ought to have in the tongues, and pondering also mine own insufficiency therein, and how weak I am to perform the office of a translator, I was the more loath to meddle with this work. Notwithstanding, when I considered how great pity it was that we should want it so long, and called to my remembrance that adversity of them, which were not only of ripe knowledge, but would also with all their hearts have performed that they began, if they had not had impediment; considering, I say, that by reason of their adversity it could not so soon have been brought to an end as our most prosperous nation would fain have had it; these, and other reasonable causes considered, I was the more bold to take it in hand, and to help me herein I have had sundry translations, not only in Latin, but also of the Dutch interpreters, whom (because of their singular gifts and special diligence in the Bible) I have been the more glad to follow for the most part according as was required. But, to say the truth before God, it was neither my labour nor desire to have this work put in my hand; nevertheless, it grieved me that other nations should be more plenteously provided for with the Scripture in their mother tongue than we; therefore, when I was instantly required, though I could not do so well as I would, I thought it yet my duty to do my best, and that with a good will." He also observes in his dedication, "as the Holy Ghost moved other men to do the cost hereof, so was I emboldened in God

* Mr. Anderson in his 'Annals,' &c., Vol. I. p. 239, supposes that Coverdale was sent over "to sound Tyndale," to see "whether he was a practicable man," and "to induce him to return to England," suppositions which reflect greatly on Coverdale's character, and for which there is not the shadow of proof. At this time Coverdale, according to our view of his history, had begun the study of Holy Scripture, and certainly was qualified from his attainments as a scholar to help Tyndale. We see no reason to discredit altogether Foxe's statement on this subject.

to labour in the same." From this then it appears, that he was desired by others to perform this work; that they supplied him with the pecuniary means; that the desire was expressed to him in the year 1534; that the adversity of some better qualified for the undertaking induced him to attempt it; and that he availed himself of other translations in completing his own. It is generally conjectured, and with much probability, that his patron Cromwell was the chief person who prompted him to the undertaking, and supplied him with funds. It seems almost equally probable that the party alluded to as better qualified than himself was Tyndale, whose adversity, by which his imprisonment most likely is intended, synchronises with the date 1534, when the desire was expressed to Coverdale that he should set forth a translation. This brings down the preparation of the work for the press to a very late period, and leaves but a very short time for its completion; for it plainly appears from the colophon to the book, that it was finished 4th October, 1535. Yet, after a very attentive consideration of the matter, we cannot see how, with Coverdale's own statement before us, we can suppose that the translator previously to that period was engaged on a version with an express view to its publication. We are fully aware of the difficulty which presses on this view of the case, arising from the very limited space of time assigned to Coverdale for completing so great a work; but that difficulty is considerably diminished by the following considerations: that according to our view of his history he had been for some time engaged in the study of the Holy Scriptures in the original; that most likely for his own private purposes, or with some general view to future usefulness, he had previously made and preserved translations of some parts of the Bible, a supposition by no means inconsistent with the modest terms in which he speaks of his attainments;* that by his own acknowledgment he availed himself of the aid afforded by existing versions; and especially that he would avail himself of Tyndale's translation in those portions of the sacred volume which that noble veteran had already published. Though we have somewhat modified our views as to the actual amount of Coverdale's labour during the space in question, since we wrote some years ago the sketch of English Translations and Translators, we are still of opinion that he accomplished a herculean task. He looked at immortal souls and felt that their welfare waited on his labours; he looked into eternity and saw that the Bible was the only star which enlightened its gloom; he looked up to God and found in Him an all-sufficient helper in the task he had undertaken.

Coverdale mentions in his prologue sundry translations in Latin and Dutch, from which he had derived assistance, and in another place he limits the number to five—what translations he referred to by this acknowledgment it is very natural to inquire, but very difficult to determine. The Vulgate of course was included; the three versions executed by Paguinus, Leo Juda, and Luther are probably to be added, but as to the fifth, whether it were the Bible of Rudelius, or the Dutch version of 1526, or the Lower Saxon one of 1533, we are at a loss to decide;† perhaps his reason for passing over in silence his large obligations to Tyndale's published versions, was that he felt any acknowledgment of assistance derived from that quarter would be prejudicial to the success of his work, as Tyndale and his translations had been denounced by the ruling powers in England. As to the place where our translator printed the volume, the question, like so many others connected with the origin of the version, can only be answered by conjecture. From a resemblance which the woodcuts bear to those found in Egenolph's books printed at Frankfort, it has been supposed by some that it was executed there; while others again, from the similarity of the type to that which is used in books printed by Froschouer at Zurich, have concluded that he was the printer. Cologne also has been mentioned. Of these Zurich seems to have the best claim to the disputed honour; and to that city it is generally conceded. Could we ascertain that there was the place both of the preparation and printing of the book, the imagination would fondly linger over that cheerful and animated city, "embosomed among vine-clad knolls, meadows and orchards, and surmounted by forests, above and beyond which appear the loftier summits of the Albis," with our translator working in some little room, through the live-long day till after the sun had set behind those alpine heights, and then rising to his task again before the same sun gilded the opposite horizon.

* Mr. Anderson in his 'Annals of the Bible,' Vol. I. p. 553, supposes that the translation was commenced with a view to publication some time before, and that the setting forth relates to the printing of what was previously prepared. For the reasons stated above, we cannot adopt that view.

† See Anderson's 'Annals of the Bible,' Vol. I. p. 565.

The competency of Coverdale to his task has been satisfactorily proved by Mr. Whitaker in his 'Critical Enquiry.' His learning, for the age in which he lived, was very considerable—it was acknowledged by his contemporaries, it is evidenced by his works. The author of the interesting History of Richmondshire, attributes to Coverdale a very curious epitaph, written in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, supposed to belong to the year 1538; which, if it were certainly his production, would confirm his claims to be considered a superior scholar, but most persons, it is apprehended, will feel a little sceptical about the date, on looking at the curious relic, and will be inclined to assign it to a later period.* But while the scholarship of Coverdale is placed beyond dispute, it must be acknowledged that there are many renderings in his version so peculiar, that one is at a loss to find his authority for them; and what is still more remarkable, and deeply to be regretted, he differed from Tyndale in using the word penance and amendment, instead of repentance. Highly as we value the labours of Coverdale, we must greatly prefer, not only in this respect but as a whole, the version of his truly illustrious, though by the men of his generation, dishonoured contemporary. Nor can we help also deeply lamenting the style of extravagant subserviency and fulsome flattery adopted by Coverdale in his dedication to King Henry VIII; a style of address, which, though characteristic of the age, received no sanction from anything which proceeded from the pen of Tyndale. It should, however, in justice to Coverdale be added, that if his dedication be objectionable on account of its flattery, his prologue to the reader is worthy of the highest praise, and abounds in beautiful and profitable thought.

The reception which Coverdale's version met with on its arrival in England, is described by Fulke, in a report which he gives of part of a sermon which he heard the venerable father deliver in that famous old preaching place, St. Paul's Cross. The story related by Coverdale has been referred by Mr. Anderson to the history of the Bible printed in 1539 at Paris, under his superintendence: but that Bible was not Coverdale's translation, nor was it ever called by his name. It was a revision of Rogers' edition; Coverdale could not have referred to it as his own. The edition of 1535 always went by his name, and would certainly be understood to be meant by the audience who listened to his story. "I myself," says Fulke, "and so did many hundreds beside, hear that reverend father, M. Doctor Coverdale of holy and learned memory, in a sermon at Paul's Cross, upon occasion of some slanderous reports that then were raised against his translation, declare his faithful purpose in doing the same; which, after it was finished and presented to King Henry VIII, of famous memory, and by him committed to divers bishops of that time to peruse, of which I remember Stephen Gardiner was one: after they had kept it long in their hands, and the king was divers times sued unto for the publication thereof; at the last being called for by the king himself they redelivered the book; and being demanded by the king what was their judgment of the translation, they answered that there were many faults therein. 'Well,' said the king, 'but are there any heresies maintained thereby?' They answered 'that there was no heresies that they could find maintained thereby?' 'If there be no heresies,' said the king, 'then in God's name let it go abroad among our people.' According to this judgment of the king and the bishops, M. Coverdale defended his translation, confessing that he did now himself espy some faults which, if he might review it once over again, as he had done twice before, he doubted not but to amend: but for any heresy he was sure there was none maintained by his translation."†

Foxe inserts, in his 'Acts and Monuments,' certain injunctions bearing date 1536, in one of which "every parson or proprietary of any parish church" was required to provide a book of the whole Bible in Latin, and also in English, before the 1st of August, to be laid in the choir. This injunction is not found in Cranmer's 'Register,' in Wilkins' 'Concilia,' nor in Burnet's 'Collection of Records,'‡ whence it has been concluded that the clause given by Foxe is an interpolation; but it is far more probable that the clause was copied by the martyrologist from a draft of the * Whitaker's History of Richmondshire, Vol. I. p. 107.

† It is very astonishing that Mr. A. should misquote this in the following manner—"M. Coverdale (who had been corrector of the press) defended the translation." This gives countenance to Mr. A.'s theory; but the passage correctly quoted is opposed to it.

injunctions which, before they were issued and inserted in the 'Register,' underwent alteration. The clause in question, if inserted in the injunctions of 1536, must have referred to Coverdale's version, as no other version of the whole Bible was then published; and hence, according to the view just taken of the document, it would appear that the king's patronage of the book had been obtained, and that Cromwell prepared an order in favour of its circulation, but that some circumstance occurred to prevent the issue of the injunction. That circumstance probably was the death of Anne Boleyn, who perished on the scaffold in May, 1536, deplored by the friends of the English Reformation, which had been advanced by her influence, and was now checked by her removal. Lewis mentions a MS. book of devotions in the family of Francis West, Boxley, Kent, which once belonged to Anne Boleyn, containing a note in the queen's hand, referring to the "glad tidings of salvation being promulgated, published, and set at liberty by the grace poured into the heart of our prince," which note corroborates the idea of Henry having regarded Coverdale's translation with favour before the queen's death; and what more fully confirms and further explains the view we have taken of the case, is a passage contained in a contemporary writer, who informs us that "through the intercession of Queen Anne, the king at last granted that English Bibles might be printed, and placed in every church where the people might read them. Which concession of the king did not then take effect, because shortly after Queen Anne was beheaded."* But though Coverdale's translation never enjoyed the regal patronage of which there was once the promise, it was allowed for awhile to be circulated without hindrance; and if it never attained the popularity so justly acquired by subsequent versions, it enjoyed the honour of taking the lead in the goodly procession of English Bibles which have been so long, and of late in such gloriously augmented numbers, issuing from the press. Nor can we doubt that the reading of it, in multitudes of instances, proved the means of enlightening and regenerating the human mind.

Probably Coverdale was in England in the year 1537, when two works of his were published by Nicholson a printer in Southwark. But the important undertaking to which he devoted himself at this period, and which now claims our particular attention, was the superintendence of the printing of the great Bible.

Matthew's Bible appeared in 1537; it contained the whole of the version which had been prepared by Tyndale. That great man had laboured at the work in obscurity and exile, and then sealed the truth with his blood, the victim of treachery and malice. The book was edited by his friend Rogers, who soon after followed him, through the fires of martyrdom, to the rewards of heaven. A copy of this translation was conveyed to Crammer, and filled his soul with joy: he forwarded the version to Cromwell, pronouncing it better than any other translation previously made. Cromwell recommended it to the king, who sanctioned it, authorising it "to be bought and read within this realm;" thus patronising at last, though unwittingly, the labours of that very man, the honoured Tyndale, whom he had persecuted with relentless cruelty. The Bible became extremely popular, and surpassed in the public estimation the translation by Coverdale. But the clergy were not satisfied with it; the prologue and notes were charged with the taint of heresy, and a new translation was desired. Cromwell projected a new translation, which proved in fact a revision of Tyndale's work, the prologues and notes being omitted. This was the great Bible, the preparation of which he committed to Coverdale. The place selected for the printing of this book was Paris, which was eligible on account of the superior workmen and materials to be obtained there. In June, 1538, Coverdale, and Grafton the printer, who had accompanied him to Paris, were hard at work with their men, as the following letter testifies:—

"After most humble and hearty commendations to your good lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand, that we be entered into your work of the Bible, whereof (according to our most bounden duty) we have here sent unto your lordship two ensamples; one in parchment, wherein we intend to print one for the king's grace, and another for your lordship; and the second, in paper, whereof all the rest shall be made; trusting, that it shall be not only to the glory of God, but a singular pleasure also to your good lordship the causer thereof, and a general edifying of the king's subjects, according to your lordship's most godly request. For we follow not only a standing text of the Hebrew, with the interpretation of the Chaldee and the Greek, but we set also, in a private table, the diversity of readings of all texts, with such annotations, in another table, as shall doubtless elucidate and clear the same, as well without any singularity of opinions, as all checkings and reproofs. The print, no doubt, shall please your good lordship; the paper is of the best sort in France. The charge certainly is great, wherein, as we most humbly require your favourable help at this present, with whatsoever it shall please your good lordship to let us have, so trust we, if need require, in our just business to be defended from the papists by your lordship's favourable letters, which we most humbly desire to have (by this bearer, William Graye), either to the bishop of Winchester, or to some other whom your lordship shall think most expedient. We be daily threatened, and look ever to be spoken withal, as this bearer can farther inform your lordship; but how they will use us, as yet we know not. Nevertheless, for our farther assurance, where through we may be the abler to perform this your lordship's work, we are so much the bolder of your good lordship; for other refuge have we none, under God and our king, whom, with noble Prince Edward, and all you, their most honourable council, God Almighty preserve now and ever. Amen.

The Bishop of Winchester was at that time ambassador in France; but he was soon succeeded by Bonner, then archdeacon of Leicester, who was directed by Cromwell, agreeably to Coverdale's request, to aid the enterprise. An application was also made by King Henry to his royal brother of France to permit the printing of the English Bible in Paris, to which consent was given, and the royal license was duly issued.

In the autumn the work was going on, as appears from the following letters:—

"After most humble and due salutation to your good lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand that your work going forward, we thought it our most bounden duty to send unto your lordship certain leaves thereof, specially seeing we had so good occasion, by the returning of your beloved servant Sebastian. And as they are done so will we send your lordship the residue from time to time. As touching the manner and order that we keep in the same work, pleaseth your good lordship to be advertised, that the mark ¶ in the text signifieth, that upon the same (in the latter end of the book) there is some notable annotations, which we have written without any private opinion, only after the best interpreters of the Hebrews, for the more clearness of the text. This mark Q betokeneth, that upon the same text there is diversity of reading among the Hebrews, Chaldees, and Greeks, and Latinists, as in a table at the end of the book shall be declared. This mark * sheweth that the sentence, written in small letters, is not in the Hebrew or Chaldee, but in the Latin, and seldom in the Greek, and that we nevertheless, would not have it extinct, but highly accept it for the more explanation of the text. This token † in the Old Testament giveth to understand, that the same text which followeth it, is also alleged of Christ or of some apostle in the New Testament. This (among other, our necessary labours) is the way that we take in this work; trusting verily, that as God Almighty moved your lordship to set us unto it, so shall it be to His glory, and right welcome to all them that love to serve Him and their prince, in true faithful obedience. As is only known to the Lord of Heaven, to whom we most heartily pray for your lordship's preservation.

In the preparation of this edition, Coverdale was evidently influenced very much by the principle of expediency, to which he was wont to pay too great regard; and perhaps Cromwell had also given him directions respecting the course he pursued, with a view to meet the prejudices of the day. Passages from the Vulgate, unauthorised by the original, were introduced into the version, with a distinguishing mark. It gives the great Bible a peculiar character, and without Coverdale's statement in the foregoing correspondence, the supplementary matter with the curious marks prefixed, is calculated to puzzle the mere English reader.

Bonner, though raised to the see of Hereford, continued in his diplomatic appointment at Paris, and to all who are acquainted with the subsequent history of this notorious persecutor, it will appear somewhat surprising, when they are informed by Foxe, that the ambassador encouraged the printing of the English Scriptures, invited the printers to his house, visited them in return, dined with them at home, and generously paid the cost of the entertainment. But the bishop was willing at this price to secure the good opinion of Cromwell, who, as the special favourite of his prince, had it in his power amply to repay the services of his friends.

The house of "Francis Regnault," some quaint looking building, in the Paris of the sixteenth century, in all probability long since fallen to decay, was the scene of the honoured toils of our translator, and the industrious printers. To this worthy we are introduced by the letter annexed, in which Coverdale and Grafton solicit a favour on his behalf, in acknowledgment of his former kindness, and in the hope of his future service.

"After most humble and due salutations to your most honourable lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand, that we are instantly desired of our host (whose name is Francis Regnault, a Frenchman) to make supplication for him, unto your lordship. Whereas of long time he hath been an occupier into England more than forty years, he hath always provided such books for England as they most occupied; so that he hath a great number at this present, in his hands, as Primers in English, Missals, with other such like, whereof now (by the Company of the Booksellers in London) he is utterly forbidden to make sale, to the utter undoing of the man. Wherefore most humbly we beseech your lordship to be gracious and favourable unto him, that he may have licence to sell those which he hath done already; so that hereafter, he print no more in the English tongue, unless he have an English man that is learned, to be his corrector, and that is the man well contented withal. He is also contented and hath promised before my lord elect of Hereford, that if there be found any notable fault in his books, he will put the same out, and print the leaf again. Thus are we bold to write unto your lordship in his cause (as doth also my lord elect of Hereford), beseeching your lordship to pardon our boldness and to be good lord unto this honest man, whose servant shall give attendance upon your lordship's most favourable answer. If your lordship show him this benefit, we shall not fare the worse in the readiness and due expedition of this your lordship's work of the Bible, which goeth well forward, and within few months will draw to an end, by the grace of Almighty God, who preserve your good lordship, now and evermore.

The year was drawing to a close,† and with it the noble work in which Coverdale felt so deep an interest. The printers were probably engaged on the last sheet or two, and the superintendent of the press was anxious to ascertain his patron's pleasure, concerning the annotations proposed to be introduced, a circumstance, by the way, which shows how completely the preparation of this volume was under Cromwell's control; so much so, that it ought in justice to bear his name.

A Letter from COVERDALE to CROMWELL.

* State Papers, Cromwell Correspondence, Vol I. No. 115.

† A letter to Cromwell dated 30th October, is preserved among the State Papers. It relates entirely to a charge of disloyalty against a Mr. Beckynsall, whom Coverdale knew, and whose character he vindicates. "Neither," he says, "do I understand otherwise but at this present hour all we that be here of the king's nation are even of one heart and humble mind toward God and our sovereign."

or no. Pity it were that the dark places of the text, (upon the which I have always set a hand), should so pass undeclared. As for any private opinion or contentious words, as I will utterly avoid all such, so will I offer the annotations first to my said lord of Hereford, to the intent that he shall so examine the same, afore they be put in print, if it be your lordship's good pleasure that I shall so do. As concerning the New Testaments in English and Latin, whereof your good lordship received lately a book by your servant Sebastian, the cook, I beseech your lordship to consider the greenness thereof, which (for lack of time) cannot as yet be so apt to be bound as it should be: and whereas my said lord of Hereford is so good unto us to convey this much of the Bible to your good lordship, I humbly beseech the same to be defender and keeper thereof; to the intent that if these men proceed in their cruelty against us and confiscate the rest, yet this at the least may be safe by the means of your lordship, whom God the Almighty evermore preserve to his good pleasure. Amen.

"Written somewhat hastily, at Paris the 13th day of December. Your humble and faithful servitor.

"MYLES COVERDALE."*

The English and Latin Testaments referred to were of an edition which we shall hereafter notice; it is more to our present purpose to mark the indications which the letter gives of rising troubles. The work had proceeded smoothly—it was now to be interrupted. Clouds were gathering, dark and portentous, and soon the tempest burst. Before the letter could reach its destination, there came forth, in the name of the Inquisitor-General in Paris, an instrument, dated 17th December, 1538, prohibiting poor Francis Regnault, and all others whom it might concern, from completing the said Bible in the vulgar Britannie tongue, and from making away with or concealing the sheets already printed, unless they were seen by this same inquisitor. The Englishmen were summoned to attend before this ecclesiastical tribunal, which had thus dared to raise itself in opposition to the royal prerogatives: but stricken with terror, they made a hasty retreat, leaving behind them the unfinished sheets, which were seized by the inquisitors and doomed to the flames; but the lieutenant-general, whose horror of heresy was surpassed by his love of gain, preferred to sell a quantity of them for waste paper; and they became the property of a haberdasher, who bought them, says Foxe, "to lap caps in." But they were destined to a nobler use: Grafton providentially recovered them, and thus completed many of the copies of the Bible which had previously been sent over to England. The repurchase of the haberdasher's sheets appears, from what Foxe says, not to have been effected till the latter part of the year 1539; but we find from existing copies that the book was "fynished in April, anno 1539," whence we are to conclude that the part which was wanting to complete the work was printed in London, and that some copies were perfected before the recovery of such part of the edition as had fallen into the haberdasher's hands. It may be added, that it seems a much smaller portion of the work was destroyed than is generally supposed; inasmuch, as the recovered sheets were sufficient to fill "four great dry fats."

Cranmer's name has generally been connected with this "great Bible," but without reason. He wrote a preface for the new edition of it published in 1540,† but he does not appear to have had any thing to do with its original preparation. Cromwell and Coverdale were the persons to whom the credit and honour of the work must be assigned, the former having projected, and the latter having executed the undertaking. The volume exhibits a revision of Matthew's Bible, and though the renderings often differ very considerably from those in Coverdale's version, it is not improbable that he was the reviser.

The patron of this great work, who, with his manifold infirmities of character, evinced a deep regard for the word of God, and a warm desire for its circulation, took steps to secure that important object as soon as the great Bible was complete, by issuing injunctions to the clergy, enjoining upon them to provide the whole Bible of the largest volume in English, and set up the same in some convenient place within their churches, that their parishioners might commodiously resort to the same and read it.‡

Great was the delight diffused through the community, by this concession of a spiritual right of which they had been long iniquitously debarred. "It was wonderful," says Strype, "to see with what joy this book of God was received, not only among the learned sort, and those that were noted for lovers of the Reformation, but generally all England over by the vulgar and common people, and with what greediness God's word was read, and what resort to places where the reading of it was. Every body that could, bought the book, or busily read it, or got others to read it to them, if they could not themselves; and divers more elderly people learned to read on purpose; and even little boys flocked among the rest to hear portions of the Holy Scriptures read." Both the eye of the poet, and the heart of the saint, must love to linger over the scene of the grey-headed sire, and the child with his curly locks, gathering round the well-spring of divine truth, and slaking their thirst at the living waters. The reading of the Bible in Old St. Paul's,* and in the aisles of many a cathedral and parish church, in the England of the sixteenth century, is one of those beautiful associations with the history of the olden time which an English protestant must fondly cherish.

The following letter to Cromwell by our translator refers to the license which had been granted to Nicholson to sell Bibles and Testaments, and solicits a similar license for the same person to print certain sermons† which Coverdale had prepared for the press, and which had been revised by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It probably belongs to the early part of the year 1539.‡

"After due consideration to your good lordship, I heartily and in most humble wise beseech the same, that inasmuch as the king's most excellent majesty, of his singular grace (by the means of your good lordship as God's instrument in that behalf) hath granted unto this bearer, James Nycolson, his gracious license and privilege, for the sale of his Bibles and New Testaments already printed; and forasmuch as his grace is also informed, and hath seen a part of our postils, or ordinary sermons, which the lord archbishop of Canterbury hath corrected, your lordship, according to your most loving and favourable manner of old, will help and further the said James Nycolson, to the king's most gracious privilege for certain years to print the same, considering the cost and charge that he hath had, not only for drawing of the said sermons out of Scripture, but also in preparing now of his letters and print for the setting forth of the same. This I most humbly require of your lordship, whom God preserve now and ever. Amen.

"Your lordship's humble and daily orator,

MYLES COVERDALE."

Before Coverdale left London for Paris, it seems that he arranged the plan of a Diglot Testament in Latin and English, which he left his friend Nicholson to publish. He wrote the dedication, and permitted the use of his name in connection with the book. But when the volume reached him, he found it had been most carelessly edited and printed, and was "both base, insensible, and clean contrary not only to the phrase of our language, but also from the understanding of the text in Latin." He therefore repudiated the work, and prepared another edition himself, which was printed in Paris, and published with the special approval of Bishop Bonner. The book was dedicated to Cromwell, and Coverdale explains in that dedication the history of Nicholson's incorrect edition. The English printer, however, was bent on securing his own profit, and therefore published himself a new edition of the Diglot, and gave the name of "Johan Hollybushe" on the title-page.

It was probably in the year 1539§ that Coverdale was employed in Berkshire, in the service of his early friend and patron Thomas Cromwell, who had now attained to the dignity of Lord Privy Seal. The subjoined letters, while they prove Coverdale's zeal and activity in searching for popish publications, and in suppressing the worship of one of England's most popular saints, Thomas of Canterbury, also shed a very interesting light upon the character and proceedings of those times.

§ These letters have been considered by Anderson and others, to belong to the year 1538; but the transactions to which Coverdale's letters refer, are described by Strype as taking place in 1539.—(Mem. l. 549,) and the first of the letters is indorsed "Ao XXX," which probably means the year of the king's reign, which would be from April 22, 1538, to April 22, 1539. That Coverdale returned to England after the interruption at Paris, and did not leave till 1540, appears from a letter just published in the volume of Coverdale's 'Remains,' dated Frankfurt, March 26th, 1548, in which he says "I am now on my return to England after an exile of eight years." Twenty-two letters written by him during this period are published in the 'Remains.' Most of these were written at Bergzabern, his stated place of residence. The correspondence is very interesting, and illustrates the piety and the zeal of this good man. They afford scarcely any particulars immediately relating to himself, but they evince much disinterested kindness towards others, and great anxiety for the promotion of religion.

"After my most humble and due salutation to your right honourable lordship, this is to advertise the same, that for lack of diligent inquisition and through overmuch sufferance there are in these countries (and so I fear me in many more) an innumerable sort of such popish books, as not only be incorrect, but are also great occasion to keep the king's subjects still in error, and to make them fall into such like inconvenience as did lately one John Cowper, whose accusation I trust your lordship hath received (or shall do) this week by the justice, in consideration of the premises I have (under your lordship's favourable correction) required the curate of Newbury to call for all such books as were either incorrect or against the king's most lawful act concerning Thomas à Becket, or the Bishop of Rome, by the means of the which request there are brought unto me in these two or three days a great number of such books; wherefore inasmuch as I perceive that this doth turn to the glory of God and to the honour of our most noble king, I humbly require your lordship to grant me authority, and to give me a charge and commandment by your letters, that wheresoever I understand any such unlawful books to be, I may correct them or cause them to be corrected. In the executing whereof I do not doubt but to win the parties, and to make them not only more fervent towards God and his word, but also to increase in due obedience towards the king's highness, whom with noble prince Edward, and you all of their most honourable council the mighty arm of God evermore preserve. From Newbury the vii day of February. Your favourable answer I most humbly require by this bearer my poor servant.

"Your lordship's humble and faithful servant,

"MYLES COVERDALE.

"To the right honourable my singular good lord, the Lord Privy Seal."

"My right humble salutation. Considering my most bounden duty in seeking the honour of the king our sovereign lord, I am constrained to write again unto your good lordship for none other cause so much as to signify unto the same, that as me thinketh (I speak under correction) a great number of the priests of this realm are run in premunire unto the king, inasmuch as they have not utterly extinct all such ecclesiastical service as is against his grace's most lawful supremacy and prerogative, for in the feast called Cathedra St. Peter a great part of their matins is plainly a maintenance of the Bishop of Rome's usurped power. This is evident in all the great matin books of the church of Newbury, and I doubt not but it is so likewise in many churches more. I found it the 7th day of this month, and I wonder at it, considering that it is so long since the act was made for the abolishing of all such usurped authority. This, my very dear and singular good lord, do I open and show only unto your lordship, neither doth any man else in the world know that I have uttered this thing, no, not this bearer, good Mr. Wynchcombe, unto whom (for his true heart towards the king's highness, and love towards your lordship) I might utter right secret things. The ever living God that never failed your good lordship guide the same in doing the thing that is to his glory, and to the honour of our most gracious king. Amen. If it be your lordship's good pleasure I shall do aught further herein, I humbly beseech you to know the same by writing, or otherwise by the mouth of Mr. Wynchcombe.

"From Newbury the viii day of February. Your lordship's humble and faithful servant,

"MYLES COVERDALE.

"To the right honourable and my very singular good lord, the Lord Privy Seal. This to be delivered, ad manus."

"In my most humble wise with like salutation to your right honourable lordship, this is to signify unto the same that, this 4th day of March, one Nicolas Hyde, and one John Gryese, of Henley-upon-Thames, came to me unto Newbury, reporting that in a glass window of our Lady Chapel, in the Church of the said Henley, the image of Thomas à Becket, with the whole feigned story of his death, is suffered to stand still: not only this, but that all the beams, irons, and candlesticks (whereupon tapers and lights were wont to be set up unto images) remain still untaken down, whereby the poor simple, unlearned people believe that they shall have liberty to set up their candles again unto images, and that the old fashion shall shortly return. Item, that one Thomas Woolley, of Henley, did forbid five of his neighbours his house for holding with the gospel, and said that he had evil will for receiving such men of the new learning. So that, in the said town of Henley, poor men are not only discouraged from the truth of God, but it appeareth also that the king's most gracious commandment is not put in execution. Now though Sir Walter Stoner,* knight, be the king's justice of peace at Henley, yet (under your lordship's correction) I reckon great and notable negligence in the Bishop of Lincoln, who being so nigh thereby doth not weed out such faults; yea, I fear it be as evil or worse in many more places of his diocese.

"It is my duty also to signify unto your good lordship, the great oversight of the stationers of London, who for their lucre and gains are not ashamed to sell still such primers as corrupt the king's subjects. A great number of them have my neighbours brought unto me, and a great sort of other most ungracious popish books (both contrary to God and the king's highness) have I taken up within the precincts of Newbury, and will do more, if your good lordship will give me authority, or bid me do it. Whereof I humbly beseech you (my most dear and singular good lord), to have your loving answer by the mouth of this bearer, young Mr. Wynchcombe, and to know your good pleasure what I shall do with these popish books that I have already, whether I shall burn them at the Market Cross or no. Thus the everlasting God preserve your good lordship long to endure. Amen.

"From Newbury, 5th day of March. Your humble and faithful servant,

"MYLES COVERDALE.

"To the right honourable and my very singular especial good lord, the Lord Privy Seal. This to be presented, ad manus."*

In the course of 1540, probably about the time that he lost his patron Cromwell, he went to Germany, where for some time he resided. Tübingen became the place of his abode, and from the university of that city he received a diploma conferring on him the distinction of doctor of divinity. He was now chiefly dependent for support on literary labour, and the education of the young. During the lifetime of Cromwell, his resources probably had been supplied by the bounty of that extraordinary man. When the latter fell a victim to the resentment of his capricious master, our translator lost a friend to whom he was under many temporal obligations, and a patron whose influence somewhat affected the independence of his character, and guided his proceedings to a greater extent than was desirable. Coverdale seems to have leaned too much on Cromwell, to have submitted too implicitly to his directions: to have deferred too humbly to the judgment of that politic minister. He certainly did not possess that bold independence of mind which marked the course of his distinguished contemporary, Tyndale. The latter had the self-erectness of the oak, the former, like the vine, appeared to need some outward prop. After Coverdale left Tübingen he went to reside in the dominions of the duke of Deux-ponts, and being well skilled in the German language, and a man of literary and theological reputation, he was favourably noticed by the duke, and appointed to the benefice of Bergzabern. During his stay on the continent, but at what time or place cannot be ascertained, he married a pious woman, the sister of a lady, the wife of Macchabæus Alpinus, a distinguished Scotchman, who held a high appointment under the king of Denmark. Coverdale thus took a step which thoroughly identified him with the reformers who had abjured the celibacy of the priesthood, as one of the great evils of the church of Rome. About this time, probably, he wrote and published his translation of Calvin's treatise on the Sacrament, to which he subjoined "the order that the church and congregation of Christ in Denmark doth use." At the close of which tract he remarks, "Let no man be slack in his duty; but give God that which is his, and to the king the things that belongeth unto him." "This I say to stop the mouths and the blasphemous tongues of such as will not cease to rail on men, and to slander me (yea, even to the king's majesty), as though I were a perverter of common order, or took upon me to change the laws and to make new statutes. Nay, ye ungodly hypocrites, not so, but as I am sure that there is heavy damnation laid up for all such subjects as rebel or make sedition against the prince, or disobey the least commandment of God in their sovereign, even so I am assured that there is no less damnation prepared for those rulers or heads that make unjust laws and cruel statutes, to maintain their own lusts and oppress the poor."

In 1547 he was again in England, holding the appointment of almoner to Queen Catherine. At this time he enjoyed a high reputation for his learning and piety, and was one of the persons employed in the preparation of Erasmus's paraphrase of the New Testament for the use of English readers. He wrote the dedication of the second volume to Edward VI, and prefixed Tyndale's prologue to the epistle to the Romans, thus evincing the estimation in which he held the labours of his departed fellow exile. Probably he translated the former part of the volume as far as the end of the epistle to the Galatians.

Coverdale continued in the service of Catherine till her death, which happened in September, 1548. After the decease of Henry she married Lord Seymour, and went to reside at Sudley Castle, Gloucestershire, whither Coverdale accompanied his royal mistress. He officiated at her funeral, and carefully guarded the persons who were present against supposing that he gave his sanction to the popish ceremonies performed for the dead, some remains of which lingered in the service at these royal obsequies. The preacher requested "that none there should think, say, or spread abroad that the offering which was there done, was done any thing to profit the dead, but for the poor only: and also the lights which were carried and stood about the corpse were for the honour of the person, and for none other intent nor purpose."

After the death of the queen dowager, Coverdale was variously employed. He preached at St. Paul's Cross, on the 27th of April, 1549, when some Anabaptists did penance. In the summer of 1550, when Lord Russel went down into Devonshire, to quell the disturbances which arose from both civil and religious disaffection to the existing government, Coverdale accompanied the army, with the view of subduing the popular mind to obedience and loyalty, by the gentle influence of argument and expostulation. After the victory of Exeter, he celebrated the event in a thanksgiving sermon. For these services, according to an entry in the council book of Edward VI, 20th of June, 1550, Coverdale received the sum of forty pounds. In this year also two new editions of our translator's Testament were printed, and one of the Bible. On the 18th of January, 1551, he was put upon a commission for the seizure and trial of heretics; a commission which was the renewal of a former one, unhappily distinguished by its intolerant proceedings against the unfortunate Joan of Kent. The new commission proceeded in the footsteps of the old one, and doomed to the stake a Dutch Arian. What part Coverdale took in the proceedings of the commission, or whether he took any part in them at all, we cannot determine. For the honour of his character, we hope that no considerations induced the reformer to implicate his name in the performance of deeds which must have been revolting to his benevolent heart; yet we cannot forget that men as kind as he, were so warped by the intolerant spirit of their age that, under the influence of a stern but most mistaken sense of duty, they refused all mercy to those whom they had convicted of heretical opinions.

The next glimpse we have of Coverdale is at Westminster, where, on the 7th of March, 1550 (O.S.), we find him preaching a funeral sermon for Lord Wentworth, who had been lord chamberlain, and at whose funeral special honour was done to his memory. Coverdale was on the road to high preferment. His office in the queen dowager's household, and the services he had performed for government, recommended him no doubt to the patronage of those who were in power, while his learning, active habits, and tried zeal in the cause of the Reformation, qualified him for some distinguished post in the English church. As early as the June of the preceding year mention is made in a letter from Peter Martyr then at Cambridge, of the probable promotion of Coverdale to the see of Exeter, in the room of Vesey, who from age and infirmity was unable to perform his episcopal duties. On the 14th of August, 1551, King Edward nominated Coverdale to the bishopric, Vesey having been induced to resign. But though by this appointment he was exalted to honour, and became possessed of influence, his pecuniary advantage was of small amount, as Vesey had alienated the revenues of the see to a very large extent. Indeed, such were the straitened circumstances of Coverdale, that he felt himself compelled to petition the king to relieve him from the payment of the first-fruits. Nor was it without considerable delay that he was able to proceed to his diocese; "such," says Strype, "were at that time the urgent affairs of state, or the secret hinderers of the gospel." Through Cranmer's influence matters were at length arranged; and on the 30th of August, Coverdale was consecrated at Croydon, bishop of Exeter. In the following September he was licensed to preach; a form which seems to have been necessary even for bishops in those days: and in the same month another and very curious license was granted him, allowing him and his wife Elizabeth, and five or six guests at their table, to eat meat on fast days.*

On the 6th of October a commission was addressed to eight bishops, of whom Coverdale was one, together with eight civil and eight common lawyers, directing them to undertake a revision of the ecclesiastical laws of the realm. Strype states* that the commissioners diligently pursued their task, and completed it; but in consequence of the king's early death the contemplated measure of reform was never carried into effect. In the discharge of the secular duties of his episcopal office Coverdale was very diligent, for it appears from the Lords' Journals, in 1552 and 1553, that he was not absent from the sittings of the House more than three times altogether. But as the whole of the two sessions did not occupy quite four months, these engagements would not detain the bishop very long from his diocese, where in the discharge of his spiritual functions he was most exemplary.

The following character of Coverdale, during his residence at Exeter, is given by Hoker his contemporary, who was chamberlain of the city. "He preached continually upon every holy day, and did read most commonly twice in the week in some one church or other within this city. He was after the rate of his livings a great keeper of hospitality, very sober in diet, godly in life, friendly to the godly, liberal to the poor, and courteous to all men, void of pride, full of humility, abhorring covetousness, and an enemy to all wickedness and wicked men, whose company he shunned, and whom he would in no wise shroud or have in his house and company. His wife, a most sober, chaste, and godly matron, his house and household another church in which was exercised all godliness and virtue. No one person being in his house which did not from time to time give an account of his faith and religion, and also did live accordingly; and as he had a care for the good success in religion, so had he also for the direction of the government in ecclesiastical causes, and because he was not skilful therein, neither would be hindered from his godly studies, and be encumbered with such worldly matters, which, nevertheless, he would have been done in all uprightness, justice, and equity; he sent to Oxford for a learned man to be his chancellor, and by the ministry of the writer hereof, he procured and obtained one Master Robert Weston, doctor of the civil law, and afterwards lord chancellor of Ireland, unto whom he committed his consistory, and the whole charge of his ecclesiastical jurisdiction, allowing unto him not only all the fees thereunto appertaining, but also lodged and found him, his wife, family, horse and man, within his own house, and gave him a yearly pension of forty pounds. And surely the bishop was no more godly and careful of his part concerning preaching, but this man also was as diligent and severe in doing of his office without reproach of being affectioned or corrupted. And notwithstanding this good man was a blameless bishop, and lived most godly and virtuous, yet the common people, those old bottles, would receive no wine, could not brook or digest him, for no other cause but because he was a preacher of the gospel, an enemy to papistry, and a married man. Many devices were accounted against him for his confusion, sometimes by false suggestions, sometimes by open railing, and false libels, sometimes by secret backbitings, and in the end practised his death by poisoning, but by the providence of God, the snares were broken, and he delivered."†

In 1550 a new edition of Coverdale's Bible was printed at Zurich, which was the last previous to the first edition in the present form published in 1835. It was reissued with a new title-page in 1533, and "set forth with the king's most gracious license." It must have been one of the last instances in which that license was given, for Edward, after a short and anxious reign, was removed to another world on the 6th of July of the same year. It proved a mournful day for the protestantism of England, and her faithful sons were soon made to feel the weight of papal intolerance.

On the 22nd August Coverdale was summoned to appear before the privy council at Richmond, and on the 1st of September he made his appearance, when he was ordered to await the council's further pleasure. On the 28th of the same month Vezey was reinstated in the see of Exeter, on the pretence that his previous resignation had been extorted from him by terror. Coverdale, however, though ejected from his bishopric, was not like the rest of the distinguished reformers committed to prison, but was suffered to remain at large, only giving sureties to appear before the council whenever summoned to do so. Yet the fear of persecution did not induce him to swerve from his steadfastness in the reformed faith, for we discover that when, after the famous public disputation at Oxford between the popish divines and Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, the other imprisoned brethren signed a declaration, stating their views of truth, and avowing their resolution, "when they cannot obey, but must disobey God, then to submit themselves with all patience and humility, to suffer as the will and pleasure of the higher powers shall adjudge," the faithful Coverdale shrunk not from signing the document in the following manner, "To these things above said, I, Myles Coverdale, late of Exon, consent and agree with these mine afflicted brethren, being prisoners, with mine own hand." The heroes of the protestant faith just named nobly perished at the stake, but Coverdale, through the mercy of Divine Providence, was permitted to escape.

On the 4th February, 1555, Rogers was led to Smithfield, the first of the illustrious band who there ascended in "chariots of fire" to heaven. Fourteen days after Rogers's execution, Mary gave her permission to Coverdale to leave the country,—a very remarkable circumstance which requires explanation. He had married a lady who was sister to the wife of Macchabæus Alpinus, at that time chaplain to Christian II, king of Denmark, and professor of theology in the university of Copenhagen. He was a man of influence, and a favourite with the Danish sovereign, and through his intercession his royal master was induced to write to Mary on behalf of Coverdale. The king wrote on the 25th of April, 1554, soliciting the reformer's liberation and pardon, to which Mary replied, that Coverdale was under restraint simply on account of certain debts which he owed to the crown. The king rejoined, in a letter dated the 24th of September, that he was glad it was only a debt that occasioned difficulty, and added that, as the bishopric had not been enjoyed long enough to afford Coverdale the means of paying any thing, his majesty hoped that he would shortly be permitted to visit Denmark, and to "make declaration concerning the benefit of his welfare." Some months passed; Mary seemed unwilling to comply, but it would not do for her to disturb the friendly understanding which existed between the English and Danish courts, and therefore she tardily granted in the following February the king's request.

Mr. Anderson, in his valuable work on the Annals of the Bible, suggests that there was another circumstance which contributed to Coverdale's escape.* During the trial of Rogers, Gardiner, who presided over the iniquitous tribunal, on hearing the protomartyr's observation, that the queen "would have done well enough but for Gardiner's council," declared "the queen went before me, and it was her own motion;" of the truth of which we have no doubt, for it is well known that Mary afterwards stimulated Bonner to his deeds of blood.† Mr. A. remarks, that Gardiner's assertion placed the queen before the country in one of the most critical of all positions as the sole and imperative persecutor; and he adds, "there can be no doubt from what followed, had made her tremble not only for herself, but the husband on whom she at this time doated." He alludes to the well known circumstance of a Spanish divine being appointed to preach against religious persecution as a miserable artifice to lull the public mind; and then connects the permission given for Coverdale to leave the country with the examination of Rogers, as if it were intended by Mary to counteract the impression produced by Gardiner's remark. It certainly appears very inconsistent with this that the queen should, a few weeks afterwards, permit the work of persecution to be resumed, and doom more victims to the stake;‡ and, as to the sermon of the Spanish friar, it seems to have been entirely a device of Philip's to remove odium from himself, who was suspected of intending to introduce the inquisition to England. There is no evidence of Mary's interfering in any way at this time to check the persecution, and soothe the minds of her subjects; and, as to the latter object, the release of Coverdale was too inconsiderable a circumstance to be likely to aid in its accomplishment. The interference of his Danish majesty was no doubt the main, if not the only, cause of the translator's liberation.

On the 19th of February, 1555, Coverdale obtained his passport, and embarked, no doubt with great joy, for the shores of Denmark. Soon after he was gone the lurid flames of persecution blazed over his native land, and sympathy with the sufferers for the truth, many of whom were doubtless well known to him, and well beloved, must have been mingled with his devout gratitude for the interposition of the Almighty in his escape. He was kindly received by the Danish king, through whose instrumentality he had escaped the "mouth of the lion;" and it is said that his majesty offered him a benefice in the church of Denmark; but Coverdale, unacquainted with the Danish tongue, and anxious to be employed in preaching the gospel, preferred to cast in his lot among some English exiles at Wesel in Friesland. After remaining there a short time, he returned to the former scene of his labours; and on the 15th of September arrived at Bergzabern, at the request of his old friend, Wolfgang, duke of Deux-ponts. On the 15th of December, 1558, we find him at Geneva, where he joined in writing* a letter to the church at Frankfort, congratulating them on the accession of Elizabeth to the English throne, and entreating them to lay aside their present dissensions respecting ceremonial matters, the continuance of which would give so much joy to their enemies. The churches of the English exiles on the continent were at the time much distracted by controversies on points of ceremony and discipline; but there is no evidence of Coverdale having had any connection with them, save in the way indicated by the letter above noticed. It was in accordance with his gentle spirit to inculcate lessons of peace, though his well known attachment to the cause of scriptural truth evinced that he regarded the wisdom which cometh from above as "pure," and not permitting him to sacrifice principle in order to be "peaceable."

The name of Coverdale has sometimes been associated with the Genevan New Testament, published in 1557, but it is highly improbable that he was at Geneva so soon. The Genevan Testament, as appears from the preface, was the work of one person, a fact strangely overlooked by many authors, and this person there is good reason to believe was William Whittingham.† That he had some share in assisting the preparation of the Genevan Bible is not altogether improbable, as he was there a few months while the work was going on; but the principal part of the undertaking certainly rested with others, probably Whittingham, Gilby, and Sampson.‡

The accession of Elizabeth to the throne of England was a signal for the return of the protestant exiles, and among the rest, Coverdale soon found his way to his native land. On the 12th of November, 1559, Coverdale again took his place in the old pulpit of St. Paul's Churchyard, where the friends of the Reformation now once more gladly assembled to hear the faithful and warm-hearted instructions of their favourite teachers. The next notice of our reformer is discovered in connection with Archbishop Parker's consecration, in which ceremony Coverdale, with Barlow, Scory, Bale, and the suffragans of Bedford and Thetford, took a part. From this it would appear that Coverdale was still regarded as a bishop of the church of England, his deprivation in the reign of Mary being treated as illegal. It seems probable that the intention was to restore this old veteran to his diocese at Exeter, but that his conscientious scruples in reference to certain ceremonial matters enforced in the English church under Elizabeth, prevented him from enjoying his former dignity. At the consecration of Parker he appeared in a plain black gown, while his episcopal brethren were arrayed in surplices; and to the end of his life it is well known that he retained his dislike to what he considered popish vestments. But though his conscience would not allow him fully to conform to the established order of things in the church, and he was thereby excluded from his former see, yet he does not seem to have relinquished his title to the episcopal character, for he signed himself throughout the rest of life, "Myles Coverdale, quondam Exoniensis."

Grindall, the bishop of London, was a friend to Coverdale. He sought to obtain for him the bishopric of Llandaff, looking upon him as a neglected man, and thinking perhaps that conformity to ecclesiastical laws about vestments might in his case be very well dispensed with. On the failure of other plans for his promotion and comfort, Grindall at length succeeded in making some provision for him by giving him the living of St. Magnus, near London-bridge. He was collated to the rectory on the 3rd of March, 1563; but poverty still clung to him, for he could not pay the first-fruits due to the queen. He wrote to Archbishop Parker the following letter on the subject.

"My duty considered in right humble and faithful wise. These are in like manner to beseech your grace, most reverend father, and my singular good lord, that as my good lord of London, tendering as well my weak and feeble age, as also my poor travail in God's husbandry within his diocese, hath most gently conferred upon me the benefice of St. Magnus in London, being in value an hundred marks or thereabouts

so it may please your grace to join with his lordship in suit for me to the queen's most excellent majesty, that in favourable consideration how destitute I have been of a competent living in the realm ever since my bishopric was violently taken away from me. I being compelled to resign, and how I never had pension, annuity, or stipend of it, these ten years : how unable also I am either to pay the first-fruits, or long to enjoy the said benefice, going upon my grave, as they say, and not like to live a year. Her majesty, at the contemplation of such reverend, honourable, and worthy suitors, will most graciously grant me her warrant and discharge for the first-fruits of the said benefice. And as I am bold most humbly to crave your grace's help herein, so am I fully persuaded, God willing, to show myself again as thankful, and in my vocation, during my short time, as faithful and as quiet as I can. Thus having uttered my boldness, I most humbly commit your grace and all yours to the mighty protection of God. From London, Jan. 29.

The following letter relates to the same subject, and forms another affecting memorial of the poverty and sorrow of this eminent servant of Christ.

BISHOP COVERDALE to SIR WILLIAM CECIL.

“My duty considered in right humble wise unto your honour. These are in like manner to beseech the same, that whereas my lord of London, tendering as well mine age as my simple labours in the Lord's harvest, hath very gently offered me the pastoral office and benefice of St. Magnus in London; even so it may please your honour to be means for me to the Queen's most excellent Majesty, that in favourable consideration, not only how destitute I have been ever sith my bishopric was taken from me, and that I never had pension, annuity, or stipend of it these ten years and upward; but also how unable I am, either to pay the first-fruits, or long to enjoy the said living, I going upon my grave, not able to live over a year, her Majesty at the contemplation hereof may most graciously grant me the first-fruits of the said benefice, which her highness must needs have again anew, when I am gone.

“Heretofore (I praise God for it!) your honour hath ever been my special help and succour in all my rightful suits. If now, that poor old Myles may be provided for, it please your honour to obtain this for me, I shall think this enough to be unto me as good as a feast. Thus most humbly beseeching your honour to take my boldness in good part, I commit you, and all yours, to the gracious protection of the Almighty.

Poor Coverdale! His Divine Master, for wise and gracious purposes permitted him to struggle with many trials in his old age, for in the same year in which he was so teased by poverty, he was smitten with the plague, from which, through the goodness of God, he was restored and was permitted to resume his ministerial labours. It might have been expected that the remainder of his days would be spent in the enjoyment of peace and honour. He was now settled in his rectory, beloved by his parishioners, and highly esteemed by the friends of the Reformation. The University of Cambridge, in the year 1563, had conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity; and in the following year, had commissioned him as a deputy to confer a similar honour on Bishop Grindall; but despite of his piety, labours, usefulness, honour, and old age, this devoted servant of God was soon involved in difficulties again, owing to the stringent enforcement, by the ruling powers, of the ecclesiastical regulations relating to habits and ceremonies. A letter written on the 25th March, 1566, indicates that the veteran reformer was in trouble through his conscientious scruples about conformity to these regulations, and gives us some idea of his increasing infirmities.

BISHOP COVERDALE to the REV. MR. ROBINSON, CHAPLAIN to ARCHBISHOP PARKER.

“My duty considered in right humble and most hasty wise. Whereas, I am summoned to appear, with others, to-morrow afore my lord's grace, at Lambeth, I beseech your worthiness to be means for me unto his grace, that at this present I may be dispensed with; not only for that I am unwieldy, and could neither well travel by land, nor altogether safely by boat, but also for other considerations which this bearer, my dear friend, shall signify unto you by mouth. Thus being desirous of your gentle answer, I commend you and all yours to the gracious protection of God. March 25th, 1566.

In the July of the same year he united with Humphrey and Sampson, two distinguished Puritans, in writing a letter to Farrell, Viret, Beza, and other divines on the continent, respecting the vestmentarian controversy, which, as it exhibits the opinions of Coverdale on the subject, and throws light upon his position at this time, we shall venture to insert, though it be rather long.

MYLES COVERDALE, LAURENCE HUMPHREY, and THOMAS SAMPSON, to WILLIAM FARRELL, PETER VIRET, THEODORE BEZA, and others.

"We must not only, honoured masters and brethren, appear troublesome to your reverences by so frequently addressing you by our friends and our letters, but must seem also very regardless of our duty to the church, by disturbing you, who are occupied in matters of far greater importance, with the relation of our trifles. But yet the unhappy condition of our times, and fresh troubles, compel us to have recourse to you, not only that you may be informed more fully of the state of our affairs, and our own opinions respecting them, but that we also may more fully understand your sentiments. Our affairs are not altered for the better, but alas! are sadly deteriorated. For it is now settled and determined, that an unleavened cake must be used in place of common bread; that the communion must be received by the people on their bended knees; that out of doors must be worn the square cap, bands, a long gown, and tippet; while the white surplice and cope are to be retained in divine service. And those who refuse to comply with these requirements, are deprived of their estates, dignities, and every ecclesiastical office; namely, brethren, by brethren and bishops, whose houses are at this time the prisons of some preachers; who are now raging against their own bowels; who are now imposing these burdens not only on their own persons, but also on the shoulders of others; and this too at a time when in the judgment of all learned men they ought to have been removed and abolished altogether. Thus you have the image and representation, such as it is, of our church. Now then, hear our opinion upon this state of things. We think that it must be assumed in this question, that the Jewish, Turkish, Christian, and Popish religions have each their own peculiar sacraments and signs; and that external profession ought to be the test and badge of any one's doctrine; and that we are to seek our pattern not out of the cisterns and puddles of our enemies, but from the fountain of the Scriptures, and of the churches of God; so as not to be connected by any similarity of rites with those from whose religion we are altogether abhorrent; which rule we read, was diligently observed by our forefathers in respect to the sabbath and passover of the Jews, the fastings of the Manichees, and the trine immersion of heretics. Nor, indeed, can we regard these things as altogether indifferent, when compulsion is made use of, and when too, they are branded with the mark of superstition; nor ought anything to be obtruded (on the church) by the authority of the sovereign, without its having been lawfully discussed in a Christian synod: nor ought agreement in ceremonies everywhere to be required of necessity, especially when it is in common with the enemies of the faith: nor is there any occasion in the church of Christ either for the Aaronic priesthood, or pharisaical ambition, that sacred garments should be worn now-a-days in the Christian temple, or that a dress not common, but distinct and peculiar, should be prescribed for ordinary use. But we think with Celestine, that the clergy should be distinguished from the people by their doctrine, not their garments; their conversation, not their dress; their purity of mind, not their adornment of person; lest we begin to hanker after novelties, tread under foot the order received from our forefathers, impose upon the minds and eyes of the simple, and make room for vain and unprofitable superstitions. Besides, as many of us as have cast out these things from the churches committed to our trust, cannot restore them without grievous offence and abominable impiety: and since a door would also be opened to other mysteries of iniquity, and the love of the godly be offended, and the pride and boldness of the wicked be encouraged, without even any pretence of edification; and since it is not lawful, according to St. Paul's rule respecting things indifferent, for every one to rest in his own persuasion, but that that should be regarded as lawful which is not displeasing to certain men; we considered it more for the good of the church to stand fast in our liberty with an accession of godly men on our side, than to depart from the opinion we have taken up, and the custom we have received, to the scandal of many, and the downfall of purer doctrine. This is our opinion, and also that of a most excellent personage. We now, most illustrious and very dear masters and brethren, request you by our most intimate communion in Christ, to point out the eyensore to us who are tossed about on the waves; and either to show us a better way if we are in error, or confirm us, when doubting, in our holy purpose. The question, we confess, is nice and difficult, whether it is better to yield to circumstances, or to depart; to admit the relics of the Amorites, or to desert our post? Either alternative is harsh, grievous, and productive of mischief both to ourselves and the church. Which is the better do you with your wonted wisdom declare, because we are lingering in suspense as in the last extremity. We also request of you and your brother ministers to put forth at the earliest opportunity some treatise on the nature of things indifferent, on ceremonies, on the sacerdotal habit; by which both our church and those of Saxony may be instructed, and the zeal of our sovereigns inspirited to the demolition of all the distinctive marks of antichrist. We make it, lastly, our request, that you would admonish our bishops by letter not to persecute Joseph on account of a garment; nor to rend the church with such a schism for so slight a cause; but that even in the dissimilarity of rites they may preserve the sweetest harmony of spirit and brotherly love. For far be it from us to think of them otherwise than as becomes friends and brethren. The sum is this. We request these three things; your reply to the questions here proposed by us, and some treatise to all the churches generally; a letter to the bishops privately, and, if you please, to such of her majesty's councillors as you may be acquainted with, so that this whole controversy may issue in a christian reconciliation, and not in a cruel separation. Communicate this letter to all your brethren, that we may hear what the Lord may speak out of the mouth of two or three witnesses. May the Lord Jesus preserve his church pure and inviolate even to the day of his just judgment! Your most devoted,

Coverdale forfeited his benefice by conscientiously refusing to obey the act of uniformity, but he still continued to preach. "Many of the people," says Strype, "ran after Father Coverdale, who took that occasion to preach the more constantly, but yet with much fear, so that he would not be known where he preached, though many came to his house to ask where he would preach the next Lord's day." He continued his labours till within a few months of his departure to a better world, which happened the 20th of May, 1567, in the 81st year of his age. He was buried in the church of St. Bartholomew, behind the Royal Exchange, and his funeral was attended by multitudes who revered his memory and bewailed his loss.

When the Church of St. Bartholomew was pulled down in 1840, careful search was made for Coverdale's remains: they were discovered in a grave within the chancel. A particular account of the exhumation was drawn up, from which it appears that the skeleton was perfect, the skull alone being decomposed. The coffin was removed to the church of St. Mary Magnus, and now the bones of the translator repose within the walls which one echoed with his voice.

THE ORIGINAL EDITION OF THIS BIBLE.

PRINTED IN 1535.

WHILE the reprint of this Bible cannot fail to be welcome to the public generally, there are many who, we feel certain, will not be dissatisfied to have some bibliographical details concerning so curious and valuable a work.

The book itself is printed in a very peculiar angular Swiss or German type. Its size is a small folio, and there is no name of place or printer in it.

The copies of this Bible known to exist, are those in the Libraries of the British Museum.—Bodleian.—Public Library, Cambridge.—King's College, Cambridge.—Sion College.—All Souls' College.—Trinity College, Dublin.—Lambeth Library.—Bapt. Mus. Bristol.—DUKE of SUSSEX.—Earl of Leicester.—Earl Jersey.—Earl Spencer.—Dr. Coombe.—The late William Coombes, Esq.—George Offor, Esq.—B. Harrison, Esq.—Rev. R. "Of seven copies of this edition," says Mr. Cotton, "which I have seen, that in the British Museum is the only one that has the title-page, and even that is made up from two copies. Of the others, the Bodleian copy is by far the finest." Not only is the title-page of the one in the Museum made up from two copies, but it is even made up from two separate wood-cuts of the same design; for in the one, the texts in the scrolls are in English, in the other, in Latin.

One perfect title-page, however, is in existence, and is found in the beautiful copy of this edition in the Earl of Leicester's library at Holkham. It is as follows:—

Douche and Latyn," was no doubt a bookselling artifice of the time, to make the work circulate better, as being intimately connected with the reformed doctrines, which were then equally well known by the term of German or Dutch doctrines. Nay, we are even told that the early reformers of that day were commonly called Germans, on account of their adoption of those reformed opinions which first sprung up in Germany. That Coverdale did not follow Luther's version, it only requires a very slight comparison of texts to prove; but he no doubt availed himself, where there occurred any difficult reading, of all the different means of assistance within his power, as indeed he himself intimates in his prologue to the reader.

The wood-cuts surrounding the title are the same as in the title-page of 1536, of which a facsimile is prefixed to the present reprint.

On the reverse of the title is, "The bokes of the whole Byble, how they are named in Englysh and Latyn, how longe they are wrytten in the allegations, how many chapters euery boke hath, and in what leafe every one begynneth." It contains, however, only references to the first four parts; those to the Apocrypha and the New Testament were probably on another leaf, which is missing in this copy (the Museum one).

Then comes the dedication, "Vnto the most victorious Prynce and oure most gracyous soueraigne Lorde, kynge Henry the eyght, kynge of Englonde and of Fraunce, lorde of Irlonde, &c." signed "Youre graces humble subiecte and daylye oratour, Myles Couerdale." 5 pages. The Museum copy has "Quene Anne" in the dedication; Sion College has "Quene Jane;" Lambeth Library has a copy with each; the Bodleian has "Quene Anne;" All Souls' College has neither; Dr. Coombe's has neither; the late Mr. Coombes's has "Quene Anne."

Then "A prologe. Myles Couerdale Unto the Christen reader." 6 pages.

Then "The bokes of the hole Byble" &c., 2 pages. This is evidently part of another edition inserted in this copy (the Museum one), or rather this set of preliminary pieces do not belong to this title-page; since a portion of the same information is to be found printed on the reverse of the title-page.

The contents of "The first boke of Moses," 1 page.

"The first boke of Moses, called Genesis." Then should come, according to Herbert, a map of the Holy land. The four other books of Moses follow, with tables of contents prefixed to each: in all, fol. i—xc. Signature a i, to p vi, in sixes. The first leaf appears not to have any signature, or else it has been rubbed out in this copy (the Museum one), the second leaf being marked a ii.

Then comes a title-page: "The seconde parte of the olde Testament." with the names of the books contained underneath. This in a compartment of wood-cuts. On the reverse "The boke of Josua. What this boke conteyneth." Joshua to Hester, fol. ii—cxx (the reverse of). Tables of contents at the commencement of each book. Signature a ij, to v v vi, in sixes.

"The boke of Job," table of contents. "The Psalter." "The Prouerbes of Salomon," table of contents. "Ecclesiastes," table of contents. "Salomons Ballettes." From Job to Salomons Ballettes, fol. i—lii. Signature A a, to Ji iiij, in sixes.

Then comes another title-page: "All the Pro-

Bibliographical Description.

phetes in Englishe." with the names of the books contained, underneath. This in a compartment of wood-cuts. On the reverse, the contents of "the Prophet Esay." The contents prefixed to each Prophet. In all, fol. ii—cii, (the reverse of). Signature A a a ij, to R r r vi, in sixes.

Another title-page: "Apocrip̃ha The bokes and treatises which amonge the fathers of olde are not rekened to be of like authorite with the other bokes of the byble, neither are they fōūde in the Canon of the Hebrue." Then follow the names of the books. At the bottom, "Vnto these also belongeth Baruc, whom we haue set amōge the prophetes next vnto Jeremy, because he was his serybe, and in his tyme." This in a compartment of wood-cuts. On the reverse, "The translatoure vnto the reader." containing some observations on the nature of these books. Underneath the contents of the first book. The contents are prefixed to each book, except to "Certayne chapters of Hester." "The songe of the iij children." "The story of Susanna" and "The story of Bel." In all, fol. ii—lxxxiii (the reverse of), falsely numbered lxxxi. Signature A ij to O v, in sixes, the last leaf blank.

Then the title-page: "The new testament." underneath, the books named. Also in a compartment of wood-cuts. On the reverse, the contents of "The gospell of S. Mathew." The contents before each book. In all, fol. ii—cxiii (the reverse of). Signature AA ij, to TT v, in sixes.

On the reverse of the last leaf; "Prynted in the yeare of oure LORDE M.D.XXXV. and fynished the fourth daye of October."

At the beginning of Genesis are six cuts in wood, describing the six days' work of the creation; and in different parts of the work are other cuts, also in wood, some of them very spirited and well executed, representing the history therein mentioned, and most probably done, as before stated, by Sebald Behem of Nurembergh. There are also some initial letters of a very elegant character, from designs of Holbein.

This Bible, as will be seen by the above description, is divided into six parts, of which four have separate title-pages. That there should be no separate title-page to the first part is not strange, as it scarcely seemed to want one: but it is rather curious that there should be none to the third part; and that there never was any printed, and that it is not missing from the present copies, is clear, since the first leaf is numbered fol. i, which would not otherwise have been the case. The type, as before mentioned, is an angular Swiss or German. The title-page and its reverse are in the same letter as the body of the text. But the dedication, the prologue, the names of "the bokes of the whole Byble," and the contents of Genesis, are in a different character, and were most probably printed after the arrival of the volume in England. There are a few marginal references, which are in Roman letters. On fol. xli. of part I. is a large wood-cut of the Tabernacle and its contents; this is repeated on the reverse of fol. lvi. The initial letter of Genesis is a large flourished text capital. A full page contains fifty-seven lines.

Whether this edition ever had a table of the Epistles and Gospels for the Sundays, &c. at the end, is not known. No copy has yet been found, that we are aware of, containing any such table; but it seems not improbable that it had, since we find one in the reprints in quarto and in folio, by Nicholson, in 1537; and also in the edition of 1550.

It is not known how many copies of this edition

were issued from the press, but the number must have been very great, when we consider that it was the first edition of the whole Bible in English ever offered to the public, at a time, when, excited by the writings daily put forth by the reformers, they were most eager to peruse it; and that Grafton, when he published Matthew's Bible in 1537, although of a much larger size, and consequently more expensive, ventured to print as many as 1500 copies.

This Bible was reprinted in folio and in quarto in 1537, by Nicholson, in Southwark, with a very few slight and trifling alterations. It was printed again in 1550, after which, what remained of the edition was issued in 1553, with a reprinted title-page and preliminary pieces. The edition of 1535 had a new title-page in 1536, of which, as before stated, a facsimile is prefixed to this edition.

VNTO THE MOST VICTORIOUS PRYNCE AND OURE MOST GRACIOUS SOUERAIGNE LORDE,

KYNGE HENRY THE EYGHTE,

KYNGE OF ENGLONDE AND OF FRAUNCE, LORDE OF IRLONDE. ¶c. DEFENDOUR OF THE FAYTH, AND VNDER GOD THE CHEFE AND SUPPREME HEADE OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLONDE.

C AIPHAS beyng bysshope of that yere, lyke a blynde prophete (not vnderstandyng what he sayd) prophecied,* that it was better to put Christ vnto death, then that all the people shulde peryssbe : he meanyng, that Christ was an heretike, a deceauer of the people, & a destroyer of the lawe, and that it was better therefore to put Christ vnto death, thā to suffre hym for to lyue, and to deceaue the people. ¶c. where in very dede Christ was the true prophete, the true Messias, and the onely true Sauour of the worlde, sent of his heauenly father to suffre the moste cruell, most shamefull, and most necessary death for our redempcyon : accordyng to y<sup>e</sup> meanyng of the prophecie truely vnderstonde.

Euen after the same maner y<sup>e</sup> blynde bysshope of Rome, (that blynde Baalam I saye) not vnderstandyng what he dyd, gaue vnto your grace this tytyle : Defendour of the fayth, onely because your hyghnes suffred your bysshoppes to burne Gods worde the rote of fayth, and to persecute the louers and mynisters of y<sup>e</sup> same. where in very dede the blynde bysshope (though he knewe not what he dyd) prophecied, that by the ryghteous admynistracyon and contynuall diligence of youre grace, the fayth shulde so be defended, that Gods worde the mother of Fayth with the frutes therof, shulde haue his fre course thorowe out all Christendome, but specially in your realme.

Yf your hyghnesse now of your pryncely benigne wyll pardon me to compare these two bysshoppes (I meane bysshope Caiphas and the bysshope of Rome) & theyr prophecies together, I doute not but we shal fynde them agree lyke brethren, though the one be a Iewe and the other a counterfayte Christian. Fyrst, Caiphas prophecied that it was better to put Christ vnto death, then that the people shulde perysshe. The bysshope of Rome also, not knowyng what he prophecied, gaue youre grace this tytyle : Defendour of the fayth. The trueth of both these prophecies is of the holy goost (as was Baalams prophecie) though they that spake the, knewe not what they sayd. The trueth of Caiphas prophecie is, that it was necessary for mans saluacyon, that Christ by his death shulde ouercome death, and redeme vs. And the trueth of oure Baalams prophecie is, <sup>b</sup> y<sup>e</sup> your grace in very dede shulde defende the Fayth, Yee euen the true fayth of Christ, no dreames, no fables, no heresie, no papistall inuencions, but the vncorrupte fayth of Gods most holy worde, which to set forth (prayed be the goodnes of God, and increace youre gracious purpose) your hyghnes with youre most honorable counsell, applyeth all his studye and endeuoure.

These two blynde bysshopes now agree in y<sup>e</sup> vnderstandyng of theyr prophecies : for Caiphas taketh Christ for an heretike, Oure Balañ taketh the worde of Christ for heresie. Caiphas iudgeth it to be a good dede to put Christ vnto death, that he shulde not deceaue the people. Oure Balaam calleth defendynge of the fayth, the suppressyng, keypyng secrete, and burnyng of the worde of fayth: lest the lyght thereof shulde vtter his darknes: lest his owne Decretales & Decrees, his owne lawes and constitucions, his owne statutes and inuencions shulde come to none effecte: lest his intollerable exactions and vsurpacions shulde lose theyr strengthe: lest it shulde be known what a thefe and murderher he is in the cause of Christ, and how haynous a traytoure to God and man in defraudyng all Christen kynges & prynces of theyr due obedience: lest we youre graces subiectes shulde haue eyes in the worde of God, at the last to spye out his crafty conueyaūce and iuglynges: and lest men shulde se, how sore he and his false Apostles haue deceaued all Christendome, specially youre noble realme of Englonde.

An Epistle

Thus your grace seyth how brotherly the Iewysh bysshoppe and oure Balaam agree together, not onely in myter and outwarde appearaunce: but as the one persecuted the Lorde Iesus in his owne persone, so doth the other persecute his worde and resysteth his holy ordynaunce in the auctorite of his anoynted kynges. For so moche now as the worde of God is the onely trueth that dryueth away all lyes, and dis-closeth all iuglyng and disceate, therfore is oure Balaam of Rome so lothe that the scripture shulde be knowē in the mother tonge: lest yf kynges and prynces (specially aboue all other) were exercysed therin, they shulde reclame and chalenge agayne theyr due auctorite, which he falsely hath vsurped so many yeres, and so to tye hym shorter: and lest the people beyng taught by the worde of God, shulde fall from y* false fayned obediēce of hym and his disguised Apostles, vnto the true obedience commaunded by Gods owne mouthe: as namely, to obey theyr prynce, to obey father and mother. &c. and not to steppe ouer father and mothers bely to enter in to his paynted religions, as his ypocrites teache: For he knoweth well ynough, that yf the cleare Sonne of Gods worde come ones to the heate of the daye, it shal dryue away all the foule myst of his deuelysh doctrines. Therfore were it more to the mayntenaunce of Antichristes kyngdome, that the worlde were styll in ignorance and blyndnes, and that the scripture shulde neuer come to lyghte. For the scripture (both in the olde testament and in the new) declareth most aboutdauntly that the office, auctorite and power geuen of God vnto kynges, is in earth aboue all other powers: let them call the selues Popes, Cardynalles, or what so euer they will, <sup>a</sup> the worde of god declareth them (yee and commaundeth them vnder payne of dampnacion) to be obedient vnto the temporall swerde: As in the olde Testament all the Prophetes, Prestes and Leuites were. And in the new Testament <sup>b</sup> Christ & his Apostles both were obedient them selues, and taught obedience of all men vnto theyr prynces <sup>ad</sup> temporall rulers: which here vnto vs in the worlde present the persone of God, and are called <sup>c</sup> Goddes in the scripture, because of the excellēcy of theyr office. And though there were no mo auctorities but the same, to proue the feminance of the temporall swerde, Yet by this the scripture declareth playnly, that as there is nothyng aboue God, so is there no man aboue the kyng in his realme but that he onely vnder God is the chefe heade of all the cōgregacyon and church of the same. And in token that this is true, there hath ben of olde antiquite (and is yet vnto this daye) a louynge ceremonye vsed in your realme of Englonde, y<sup>t</sup> whā your graces subiectes reade your letters, or begynne to talke or comē of your hyghnes, they moue theyr bonettes for a signe & token of reuerence vnto your grace, as to their most soueraigne lorde & heade vnder God. which thyng no man vseth to do to eny bysshoppe. wherby (yf oure vnderstandyng were nat blynded) we myght euidently perceauē, that euen very nature teacheth vs the same, that scripture cōmaūdeth vs: and that lyke as it is agaynst Gods worde that a kyng shulde not be the chefe heade of his people, euen so (I saye) is it agaynst kynde that we shulde knowe any other heade aboue hym vnder God.

And that no prest nor bysshoppe is exempte (nor can be lawfully) from the obedience of his prynce, the scripture is full both of strayte cōmaūdemētes, & practises of the holiest men. *Aaron was obedient vnto Moses, and called hym his lorde, though he was his owne brother. <sup>a</sup> Eleasar and Phineas were vnder the obediēce of Iosua. * Nathan the prophete fell downe to the grounde before kyng David, he had his Prynce in such reuerence (He made not the kyng for to kysse his fote as the bysshoppe of Rome maketh Emperours to do) Notwithstondyng he spared not to rebuke hym, and that ryght sharply when he fell from the worde of God to adultery & manslaughter. For he was not afraied to proue hym of his synnes, nomore than Helyas the prophete stode in feare to saye vnto kyng Achab: † It is thou and thy fathers house that trouble Israel, because ye haue forsaken y<sup>e</sup> commaundementes of the Lorde, and walke after Baal. And as Johan Baptyste durst saye vnto Kyng Herode: § It is not lawfull for the to take thy brothers wyfe. But to my purpose I passe ouer innumerable mo ensamples both of the olde Testament and of the new, for feare lest I be to tedyous vnto your grace. ¶ Sūma, in all godly regimentes of olde tyme the kyng and tēporall iudge was obeyed of euery man, and was alwaye vnder God the chefe and suppreme heade of the whole congregacyon, ¶ and deposed euen prestes when he sawe an vrgent cause, as Salomon dyd vnto Abiathar. who coulde than stonde agaynst the godly obedience of his prynce (excepte he wolde be at defyaunce with God and all his holy ordinaunces) that were well acquaynted with the holy scripture, which so earnestly cōmendeth vnto euery one of vs the auctorite and power geuen of God vnto kynges and temporall rulers? Therefore doth Moses so strately ¶ forbyde the Israelites to speake so moche as an euell worde agaynst the prynce of y<sup>e</sup> people, moche lesse than to disobey hym, or to withstonde hym. Doth not ¶ Jeremy the prophete and ¶ Baruc also exhorte the people in captiuite, to praye for the prosperous welfare of the kyng of Babilon, and to obeye hym, though he was an infidele? In the new Testament whā oure sauoure Christ (beyng yet fre & Lorde of al kynges & prynces) shewed his obedience in payenge the trybute to oure ensample, ‡ dyd he not a miracle there in puttyng the pece of money in the fysshes mouth (that Peter myght paye the customer therewith) and all to stablysshe the obedience due vnto prynces? § Dyd not Ioseph and Mary the mother of our sauoure Christ departe frō Nazareth vnto Bethlēē, so farre from home, to shewe theyr obedience in payenge the taxe to the prynce? And wolde not oure Sauoure be borne in the same obedience? || Doth not Paule pronounce hym to resyste God hym selfe, that resysteth the auctorite of his prynce? And (to be shorte) the Apostle Peter ¶ dothe not onely stablysshe the obedience vnto prynces and temporall rulers but affirmeth playnly the kyng (and no bysshoppe) to be the chefe heade. Innumerable places mo are there in scripture, which hynde vs to the obedience of oure prynce, and declare vnto vs, that no man is nor can be lawfully excepte from the same: but that all the mynisters of Goddes worde are vnder the tēporall swerde: & Prynces onely to owe obedience vnto God & his worde.

And where as Anthichrist vnto youre graces tyme dyd thrust his heade into y<sup>e</sup> imperiall crowne of your hyghnes (as he doth yet with other noble prynces mo) that lerned he of Sathā the authour of pryde, and therein doth he both agaynst the doctryne & also agaynst y<sup>e</sup> ensample of Christe: whiche because his kyngdome was not of this worlde, medled with no temporall matters, as it is euident both by his wordes and practyse: Luc. xii. Math. xxvi. Ioh. vi. Ioh. xviii, where he y<sup>e</sup> hath eyes to se, maye se: & he y<sup>e</sup> hath eares to heare, maye heare, y<sup>e</sup> Christes admystration was nothyng tēporall, but playne spiritual, as he hym selfe affirmeth & proueth in the fourth chapter of saynt Luke out of the prophete Esay: where all bysshoppes and prestes maye se, how farre theyr byndyng and lowsyng extendeth, and where in their office consisteth, namely in preachyng the Gospell. &c.

wherefor (most gracious prynce) there is no tounge I thynke, that can fully expresse and declare the vntollerable iniuries, which haue bene done vnto God, to al prynces and to the comynalties of all christen realmes, sence they which shulde be onely the ministers of Gods worde, became lordes of the worlde, and thrust y<sup>e</sup> true and iust prynces out of their rowmes. whose herte wolde not pitie it (yee euē with lamentacyon) to remember but onely the vntollerable wronge done by that Antychrist of Rome vnto youre graces most noble predecessoure kynge Iohn? I passe ouer his pestilent pykynge of Peter pens out of youre realme: his stealyng away of youre money for pardons: benefices and bysshopykes: his discauynge of youre subiectes soules with his denelyshe doctrynes and sectes of his false religions: his blondsheddyng of so many of your graces people, for bokes of the scripture. whose herte wolde not be greued (yee and that out of measure) to call to remēbraūce, how obstinate and disobedient, how presumptuous & stubburne that Antychrist made the bysshoppes of youre realme agaynst your graces noble predecessours in tymes past, as it is manyfest in y<sup>e</sup> Cronicles? I trust verely there be no suche now within youre realme: Yf there be, let them remembre these wordes of scripture: "Presumptuousnes goeth before destrucciō, & after a proude stomacke there foloweth a fall.

what is now the cause of all these vntollerable and nomore to be suffred abhominacions? Truly enen the ignoraunce of the scripture of God. For how had it els ben possyble, that such blyndnes shulde haue come in to y<sup>e</sup> worlde, had not y<sup>e</sup> lyghte of Gods worde bene extyncte? How coule men (I saye) haue bene so farre from the true seruyce of God, and from the due obedience of theyr prynce, had not the lawe of God bene clene shut vp, depressed, cast asyde, and put out of remembraunce? As it was afore the tyme of that noble kynge Iosias, and as it hath bene also amonge vs vnto youre graces tyme: by whose most ryghteous admyndraciō (thorowe the mercyfull goodnes of God) it is now founde agayne, *as it was in the dayes of that most vertuous kynge Iosias. And praysed be the father, the sonne, and the holy goost worlde without ende, which so excellently hath endewed youre Pryncely hert with such feruentnes to his honoure, and to the welth of youre louyng subiectes, that I maye ryghtously (by iust occasions in youre persone) cōpare youre hyghnes vnto that noble and gracyous kynge, y<sup>e</sup> lanterne of lyghte amonge prynces, that feruent protectour and defender of the lawes of God: which cōmaunded straitly (as youre grace doth) that the lawe of God shulde be redde and taught vnto all y<sup>e</sup> people: set the prestes to theyr office in the worde of god: destroyed Idolatry and false ydols: put downe all euell customes and abusyons: set vp the true honoure of God: applyed all his studye and ende-nour to the ryghtuous admyndraciō of the most vncorrupte lawe of God. &c. O what felicitye was amonge y<sup>e</sup> people of Ierusalem in his dayes? And what prosperous health both of soule & body foloweth the lyke myndraciō in youre hyghnes, we begynne now (prayed be God) to haue experience. <sup>a</sup> For as false doctryne is the origenall cause of all euell plagues and destrucciō, so is y<sup>e</sup> true executyng of the lawe of God ad the preaching of the same, the mother of all godly prosperite. The onely worde of god (I saye) is the cause of all felicitye, <sup>c</sup> it bryngeth all goodnes with it, it bryngeth lernynge, it gēdreth vnderstandynge, it causeth good workes, it maketh chyldren of obedience, breuely, it teacheth all estates theyr office and duty. Seynge then that the scripture of God teacheth vs euery thyng sufficiently, both what we oughte to do, and what we oughte to leaue vndone: whome we are bounde to obey, and whome we shulde not obeye: therfore (I saye) it causeth all prosperite, and setteth euery thyng in frame: and where it is taught and known, it lyghteneth all darkeneses, cōforteth all sory hertes, leaueth no poore man vnhelped, suffreth nothyng amyse vnameded, letteth no prynce be disobeyed, permytteth no heresie to be preached: but refoormeth all thinges, amēdeth that is amyse, and setteth euery thyng in order. And why? because it is geuen by the inspiracyon of God, therfore is it ener bryngynge profyte and frute, by teachynge, by improuynge, by amēdyng and refoormyng all thē y<sup>e</sup> wyl receaue it, <sup>d</sup>to make them perfecte & mete vnto all good workes.

Considerynge now (most gracyous prynce) the inestimable treasure, frute & prosperite euerlastynge, that God geueth with his worde, and trustynge in his infynite goodnes that he wolde brynge my symple and rude laboure herin to good effecte, therfore as the holy goost moued other mē to do the cost herof, so was I boldened in God, to laboure in the same. defender and maynteyner of Gods lawes, I thought it my dutye and to belonge vnto my allegiaunce, whan I had translated this Bible, not onely to dedicate this translacyon vnto youre hyghnesse, but wholly to com- mytte it vnto the same: to the intent that yf any thyng therin be translated amysse (for in many thynges we fayle, euen whan we thynke to be sure) it may stōde in youre graces handes, to correcte it, to amende it, to improue it, yce & cleane to reiecte it, yf youre godly wysdome shall thynke it necessary. And as I do with all humblenes submitte myne vnder- stondynge and my poore translacyon vnto y<sup>e</sup> spirite of trueth in your grace, so make I this protestacyon (hauyng God to recorde in my cōscience) that I haue nether wrested nor altered so moch as one worde for the mayntenaūce of any maner of secte: but haue with a cleare conscience purely & faythfully trans- lated this out of fyue sundry interpreters, hauyng onely the manyfest trueth of the scripture before myne eyes: Trustynge in the goodnes of God, that it shalbe vnto his worshippe: quietnes and tranquillite vnto your hyghnes: a perfecte stablyshment of all Gods ordy-naunces within youre graces domynion: a generall comforte to all Christen hertes, and a continuall thank- fulnesse both of olde and younge vnto god, and to youre grace, for beyng oure Moses, and for bringynge vs out of this olde Egypte from the cruell handes of our spirituall Pharao. For where were the Iewes (by ten thousande partes) so moch bounde vnto <sup>a</sup> Kyng David, for subduynge of greate Goliath and all theyr enemyes, as we are to your grace, for delyuerynge vs out of oure olde Babylonycall captiuite? CONSIDERYNGE how excellent knowlege and lernynge an interpreter of scripture oughte to haue in the tongues, and ponderynge also myne owne insufficiency therin, & how weake I am to perfourme y<sup>e</sup> office of a translature, I was the more lothe to medle with this worke. Notwithstandynge whan I cōsidered how greate pytie it was that we shulde wante it so longe, & called to my remembrance y<sup>e</sup> aduersite of them, which were not onely of rype knowlege, but wolde also with all theyr hertes haue performed y<sup>t</sup> they beganne, yf they had not had impediment: considerynge (I saye) that by reason of theyr aduersyte it coulde not so soone haue bene broughte to an ende, as oure most prosperous nacyon wolde fayne haue had it: these and other reasonable causes consydered, I was the more holde to take it in hande. And to helpe me herin, I haue had sondrye translacions, not onely in latyn, but also of the Douche interpreters: whom (because of theyr synguler gyftes & speciall diligence in the Bible) I haue ben the more glad to folowe for the most parte, accordynge as I was requyred. But to saye the trueth before God, it was nether my laboure ner desyre, to haue this worke put in my hande: neuertheles it greued me y<sup>t</sup> other nacyōs shulde be more plenteously prouyded for with y<sup>e</sup> scripture in theyr mother tongue, then we: therefore whan I was instantly requyred, though I coulde not do so well as I wolde, I thought it yet my dewtye to do my best, and that with a good wyll.

where as some men thinke now y<sup>e</sup> many translacions make diuysyon in y<sup>e</sup> fayth and in the people of God, y<sup>t</sup> is not so: for it was neuer better with the congregacion of god, then whan euery church allmost had y<sup>e</sup> Byble of a sondrye trāslacion. Amonge the Grekes had not Origen a speccyall translacion? Had not Vulgarius one peculyar, & lykewyse Chrysostom? Besyde the seuentye interpreters, is there not the translacion of Aquila, of Theodotio, of Symachus, and of sondrye other? Agayne amonge the Latyn men, thou findest y<sup>t</sup> euery one allmost vsed a speccyall

Therefore oughte it not to be taken as euell, y<sup>t</sup> soch men as haue vnderstandynge now in oure tyme, exercyse them selues in y<sup>e</sup> tongues, & geue their diligence to translate out of one language in to another. Yee we ought rather to geue god hye thanks therefore, which thorow his sprete stereth vp mēs myndes, so to exercise them selues therin. wolde god it had neuer bene left of after y<sup>e</sup> tyme of S. Augustine, then shulde we neuer haue come in to soch blindnes & ignoraūce, in to soch erroours & delusjons. For as soone as the Byble was cast asyde, & nomore put in exercyse, then beganne euery one of his awne heade to wryte what so euer came in to his brayne and y<sup>t</sup> semed to be good in his awne eyes: and so grewe y<sup>e</sup> darknes of mēs tradiciōs. And this same is y<sup>e</sup> cause y<sup>t</sup> we haue had so many wryters, which seldome made mēcyon of y<sup>e</sup> scripture of the Byble: & though they some tyme aleged it, yet was it done so farre out of season & so wyde from y<sup>e</sup> purpose, that a mā maye well perceaue, how that they neuer sawe the oryginnall.

Seynge then y<sup>t</sup> this diligent exercise of translatinge doth so moch good & edifyeth in other languages, why shulde it do euell in oures? Doutles lyke as all nacyons in y<sup>e</sup> dyuersite of speaches maye knowe one God in the vnyte of faith, and be one in loue: euen so maye dyuerse translacions vnderstonde one another, & that in the head articles & grounde of oure most blessed faith, though they vse sondrye wordes. wherfore me thinke we haue greate occasion to geue thanks vnto God, that he hath opened vnto his church the gyfte of interpretacyon & of pryntynge, and that there are now at this tyme so many, which with soch diligēce and faithfulness interprete y<sup>e</sup> scripture to the honoure of god and edifyenge of his people, where as (lyke as whan many are shut-ynge together) euery one doth his best to be nyest the marke. And though they can not all attayne therto, yet shuteth one nyer then another, and hytteth it better then another, yee one can do it better the another. who is now then so vnreasonable, so despytfull, or enuyous, as to abhorre him y<sup>e</sup> doth all his diligence to hytte y<sup>e</sup> prycke, and to shute nyest it, though he mysse & come not nyest the mark?

Ought not soch one rather to be commēded, and to be helped forwarde, that he maye exerceyse himselfe the more therin?

For the which cause (acordyng as I was desyred)
I toke the more vpon me to set forth this speciall translacyon, not as a checker, not as a reprobuer, or despyser of other mens translacyons (for amonge many as yet I haue founde none without occasyon of greate thankesgeyunge vnto god) but lowly & fayth-fully haue I folowed myne interpreters, & that vnder correccyon. And though I haue fayled eny where (as there is noman but he myseth in some thyng) loue shall constyrre all to y<sup>e</sup> best without eny peruerse iudgment. There is noman lyuynge y<sup>e</sup> can se all thynges, nether hath god geuen eny man to knowe euery thyng. One seyth more clearly then another, one hath more vnderstandyng then another, one can vter a thyng better then another, but noman ought to enuye, or dispyse another. He that can do better then another, shulde not set him at naught y<sup>e</sup> vnderstandeth lesse: Yee he that hath y<sup>e</sup> more vnderstandyng, ought to remembre that the same gyfte is not his but Gods, and y<sup>e</sup> God hath geue it him to teach & enforme the ignoraunt. Yf thou hast knowlege therfore to iudge where eny faute is made, I doute not but thou wilt helpe to amende it, yf loue be ioyned with thy knowlege. Howbeit wherin so euer
I can perceaue by my selfe, or by the informacyon of other, that I haue fayled (as it is no wonder) I shall now by the helpe of God ouerloke it better & amende it.

Now wil I exhorte the (who so euer thou be y<sup>e</sup> redest scripture) yf thou fynde oughte therein y<sup>e</sup> thou vnderstondest not, or that appeareth to be repugnaunt, geue no temerarious ner haystye iudgmēt therof: but ascribē it to thyne awne ignoraunce, not to the scripture, thyne y<sup>e</sup> thou vnderstondest it not, or y<sup>e</sup> it hath some other meanyng, or y<sup>e</sup> it is happly ouersene of y<sup>e</sup> interpreters, or wronge prynted. Agayne, it shall greately helpe y<sup>e</sup> to vnderstonde scripture, yf thou marke not onely what is spoken or wrytten, but of whom, & vnto whom, with what wordes, at what tyme, where, to what intent, with what circumstance, consyderynge what goeth before, and what foloweth after.

For there be some thynges which are done & wrytē, to the intente y<sup>e</sup> we shulde do lykewyse: as whan Abraham beleueth God, is obedient vnto his worde, & defendeth Loth his kynsman from violent wronge.
There be some thynges also which are wrytē, to the intente y<sup>e</sup> we shulde eschue soch lyke. As whan Dauid lyeth with Vrias wyfe, & causeth him to be slayne.
Therefore (I saye) whan thou redest scripture, be wyse & circumspecte: & whan thou comest to soch straunge maners of speakynge & darke sentences, to soch parables & similitudes, to soch dreames or vysions as are hyd from thy vnderstandyng, cōmytte them vnto God or to the gyfte of his holy sprete in them
y<sup>e</sup> are better lerned then thou.

As for the commendacyon of Gods holy scripture,
I wolde fayne magnifye it as it is worthy, but I am farre vnusufficiēt therto. & therfore I thoughte it better for me to holde my tonge, then with few wordes to prayse or commēde it: exhortynge y<sup>e</sup> (most deare reader) so to loue it, so to cleue vnto it, & so to folowe it in thy daylye conuersacyon, y<sup>e</sup> other men seyng thy good workes & the frutes of y<sup>e</sup> holy goost in the, maye prayse the father of heauen, & geue his worde a good reporte: for to lyue after the lawe of God, & to leade a vertuouse conuersacyon, is the greatest prayse y<sup>e</sup> thou canst geue vnto his doctryne.

But as touchynge the euell reporte and dispraise that the good worde of God hath by the corrupte and euell conuersacyon of some, y<sup>e</sup> daylye heare it and professe it outwardly with theyr mouthes, I exhorte
withdrawe thy mynde frō the loue of y<sup>e</sup> trueth, nether moue y<sup>e</sup> to be partaker in lyke vnthankfulnes: but seyng y<sup>e</sup> lighte is come in to the worlde, loue no more the workes of darknes, receaue not the grace of god in vayne. Call to thy remembrance how louynge & mercifull God is vnto the, how kyndly and fatherly he helpeth the in all trouble, teacheth thyne ignoraunce, healeth the in all thy sycknesse, for-geueth the all thy synnes, fedeth y<sup>e</sup>, geueth the drynke, helpeth y<sup>e</sup> out of preson, norysheth the in straunge countrees, careth for the, & seyeth y<sup>e</sup> thou wante nothyng. Call this to mynde (I saye) & that earnestly, and consyde how thou hast receaued of god all these benefites (yee and many mo then thou canst desyre) how thou art bounde lykewise to shewe

thy selfe vnto thy neyghboure as farre as thou canst, to teach him yf he be ignoraunt, to helpe him in all his trouble, to heale his syncknes, to forgene him his offences, and that hartely, to fede him, to cherish him, to care for him, and to se y<sup>e</sup> he wante nothyng. And on this behalfe I beseke the (thou y<sup>e</sup> hast y<sup>e</sup> ryches of this worlde, and louest God with thy harte) to lyfte vp thine eyes, and se how greate a multitude of poore people renne thorow euery towne: haue pitie on thine awne flesh, helpe them with a good harte, and do with thy counsell all that euer thou canst, that this vnshamefast beggyng maye be put downe, that these ydle folkes maye be set to labour, & that such as are not able to get theyr lyuynge, maye be prouyded for. At the leest thou y<sup>e</sup> art of counsell with such as are in auctoryte, geue them some occasyon to cast theyr heades together, and to make prouysyon for the poore. Put the in remembrance of those noble cities in other countrees, that by the auctoryte of theyr prynces haue so rychely ad well prouided for theyr poore people, to the greate shame & dishonestye of vs, yf we lykewyse receauynge y<sup>e</sup> worde of God, shewe not such lyke frutes therof. wolde God y<sup>e</sup> those men (whose office is to maynteyne y<sup>e</sup> comon welth) were as diligent in this cause as they are in other. Let vs beware by tymes, for after vnthankfulnes there foloweth euer a plague: the merciful hande of God be with vs, & defende vs that we be not partakers therof.

Go to now (most deare reader) & syt the downe at the Lordes fete and reade his wordes, & (*as Moses teacheth the Iewes) take them in to theyr herte, & let thy talkynge & comunicacion be of them whan thou syttest in thine house, or goest by y<sup>e</sup> waye, whan thou lyst downe, & whan thou ryseth vp. And aboue all thynges fasshyon thy lyfe, & cōuersacion acordynge to the doctryne of the holy goost therein, that thou mayest be partaker of y<sup>e</sup> good promyses of god in the Byble, & be heyre of his blessinge in Christ. In whom yf thou put thy trust, & be an vnfayned reader or hearer of hys worde with thy hert, thou shalt fynde swetenesse thereyn, & spye wōderous thynges, to thy vnderstandynge, to the auoydynge of all sedicyous sectes, to the abhorrynge of thy olde synfull lyfe, & to the stablyshynge of thy godly cōuersacyon.

In the first boke of Moses (called Genesis) thou mayest lerne to knowe the almighty power of god in creatynge all of naught, his infinite wysdome in ordryng the same, his ryghteousnes in punyshynge y<sup>e</sup> vngodly, his loue & fatherly mercy in comfortynge the righteous with his promes. &c.

In the seconde boke (called Exodus) we se the myghtye arme of god, in delyueryng his people from so greate bondage out of Egypte, and what prouysyon he maketh for them in the wildernes, how he teacheth them with his wholsome worde and how the Tabernacle was made and set vp.

In the thyrde boke (called Leuiticus) is declared what sacrifices the prestes & Leuites vsed, and what theyr office & ministracyon was.

In the fourth boke (called Numerus) is declared how the people are nombred and mustred, how the captaynes are chosen after y<sup>e</sup> trybes & kynreds, how they wēte forth to y<sup>e</sup> battayll, how they pitched theyr tentes, & how they brake vp.

The fyfth boke (called Deuteronomium) sheweth how that Moses now beyng olde, rehearseth the lawe of god vnto y<sup>e</sup> people, putteth them in remembrance agayne of all the wonders & benefites that god had shewed for them, and exhorteth them earnestly to loue y<sup>e</sup> Lorde theyr god, to cleue vnto him, to put their trust in him and to herken vnto his voyce.

After the death of Moses doth Iosue bryng the people in to the lōde of promes where God doth wonderous thynges for his people by Iosue, which distributeth y<sup>e</sup> londe vnto them, vnto euery trybe theyr possession. But in theyr wealth they forgat the goodnes of God, so that oft tymes he gaue the ouer in to the hande of theyr enemies. Neuertheles whan so euer they called faithfully vpon him, and conuerted, he delyuered them agayne, as the boke of Iudges declareth.

In the bokes of the kynges, is describyed the regimēt of good and euell prynces, and how the decaye of all nacions cometh by euell kynges. For in Ieroboam thou seyst what myschefe, what ydolatre & soch like abhominacyon foloweth, whā the kyng is a maynteyner of false doctryne, ad causeth the people to synne agaynst God, which fallinge awaye from gods worde, increased so sore amonge them, that it was the cause of all theyr sorowe and misery, & the very occasion why Israel first and then Iuda, were caryed awaye in to captiuite. Agayne, in Iosa-phat, in Ezechias and in Iosias thou seyst the nature of a vertuous kyng. He putteth downe the houses of ydolatrie, seyth that his prestes teach nothyng but y<sup>e</sup> lawe of God, cōmaundeth his lordes to go with them, and to se that they teach the people. In these kynges (I saye) thou seyst the cōdicyon of a true defender of y<sup>e</sup> fayth, for he spareth nether cost ner labour, to manteyne the lawes of God, to seke the welth & prosperite of his people, and to rote out the wicked. And where such a prince is, thou seyst agayne, how God defendeth him and his people, though he haue neuer so many enemies. Thus wente it with thē in the olde tyme, and euen after y<sup>e</sup> same maner goeth it now with vs: God be praysed therefore, ād graunte vs of his fatherly mercy, that we be not vnthankfull: lest where he now geueth vs a Iosaphat, an Ezechias, yee a very Iosias, he sende vs a Pharaο, a Ierohoam, or an Achab.

In the two first boke of Esdras & in Hester thou seyst the delyuerance of the people, which though they were but fewe, yet is it vnto vs all a speciall cōforte, for so moch as God is not forgetfull of his promes, but bryngeth them out of captiuite, acordynge as he had tolde them before.

In the boke of Iob we lerne comforte and pacience, in that God not onely punysheth the wicked, but proueth & tryeth the iust and righteous (howbeit there is noman innocent in his sighte) by dyuerse troubles in this lyfe, declaryng therby, y<sup>e</sup> they are not his bastards, but his deare sonnes, and that he loueth them.

In the Psalmes we lerne how to resorte onely vnto God in all our troubles, to seke helpe at him, to call onely vpon him, to satle oure myndes by paciēce, & how we ought in prosperite to be thankfull vnto him.

The Prouerbes and the Preacher of Salomon teach vs wysdome, to knowe God, oure owne selues, and the worlde, and how wayne all thynges are, saue onely to cleue vnto God.

As for the doctryne of the Prophetes, what is it els, but an earnest exhortacion to eschue synne, & to turne vnto God? a faythfull promes of the mercy ād pardon of God, vnto all them y<sup>e</sup> turne vnto him, and a threatenynge of his wrath to the vngodly? sauynge that here and there they prophecie also manifestly of Christ, of y<sup>e</sup> expulsion of the Iewes, and callynge of the Heythen.

Thus moch thought I to speake of y<sup>e</sup> olde Testament, wherin almyghtie God openeth vnto vs his myghtye power, his wysdome, his louynge mercy & righteousnesse; for the which cause it oughte of no man to be abhorred, despyed, or lyghtly regarded, as though it were an olde scripture y<sup>e</sup> nothyng belōged vnto vs, or y<sup>e</sup> now were to be refused. For it is Gods true scripture & testimony, which the Lorde Iesus cōmaundeth the Iewes to search. who so euer beleueth not the scripture, beleueth not Christ, and who so refuseth it, refuseth God also.

The New Testament or Gospell, is a manyfest and cleare testimony of Christ how God perfourmeth his oath and promes made in the olde Testament, how the New is declared and included in the Olde, and the Olde fulfilled and verified in the New.

Now where as the most famous interpreters of all geue sondry iudgmentes of the texte (so farre as it is done by y<sup>e</sup> sprete of knowlege in the holy goost) me thyinke noman shulde be offended there at, for they referre theyr doinges in mekenes to the sprete of trueth in the congregacyon of god: & sure I am, that there commeth more knowlege and vnderstandinge of the scripture by theyr sondrie translacyons, then by all the gloses of oure sophisticall doctours. For that one interpreteth somthyng obscurely in one place, the same translateth another (or els he him selfe) more manifestly by a more playne vocable of the same meanyng in another place. Be not thou offended therfore (good Reader) though one call a scribe, that another calleth a lawyer: or elders, that another calleth father & mother: or repentaunce, that another calleth pennaunce or amendment. For yf thou be not disceaued by mens tradiciōs, thou shalt fynde no more dyuersite betwene these termes then betwene foure pens and a grote. And this maner haue I vsed in my translacyon, callyng it in some place pennaunce, that in another place I call repentaunce, and that not onely because the interpreters haue done so before me, but that the aduersaries of the trueth maye se, how that we abhorre not this worde pennaunce (as they vntuly reporte of vs) no more then the interpreters of latyn abhorre penitere, when they reade resipiscere. Onely our hertes desyre vnto God, is, that his people be not blynded in theyr vnderstandyng, lest they beleue pennaunce to be ought saue a very repētaunce, amēdment, or conuersyon vnto God, and to be an vnfayned new creature in Christ, and to lyue acordyng to his lawe. For els shall they fal in to the olde blasphemy of Christes bloude, and beleue, that they thē selues are able to make satisfaction vnto God for theyr awne synnes, from the which erreure god of his mercy and plētous goodnes preserue all his.

Now to conclude: for so moch as all the scripture is wrytten for thy doctryne & ensample, it shalbe necessary for the, to take holde vpon it, whyle it is offred the, yee and with ten handes thankfully to receaue it. And though it be not worthely ministred vnto the in this translacyon (by reason of my rudnes) Yet yf thou be feruēt in thy prayer, God shal not onely sende it the in a better shappe, by the mynistracyon of other that beganne it afore, but shall also moue the hertes of them, which as yet medled not withall, to take it in hande, and to bestowe the gifte of theyr vnderstandyng theron, as well in oure language as other famous interpreters do in other languages. And I praye God, that thorow my poore ministracyon here in, I maye geue them that can do better, some occasyon so to do: exhortyng the (most deare reader) in the meane whyle on Gods behalfe, yf thou be a heade, a Iudge, or ruler of y<sup>e</sup> people, that thou <sup>a</sup> let not the boke of this lawe departe out of thy mouth, but exercise thyselfe therin both daye and nyghte, and be euer readyng in it as longe as thou lyuest: that thou mayest lerne to feare the Lorde thy God, & not to turne asyde from the commaundement, nether to the right hande ner to the lefte: lest thou be a knower of personnes in iudgmēt, <sup>b</sup> and wrest the righte of the straunger, of the fatherles or of the wedowe, and so y<sup>e</sup> curse to come vpon the. But what office so euer thou hast <sup>c</sup> wayte vpon it, and execute it, to the mayntenance of peace, to the welth of thy people, defendyng the lawes of God, and the louers therof, and to the destruccyon of the wicked.

then thou woldest teach the people eny other thyng then Gods worde take the boke in thyne hande, & reade the wordes euē as they stonde therin (for it is no shame so to do, it is more shame to make a lye) This I saye for soch, as are not yet experte in the scripture, for I reprove no preachyng without the boke as longe as they saye the trueth.

Yf thou be a man that hast wyfe and childrē, first <sup>f</sup> loue thy wyfe, acordyng to the ensample of the loue, wherwith Christ loued the cōgregacion, and remembre that so doynge, thou louest euen thyselfe: yf thou hate her, thou hatest thine awne flesh: yf thou cherishe her and make moch of her, thou cherisest & makest moch of thyselfe, for she is bone of thy bones, & flesh of thy flesh. And who so euer thou be that hast children, <sup>g</sup> bryng them vp in the nourtour and informacion of the Lorde. And yf thou be ignoraunt, or art otherwyse occupied lafully that thou canst not teach them thy selfe, then be euen as diligent to seke a good master for thy childrē, as thou wast to seke a mother to beare them: for there lieth as great weight in the one as in y<sup>e</sup> other. Yee better it were for thē to be vnborne, then not to feare God, or to be euel brought vp. which thyng (I meane bryngyng vp well of children) yf it be diligently loked to, it is the vpholdinge of all comon welthes: and the negligence of the same, the very decaye of all realmes.

Fynally, who so euer thou be, take these wordes of scripture in to thy herte, and be not onely an outwarde hearer, but a doer thereafter, and practyse thyselfe therin: that thou mayest fele in thine hert, the swete promyses therof for thy consolacion in all trouble, & for the sure stablyshinge of thy hope in Christ, and haue euer an eye to y<sup>e</sup> wordes of scripture, that yf thou be a teacher of other thou mayest be within the boundes of the trueth, or at the leest though thou be but an hearer or reader of another mans doynge, thou mayest yet haue knowlege to iudge all spretes, and be fre from euery erreure, to the viter destruccyon of all sedicious sectes & straunge doctrynes, that the holy scripture maye haue fre passage, and be had in reputacion, to the worshippe of the author therof, which is euen God himselfe: to whom for his most blessed worde be glory & downynion now & euer. Amen.

The first Chapter.

A IN  $\hat{y}$  begynnynge God created heauen  $\tau$  earth: and  $\hat{y}$  earth was voyde and emptie, and darcknes was vpon the depe,  $\tau$   $\hat{y}$  sprete of God moued vpō the water.

And God sayde: let there be light,  $\tau$  there was light. And God sawe the light that it was good. Then God deuyded  $\hat{y}$  light from the darcknes, and called the light, Daye: and the darcknes, Night. Then of the euenynge and mornynge was made the first daye.

And God sayde: let there be a firmament betwee the waters, and let it deuyde  $\hat{y}$  waters a sunder. Then God made  $\hat{y}$  firmamēt, and parted the waters vnder the firmamēt, from the waters about the firmament: And so it came to passe. And God called  $\hat{y}$  firmament, Heauen. Then of the euenynge  $\tau$  mornynge was made the seconde daye.

<sup>a</sup> And God sayde: let the waters vnder heauen gather thē selues vnto one place,  $\hat{y}$  the drye londe maye appeare. And so it came to passe. And God called  $\hat{y}$  drye londe, Earth: and the gatheringe together of waters called he,  $\hat{y}$  See. And God sawe  $\hat{y}$  it was good.

B And God sayde: let  $\hat{y}$  earth bringe forth grene grasse and herbe, that beareth sēde:  $\tau$  frutefull trees, that maye beare frute, euery one after his kynde, hauynge their owne sēde in them selues vpon the earth. And so it came to passe. And the earth brought forth grene grasse and herbe,  $\hat{y}$  beareth sēde euery one after his kynde,  $\tau$  trees bearinge frute,  $\tau$  hauynge their owne sēde in them selues, euery one after his kynde. And God sawe that it was good. Then of the euenynge  $\tau$  mornynge was made the thirde daye.

And God sayde: let there be lightes in  $\hat{y}$  firmament of heauen, to deuyde the daye frō the night, that they maye be vnto tokēs, seasons, dayes, and yeaeres. And let them be lightes in  $\hat{y}$  firmament of heauen, to shyne vpon the earth: And so it came to passe. And God made two greate lightes: one greater light to rule the daye, and a lesse light to rule the night, and (he made) starres also. And God set them in the firmament of heauen,  $\hat{y}$  they might shyne vpō earth, and to rule the daye and the night, and to deuyde the light from darcknes. And God sawe that it was good. Then of the euenynge and mornynge was made the fourth daye.

<sup>b</sup> And God sayde: let the waters brynge C forth creatures that moue and haue life,  $\tau$  foules to flye about the earth vnder the firmamēt of heauen. And God created greate whalles, and all maner of creatures that lyue and moue, which the waters brought forth euery one after his kynde: and all maner of fethered foules, euery one after his kynde. And God sawe that it was good, and blessed them, sayenge: Growe, and multiplie, and fyll the waters of the sees, and let the foules multiplie vpon the earth. Then of the euenynge and mornynge was made the fifth daye.

And God sayde: let  $\hat{y}$  earth brynge forth lyuynge soules, euery one after his kynde: catell, wormes  $\tau$  what as hath life vpon earth, euery one after his kynde. And so it came to passe. And God made  $\hat{y}$  beastes of the earth euery one after his kynde, and catell after their kynde, and all maner wormes of the earth after their kynde. And God sawe that it was good.

similitude after oure licknesse, that he maye haue rule ouer the fysh of the see, and ouer the foules vnder  $\hat{y}$  heauen, and ouer catell, and ouer all the earth, and ouer all wormes that crepe on  $\hat{y}$  earth. <sup>a</sup> And God created man after his licknesse: after  $\hat{y}$  licknesse of God created he him, male  $\tau$  female created he them.

And God blessed them, and sayde vnto them: <sup>b</sup> Growe, and multiplie, and fyll the earth, and subdue it,  $\tau$  haue domynion ouer the fish of the see, and ouer the foules of the ayre, and ouer all the beastes that crepe vpon the earth.

<sup>c</sup> And God sayde: lo, I haue geuen you all maner herbes that beare sede vpon the whole earth, and all maner frutefull trees that beare sede, to be meate for you. And to all beastes of the earth, and to all foules vnder the heauen, and to euery worme that hath life (vpon earth) all maner grene herbes to eate. And so it came to passe. <sup>d</sup> And God behelde all  $\hat{y}$  he had made, and lo, they were exceeding good. Then of the euenyng and mornynge was made the sixte day.

The ij. Chapter.

THUS was heauē and earth fynished with all their hoost, and thus in the seuenth daye God ended his worke, which he had made, <sup>e</sup>  $\tau$  rested in the seuenth daye from all his workes which he had made: And blessed the seuenth daye,  $\tau$  sanctified it, because  $\hat{y}$  in it he rested from all his workes, which God created and made.

These are the generacions of heauē and earth whan they were created, in the tyme whan the LORDE God made heauen and earth: before there was eny twygge vpon earth, and or euer there grew eny grene herbe vpon the felde. For the LORDE God had yet sent no rayne vpon  $\hat{y}$  earth, nether was there eny man to tylle the earth. But there arose a myst from the earth,  $\tau$  watered all the loude. And  $\hat{y}$  LORDE God shope man euē of the moulde of the earth,  $\tau$  brethred in to his face  $\hat{y}$  breth of life. <sup>f</sup> And so was man made a luyngye soule.

The LORDE God also planted a gardē of pleasure in Eden, towarde  $\hat{y}$  east, and set man therein whom he had made. And the LORDE God caused to sprynge out of the earth all maner trees, pleasant to loke vpon, and good to eate: and the tre of life in the myddest of the garden, <sup>g</sup> and the tre of knowlege of good and euell.

And out of Eden there wente a ryuer, to water the garden, and there deuyded it selfe in to foure heade waters. The first is called Phison, which renneth aboute all the londe of Heuylā. <sup>h</sup> And there is founde golde, ( $\tau$  the golde of that countre is precious,) and there is founde Bedellion, and the precious stone <sup>i</sup> Onix. The second water is called Gihon, which runneth aboute the whole londe of  $\hat{y}$  Moriās. The thirde water is called Hydec-kell, which runneth towarde the east syde of  $\hat{y}$  Assiriās. The fourth water is Euphrates.

And the LORDE God toke man,  $\tau$  set him in the pleasaunt garden of Eden, to dresse it  $\tau$  to kepe it. And the LORDE God commaunded man, sayge: <sup>j</sup> Thou shalt eate of all maner trees in  $\hat{y}$  garden: But of  $\hat{y}$  tre of knowlege of good and euell, shalt thou not eate. For loke in what daye so euer thou eatest therof, thou shalt dye the death.

And the LORDE God sayde: It is not good  $\hat{y}$  mā shulde be alone. I wil make him an helpe, <sup>k</sup> to beare him cōpany. And whan God the LORDE had made of the earth all maner beastes of the felde,  $\tau$  all maner foules vnder the heauē, he brought them vnto man, to se what he wolde call thē: For as mā called all maner of liuinge soules, so are their names. And man gaue names vnto all maner catell,  $\tau$  vnto the foules vnder the heauē, and vnto all maner beastes of  $\hat{y}$  felde. But vnto man there was founde no helpe, to beare him company.

Then the LORDE God caused an herde slepe to fall vpon man, and he slepte. And he toke out one of his rybbes, and (in steade therof) he fylled vp  $\hat{y}$  place with flesh. And the LORDE God made a woman, <sup>l</sup> of  $\hat{y}$  rybbe that he toke out of man, and brought her vnto him. Then sayde man: This is once bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh. She shalbe called woman, because she was takē of man. <sup>m</sup> For this cause shal a man leaue father and mother, and cleue vnto his wife,  $\tau$

BUT the serpent was sotyler then all the beastes of the felde<sup>a</sup> (which  $\S$  LORDE God had made) and sayde vnto <sup>4</sup>the woman: Yee, hath God sayde in dede: Ye shall not eate of all maner trees in the garden? Then sayde the woman vnto the serpent: We eate of the frute of the trees in the garden: But as for the frute of the tre that is in the myddes of the garden, God hath sayde: Eate not ye of it, and touch it not, lest ye dye.

Then saide the serpent vnto the woman: \*Tush, ye shall not dye the death. For God doth knowe, that in what daye so euer ye eate of it, youre eyes shalbe opened, and ye shal be as God, and knowe both good and euell. And the woman sawe that  $\S$  tre was good to eate of, and lustye vnto the eyes, and a pleasaunt tre † to make wyse, and toke of the frute of it, and ate, and gaue vnto hir husbāde also therof, and he ate. Then were the eyes of them both opened, and they perceived that they were naked,<sup>c</sup> and sowed fygge leaues together, and made them apurns.

And they herde the voyce of the LORDE God, which walked in the garden in the coole of the daye. And Adam hyd him self with his wyfe, from the presence of  $\S$  LORDE God amonge the trees of the garden. And  $\S$  LORDE God called Adam, and sayde vnto him: Where art thou? And he saide: I herde thy voyce in the garden, and was afrayed, because I am naked, and therefore I hyd my self. And he sayde: who tolde the, that thou art naked? Hast thou not eaten of the tre, wherof I commaunded the,  $\S$  thou shuldest not eate?

Then sayde Adam: The woman which thou gauest me (to beare me company) gaue me of the tre, and I ate. And the LORDE God sayde vnto the woman: wherfore hast thou done this? The woman sayde: the serpent disceaue me so, that I ate.<sup>d</sup> Then sayde the LORDE God vnto the serpent: Because thou hast done this, cursed be thou aboue all catell and aboue all beastes of the felde. Vpon thy bely shalt thou go,  $\tau$  earth shalt thou eate all the dayes of thy life. And I wyll put enemyte betwene the and the woman, and betwene thy sede<sup>e</sup> and hir sede.<sup>f</sup> The same shal treade downe thy heade, and thou shalt treade him on the hele.

And vnto the woman he sayde: I will increase thy sorow, whan thou art with childe: with payne shalt thou beare thy childre, and  $\S$  thy lust shal pertayne vnto thy huszbande, and he shal rule the.

And vnto Adam he sayde: For so moch as thou hast herkened vnto the voyce of thy wyfe, and hast eaten of the tre, wherof I commaunded the, sayenge: thou shalt not eate of it. Cursed be  $\S$  earth for thy sake. With sorowe shalt thou eate therof, all the dayes of thy life. Thornes and thistles shalt it beare vnto the, and thou shalt eate the herbes of the felde. In the sweate of thy face shalt thou eate thy bred, tyll thou be turned agayne vnto earth, whēce thou art takē: /for earth thou art, and vnto earth shalt thou be turned agayne.

And Adam called his wyfe Heua, because she is the mother of all lyuynge. And the LORDE God made Adam  $\tau$  his wyfe garments of skynnes,  $\tau$  those he put on them. And the LORDE God sayde: lo, Adam is become as it were one of vs,  $\tau$  knoweth good  $\tau$  euell. But now lest he stretch his hande, and take also of the tre of life, and eate, and lyue for euer. Then the LORDE God put him out of the garden of Eden, to tyll  $\S$  earth, whēce he was takē. And he cast Adam out. And before the garden of Eden he set Cherubes, and a naked fyrie swerde, to kepe  $\S$  waye vnto the tre of life.

The iiij. Chapter.

MOROUER Adam laye with Heua his wyfe, which cōceaued  $\tau$  bare Cain, and sayde, I haue opteyned  $\S$  man of the LORDE. And she proceeded forth,  $\tau$  bare his brother Abell. And Abell became a shepherde, but Cain became an huszbande man.

And it fortunēd after certayne daies, that Cain brought of the frute of the earth, an offrynge vnto  $\S$  LORDE. And Abell brought also of the firstlinges of his shepe, and of  $\frac{1}{2}$  fat of them. \*And the LORDE had respecte vnto Abell and to his offerynge: but vnto Cain and his offerynge he looked not. Then was Cain exceeding wroth, and his countenance chaunged. And the LORDE sayde vnto Cain: Why art thou angrie? and why doth thy countenance chaunge? Is it not so? that yf thou do well, thou shalt receaue it: but and yf thou do euell, thy synne lyeth open in the dore? \*Shal he then be subdued vnto the? and wilt thou rule him? And Cain talked with Abell his brother.

B And it happened, that when they were in the felde, Cain arose agaynst Abell his brother, and slew him. Then sayde the LORDE vnto Cain: Where is Abell thy brother? He sayde: I can not tell. \*Am I my brothers keeper? And he sayde: What hast thou done? \*The voyce of thy brothers bloude crieth vnto me out of the earth. And now shalt thou be cursed vpon the earth, which hath opened hir mouth, and receaued thy brothers bloude of thine hande. Whan thou tyllest  $\frac{1}{2}$  ground, she shall hensforth not geue hir power vnto the. \*A vagabunde and a rennagate shalt thou be vpon  $\frac{1}{2}$  earth. And Cain sayde vnto  $\frac{1}{2}$  LORDE: \*my synne is greater, then that it may be forgeuen me. Beholde, thou castest me out this daye from out of  $\frac{1}{2}$  londe, and from thy sight must I hyde my self, and must be a vagabunde and a rennagate vpon  $\frac{1}{2}$  earth. And thus shal it go with me: that who so fyndeth me, shal slaye me.

C But the LORDE sayde thus vnto him:  $\frac{1}{2}$  Who so euer slayeth Cain, it shalbe auenged seuenfolde. And the LORDE put a marck vpon Cain, that no man which founde him, shulde kyll him. So Cain wente out from  $\frac{1}{2}$  face of the LORDE, and dwelt in the lande Nod, vpon the east syde of Eden.

And Cain laye with his wyfe, which conceaued and bare Henocho. And he buylded a cite, and called it after the name of his sonne Henocho. And Henocho begat Irad, Irad begat Mahuial. Mahuial begat Mathusael. Mathusael begat Lamech.

And Lamech toke him two wyues:  $\frac{1}{2}$  one was called Ada,  $\frac{1}{2}$  the other Zilla. And Ada bare Iabel, of whom came they that dwelt in tentes and had catell. And his brothers name was Iubal: Of him came they that occupied harpes  $\frac{1}{2}$  pypes. And Zilla she also bare Tubalcain, a worker in all connyng poyntes of metall  $\frac{1}{2}$  yron. And Tubalcains sister was called Naema.

And Lamech sayde vnto his wyues Ada and Zilla: Heare my voyce (ye wyues of Lamech) and herken vnto my wordes: for I haue slayne a man, and wounded my selfe: and (haue kyllled) a yonge man, and gottē my self strypes. Cain shalbe auēged seuē tymes: but Lamech seuen and seuentie tymes.

Adam laye yet with his wyfe agayne,  $\frac{1}{2}$  she bare a sonne, and called him Seth. For God (sayde she) hath apoynted me another sede, for Abell, whom Cain slew. And Seth begat a sonne also, and called him Enos. At the same tyme beganne men to call vpon the name of the LORDE.

The v. Chapter.

THIS is the boke of the generation of A man, in the tyme whan God created man, and made him after the symilitude of God. Male and female made he them, and blessed thē,  $\frac{1}{2}$  called their names Man, in the tyme whan they were created. \*And Adam was an hundreth and thirtie yeare olde, and begat a sonne, which was like his owne ymage, and called his name Seth:  $\frac{1}{2}$  lyued thereafter eight hūdreth yeare, and begat sonnes and daughters. And his whole age was nyne hundreth and thirtie yeares, and so he dyed.

Seth was an hundreth and fyue yeare olde, and begat Enos:  $\frac{1}{2}$  lyued thereafter eight hundreth and seuen yeare, and begat sonnes and daughters. And his whole age was nyne hūdreth and twolue yeares, and so he dyed.

Enos was nyentie yeare olde, and begat B Kenan: and lyued thereafter eight hundreth  $\frac{1}{2}$  fyfene yeare, and begat sonnes  $\frac{1}{2}$  daughters. And his whole age was nyne hūdreth and fyue yeares, and so he dyed.

Kenan was seueētie yeare olde, and begat Mahalaliel: and lyued thereafter eight hundreth and fourtie yeare, and begat sonnes  $\frac{1}{2}$  daughters. And his whole age was nyne hundreth and ten yeares, and so he dyed.

Mahalaliel was thre score yeare olde  $\frac{1}{2}$  fyue, and begat Iared: and lyued thereafter eight

E Iared was an hundredth and two  $\tau$  sixtie yeare olde, and begat Henoeh:  $\tau$  lyued thereafter eight hūdreth yeare, and begat sonnes  $\tau$  daughters. And his whole age was nyene hundredth and two and sixtie yeare, and so he dyed.

<sup>a</sup> Henoeh was fyue and thre score yeare olde, and begat Mathusalah: and led a godly conuersation thre hundredth yeares thereafter, and begat sonnes  $\tau$  daughters. And his whole age was thre hundredth and fyue and thre score yeares. \* And for so much as he lyued a godly life, God toke him awaye,  $\tau$  he was nomore sene.

Mathusalah was an hūdreth  $\tau$  seuē and foure score yeare olde,  $\tau$  begat Lamech: and lyued thereafter seuē hundredth and two and foure score yeare, and begat sonnes  $\tau$  daughters. And his whole age was nyene hundredth and nyene and tre score yeares, and so he dyed.

Lamech was an hundredth and two and foure score yeare olde, and begat a sonne,  $\tau$  called him Noe, and sayde: This same shall cōforte vs in oure workes, and in the sorowe of oure hondes vpon the earth, <sup>b</sup> which the LORDE hath cursed. After this he lyued fyue hūdreth and fyue  $\tau$  nyentie yeare, and begat sonnes and daughters. And his whole age was seuē hundredth seuē and seuentie yeares, and so he dyed.

Noe was fyue hundredth yeare olde, and begat Sem, Ham and Iaphet.

The vi. Chapter.

A <sup>S</sup>O whan men beganne to multiplie vpon the earth, and had begot them daughters, the children of God sawe the daughters of men, that they were fayre, and toke vnto thē wyues such as they liked. Then sayde  $\gamma$  LORDE: My sprete shal not allwaye stryue with man, for he is but flesh also. <sup>c</sup> I wil yet geue him respyte an hundredth and twēty yeares. There were giauntes also in the worlde at that tyme. For whan the children of God had lyen with the daughters of men, and begotten them children,  $\gamma$  same (children) were mightie in the worlde, and men of renowe.

But whan the LORDE sawe  $\gamma$  the wickednes of man was increased vpon  $\gamma$  earth, and that all  $\gamma$  thought and imagination of their hert was but onely euell continually, <sup>d</sup> it repented him, that he had made man vpon the earth, and he sorowed in his hert, and sayde: I wyll destroye man kynde which I haue made, from the earth: both man, beast, worme, and foule vnder the heauen: for it repenteth me, that I haue made them. <sup>e</sup> Neuertheles Noe founde grace in the sight of the LORDE.

This is  $\gamma$  generacion of Noe. Noe was a righteous and perfecte mā, <sup>f</sup> and led a godly life in his tyme, and begat thre sonnes: Sem, Ham and Iaphet. Notwithstandinge  $\gamma$  earth was corrupte in  $\gamma$  sight of God, and full of myschefe. Then God lokyd vpon  $\gamma$  earth: and lo, it was corrupte (for all flesh had corrupte his waye vpon the earth.)

Then sayde God vnto Noe: The ende of <sup>g</sup> all flesh is come before me, for the earth is full of myschefe before them. And lo, I wyll destroye them with the earth. Make the an Arcke of Pyne tre, and make chambers in it, and pitch it within and without with pitch and make it after this fashion: The length shal be thre hundredth cubites, the bredth fiftie cubites, and the heygth thirtie cubites. A wyndow shalt thou make aboue of a cubyte greate: but the dore shalt thou set in the myddest in the syde of it: And the Arke shalt thou make with thre loftes one aboue another. For lo, I wyll bringe a floude of water vpon the earth, to destroye all flesh (wherin the breth of life is) vnder the heauē: All that is vpon earth, shal perishe.

But with the wyll I make a couenant, <sup>h</sup> and thou shalt go in to the Arcke with thy sonnes, with thy wyfe, and with thy sonnes wyues. And of all creatures what so euer flesh it be, thou shalt bringe in to the Arcke, euen a payre: the male and the female, that they maye lyue with the: Of foules after their kynde, of beastes after their kynde, and of all maner wormes of the earth after their kinde. Of euery one of these shal there a payre go in vnto the, that they maye lyue. And thou shalt take vnto the all maner of meate that maye be eaten, and shalt laye it vp in stoare by the, that it maye be meate for the and them. And Noe dyd acordinge to all that God commaunded him.

The viij. Chapter.

AND  $\text{f}$  LORDE sayde vnto Noe: Go in to the Arcke thou  $\tau$  thy whole house:  $\text{a}$  for the haue I sene righteous before me at this tyme.  $\text{b}$  Of all cleane beastes take vnto the seuen and seuen, the male and his female. And of vncleane beastes a payre, the male and his female. Like wyse of the foules vnder the heauen, seuen and seuen, the male and his female, that there maye be sede left a lyue vpon the whole earth.

For yet after seuen dayes, I wil sende raine vpon the earth fourtie dayes and fourtie nightes, and wyll destroye all maner of thynges that I haue made, from of the face of the earth.

B And Noe dyd all that the LORDE commaunded him. Sixe hūdreth yeaere olde was he, whan the water floude came vpon earth.  $\text{c}$  And he wente in to the Arcke, with his sonnes, his wyfe, and his sonnes wyues, for the waters of the floude. Of cleane beastes and of vncleane, of all fethered foules,  $\tau$  of all that crepeth vpon earth, wente in vnto him to the Arcke by pares, a male and a female, as  $\text{f}$  LORDE cōmaunded him. And whan the seuen dayes were past, the water floude came vpon the earth.

In the sixe hundreth yeaere of Noes age, vpon the seuentene daye of the seconde moneth, that same daye were all  $\text{f}$  fountaynes of the greate depe broken vp, and the wyndowes of heauen were opened, and there came a rayne vpon  $\text{f}$  earth fourtie dayes and fourtie nightes.

C Vpon the selfe same daye wēte Noe in to the Arcke, with Sem, Ham and Iaphet his sonnes, and with his wyfe, and the thre wyues of his sonnes, and all maner of beastes after their kynde, all maner of catell after their kynde, all maner of crepyng things (that crepe vpō the earth) after their kynde, and all maner of foules (what so euer coude flye  $\tau$  what so euer had fethers) after their kynde: These wente all vnto Noe in to the Arcke by cooples, of all flesh in whom was the breth of life. And these were the male  $\tau$  the female of all maner of flesh, and wente in, acordinge as God commaūded him. And the LORDE shut (the dore) vpon him.

$\text{d}$  Then came the water floude fourtie dayes vpon the earth, and the water increased, and bare vp the Arcke, and lift it vp ouer  $\text{f}$  earth. Thus the water preuayled, and increased sore vpon the earth, so that the Arcke wente vpon the waters. Yee the waters preuayled and increased so sore vpon earth, that all the hye mountaynes vnder the whole heauen were couered. Fyftene cubytes hye preuayled  $\text{f}$  waters ouer the mountaynes, which were couered.

Then all flesh that crepte vpon earth, perished, both foules, catell, beastes, and all  $\text{f}$  moued vpon earth, and all men. What so euer had the breth of life vpon the drye londe, dyed.

$\text{e}$  Thus was destroyed all that was vpon the earth, both man and beast, both wormes and foules vnder  $\text{f}$  heauē: all these were destroyed from the earth, Saue Noe onely remainyd, and they that were with him in the Arcke. And the waters preuayled vpon the earth, an hundreth and fiftie dayes.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN God remembred Noe and all the A beastes, and all the catell that were with him in the Arcke, and caused a wynde to come vpon the earth: and  $\text{f}$  waters ceased, and the fountaynes of the depe and the wyndowes of heauen were stopte, and the rayne of heauē was forbydden, and the waters ranne styll awaye from  $\text{f}$  earth, and decreased after an hundreth and fiftie dayes.

Vpon the seuentene daye of the seuenth moneth rested the Arcke vpon the mountaynes of Ararat. And the waters wēte awaye and decreased vntyll the tenth moneth: for the first daye of the tenth moneth, the toppes of the mountaynes appeared.

After fourtie dayes Noe opened  $\text{f}$  wyndow of the Arcke which he had made,  $\tau$  sent forth a rauē, which flew out, and  $\text{f}$  came agayne, vntyll the waters were dried vp vpō the earth.

B Then sent he forth a doue from him, to wete, whether the waters were fallē vpon the earth. But when  $\text{f}$  doue coude fynde no restynge place for hir fete, she came agayne vnto him in to the Arcke, for the waters were yet vpon the face of all the earth. And he put out his hande, and toke her to him in to the Arke.

Then he abode yet seuen dayes mo, & sent out the doue agayne out of the Arke: & she returned vnto him aboute the euen tyde: and beholde, she had broken of a leaf of an olyue tre, & bare it in hir nebb. Then Noe perceaued, that the waters were abated vpon the earth. Neuertheles he taried yet seuen other dayes, and sent forth the doue, which came nomore to him agayne.

In the sixte hundredth and one yeare of Noes age, vpon the first daye of y<sup>e</sup> first moneth, the waters were dried vp vpon the earth. Then Noe toke of the hatches of the Arke, and sawe y<sup>e</sup> face of the earth was drye. So vpon the seuen and twente daye of the seconde moneth the whole earth was drye.

Then spake God vnto Noe, and sayde: Go out of the Arke, thou and thy wyfe, and thy sonnes, and thy sonnes wyues with the. As for all the beastes that are with the, what so euer flesh it be (both foule & catell and all maner of wormes that crepe vpon the earth) let them go out with the, and be ye occupied vpon the earth, <sup>a</sup>growe and multiplye vpon the earth.

So Noe wente out, with his sonnes, and with his wife, and with his sonnes wyues. All the beastes also and all the wormes, and all the foules, and all that crepte vpon the earth, wente out of the Arke, euery one vnto his like.

And Noe buylde an altare vnto y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, <sup>b</sup>and toke of all maner of cleane beastes & of all maner of cleane foules, and offred brēt sacrifices vpon y<sup>e</sup> altare. And y<sup>e</sup> LORDE smelled the swete sauoure, & sayde in his hert: I wyl hence forth curse the earth nomore for mās sake, for the ymaginacion of mans hert is euell, euen from the very youth of him. Therefore from hēce forth I wil nomore smyte all that lyueth, as I haue done. Nether shall sowynge tyme and haruest, colde and heate Sommer and wynter, daye and night cease so longe as the earth endureth.

The ix. Chapter.

AND God blessed Noe and his sonnes, and sayde vnto them: increace & multiplie, and fyll the earth. The feare also and drede of you be vpon all beastes of the earth, vpon all foules vnder the heauen, and vpon all that crepeth on the earth, and all fyshes of the see be geuen in to youre hādes. All that moueth and hath life, be youre meate. <sup>c</sup>Euen as the grene herbe, so haue I geuē you all. <sup>d</sup>Onely eate not the flesh with the bloude, wherein the soule is: For the bloude of you wherein youre soule is, wyl I requyre of the hande of all beastes: and the soule of mā wyl I requyre of mans hande, <sup>e</sup>yee euery mans soule of anothers hande.

Furthermore, God sayde vnto Noe and to his sonnes with him: <sup>h</sup>Beholde, I make my couenaunt with you, and with youre sede after you, and with euery lyuynge creature that is with you, both foule, catell, and all beastes vpon the earth with you, of all that is gone out of the Arke, what so euer beast of the earth it be: <sup>i</sup>And thus I make my couenaunt with you, that hence forth all flesh shal not be destroyed with the waters of eny floude, and from hence forth there shall come no floude to destroye the earth.

And God sayde: This is the token of my couenaunt which I haue made betwene me and you, and all lyuynge creatures amonge you for euermore: My bowe will I set in the cloudes, and it shal be the token of my couenaunt betwene me and y<sup>e</sup> earth: so that whā I brynge cloudes vpon the earth, the bowe shal appeare in the cloudes. And then wyl I thynke vpon my couenaunt betwixte me and you and all lyuynge creatures in all maner of flesh: so that from hence forth there shall nomore come eny floude of water to destroye all flesh. Therefore shall my bowe be in the cloudes, that I maye lōke vpon it, and remembre the euerlastynge couenaunt, betwixte God and all lyuynge creatures in all flesh that is vpon earth. God sayde also vnto Noe: This is the tokē of the couenaunt, which I haue made betwene me and all flesh vpon earth.

The sonnes of Noe which wente out of the Arke, are these: Sem, Ham and Iaphet.

Now when Hā the father of Canaan sawe his fathers preuities, he tolde his two brethren without. Thē toke Sem and Iaphet a mantell and put it vpo both their shulders, and wente backwarde, and couered their fathers secretēs: & their faces were turned asyde, ſ they shulde not se their fathers preuities.

So whan Noe awaked from his wyne, and perceaued what his yonger sonne had done vnto him, he sayde: Cursed be Canaan, and a seruauent of seruauentes be he vnto his brethren. He sayde morouer: Praysed be the LORDE God of Sem, and Canaan be his seruauent. God increase Iaphet, and let him dwell in the tentes of Sem, and Canaan be his seruauent.

And Noe lyued after the floude thre hundredeth & fyftie yeare, so ſ his whole age was ix. hūdreth and fyftie yeare, and so he dyed.

The i. Chapter.

A THIS is the generacion of the childrē of Noe, Sem, Ham, and Iaphet, & they begat children after the floude.

The childrē of Ham are these: Chus, Misraim, Phut and Canaan. The children of Chus are these: Seba, Heuila Sabtha, Reyma and Sabthecha.

B The children of Reyma are these: Sheba and Dedā. Chus also begat Nemrod, which beganne to be mightie in the earth, and was a mightie hunter in the sight of the LORDE. Therof commeth the prouerbe: This is a mightie hunter before the LORDE like as Nemrod. And the originall of his kyngdome was <sup>c</sup> Babel, Erech, Acad & Chalne in ſ londe of Synear. Out of that lode came Assur, and buylded Ninieue, and ſ stretes of ſ cite, and Calah, and Resen betwene Ninvue & Calah: This is a greate cite.<sup>d</sup> Mizraim begat Ludim, Enamin, Leabim, Naphtuhim, Pathrusim & Casluhim, from whence came the Philistynes and Capthorims. Canaā also begat Zidon his eldest sonne, & Heth, Iebusi, Emori, Girgosi, Hiui, Arki, Sini, Aruadi, Zemari & Hamati: frō whence ſ kynreds of ſ Cananites are dispersed abroad. And ſ Coastes of ſ Cananites were frō Sidō forth thorow Gerar vnto Gasa, tyll thou cōmest vnto Sodoma, Gomorra, Adama, Zeboim, & vnto Lasa. These are the children of Ham in their kynreds, tungen, londes & people. And Sem which is ſ father of all the children of Eber, & the elder brother of Iaphet, begat childrē also. And these are his children: Elā, Assur, Arphachad, Lud & Aran. The childrē of Aran are these: Vz, Hul, Gether & Mas.

D And Arphachad begat Sala, and Sala begat Eber. Eber begat two sonnes: the name of the one was Peleg, because that in his tyme the worlde was deuyded, and his brothers name was Iaketan, And Iaketan begat Almodad, Saleph, Hazarmaphet, Iarah, Hadoran, Vsal, Dikela, Obal, Abimael, Seba, Ophir, Heuila & Iobab: All these are ſ childrē of Iaketan. And their dwellynge was from Mesa, tyll thou come vnto Sephar a mountayne of ſ east. These are ſ children of Sem in their generacions, tungen, londes and people.

This is now ſ generacion of ſ children of Noe in their kynredes & people. Of these were ſ people vpon earth spred a brode after ſ floude.

The ii. Chapter.

A MOROUER all the worlde had one <sup>a</sup> tonge & language. Now as they wente <sup>e</sup> toward the East, they founde a playne in ſ londe of Synear, & there they dwelt, & saide one to another: Come on, let vs make bryck & burne it. And they toke bryck for stone, & slymie for morter, And sayde: Come, let vs buylde a cite & a tower, whose toppe maye reach vnto heauē, ſ we maye make vs a name, afore we be scatred abroad in all londes. Then came ſ LORDE downe, to se ſ cite & tower, ſ ſ childrē of mē had buylded. And ſ LORDE saide: Beholde, the people is one,

Therefore is it called Babell, because the LORDE cōfōunded it the language of all the worlde, and from thēce scatred them abrode in to all londes.

These are ſ̄ generacions of Sem. Sem was an hundreth yeare olde, and begat Arphachsad two yeare after the floude, and lyued thereafter fyue hūdreth yeare, and begat sonnes and daughters.

Arphachsad was fyue ¶ thirtie yeare olde, and begat Salah, and lyued thereafter foure hundreth and thre yeare, and begat sonnes ¶ daughters.

C Salah was thirtie yeare olde, and begat Eber, ¶ lyued thereafter foure hūdreth ¶ thre yeare, ¶ begat sonnes and daughters.

Eber was foure and thirtie yeare olde, ¶ begat Peleg, and lyued thereafter foure hundreth and thirtie yeare, and begat sonnes ¶ daughters.

Peleg was thirtie yeare olde, and begat Regu, and lyued thereafter two hūdreth and nyene yeare, and begat sonnes ¶ daughters.

Regu was two and thirtie yeare olde, and begat Serug, and lyued thereafter two hundreth and seuen yeare, and begat sonnes and daughters.

Serug was thirtie yeare olde, and begat Nahor, and lyued thereafter two hundreth yeare, and begat sonnes ¶ daughters.

Nahor was nyene and twentye yeare olde, and begat Terah, and lyued thereafter an hundreth and nyentene yeare, and begat sonnes and daughters.

D Terah was seuentie yeare olde, and begat Abram, Nahor and Haran.

These are the generacions of Terah: Terah begat Abram, Nahor and Haran. ¶ And Haran begat Lot, but Harā dyed before Terah his father in ſ̄ londe where he was borne, at Vr in Chaldea.

Then Abram and Nahor toke them wyues. Abrams wife was called Sarai, ¶ Nahors wyfe Milca the daughter of Haran, which was father of Milca and Iisca. But Sarai was barren, and had no childe.

¶ Then toke Terah Abrā his sonne, ¶ Lot his sonne Harans sonne, ¶ Sarai his daughter in lawe, his sonne Abrams wife, ¶ caried them with him from Vr in Chaldea, to go in to the lande of Canaan. And they came to Haran, ¶ dwelt there. And Terah was two hundreth ¶ fyue yeare olde, and dyed in Haran.

The xij. Chapter.

AND ſ̄ LORDE sayde vnto Abram: ¶ Get the out of thy cōuntre, and from thy kynred, and out of thy fathers house, in to a londe which I wil shew the. And I wil make of the a mightie people, and wyll blesse the, and make the a greate name, yee thou shalt be a very blessing. ¶ I wil blesse them that blesse the, and curse them that curse the: and in the shal all the generacions of the earth be blessed.

Then wente Abram out, as the LORDE commaunded him, and Lot wente with him. Fyue ¶ seuentie yeare olde was Abrā, whan he wente out of Haran. So Abram toke Sarai his wife, and Lot his brothers sonne, with all their goodes which they had gotten, and soules which they begat in Harā, and departed to go in to ſ̄ londe of Canaan. ¶ And whē they were come in to the same londe, he wente thorow, tyll he came vnto the place of Sichem, and vnto the Okegroue of More: ¶ for ſ̄ Cananites dwelt in ſ̄ lōde at ſ̄ same time.

Then the LORDE appeared vnto Abrā, ¶ sayde: ¶ This londe wil I geue vnto thy sede. And there he buylded an aulter vnto ſ̄ LORDE, which appeared vnto him. Thē brake he vp frō thēce, vnto a mountayne ſ̄ laye on ſ̄ east syde of the cite of Bethel, ¶ pitched his tent: so ſ̄ he had Bethel on the west side, and Ay on ſ̄ east syde: ¶ there buylded he an altare also vnto the LORDE, ¶ called vpon the name of the LORDE. Afterwarde departed Abram farther, ¶ toke his iourneye southwarde. But there came a derth in the londe.

A ¶ SO Abrā departed out of Egipte, with his wife, ¶ and with all <sup>ŷ</sup> he had, ¶ and Lot with him also, towarde <sup>ŷ</sup> south. Abram was very rich in catell, siluer ¶ and golde. And he wente on forth from the south vnto Bethel, vnto the place where his tent was at <sup>ŷ</sup> first, betwene ¶ Bethel and Ay: euen vnto <sup>ŷ</sup> place where he had made the altare before, ¶ and where he called vpon the name of the LORDE. Lot also which wente with him, had shepe, greate catell ¶ and tentes: so <sup>ŷ</sup> the londe was not able to receaue them, that they might dwell together: for <sup>a</sup>the substauce of their riches was so greate, that they coude not dwell together. And there fell a strife betwene the hirdmen of Abrams catell, and the hirdmen of Lots catell. The Cananites also and the Pheresites dwelt at that tyme in the londe.

B Then sayde Abram vnto Lot: O let there be no strife betwene me and the, and betwene my hyrdmen and thine, for we are brethrē. ¶ Is not all the whole londe open before the?

Departed fro me, I praye the. Yf thou wilt go to the left hande, I wil take the right: Or yf thou wilt go to the right hande, I wil take the left. Then Lot lift vp his eyes, and behelde all the countre rounde aboute Iordā, that it was a plenteous countre of water. For before the LORDE destroyed Sodoma and Gomorra, it was rounde aboute Zoar, euen as the pleasant garden of the LORDE, and as the londe of Egipte.

Then Lot chose all the coastes of Iordā, and toke his iourney towarde <sup>ŷ</sup> East. <sup>a</sup>And so the one brother departed from the other. Abram dwelt in the lande of Canaan, and Lot in the cities of the same coastes, and pitched his tent towarde Sodome. But <sup>ŷ</sup> men of Sodome were wicked, and <sup>b</sup>synned exceedingly agaynst the LORDE.

Now whan Lot was departed from Abram, the LORDE saide vnto Abram: Lift vp thine eyes, and loke from the place where thou dwellest, northwarde, southwarde, eastwarde, and westwarde: for all the londe that thou seist, wyl I geue vnto the ¶ and to thy sede for euer, and wyl make thy sede as the dust of the earth: so that yf a man can nombre the dust of the earth, he shall nombre thy sede also. Arise, and go thorow the londe, in the length and bredth, for I wyl geue it vnto the.

So Abram remoued his tent, and <sup>c</sup>wente and dwelt in <sup>ŷ</sup> Okegroue of Mamre, which is in Ebron, and buylded there an altare vnto the LORDE.

These came all together in to the brode valley, where now the salt see is: for twolue yeares were they subiectes vnto kinge Kedorlaomer, ¶ and in the thirtieth yeare they fell from him. Therefore in the fourteenth yeare came Kedorlaomer, and the kynges <sup>ŷ</sup> were with him, ¶ and smote the Giauntes in Astaroth Karnaim, ¶

And then they turned, ⁊ came to the well of iudgment (which is Cades) ⁊ smote all the countre of the Amalechites, and also the Amorites, that dwelt in Hazezon Thamar.

13 Then wente out the kynge of Sodome, ⁊ the kynge of Gomorra, ⁊ the kynge of Adama, and the kynge of Zeboim, and the kynge of Bela (called Zoar) ⁊ prepared them selues to fight in the brode valley with Kedorlaomer the kynge of Elam, ⁊ with Thideal ⁊ kynge of the Heithen, ⁊ with Amraphel ⁊ kynge of Synear, ⁊ with Arioch the kynge of Ellasar: foure kynges with fyue. And ⁊ brode valley had many slyme pyttes. But the kynge of Sodoma and Gomorra were put to flight, ⁊ fell there, ⁊ the residue fled vnto ⁊ mountaynes. Then toke they all the goodes at Sodoma and Gomorra, ⁊ all their vytales, ⁊ wente their waye. They toke Lot also Abrams brothers sonne, ⁊ his good (for he dwelt at Sodome) and departed.

C Then came one that had escaped, and tolde Abram the Aleaut, which dwelt in the Oke-groue of Mamre the Amoryte, which was the brother of Escol ⁊ Aner: for these were confederate with Abram.

Now whan Abram herde ⁊ his brother was taken, he harnessed his bonde seruauentes borne in his owne house, thre hundred ⁊ eightene, ⁊ folowed after them vntill Dan, ⁊ deuyded thē, ⁊ fell vpō them by night with his seruauentes, and smote thē, and chased them awaye vnto Hoba, which lieth on ⁊ left hande of the cite of Damascos, and brought agayne all the goodes, and also his brother Lot, and his goodes, ⁊ women also and the people. And praysed be God the Hiest, which hath delyuered thine enemies in to thy handes. And Abram gaue him tythes of all.

Then sayde the kynge of Sodome vnto Abram: Geue me the soules, and take ⁊ goodes vnto thy self. But Abram sayde vnto the kynge of Sodome: I lift vp my honde vnto the LORDE the most hye God, possessor of heauen and earth, that I wyll not take of all that is thyne, so moch as a threde or a shue lachet, lest thou shuldest saye: I haue made Abram ryche: Saue onely that which the yonge men haue spent, and the men Aner Escol and Mamre, that wente with me, let them take their parte.

The xv. Chapter.

IT happened after these actes, ⁊ the worde A of ⁊ LORDE came vnto Abra in a vysion, and sayde: Feare not Abram, I am thy shyld and thy exceedinge greate rewarde. But Abram sayde: LORDE LORDE, what wilt thou geue me? I go childles, and the seruauent of my house (this Eleasar of Damascos) hath a sonne. And Abram sayde morouer: Beholde, vnto me hast thou geuen no sede: and lo, the sonne of my housholde shal be myne heyre. And beholde, the worde of the LORDE spake vnto him, and saide: He shal not be thine heyre, but one that shal come out of thine owne body, he shal be thine heyre. And he bad him go forth, and sayde: Loke vp vnto heauen, and tell ⁊ starres: Canst thou nombre them? And he sayde vnto him: * Euen so shal thy sede be.

B Abram beleued the LORDE, and ⁊ was counted vnto him for righteousnes. And he sayde vnto him: I am ⁊ LORDE, ⁊ ⁊ brought the from Vr out of Chaldea, to geue ⁊ this londe to possesse it. But Abram sayde: LORDE LORDE, Wherby shall I knowe, that I shall possesse it? And he sayde vnto him: Take a cow of thre yeare olde, and a she goate of thre yeare olde, and a ramme of thre yeare olde, and a turtill doue, and a yonge pigeon. And he toke all these, and deuyded them in the myddes, and layde the one parte ouer agaynst the other, but the foules deuyded he not. And the foules fell vpō the flesh, but Abram droue them awaye.

The xvi. Chapter.

SARAI Abrams wife bare him no children: but she had an handmaye an Egipcian, whose name was Agar, and sayde vnto Abram: "Beholde, the LORDE hath closed me, that I can not beare. "Go in (I praye the) vnto my mayde: peraduenture I shalbe multiplied by her, more then by myself. And Abram herkened vnto the voyce of Sarai. Than Sarai Abrams wife toke Agar hir mayde y<sup>e</sup> Egipcian (after they had dwelt ten yeaere in the londe of Canaan) and gaue her vnto hir huszbande Abra, to be his wife. And he wente in vnto Agar, and she conceaued. Now whan she sawe y<sup>e</sup> she had conceyued, she despyed hir mastresse.

Then sayde Sarai vnto Abram: I must suffre wronge for thy sake. I layde my mayde by the: but now because she seyth, that she hath conceaued, I must be despyed in hir sight: the LORDE be iudge betwene me and the. And Abram sayde vnto Sarai: Be-holde, thy mayde is vnder thine auctorite, do with her, as it pleaseth the.

Now whan Sarai dealt hardly with her, she fled from her. But the angell of the LORDE founde her besyde a well of water in the wilderness (euen by the well in the waye to Sur) and sayde vnto her: Agar Sarais maide, whence comest thou? & whyther wylt thou go? She sayde: I fle fro my mastresse Sarai. And the angel of the LORDE sayde vnto her: Returne to thy mastresse agayne, and submitte thyself vnder hir hande.

And the angel of the LORDE sayde vnto her: Beholde, I wil so encrease thy sede, that it shall not be nombred for multitude. And the angel of the LORDE sayde further vnto her: Beholde, thou art with childe,<sup>a</sup> & shalt bringe forth a sonne, and shalt call his name Ismael, because the LORDE hath herde thy trouble. He shal be a wylde man. His hande agaynst euery man, and euery mans hande agaynst him: and he shal dwel ouer agaynst all his brethren.

And she called the name of the LORDE y<sup>e</sup> spake vnto her: Thou art the God that seist me. For she sayde: Of a suertye I haue sene the back partes of him that saue me. Therefore called she the well: The well of the liuinge that saue me. Which (well) is betwene Cades and Bared.

And Agar bare Abram a sonne, "and Abram called his sonnes name which Agar bare him, Ismael. And Abram was foure score yeaere olde and sixe, whan Agar bare him Ismael.

The xviij. Chapter.

NOW whan Abram was nyentye yeaere olde and nyene, the LORDE appeared vnto him, & sayde vnto him: "I am the almighty God, walke before me, & be vncorrupte. And I wyl make my couenant betwene me & the, and wyl multiplye the exceedyngly. Then fell Abram vpon his face.

And God talked furthur with him, and sayde: Beholde, It is I, and haue my couenant with the, and thou shalt be a father of many people. Therefore shalt thou nomore be called Abram, but thy name shal be Abraham: "For I haue made the a father of many nacions, & I wil multiplye the exceed-

Euen vpon one daye were they all circumcyded: Abraham, and Iſmael his ſonne, and all the men in his houſe, (whether they were borne at home, bought, or eny other ſtraunger :) they were all circumcyded with him.

The xviij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE apared vnto him in the <sup>a</sup> Okegroue of Mamre, as he ſat in his tent dore in the heate of ſ daie. And as he liſt vp his eyes, and looked, beholde, there ſtoode thre men ouer agaynſt him. And whan he ſawe them, he ranne to mete them from his tent dore, and bowed him ſelf downe vpon the grounde, and ſayde: LORDE, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy ſight, go not by thy ſeruaūt. There ſhalbe brought you a little water, ⁊ ye ſhall waſh youre fete, ⁊ reſt youre ſelues vnder the tre. <sup>a</sup> And I wyll fet you a morſell of bred, to comforte youre hertes withall, and then ſhall ye go youre wayes, for therfore are ye come to youre ſeruaunt. Then sayde  $\text{y}$   $\text{LORDE}$  vnto Abraham: Wherefore doth Sara laugh, and saye: Is this true in dede, that I shal beare, and yet am olde? Shulde eny soch thinge be to harde for the  $\text{LORDE}$ ? <sup>a</sup>Aboute this tyme (yf I lyue) I wil come to the agayne, & Sara shal haue a sonne. Then the men stode vp from thence, and turned them toward Sodome: and Abraham wente with them, to brynge them on their waye.

C Then sayde the  $\text{LORDE}$ : How can I hyde from Abraham,  $\text{y}$  thinge that I wil do? seyng he shal be a greate and mightie people, and all  $\text{y}$  people vpō earth shalbe blessed in him? For I knowe him that he wil cōmaunde his children and his housholde after him, to kepe the waye of  $\text{y}$   $\text{LORDE}$ , and to do after right and conscience, that the  $\text{LORDE}$  maye bringe vpō Abraham what he hath promised him. And the men turned their face, and wete toward Sodome. But Abraham stode still before  $\text{y}$   $\text{LORDE}$ , and stepte vnto him, and sayde:

Wilt thou then destroye the righteous with the vngodly? Peraduētūre there maye be fiftie righteous within  $\text{y}$  cite: wilt thou destroye those, and not spare the place, for fiftie righteous sake that are therin? That be farre fro the,  $\text{y}$  thou shuldest do this, and to slaye the righteous with the vngodly, and that the righteous shulde be as the vngodly. That be farre from the. Shulde not the iudge of all

Abraham answered, and sayde: O se, I haue taken vpon me to speake vnto the  $\text{LORDE}$ , howbeit I am but <sup>d</sup>dust and aszhes. Peraduētūre there maye be fyue lesse then fiftie righteous therin: Wilt thou then destroye the whole cite because of those fyue? He sayde: yf I fynde fyue and fourtie therin, I will not destroye them.

And he proceded further to speake vnto him, and sayde: Peraduētūre there might be fourtie founde therin. And he sayde: I wil do nothings vnto them for those fortyes sake. Abraham sayde: Oh let not my  $\text{LORDE}$  be angrie, that I speake yet more. Peraduētūre there might be thirtie founde therin. And he sayde: Yf I fynde thirtie therin, I will do nothings vnto them. And he sayde: O se, I haue taken vpon me to speake vnto my  $\text{LORDE}$ .

Peraduētūre there might be twētie founde therin. He answered: I wyll not destroye them for those twētyes sake. And he sayde: O let not my  $\text{LORDE}$  be angrie, that I speake yet once more. Peraduētūre there might be ten founde therin. He saide: I wil not destroye them for those ten sake.

And the  $\text{LORDE}$  wente his waye, whan he had left talkyng with Abraham. And Abraham returned vnto his place.

IN the euenyng came the two angels vnto A Sodome. And Lot sat vnder the gate of the cite. Neuertheles they sayde: Nay, but we wyll byde in the stretes all night. <sup>e</sup>Then compelled he them sore: and they turned in vnto him, and came in to his house. And he made them a feast, and baked swete cakes, and <sup>f</sup>they ate.

But before they wente to rest, the men of the cite of Sodome came and compassed the house rounde aboute, yonge and olde, all the people from all quarters, and called Lot, and sayde vnto him: Where are the mē that came vnto the to night? Bringē them out here vnto vs, * that we maye knowe them.

B And Lot wente out at the dore vnto thē, and shut the dore after him, and sayde: "O brethren, do not so wickedly. Beholde, I haue two daughters, which yet haue knowen no man: them will I brynge out vnto you, do with them as it liketh you. Onely do nothinge vnto these men of God, for therfore are they come vnder the shadowe of my rofe. But they sayde: Come thou hither. Then sayde they: Camest not thou onely herin as a stranger, and wilt thou now be a iudge? Wel, we will deale worse with the thē with them.

C And they pressed sore vpon f man Lot. And whan they ranne to, and wolde haue broken vp the dore, the men put out their hondes, and pulled Lot vnto them in to the house, and shut to the dore. And the men at f dore of the house were smytē with blyndnesse both small and greate, so that they coude not fynde the dore.

And f men saide vnto Lot: Hast thou yet here eny sonne in lawe, or sonnes or daughters? Who so euer belongeth vnto the in the cite, bring him out of this place: for we must destroye this place, because the crye of them is greate before the LORDE, which hath sent vs to destroye them. Then wente Lot forth, and spake to his sonnes in lawe, which shulde haue married his daughters, and sayde: O stonde vp, and get you out of this place, for the LORDE wyll destroye this cite. Neuertheles they toke it but for a sporte.

D Now whan the mornynge arose, the angels caused Lot to spede him, and sayde: "Stonde vp, take thy wife & thy two daughters which are at hande, that thou also perishe not in the synne of this cite. But whyle he prolonged the tyme, the men caught him and his wife, and his two daughters by the hande (because the LORDE was mercifull vnto him,) and brought him forth, & set him without the cite.

And whē they had brought him out, they sayde: Saue thy soule, and loke not behynde the, nether stonde thou in all this countre: Saue thy self vpon the mountayne, that thou

Then sayde Lot vnto thē: Oh no my LORDE, beholde, in as moch as thy seruauit hath founde grace in thy sight, now make thy mercy greate, which thou hast shewed vnto me, in that thou sauest my soule alyue. I can not saue my self vpon the mountayne. There might some mysfortune fall vpon me, that I shulde dye. Beholde, here is a cite by, that I maye flye vnto, and it is a litle one: let me saue myself there in. Is it not a litle one, that my soule maye lyue?

Then sayde he vnto him: Beholde, I haue E looked vpon the in this poynte also, that I will not ouerthrowe the cite, wherof thou hast spoken. Haist the, and saue thy self there: for I can do nothinge tyll thou be come thither. Therefore is the cite called Zoar. And the Sonne was vp vpon the earth, whan Lot came in to Zoar.

"Then the LORDE caused brymstone and fyre to rayne downe from the LORDE out of heauen vpon Sodoma and Gomorra, and ouerthrew those cities, the whole region, and all that dwelt in the cities, and that that grew vpon the earth. f And his wife looked behynde her, and was turned in to a pillar of salt.

Abraham rose vp early in the mornynge, and gat him vnto the place, where he had stonde before the LORDE, and turned his face towarde Sodoma and Gomorra, and all f londe of that countre, and looked. F And beholde, there rose vp a smoke from f countre, as it had bene f smoke of a fornace. For whan God destroyed f cities of the region, he thought vpon Abraham, and conueyed Lot out of the cities which he ouerthrew, wherin Lot dwelt.

And Lot departed out of Zoar, and dwelt in the mountaynes with both his daughters (for he was afraied to tary at Zoar) and so remayned he in a caue with both his daughters.

Then sayde f elder vnto the yonger: Oure father is olde, and there is not a man more vpon earth, that can come in vnto vs after the maner of all the worlde. Come therfore, let vs geue oure father wyne to drynke, and lye with him, that we maye saue sede of oure father. So they gaue their father wyne to drynke that same night. And the elder daughter wente in, G and laye with hir father:

and he perceaued it not, nether when she laye downe, ner when she rose vp.

On the morow the elder sayde vnto the yonger: Beholde, yesternight laye I with my father: let vs geue him wyne to drynke this night also: that thou mayest go in and lye with him, that we maye saue sede of oure father. So they gaue their father wyne to drynke that night also: And the yonger arose like wyse, and laye with him: ⁊ he perceaued it not, nether when she laye downe, ner when she rose vp.

Thus were both the daughters of Lot with childe by their father. And the elder bare a sonne, and called him Moab, of whom come ⁊ Moabites vnto this daye. And ⁊ yonger bare a sonne also, and called him the sonne Ammi, of whom come the children of Ammon vnto this daye.

The xx. Chapter.

AS for Abraham, he departed thence, in to the south countre, and dwelt betwixte Cades and Sur, and was a straunger at Gerar, and sayde of Sara his wife: "She is my sister. Then Abimelech the kinge of Gerar sent for her, and caused her be fett awaye.

But God came to Abimelech by night in a dreame, ⁊ sayde vnto him: Beholde, thou art but a deed man, for the womans sake which thou hast taken, for she is a mans wife. Neuertheles Abimelech had not yet touched her, and sayde: LORDE, wilt thou sleie a righteous people? Sayde not he vnto me: she is my sister? Yee and sayde not she her self also: he is my brother? With a pure hert ⁊ with innocent handes haue I done this.

B And God sayde vnto him in a dreame: I knowe that thou dydest it with a pure hert, and therefore I kepte the, that thou shuldest not synne agaynst me, nether haue I suffred thee to touch her. Now therfore delyuer the man his wife ageyne, for he is a prophet: and let him pray for ⁊, and thou shalt lyue. But and yf thou delyuer her not ageyne, be sure, that thou shalt dye the death, and all that is thine.

Then Abimelech rose vp by tymes in the mornynge, and called all his seruantes, and tolde all these thinges in their eares, and the men were sore afraied, and Abimelech called Abraham, and sayde vnto him: Wherefore hast thou done this vnto vs? And what haue I offended ⁊, that thou shuldest brynge on me and on my kyngdome so greate a synne? Thou hast not dealt with vs, as a man shulde deale. And Abimelech saide morouer vnto Abraham: What sawest thou, ⁊ thou hast done this thinge?

Abraham sayde: I thought: Peradventure there is no feare of God in this place, ⁊ they shall sleie me for my wifes sake, And of a trueth she is my sister, for she is my fathers doughter, but not my mothers doughter, and is become my wife. So whan God charged me to wādre out of my fathers house, I sayde vnto her: Shew this kyndnes vpon me, that, where so euer we come, thou saye of me, ⁊ that I am thy brother.

Then toke Abimelech shepe and oxen, seruantes and maydens, and gaue them vnto Abraham, and delyuered him Sara his wife ageyne, and sayde: Beholde, my londe stondeth open before the, dwell where it liketh the. And vnto Sara he sayde: Beholde, I haue geuen thy brother a thousande syluer pens: lo, he shalbe vnto the a couerynge of the eyes, for all that are with the, and euery where, and a sure excuse.

As for Abraham, he prayed vnto God: Then God healed Abimelech, and his wyfe, and his maydens, so that they bare childre. For afore the LORDE had closed all the matrices of Abimelechs house, because of Sara Abrahams wife.

The xxi. Chapter.

THE LORDE also vysited Sara, acord-inge *as he had promysed: ⁊ dealt with her, euen as he had sayde. And Sara was with childe, and bare Abraham a sonne in his olde age, euen in the tyme appoynted, like as God had spoken vnto him afore. And Abraham called his sonne which was borne vnto him (whō Sara bare him) Isaac, and circuncided him the eight daye, †like as God commaunded him. An hundreth yere olde was Abrahā, whan his sonne Isaac was borne vnto him.

And Sara sayde: God hath prepared a ioye for me, for who so euer heareth of it, wyll reioyse with me. She sayde morouer: Who wolde haue saide vnto Abraham, that Sara shulde geue children sucke, and beare him a sonne in his olde age? And the childe grew, and was weened. And Abraham made a greate feast, in  $\text{y}$  daye whan Isaac was weened.

33 And Sara sawe the sonne of Agar the Egipcian (whom she had borne vnto Abraham) that he was a mocker, and sayde vnto Abraham: "Cast out this bonde mayden and hir sonne, for this bonde maydes sonne shall not be heyre with my sonne Isaac. This worde displeased Abraham sore, because of his sonne.

Neuertheles God sayde vnto him: let it not displease the because of the childe and the hand mayde: What so euer Sara hath sayde vnto the, folowe it,  $\text{y}$ for in Isaac shall the sede be called vnto the.  $\text{c}$ As for the bonde maydens sonne, I wyll make a people of him also, because he is of thy sede.

Then Abraham rose vp early in the mornynge, and toke bred and a botell with water, and put it vpon Agars shulders, and gaue her the childe, and sent her awaye. Then departed she, and wandered out of the waye in  $\text{y}$  wyldernes beside Berseba. Now whan the water in the botell was out, she layed the childe vnder a bush, and wente, and sat hir downe ouer on  $\text{y}$  other syde, a bowe shote of. For she sayde: I can not se the childe dye. And she sat hir downe ouer on  $\text{y}$  other syde, and lifte vp hir voyce, and wepte.

C Then God herde the voyce of the childe, and the angell of God called vnto Agar out of heauen, and sayde vnto her: What ayleth the, Agar? Feare not, for God hath herde  $\text{y}$  voyce of the childe, where he lyeth. Aryse and take the childe, and holde him by the hande,  $\text{d}$ for I wyll make a greate people of him.  $\text{e}$ And God opened hir eyes, that she sawe a well of water.

Then wente she and fylled  $\text{y}$  botell with water, and gaue  $\text{y}$  childe drynke. And God was with the childe, which grew vp, and dwelt in  $\text{y}$  wildernes, and became a connyng archer, and dwelt in  $\text{y}$  wildernes of Pharan, and his mother toke him a wyfe out of the londe of Egipte.

$\text{f}$ At the same tyme talked Abimelech and Phicol his chefe captayne with Abraham, and sayde: God is with the in all that thou doest.

Therefore sweare now vnto me by God, that thou wilt not hurt me, ner my children, ner my childers children: but that thou shalt shewe vnto me (and to the londe wherin thou art a straunger)  $\text{g}$ the same kyndnesse that I haue done vnto the.

Then sayde Abraham: I wyll sweare. And Abraham rebuked Abimelech for the well of water,  $\text{h}$ which Abimelechs seruauantes had taken awaye by violence. Then answered Abimelech: I knewe not who dyd it, nether dyddest thou tell me, and I haue not herde of it but this daye.

D The toke Abraham shepe and oxen, and gaue them vnto Abimelech, and they both made a bonde together. And Abraham set seuen lambes by them selues. Then sayde Abimelech vnto Abraham: What meane those seuen lambes, which thou hast set by them selues? He answered: seuē lambes shalt thou take of my hande, that they maye be wytnes vnto me, that I haue dygged this well. Therefore is the place called Berseba, because they sware there both together. And so they made the bonde at Berseba.

Then rose Abimelech and Phicol his chefe captayne, and departed agayne in to the londe of  $\text{y}$  Philistynes. And Abraham planted trees at Berseba, and called vpon the name of the LORDE  $\text{y}$  euerlastinge God, and was a straunger in  $\text{y}$  londe of the Philistynes a longe season.

The xxiij. Chapter.

AFTER these actes God tempted Abraham,  $\text{i}$ and sayde vnto him: Abraham. And he answered: I am here. And he sayde: Take thy sonne, this onely sonne of thine, euē Isaac whom thou louest, and go thy waye in to the londe of Moria,  $\text{a}$ offre him there for a burntofferynge, vpon a mountayne that I shal shew the. Then Abraham stode vp by tymes in the mornynge, and saddled his Asse, and toke with him two yonge men, and his sonne Isaac, and cloue wodd for the brent offerynge, gat him vp, and wente on vnto the place, wherof the LORDE had sayde vnto him.

Vpon the thirde daye Abraham lift vp his eyes, and sawe the place a farre of, and sayde vnto his yonge mē: Tary ye here with the Asse: as for me and the childe, we wyl go yonder: and whan we haue worshipped, we wyl come to you againe. And Abrahā toke the wodd to the brentofferynge, and layed it B vpon Isaac his sonne. As for him self, he toke the fyre and a knyfe in his hande, and wente on both together.

Then sayde Isaac vnto his father Abraham: My father. Abraham answered: here I am, my sonne. And he sayde: lo, here is fyre and wodd, but where is the shepe for the brentofferynge? Abraham answered: My sonne, God shall prouyde him a shepe for the brentofferynge. And they wente both together.

And whan they came to the place which God shewed him, Abraham buylded there an altare, and layed the wodd vpon it, and bande his sonne Isaac, layed him on the altare, aboue vpō the wodd, and stretched out his hande, and toke the knyfe, to haue slayne his sonne.

C Then the angell of the LORDE called from heauen vnto him, and sayde: Abraham Abraham. He answered: Here am I. He sayde: Laye not thy handes vpon the childe, ⁊ do nothinge vnto him: "for now I knowe that thou fearest God, and hast not *spared thine onely sonne for my sake. Then Abraham lift vp his eyes, and sawe behynde him a ramme, holdē fast by the hornes in the breres, and wente, and toke the ramme, and offred him for a brent sacrifice, in steade of his sonne. And Abraham called the place: The LORDE shall prouyde. Therefore it is a comon sayenge yet this daye: Vpon the mountayne shal the LORDE prouyde.

And the angell of the LORDE cryed vnto Abraham from heauen the seconde tyme, and sayde: <sup>b</sup>I haue sworn by myne owne self (sayeth the LORDE) that for so moch as thou hast done this, and hast not spared thine onely sonne, I wyl prospere and multiplie thy sede as the starrs of heauen, and as the sonde vpon the see shore. <sup>c</sup>And thy sede shall possesse the gates of his enemies: and <sup>d</sup>in thy sede shal all the nacions of the earth be blessed, because thou hast herkened vnto my voyce.

D So Abraham turned ageyne to the yonge men, and they gat vp, and wente together vnto Berseba, and dwelt there.

After these actes it fortunē, that it was tolde Abraham: Beholde, Milca hath borne children also vnto thy brother Nahor: namely, <sup>e</sup>Hus <sup>f</sup>⁊ eldest, and <sup>g</sup>Bus his brother, and Kennel, of whom came the Syrians: and Cesed, and Haso, and Pildas, and Iedlaph and Bethuel. And Bethuel begat Rebecca. These eight dyd Milca beare vnto Nahor Abrahams brother. And his concubyne called Rehuma, bare also: namely, Theba, Sahan, Thahas, and Maacha.

The xxiij. Chapter.

SARA was an hundreth and seuē and A twentye yeare olde: so longe lyued she, and dyed in the head cite which is called Hebron, in the lande of Canaan. <sup>a</sup>Then wente Abraham, to mourne and wepe for her. Afterwarde he stode vp from his coarse, and talked with the Hethites, ⁊ sayde: I am a straiger and an indweller amonge you, geue me a possession to bury in with you, that I maye bury <sup>b</sup>my coarse by me.

Then the Hethites answered Abraham, and sayde vnto him: O heare lorde, thou art a prynce of God amonge vs: bury thy dead in the best of oure sepulcres, there shall none of vs forbyd <sup>c</sup>⁊, that thou shuldest not bury thy deed in his sepulcre. Then Abraham stode vp, and thanked the people of <sup>d</sup>⁊ londe: namely the Hethites.

And he talked with them, and sayde: Yf B it be youre wyll that I burye my coarse by me, heare me thē, ⁊ speake for me to Ephron the sonne of Zoar, that he maye geue me the dubble caue, which he hath in <sup>e</sup>⁊ ende of his felde. For a reasonable money let him geue it me, for a possession to burye in amōge you. For Ephron dwelt amonge the Hethites.

Then answered Ephron the Hethite vnto Abraham, that the Hethites might heare, before all that wente out and in at the gates of his cite, and sayde: No my lorde, but heare me: As for the felde, and the cane also that is therin, I geue it the: and in the sight of my people I geue it the, to burye thy deed in.

Then Abraham thanked the people of the londe, and talked with Ephron, that the people of the londe might heare, and sayde: Heare me then, Receaue of me the money that I

C Ephron answered Abraham, and sayde vnto him: Heare me my lord: The felde is worth foure hundredth Sycles of syluer: but what is that betwixte me and the? Burye thy deed. Abraham herkened vnto Ephron, and weyed him the money which he had sayde, that the Hethites might heare: namely foure hundredth syluer sycles of currant money amonge marchauntes.

Thus Ephrons felde (where in the dubble caue is) which lyeth ouer before Mamre, euen the felde and the caue, was made sure for Abrahams owne good, with all the trees of the felde also rounde aboute, in the sight of the Hethites, and of all that go out and in at the gates of his cite. Then Abraham buried Sara his wife in the dubble caue of the felde, that lyeth ouer before Mamre (that is, Hebron) in the londe of Canaan. So the felde and the caue therin was made sure of the Hethites vnto Abraham, for a possession to bury in.

The xxiij. Chapter.

A BRAHAM was olde and well stricken in age, and the LORDE had blessed him in all thinges. And he sayde vnto his eldest seruaunt of his house, which had the rule of all his goodes: "Laye thine hāde vnder my thye, that I maye make the sweare by <sup>ŷ</sup> LORDE the God of heauen and earth, that thou <sup>b</sup>take no wife vnto my sonne amonge <sup>ŷ</sup> daughters of <sup>ŷ</sup> Cananites, (amonge whom I dwell) but that thou go in to my countre, and * to myne owne kynred, and brynge my sonne Isaac a wife.

The seruaunt sayde: What and the woman wyl not folowe me in to this countre? shal I then cary thy sonne agayne in to yonder londe, where thou camest out of? Abraham sayde vnto him: Beware of that, that thou brynge not my sonne thither agayne. The LORDE, the God of heauen, which toke me fro my fathers house and from the londe of my kynred, and that talked with me, and sware also vnto me, and sayde: 'Vnto thy sede wyll I geue this londe: Euen he shall sende his angell before the, that thou maiest brynge my sonne a wife from thence. But yf the woman wyll not folowe the, thou art discharged of this ooth: onely brynge not my sonne thither agayne. Then <sup>ŷ</sup> seruaunt layed his hāde vnder his master Abrahams thye, and sware the same vnto him.

So the seruaunt toke ten Camels of the Camels of his master and departed, and had with him of all maner of goodes of his master, and gat him vp, and departed vnto Mesopotamia, to the cite of Nahor. Then let he the Camels lye downe without before the cite besyde a well of water in the euenynge, aboute the tyme that the women vsed to go forth, and to drawe water. And he sayde:

O LORDE, thou God of my master Abraham, mete me to daye, and shew mercy vnto my master Abraham. Lo, I stonde here besyde the well of water, † the mens daughters of this cite wyll come forth to drawe water: Now yf there come a damsell, to whom I saye: bowe downe thy pytcher, † let me drynke, and yf she saye: drynke, and I wyll geue thy Camels drynke also: That <sup>ŷ</sup> same be she, whom thou hast prouyded for thy seruaunt Isaac: † that I maye knowe by <sup>ŷ</sup> same that thou hast shewed mercy vpon my master.

And or euer he had left of speakynge, beholde, Rebecca the daughter of Bethuel (which was the sonne of Milca, that was the wyfe of Nahor Abrahams brother) came forth, and bare a pytcher vpon hir shulder, and she was a very fayre damsell of face, and yet a virgin, and vnknowne of eny man: She wente downe to the well, and fylled hir pitcher, and came vp agayne. Then ranne the seruaunt to mete her, and sayde: Let me drynke a litle water out of thy pitcher. And she sayde: drynke syr.

And haistely let she downe the pitcher in hir hande, and gaue him drynke. And whan she had geuen him drynke, she sayde: I wyll drawe for thy Camels also, tyll they haue dronke ynough. And she made haist, and poured out hir pitcher in to the trough, and ranne agayne to the well to drawe, and drew for all his Camels. The mā marueyled at her, and helde his tonge, tyll he knewe whether the LORDE had prospered his iourney or not.

Now whan the Camels had all dronken, he toke a goldē earynge of half a Sycle weight, and two bracelettes for hir handes, weynge ten Sycles of golde, and sayde: Doughter, whose art thou? tell me. Is there rowme for vs in thy fathers house to lodge in? She sayde vnto him: I am the daughter of Bethuel, the sonne of Mylca, "whom she bare vnto Nahor. And sayde morouer vnto him: We haue plentye of litter and prouender, and rowme ynough to lodge in.

D Then the man bowed himself, and thanked the LORDE, and sayde: Praise be the LORDE the God of my master Abraham, which hath not withdrawn his mercy and his trueth fro my master, for the LORDE hath brought me the waye to my masters brothers house. And the damsell ranne and tolde all this in hir mothers house. And Rebecca had a brother called Laban.

And Laban ranne to the man without by the well syde: and that came by the reason that he sawe the earynges, and the bracelettes vpon his sisters handes, and herde the wordes of Rebecca his syster, that she sayde: thus spake the man vnto me.

And whan he came to the man, beholde, he stode by the Camels at the well syde. And he sayde: Come in * thou blessed of the LORDE, wherfore stondest thou without? I haue dressed the house, and made rowme for † Camels. So he brought the man in to † house, and vnbridled the Camels, and gaue them litter and prouender, and water to wash his fete, and the mens that were with him, and set meate before him.

E Neuertheles he sayde: I wil not eate, tyll I haue fyrst tolde myne earāde.<sup>b</sup> They answered: Tell on. He sayde: I am Abrahams seruaunt, and the LORDE hath prospered my master richely, so † he is become greate: and he hath geuen him shepe and oxē, syluer and golde, seruauntes and maidens, Camels and Asses: yee and † Sara my masters wife hath borne my master a sonne in hir olde age: vnto him hath he geuen all that he hath.

And my master hath taken an oath of me and saide: Thou shalt not take a wife for my sonne amonge the daughters of the Cananites, in whose lande I dwell, but go thy waye to my fathers house and to myne owne kynred, and there take a wyfe for my sonne. But I sayde vnto my master: What and the woman wyl not folowe me? Then sayde he vnto me: The LORDE (before whom I walke) shall sende his angell with the, and prospere thy iourney, that thou mayest take a wife for my sonne of myne owne kynred, and of my fathers house. And so whan thou comest to my kynred, yf they geue her not vnto †, thou shalt be discharged of myne ooth.

So I came this daye vnto the well of water, and sayde: O LORDE thou God of my master Abraham, Yf thou hast prospered my iourney that I go: Beholde, I stonde here by the well of water: Now yf there come forth a virgin to draw water, and I saye vnto her: geue me a litle water to drinke out of thy pitcher, and she saye vnto me: Drynke thou, and I wyl drawe water for thy Camels also: that the same be the womā, which the LORDE hath prouyded for my masters sonne. Now or euer I had spoken out these wordes in my hert, beholde, Rebecca commeth forth with a pitcher vpon hir shulder, and goeth downe to the well, and draweth.

Then sayde I: geue me a drynke. And immediatly she toke downe the pitcher frō hir shulder, and sayde: drynke, and I wyl geue thy Camels drynke also. So I dranke, and she gaue the Camels also to drynke. And I axed her, and sayde: Doughter, whose art thou? She answered: I am † daughter of Bethuel the sonne of Nahor, whom Milca bare vnto him. Then layed I the earynge vpon hir face, and the bracelettes vpon hir handes, and bowed myself, and thanked the LORDE, and prayed the God of my master Abraham, which had brought me † right waye, to take my masters brothers daughter vnto his sonne.

Yf ye be they then that shew mercy and faithfulness vnto my master, tell me: Yf not, yet tell me, that I maye turne me to † right hande or to the left.

Then answered Laban and Bethuel, and sayde: This is come of the LORDE, therefore can we saye nothinge agaynst the, nether euell ner good. There is Rebecca before the, take her, and go thy waye, that she maye be thy masters sonnes wife, as the LORDE hath sayde. When Abrahams seruaunt herde these wordes, he bowed him self vnto the LORDE flat vpon the earth, and toke forth Iewels of syluer and golde, and rayment, and gaue them vnto Rebecca. But vnto hir brethren and the mother, he gaue spyces. Then he ate and dronke, and the men also that were with him, and taried there all night.

But in the mornynge he arose, and sayde: Let me departe vnto my master. Neuerthelesse hir brother and hir mother sayde: Let the damsell tary with vs at the leest ten dayes, and then shall she go. Then sayde he vnto them: holde me not, for the LORDE hath prospered my journey: let me go, that I maye departe vnto my master. Then sayde they: let vs call the damsell, and axe her, what she sayeth therto. And they called Rebecca, and sayde vnto her: Wilt thou go with this man?

And she answered: Yee I wyll go with him. So they let Rebecca their syster go with hir norse and Abrahams seruauant, and his men. And they blessed Rebecca, and sayde vnto her: Thou art oure syster, growe in to many thousande tymes thousandes, and thy sede possesse the gates of his enemies.

So Rebecca gat hir vp with hir damsels, and satt them vpon the Camels, and wente their waye after the man. And the seruauant toke Rebecca, and departed.

As for Isaac, he was comynge from * the well of y luyngge & seynge, for he dwelt in the south cowntre, and was gone forth to his meditacions in the felde aboute the euen tyde. And he lift vp his eyes, and sawe, that there were Camels comynge. And Rebecca lift vp hir eyes, and sawe Isaac. Then lighted she of the Camell, and sayde vnto y seruauant: What man is this, that commeth agaynst vs in the felde? The seruauant sayde: The same is my master.

Then toke she hir cloke, and put it aboute her. And the seruauant tolde Isaac all the earande that he had done. Then Isaac brought her in to his mother Saras tent, and toke Rebecca, and she became his wife, and he loued her. So Isaac was comforted ouer his mother.

The xvj. Chapter.

ABRAM took another wife called Ketura, which bare him Simram & Iaksan, Medan & Midian, Ieszbak and Suah. Iaksan begat Seba and Dedan. The children of Dedan were Assurim, Latusim, and Leumim. The children of Midian were Ephraim, Ephraim, Hanoch, Abida and Eldaa. All these are the children of Ketura. And Abraham gaue all his goodes vnto Isaac: As for the children that he had of the concubynes, he gaue them giftes, and (whyhe he yet lyued) he sent the awaye from his sonne Isaac, eastwarde in to the east cowntre.

This is the age of Abraham which he lyued: euen an hundreth and fyue and seuentye yeare, and fell sicke and dyed in a good age, whan he was olde, <sup>b</sup> & had lyued ynough and was gathered vnto his people. And his sonnes Isaac and Ismael buried him in the dubble caue in the felde of Ephron the sonne of Zoar the Hethite, which lyeth ouer before Mamre, <sup>c</sup> in the felde that Abraham bought of the Hethites. There was Abraham buried with Sara his wife. And after the death of Abraham God blessed his sonne Isaac. And he dwelt by the well of the luyngge and seynge.

This is the generacion of Ismael Abrahams sonne, whom Agar Saras mayde the Egipcian bare vnto him. And these are the names of Ismaels children, of whom their kynredes are named. The eldest sonne of Ismael, Nebaioth, Cedar, Abdeel, Mibsan, Misma, Duma, Masa, Hadar, Thema, Iethur, Naphis, and Kedma. These are the childre of Ismael with their names in their courtes and cities <sup>d</sup> twolue londeprynces. And this is the age of Ismael, euen an hundreth and seven and thirtie yeare, and he fell sicke and dyed, and was gathered vnto his people. He dwelt from Heula vnto Sur towarde Egipte, as men go to the Assirians. And he dyed in the presence of all his brethren.

This is the generacion of Isaac the sonne of Abraham. Abraham begat Isaac. Isaac was fourtye yeare olde, whan he toke to wyfe Rebecca the daughter of Bethuel y Syrian of Mesopotamia, & Sister of Laban the Syrian.

Isaac besought the LORDE for his wyfe (because she was baren) and the LORDE was intreated, and Rebecca his wyfe conceaued. And the children stroue together in hir wombe. Then sayde she: Yf it shulde go so with me, why am I then with childe? And she wente for to axe the LORDE. And the LORDE sayde vnto her: Two maner of folke are in thy wombe, and two maner of people shall be deuyded out of thy body, and the one nacion shall ouercome the other, <sup>e</sup> and the greater shall serue the lesse.

Now whan the tyme came that she shulde be deluyered, <sup>a</sup> beholde, there were two twyns in hir wombe. The first that came forth, was reed, all rough as an hyde, and they called him Esau. Anone thereafter came his brother forth, which helde the hele of Esau with his hāde,<sup>b</sup> and they called him Iacob. Three score yere olde was Isaac, whan they were borne. And whan the boies were growne vp, Esau became an hunter, <sup>c</sup> an huszbande man. As for Iacob, he was a symple man, and dwelt in the tentes. And Isaac loued Esau, because he ate of his venison. But Rebecca loued Iacob.

And Iacob dight a meace of meate. Thē came Esau from the felde, and was weery, and sayde vnto Iacob: Let me proue of <sup>d</sup> y reed meace of meate, for I am fayntie (therfore is he called Edom.) But Iacob sayde: Sell me this daye thy byrthright. Esau answered: Lo, I must dye neuertheless, what good then shall my byrthright do me? Iacob sayde: Then swere vnto me euen this same daye. And he sware vnto him, and so he solde his byrthright vnto Iacob.<sup>e</sup> Then Iacob gaue him bred and that meace of ryse. And he ate and dronke, and stode vp, and wente his waye. And so Esau regarded not his byrthright.

The xxi. Chaptr.

THERE came a derth in the londe, pasinge the other <sup>f</sup> that was in Abrahams tyme. And Isaac wente to Gerar, vnto Abimelech the kyng of <sup>g</sup> Philistynes. Then the LORDE appeared vnto him, and sayde: <sup>h</sup> Go not downe in to Egipte, but tary in the lande that I shall saye vnto the. Be thou a straūger in this lande, and I wil be with the and blesse the. For vnto the and thy sede wyll I geue all this londe, and wyll perfourme myne ooth that I sware to thy father Abraham. And I wyll multiplie thy sede as the starres of heauen,<sup>i</sup> and vnto thy sede wyll I geue all this londe, and thorow thy sede shall all nacions be blessed, because Abraham was obedient vnto my voyce, and kepte myne ordinaunces, my cōmaundementes, my statutes, and my lawes.

So Isaac dwelt at Gerar. And whan the men of the same place axed him of his wife, he sayde: she is my sister. <sup>j</sup> For he was afraied to saye: she is my wife, (thinkinge thus:) they might slaye me for Rebeccas sake, for she was beutifull to loke vnto. Now whan he had bene there a longe season, Abimelech the kyng of the Philistynes loked out at a wyndow, and sawe Isaac sportinge with Rebecca his wife.

Then Abimelech called Isaac, and sayde: <sup>k</sup> Beholde, she is thy wyfe, why saydest thou then: She is my sister? Isaac answered him: I thought, I might peradventure haue died because of her. Abimelech sayde: Why hast thou then done this vnto vs? It coude lightly haue come to passe, that some of the people might haue lyen with thy wyfe, and so haddest thou broughte synne vpō vs. Thē Abimelech commaunded all the people, and sayde: Who so toucheth this man or his wyfe, shal dye the death.

And Isaac sowed in that londe, and fōūde the same yere an hundreth buszshels, for the LORDE blessed him. And he became a greate man, wente forth, and grew, tyll he was exceedinge greate, so that he had moch good in shepe and greate catell, and a greate housholde. Therfore had the Philistynes envye at him,<sup>l</sup> and stoppedd all the welles, that his fathers seruantes had dygged in the tyme of Abraham his father, and fylled them with earth. In so moch that Abimelech also himself sayde vnto him: Departe from vs, for thou art farre mightier then we.

Then departed Isaac from thence, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar, and dwelt there. And whan he was satled, he caused to dygge vp the welles agayne, that they had dygged vp in his father Abrahā's tyme, which the Philistynes had stoppe after the death of Abraham, and he called thē after <sup>m</sup> y same names that his father had named them withall.

Isaacs seruantes also dygged in the valley, and there they founde a well of luyng water. <sup>n</sup> But the hyrdmen of Gerar stroue with Isaacs hyrdmen, and sayde: The water is oures. Then called he the well Eseek, because they had done him wronge.

Then dygged they another well, and stroue for that also: therfore called he it Sytena. So he gatt him from thence, and dygged another well, for the which they stroue not: therfore he called it Rehoboth, and sayde: Now hath the LORDE made vs rowme, and letten vs growe in the londe. Afterwarde he departed thence vnto Berseba.

D And the LORDE appeared vnto him the same night, and sayde: I am the God of thy father Abraham, feare thou not, for I am with the, and wyll blesse the, and multiplye thy sede for my seruauant Abrahams sake. Then buylded he an altare there, and called vpon the name of the LORDE, and pitched his tent there, and there his seruauantes dygged a well.<sup>a</sup>

And Abinnelech wente vnto him from Gerar, and Ahusath his frende, and Phicol his chefe captayne. But Isaac sayde vnto them: Wherefore come ye to me? seyng ye hate me, and haue put me awaye from you? They sayde: We se with open eyes, that the LORDE is with the, therfore we deuysted that there shulde be an ooth betwixte vs and the, and that we wolde make a bonde with the, that thou do vs no harme, like as we haue not hurte the, and as we haue done nothinge vnto the, but all good, and let the departe in peace.

As for the, thou art ȝ blessed of the LORDE. Then Isaac made them a feast, and they ate and dronke. And on the morow they arose, and sware one to the other. And Isaac let them go, and they departed from him in peace.

The same daye came Isaacs seruauantes, and tolde him of the well that they had digged, and sayde vnto him: We haue founde water. And he called it Saba. Therefore is ȝ cite called Bersaba vnto this daye.

The xxvij. Chapter.

A WHAN Esau was fortye yeare olde, he toke wyues: Iudith the daughter of Beri the Hethite, and Basmath the daughter of Elon the Hethite: both these were disobedient vnto the sprete of Isaac and Rebecca.

And it came to passe when Isaac was olde, his eyes waxed dymme of sight, and he called Esau his greater sonne, and sayde vnto him: My sonne. He answered him: Here am I. And he sayde: Beholde, I am olde, and knowe not whan I shal dye. Now therfore take thy geer, thy quyer and thy bowe, and get the forth to the felde, and take me some venyson, and make me meate (such as I loue) and bryng it me herein, that I may eate, ȝ my soule maye blesse the, before I dye.

But Rebecca herde these wordes, that Isaac sayde vnto his sonne. And Esau wente his waye in to the felde, to hunte venyson, and to bryng it home. Then sayde Rebecca vnto Iacob hir sonne: beholde, I haue herde thy father talkinge with Esau thy brother, and sayenge: Bryng me venyson, and make me meate, that I maye eate, and blesse the before ȝ LORDE, yer I dye. Now therfore my sonne, heare my voyce, what I commaunde the: Go thy waye to the flocke, and fetch me two good kyddes, that I maye make meate of them for thy father, such as he loueth: this shalt thou bryng in vnto thy father, that he maye eate, that he maye blesse the before his death.

Neuertheles Iacob sayde vnto Rebecca his mother: Beholde, my brother Esau is rough, and I am smooth: then might my father per-adventure fele me, and I shulde seme vnto him as though I begyled him, and so bryng a curse vpon me and not a blessinge. Then sayde his mother vnto him: That curse be vpon me my sonne, folowe thou my voyce: go thy waye and fetch it me. So he wente his waye, and fetched it, and brought it vnto his mother.

Then his mother made meate, acordinge as his father loued, and toke Esaus hir elder sonnes costly rayment (which she had with her in ȝ house) and put them vpon Iacob hir yonger sonne. But the kyddes skynnes put she aboute his handes, and where he was smooth aboute the neck: and so she put the meate with bred (as she had made it) in hir sonne Iacobs hande.

And he brought it in vnto his father, and sayde: My father. He answered: here am I, who art thou my sonne? Iacob sayde: I am Esau thy firstborne sonne, I haue done as thou saydest vnto me: aryse, syt vp, and eate of my venyson, that thy soule maye blesse me. But Isaac sayde vnto his sonne: My sonne, how hast thou founde it so soone? He answered: The LORDE thy God brought it to my hande.

Thē sayde Isaac vnto Iacob: Come neare my sonne, that I maye fele the, whether thou be my sonne Esau or not. So Iacob wētē vnto Isaac his father. And when he had felt him, he sayde: The voyce is Iacobs voyce, but the handes are the handes of Esau. And he knew him not, for his handes were rough like as ſ handes of his brother Esau. And he blessed him.

D And he sayde vnto him: art thou my sonne Esau? He answered: Yee I am. Then sayde he: Bringe me here then to eate of thy venyson my sonne,* that my soule maye blesse the. Then he brought it him, and he ate: and he brought him wyne also, and he dranke. And Isaac his father sayde vnto him: Come nye, and kysse me my sonne. So he came nye, and he kyssed him.

Then smelled he the sauoure of his clothes, and blessed him, and sayde: Beholde, the smell of my sonne is as ſ smell of the felde, which ſ LORDE hath blessed.* God geue the of the dew of heauen, and of the fatnesse of the earth, and plenteousnes of corne and wyne. Nations be thy seruantes, and people fall downe at thy fote. Be thou lorde ouer thy brethren, and thy mothers children fall downe at thy fote. <sup>b</sup> Cursed be he, that curseth the: and blessed be he, that blesseth the.

E Now whan Isaac had made an ende of blessinge, and Iacob was seace gone out from his father Isaac, his brother Esau came from his huntinge, and made meate also, and brought it vnto his father, and sayde vnto him: Aryse my father, and eate of thy sonnes venyson, that thy soule maye blesse me. Then answered him Isaac his father: Who art thou? He sayde: I am Esau thy firstborne sonne. Then was Isaac exceedingly amased aboue measure, and saide: Who? Where is then the hunter that brought me, and I haue eaten of all afore thou camest, and haue blessed him? And he shall be blessed still.

Whan Esau herde these wordes of his father, he cried loude, and was excedyngue sory, and sayde vnto his father: O blesse me also my father. But he sayde: Thy brother came with sotylytie, and hath taken thy blessinge awaye. Then sayde he: He maye well be called Iacob, for he hath vndermined me now two tymes. My byrth right hath he awaye, and beholde, now taketh he awaye my blessinge also.

F And he sayde: Hast thou not kepte one blessyng for me? Isaac answered, and sayde vnto him: I haue made him lorde ouer ſ, and all his brethren haue I made his seruantes. With corne & wine haue I prouyded him. What shal I do vnto the now my sonne? Esau sayde vnto his father? Hast thou not one blessinge more my father? O blesse me also my father.

And he lift vp his voyce, & wepte.<sup>c</sup> Then Isaac his father answered and sayde vnto him: <sup>d</sup> Beholde, thou shalt haue a fat dwellinge vpon earth, & of ſ dew of heauen from aboue: with thy swerde shalt thou get thy lyuynge, and shalt serue thy brother. And it shall come to passe, ſ thou shalt put of his yock,<sup>e</sup> and plucke it from thy neck.

And Esau bare euell wyll vnto Iacob, because of the blessinge that his father had blessed him withall,<sup>f</sup> and sayde in his herte: The tyme wyll come shortly, that my father shal mourne, for I wil slaye my brother Iacob. Thē was it tolde Rebecca of these wordes of hir elder sonne, and she sent, and bad call for Iacob hir yonger sonne, and saide vnto him: Beholde, thy brother Esau threateneth the, that he wil slaye the. And now my sonne heare my voyce: Get the vp, and flye vnto my brother Laban in Haran, and tary there with him a while, <sup>g</sup> tyll the furiousnes of thy brother be swaged, and till his wrath agaynst ſ be turned from the, and he forget what thou hast done vnto him. So wyll I then sende for the, and cause the be fetched from thēce. Why shulde I be robbed of you both in one daye?

And Rebecca sayde vnto Isaac: I am weery of my life, because of the daughters of Heth: Yf Iacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth, ſ which are as the daughters of this londe, what shall this life then profit me?

The xxiiij. Chapter.

THEN called Isaac his sonne Iacob and A <sup>h</sup> blessed him, and charged him, & sayde vnto him: Take not a wife of the daughters of Canaan, but get the vp, and go in to Mesopotamia vnto the house of Bethuel thy mothers father, and take ſ there a wife of ſ daughters of Laban thy mothers brother. blesynge of Abraham vnto  $\text{f}$   $\text{a}$  thy sede with the, that thou mayest possesse the lande, wherein thou art a stranger,\* which God gaue vnto Abraham. So Isaac let Iacob departe, that he might go in to Mesopotamia vnto Laban the sonne of Bethuel of Siria,  $\text{f}$  brother of Rebecca, his and Esaus mother.

B Now when Esau sawe that Isaac had blessed Iacob, and let him departe in to Mesopotamia, that he might take a wife there: and  $\text{y}$ , as he blessed him, he charged him,  $\text{a}$  sayde: Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan, and that Iacob obeyed his father and his mother, and was gone vnto Mesopotamia: seynge also that Isaac his father loked not gladly vpon the daughters of Canaan, he wente his waye vnto Ismael, and besyde the wyues that he had afore, he toke Mahaloth the daughter of Ismael (Abrahams sonne) the sister of Nebaioth, to wife.

C As for Iacob, he departed from Bersaba, and wente vnto Haran and came to a place, where he taried all night: for the Sonne was downe. And he toke a stone of  $\text{f}$  place,  $\text{a}$  put it vnder his heade, and layed him downe in  $\text{f}$  same place to slepe. And he dreamed, and beholde, there stode vpon  $\text{f}$  earth, a ladder, whose toppes reached vnto the heauen. And beholde, the angels of God  $\text{a}$  wente vp and downe vpon it, and the LORDE stode vpon it, and sayde:

'I am the LORDE God of thy father Abraham, and the God of Isaac: The londe  $\text{y}$  thou lyst vpon, wyl I geue vnto the, $\text{d}$  and to thy sede: and thy sede shal be as  $\text{f}$  dust of  $\text{f}$  earth. And thou shalt sprede forth towarde the west, east, north, and south: and thorow the and thy sede shall all the kynreds vpon earth be blessed. And beholde, I am with  $\text{f}$ , and wyl kepe the where so euer thou goest,  $\text{a}$  wyl brynge the hither agayne in to this lande: for I wil not leaue the, tyll I haue made good, all that I haue promysed the.

D Now whan Iacob awaked from his slepe, he saide: Surely the LORDE is in this place, and I knew not. And he was afraied, and sayde: How fearfull is this place? here is no thinge els but an house of God,  $\text{a}$  a gate vnto heaue. And Iacob arose early in the mornynge, and toke the stone $\text{f}$  that he had layed vnder his heade, and set it vp, and poured oyle vpon it. And he called the place Bethel, but afore the cite was called Lus. And Iacob made a vowe, and sayde: \*Yf God wyl be with me, and kepe me in this iourney  $\text{y}$  I go  $\text{a}$  geue me bred to eate, and clothinge to put on, and brynge me peaceably home agayne vnto my father: The shall the LORDE be my God, and this stone that I haue set vp, shal be an house of God: and all that thou geuest me, I wyl geue the the tenth therof.

The xxix. Chapter.

THEN Iacob gat him vp vpon his fete: A and wente in to the east countre,  $\text{a}$  loked aboute him, and beholde, there was a well in the felde, and  $\text{f}$  flockes of shepe therby, for the flockes dranke of the well. And there laye a greate stone at the welles mouth, and thither they vsed to brynge the flockes, and to roule the stone from  $\text{f}$  mouth of the well, and to geue the shepe drynke,  $\text{a}$  so they put the stone agayne vpon the welles mouth in to his place.

And Iacob sayde vnto them: Brethren, whēce be ye? They answered: we are of Haran. He sayde vnto them: Knowe ye Laban the sonne of Nahor? They answered: We knowe him well. He sayde:  $\text{a}$  Is he in good health? They answered: he is in good health. And lo, there cometh his daughter Rachel with the shepe. He sayde: It is yet hye daye,  $\text{a}$  is not yet tyme to dryue in the catell: geue the shepe to drynke,  $\text{a}$  go youre waye,  $\text{a}$  fede them. They answered: We can not, tyll all the flockes be brought together, and tyll we roule the stone from the welles mouth,  $\text{a}$  so geue the shepe drynke.

B Whyle he yet talked with them, Rachel came with hir fathers shepe, for she kepte  $\text{f}$  shepe. Whan Iacob sawe Rachel  $\text{f}$  daughter of Laban his mothers brother, and the shepe of Laban his mothers brother, he wēte,  $\text{a}$  rouled the stone from the welles mouth, and gaue his mothers brother shepe to drynke, and kyssed Rachel, lift vp his voyce, and wepte, and tolde her,  $\text{y}$  he was hir fathers brother, and  $\text{f}$  sonne of Rebecca. Then ranne she, and tolde her father.

Whā Laban herde of Iacob his sisters sonne, he ranne to mete him, and embraced him, and kyssed him, and brought him in to his house.

And so he tolde him all this matter. Thē sayde Laban vnto him: Wel, thou art my bone and my flesh. Abyde with me a moneth longe. But after that saide he vnto Iacob: Because thou art my brother, shalt thou therefore serue me for nought? Tell me, what shall thy wages be. Laban had two daughters, the eldest was called Lea, & the yongest Rachel. And Lea was tender eyed, but Rachel was beutyfull & well fauoured of face, and Iacob loued her well, and sayde: I will serue the seuen yeare, for Rachel thy yongest daughter. Laban answered: It is better that I geue her the, then vnto another: tary thou with me.

So Iacob serued seuen yeare for Rachel, and they semed vnto him but few dayes, he loued her so well. And Iacob saide vnto Laban: geue me my wyfe, for the tyme is come that I shulde lye with her. Thē Laban bad all the people of that place, and made a mariage. But at euē he toke his daughter Lea, and brought her in vnto him, and he laye with her. And Laban gaue Zilpa his mayde vnto his daughter Lea to be hir mayde.

But on the morow, beholde, it was Lea. And he sayde vnto Laban: Why hast thou done this vnto me? Haue not I serued ŷ for Rachel? Why hast thou then begyled me? Laban answered: It is not the maner in oure countre, to mary the yongest before the eldest. Holde out this weke, & I will geue the this also, for the seruyce ŷ thou shalt do me yet seuen yeares more. Iacob dyd so, & helde out ŷ weke. Then gaue he him Rachel his daughter to wyfe. And Laban gaue Bilha his mayden vnto Rachel his daughter to be hir mayden. So he laye with Rachel also, & loued Rachel more thē Lea, and serued him yet seuen yeares more.

But when the LORDE sawe, that Lea was nothinge regarded, he made her frutefull, and Rachel baren. And Lea cōceaued, and bare a sonne, whom she called Ruben, and sayde: "The LORDE hath loked vpon my aduersite. Now wyll my huszbande loue me. And she conceaued agayne, and bare a sonne, and sayde: The LORDE hath herde that I am despyed, and hath geuē me this also, and she called him Symeon. She cōceaued yet agayne, and bare a sonne, and sayde: Now wyll my huszbande kepe me company agayne, for I haue borne him thre sonnes, therefore called she his name Leui. She conceaued ŷ fourth tyme, and bare a sonne, and sayde: Now wyll I geue thanks vnto the LORDE, therefore called she him Iuda, and left bearynge.

The xxx. Chapter.

WHEN Rachel sawe that she bare no children vnto Iacob, she had enuye at hir sister, & saide vnto Iacob: Geue me childrē also, or els I am but deed. But Iacob was very wroth at Rachel, & sayde: Am I then in Gods steade, which kepeth ŷ frute of thy wombe from ŷ? Neuertheles she sayde: Beholde, there is Bilha my mayden, lye with her, ŷ she maye beare vpon my lappe, & that I maye be increased by her. And so she gaue him Bilha hir mayden to wyfe.

And Iacob laye with her. So Bilha conceived, and bare Iacob a sonne. Then sayde Rachel: God hath geuen sentence on my syde, and herde my voyce, and geuē me a sonne, therefore called she him Dan. Bilha Rachels mayde cōceaued agayne, and bare another sonne vnto Iacob. Then sayde Rachel: God hath turned it with me, and my sister, and I haue gottē the vpper hande. And she called him Nephthali.

Now whan Lea sawe that she had left bearynge, she toke Silpa hir mayde, and gaue her vnto Iacob to wyfe. So Silpa Leas mayde bare Iacob a sonne. Then saide Lea: This is good lucke, & she called him Gad. After this Silpa Leas mayde bare Iacob another sonne. Then sayde Lea: Well is me, for the daughters will call me blessed, and she called him Asser.

Ruben wente out in the tyme of ŷ wheate haruest, and founde Mandragoras in the felde, and brought them home vnto his mother Lea. Then sayde Rachel vnto Lea: Geue me some of thy sonnes Mādragoras. She answered: Hast thou not ynough that thou hast taken awaye my huszbande, but wilt take awaye my sonnes Mandragoras also? Rachel saide: Wel, let him lye with the this night for thy sonnes Mandragoras. Now whan Iacob came home at euen from the felde, Lea wente forth to mete him, and sayde: Thou shalt lye with me, for I haue bought the for my sonnes Mandragoras.

And he slepte with her that night. And God herde Lea, and she conceived, and bare Iacob the fifth sonne, & sayde: God hath rewarded me, because I gaue my mayden vnto my huszbande, and she called him Isachar. Lea conceaued yet agayne, and bare Iacob the sixte sonne, and sayde: God hath endewed me with a good dowry. Now wyll my huszbande dwell with me agayne, for I haue borne him sixe sonnes, & she called him Zabulon. After that she bare a doughter, whom she called * Dina.

D Neuertheles God thought vpō Rachel, and herde her, and made her frutefull. Then she conceaued, and bare a sonne, and sayde: God hath taken awaye my rebuke, and she called him Ioseph,<sup>a</sup> and sayde: God gene me yet another sonne.

Now whan Rachel had borne Ioseph, Iacob sayde vnto Laban: <sup>b</sup> Let me go, & departe in to my place and vnto myne owne lande: geue me my wyues and my children, (for the which I haue serued the) & I maye go: for thou knowest, what seruyce I haue done the. Laban sayde vnto him: Can I not fynde fauoure in thy sight? I perceauē, that God hath blessed me for thy sake. Appoynte thou the rewarde, & I shal geue the. But he saide vnto him: Thou knowest how I haue serued the, and what maner of catell thou hast vnder me. Thou haddest but litle afore I came hither, but now is it growne in to a multitude, and the LORDE hath blessed & for my sake. And now whan shall I loke to myne owne house also? He saide: What shal I then geue the?

Iacob sayde: Thou shalt geue me nothinge at all, but yf thou wilt do this for me & I saye, then wyll I fede and kepe thy shepe agayne. I wyll go thorow all thy flockes to daye, and separate thou from amonge them all the shepe that be spotted and partye coloured, and all blacke shepe amonge the lambes. Now loke what shalbe partie coloured and spotted amonge the kyddes, the same shal be my rewarde: so shal my righteousnes testifie with me to daye or tomorrow, whan it cometh vnto my rewarde before the, so that, what so euer is not spotted and partye coloured amonge the kyddes, and blacke amonge the lambes, let that be theft with me.

J Then sayde Laban: Beholde, let it be so as thou hast sayde. And that same daye he sundered out the speckled and partye coloured goates, and all the spotted and partye coloured kyddes (where there was eny whyte vpon them) and all that was blacke amonge the lambes, and put them vnder the hande of his children, and made rowme of thre dayes journey wyde betwixte him and Iacob. So Iacob keppe the residue of Labans flocke.

But Iacob toke stauēs of grene wyllies, hasell and of chestnottrees, and pyllled whyte strekes in them, and layed the stauēs that he had pyllled, in the drynkinge troughes before the flocke, which came there to drynke, that they shulde conceaue, whan they came to drynke. So the flockes conceaued ouer & stauēs, and brought forth speckelde, spotted and partye coloured.

Then Iacob parted & lambes, and put them to the flocke vnto the spotted: and all that was blacke in Labans flocke, that put he vnto the spotted. And he made him a flocke of his owne, which he put not vnto Labans flocke. Neuertheles in the first buckynge tyme of the flockes, he layed the stauēs in the drynkinge troughes before the eyes of the flockes, that they shulde conceaue ouer the stauēs. But in the latter buckynge tyme he layed them not in. So the later were Labans, but the firstlings were Iacobs. Thus the man became excedinge riche, so that he had many shepe, maydens & seruantes, Camels and Asses.

The iiii. Chapter.

HE herde also of & wordes of Labans children, that they sayde: Iacob hath brought all oure fathers good vnto him self, & of oure fathers good hath he gotten these riches. And Iacob behelde Labans countenance, & beholde, it was not towarde him as yesterdaye and yeryesterdaye.

And the LORDE sayde vnto him: <sup>c</sup> Departe agayne to thy fatherlāde, and to thy kynred, I wyll be with the. Then sent Iacob and bad call Rachel and Lea in to the felde to his flockes, and sayde vnto them: I se youre fathers countenance, that it is not towarde me like as yesterdaye and yeryesterdaye: but the God of my father hath bene with me. And ye knowe, that I haue serued youre father with all my power.

And he hath disceaued me, and chaunged my wages now ten tymes. But God hath not suffred him, to do me harme. Yf he sayde: The partye coloured shalbe thy rewarde, then the whole flocke bare partye coloured. Yf he sayde: The speckelde shalbe thy rewarde, the whole flocke bare speckelde. Thus hath God withdrawen youre fathers goodes from him, and geuen them vnto me. For whan the buckyngne tyme came, I lift vp myne eyes and sawe in a dreame, and beholde, the rammes leapte vpon the flocke that was speckelde, spotted, & partye coloured.

And the angel of God sayde vnto me in a dreame: Iacob. And I answered: here am I. He sayde: lift vp thine eyes, and beholde, the rammes leape vpon the speckelde, spotted, and partie coloured flocke: for I haue sene all y<sup>e</sup> Laban doth vnto the. I am y<sup>e</sup> God at * Bethel, where thou dydest anoynte the stone, & maydest a vowe there vnto me. Get the vp now, & departe out of this londe, & go agayne in to the londe of thy kynred.

Then answered Rachel and Lea, and sayde vnto him: As for vs, we haue no porcion ner inheritaunce more in oure fathers house, & he hath couēted vs as straungers, for he hath solde vs, & spent vp oure wages. Therefore hath God withdrawē oure fathers riches from him vnto vs & oure children. What so euer now God hath sayde vnto the, that do.

So Iacob gat vp, and set his children and wyues vpon Camels, and caried awaye all his cattell and all his substaunce, that he had gotten at Mesopotamia, y<sup>e</sup> he might come vnto Isaac his father in the lande of Canaan. Labā was gone to clyppe his flocke,* and Rachel stole hir fathers ymages. Thus dyd Iacob steale awaie y<sup>e</sup> hert of Laban y<sup>e</sup> Syrian, in y<sup>e</sup> he tolde him not that he fled. So he fled, & all that was his, gat vp, and passed ouer the water, & wente straight towarde the mount Gilead.

Vpon the thirde daye it was tolde Laban, that Iacob fled. And he toke his brethrē vnto him, and folowed after him seuen dayes journey, and ouertoke him vpon the mount Gilead. But God came vnto Laban the Syrian in a dreame by night, & sayde vnto him: Bewarre, that thou speake nothinge to Iacob but good. And Labā drew nye vnto Iacob. As for Iacob, he had pyched his tente vpon the mount. And Laban with his brethrē pyched his tent also vpon the same mount Gilead.

Then sayde Laban vnto Iacob: What hast thou done, that thou hast stollen awaie my hert, and caried awaye my daughters, as though they had bene taken captiue with y<sup>e</sup> swerde? Wherefore kepest thou that secrete, that thou woldest flye, and hast stollen awaye fro me, and toldest me not, that I might haue brought the on the waye with myrth, with synnginge, with tabrettes and harpes? and hast not suffred me to kysse my children and daughters? Thou hast done foolishly, and so moch might I haue made, that I coude haue done you euell: but youre fathers God saide yesterdaye vnto me: Bewarre, that thou speake nothinge vnto Iacob but good. And for so moch then as thou woldest nedes departe, and longest sore after thy fathers house, why hast thou stollen away my goddes?

Iacob answered and sayde vnto Laban: I was afraied, that thou shuldest haue taken away thy daughters from me: but loke by whom thou fyndest thy goddes, let the same dye here before oure brethren. Seke that thine is by me, and take it awaye. (But he knew not, that Rachel had stollen them.) Then wente Laban in to Iacobs tent and in to Leas tent, and in to both the maydens tētes, and founde nothinge: and out of Leas tente he wente in to Rachels tent. Then toke Rachel the ymages, and layed them vnder the Camels strawe, and sat downe vpon them. But Laban searched the whole tent, and founde nothinge. Then sayde she vnto hir father: Be not angrie my lorde, that I can not ryse vp vnto the: for it goeth with me after the maner of women. So he sought, and founde not the ymages.

And Iacob was wroth, and chode with Laban, answered & sayde vnto him: What haue I trespassed or offended, y<sup>e</sup> thou art so whote vpon me? Thou hast searched all my housholde stuff, & what hast thou founde of thy housholde stuff? Laye it here before my brethren & thyne, y<sup>e</sup> they maye iudge betwene vs both. Twentye yeare haue I bene with the: thy shepe & goates haue not bene vnfrutefull, the rammes of thy flocke haue I not eaten: Loke what was torne of beastes, I brought it not vnto y<sup>e</sup>, I was fayne to paie it my self: thou requyrest it of my hande, whether it were stollen from me by daye or by night. On the daye tyme the heate cōsumed me, and the frost on the night, and my slepe departed fro myne eyes.

f Thus haue I serued twentye yere in thy house, fourtene yeaues for thy daughters, ⁊ sixe for thy flocke, and ten tymes hast thou chaunged my rewarde: ⁊ yf the God of my father the God of Abraham, and the feare of Isaac had not bene on my syde, thou haddest latten me go awaye emptye. But God hath loked vpon myne aduersite and laboure, and rebuked the yesterdaye.

Laban answered and sayde: The daughters are my daughters, ⁊ the children are my childrē, and the flockes are my flockes, ⁊ all that thou seist is myne. What can I do this daye vnto these my daughters, or to their children whom they haue borne? Now therefore come on, let vs make a couenaunt (I ⁊ thou) which maye be a wytnesse betwene me and the. Then toke Iacob a stone, ⁊ set it vp (for a piler or markstone) and sayde vnto his brethren: Gather stones. And they toke the stones, and made an heape, ⁊ ate vpon the same heape. And Labā called it legar Sahadutha, but Iacob called it Gilead: (either of them after the properte of his language.)

c Then sayde Laban: * This heape be wytnesse betwene me and the this daye (therefore is it called Gilead) and a testimony, for he sayde: The LORDE loke betwene me and yf whan we are departed ȳ one from ȳ other: ȳ, thou vexe my daughters, or take other wyues vnto them. There is no mā with vs, but lo, God is the wytnesse betwene me and the. And Laban sayde morouer vnto Iacob: Beholde, this is the heape, and this is the markstone that I haue set vp betwixte me and the: the same heape be wytnesse, and the same markstone also be wytnesse, yf I passe ouer vnto the, or yf thou passe ouer this heape ⁊ markstone vnto me, to do eny harme. The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, and the God of their fathers, be iudge betwene vs.

And Iacob sware vnto him by the feare of his father Isaac. And Iacob offred an offerynge vpon the mount, and called his brethrē to eate bred. And whan they had eaten, they taried vpon the mount all night. But vpon the morow Laban rose vp early, kyssed his childrē ⁊ daughters, ⁊ blessed thē, ⁊ departed, and came agayne vnto his place. As for Iacob, he wente on his iourney, ⁊ the angels of God met him. And whan he sawe them, he sayde: It is Gods hoost, ⁊ called the same place Mahanaim.

The rrrij. Chapter.

IACOB sent messaungers before him to his brother Esau 'in to the lande of Seir, of the felde of Edom, ⁊ commaunded thē, ⁊ sayde: Saye thus vnto my lorde Esau: Thy sernaunt Iacob sendeth ȳ this worde: I haue bene out with Laban, ⁊ haue bene hither to amonge straungers, ⁊ haue oxen ⁊ Asses, shepe, seruauntes ⁊ maydēs, and haue sent forth to shewe it the my lorde, ȳ I might fynde fauoure in thy sight.

The messaungers came agayne vnto Iacob, and sayde: We came vnto thy brother Esau, ⁊ he commeth forth also agaynst the with foure hundred men. Then was Iacob sore afrayed, and wyst not what waye to turne him self, ⁊ deuyded the people that was with him, and the shepe, and the oxen, ⁊ the Camels in to two droues, ⁊ sayde: Yf Esau come vpon the one droue, and smyte it, the other shal escape.

b Iacob sayde morouer: O God of my father Abraham, God of my father Isaac, LORDE thou that saydest vnto me: †Depart agayne to thine owne londe and to thy kynred, and I wyl do the good: I am to litle for all the mercies and all the trueth that thou hast shewed vnto thy sernaunt (for I had nomore but this staff whan I wente ouer this Iordan, and now am I become two droues) delyuer me from ȳ hande of my brother, frō the hāde of Esau, for I am afrayed of him, lest he come and smyte me the mother with the children. Thou saydest: I wyl do the good, and wyl make thy sede as the sonde of ȳ see, which can not be nombred for multitude.

c And there he taried that night, and toke of soch as came to hande, * a present vnto his brother Esau, two hūdreth she goates, twentye he goates, two hundred shepe, twentye rammes and thirtie mylek camels with their foales, fourtye kyne, ten bullockes, twentye she Asses with ten foales, and put them in the handes of his sernauntes, euery flock by them selues, ⁊ sayde vnto them: Go ye forth before me, ⁊ put a space betwixte one flocke after the other, and commaunded the first and sayde:

When my brother Esau meteth the, and axeth the: Whose art thou? ⁊ whyther goest thou? and whose are these that thou drynest before the? Thou shalt saye: They be thy seruauit Iacobs, which sendeth a present vnto his lorde Esau, and commeth behynde vs him self.

Thus commaunded he the seconde also, and the thirde, and all them that folowed the flockes, and sayde: Like as I haue tolde you, so speake ye vnto Esau, whan ye mete him, and saye vnto him also: Beholde, thy seruauit Iacob is behynde vs. For he thought: I wyll reconcyle him with the present that goeth before me, after warde wyll I se him my self, peradventure he shall receaue me to grace.

So the present wente before him, but he taried in the tente the same night, and rose vp in y night, and toke his two wyues and the two maydens and his eleuen sonnes, and wente vnto the foorde of Iacob, toke them and caried them ouer the water, so that all that he had came ouer, and taried him self alone on this syde.

Then wrestled there a man with him vntyll the breake of y daye. And whan he sawe y he might not ouercome him, he touched the senowe of his thy, and y senowe of his thy shrancke in wrestlinge with him. And he sayde: Let me go, for y daye breaketh on. But he answered: I will not let y go, excepte thou blesse me. He sayde: What is thy name? He answered: Iacob. He sayde: Thou shalt nomore be called Iacob, but Israel, for thou hast stryuen with God and with men, and hast preuayled. And Iacob axed him, ⁊ sayde: Tell me, what is thy name? But he sayde: Why axest thou what my name is? And he blessed him there. And Iacob called the place Peniel, for I haue sene God face to face, ⁊ my soule is recouered. And as he came ouer frō Peniel, y Sonne rose vpō him, ⁊ he halted vpon his thy. Therefore eate the children of Israel no vane vpon the senow of y thy vnto this daye, because y vane vpon the senow of Iacobs thy was touched.

The xxxij. Chapter.

IACOB lift vp his eyes, ⁊ sawe his brother Esau cōmynge with foure hundreth men: and he deuyded his children vnto Lea vnto Rachel, and to both the maydēs, and set the maydens with their children before, and Lea with hir childrē after, and Rachel with Ioseph hynder most. And he wente before them, and bowed him self to the grounde seuen tymes, tyll he came to his brother. * But Esau ranne to mete him, and embraced him, and fell aboute his neck, ⁊ kyssed him, and wepte, and lift vp his eyes, and sawe the wyues with the children, and sayde: What are these with the? He answered: They are the children, which God hath geuen vnto thy seruauit. And the maydens came forth with their children, and dyd their obeysaunce vnto him.

Lea came forth also with hir childrē, and kneled vnto him. Afterwarde came Ioseph and Rachel forth, and kneled vnto him likewise. And he sayde: What meanest thou with all the droue that I met? He answered: that I might fynde grace in the sight of my lorde. Esau sayde: I haue ynough my brother, kepe that thou hast. Iacob answered: Oh nay, but yf I haue founde grace in thy sight, receaue my present of my hande (for I sawe thy face, <sup>d</sup>as though I had sene the face of God) and be at one with me. Take this present in good worth, that I haue brought y, for God hath geuen it me, ⁊ I haue ynough of all thinges. So he compelled him to take it.

And he sayde: Let vs go on and take oure iourney, I wyll go in thy company. But he sayde vnto him: My lorde, thou knowest that I haue tender children by me, and small and greate catell also, which are yet but yonge: yf they shulde be dryuē ouer in one daye, the whole flocke wolde dye. Let my lorde go on before his seruauit. I wyll dryue after fayre and softly, (there after as the catell ⁊ the children can go,) tyll I come to my lorde in Seir. Esau sayde: Yet wil I leaue some of my people with the. He answered: What nede is it? Let me but onely fynde grace in the sight of my lorde.

So Esau departed againe the same daye toward Seir, and Iacob toke his iourney toward Seir, and buylded him an house, and made tētes for his catell. Therefore is the place called Sucoth.

Afterwarde came Iacob peaceably vnto the cite of Sichem, which lyeth in y lande of Canaan, after that he was come agayne out of Mesopotamia, and pitched before the cite,

"and bought a pece of londe of the children of Hemor y<sup>e</sup> father of Sichem for *an hundreth pens. There pitched he his tent, and there he set vp an altare, and called vpon the name of the mightie God of Israel.

The xxiij. Chapter.

DINA y<sup>e</sup> daughter of Lea, which she bare vnto Iacob, wente out to beholde the daughters of the londe. Whan Sichem the sonne of Hemor the Heuite (which was lorde of the löde) sawe her, he toke her, and laye with her, and forced her, and his hert hanged vpon her, and he loued y<sup>e</sup> damsell, and talked lougly with her, and spake to his father Hemor: Get me this mayden to wife.

And Iacob vnderstode, that Dina his daughter was defyled, and his sonnes were with the catell in the felde, and Iacob helde his tonge tyll they came. Then Hemor the father of Sichem wente forth vnto Iacob to comen with him. In the meane season came Iacobs sonnes from y<sup>e</sup> felde. And whan they herde it, it greued the men, and they were very wroth, that he had wrought foly in Israel, and lyen with Iacobs daughter: for so was not the vse to do.

B Then comened Hemor with thē, and sayde: My sonne Sichems hert longeth for youre daughter, O geue hir him to wife: make frendshipe with vs, geue vs youre daughters, and take ye oure daughters, and dwell with vs, the londe shall be open vnto you, dwell and occupie, and haue youre possessions therin. And Sichem sayde vnto hir father and brethren: Let me fynde grace with you: loke what ye appoynte me, I will geue it: requyre the dowrye and gift of me hardely, I wyll geue it acordinge as ye wyll axe, onely geue me the damsell to wife.

Then Iacobs sonnes answered Sichem and Hemor his father (and spake disceatfully, because their sister Dina was defyled) ⁊ sayde vnto them: That can we not do, to geue oure sister to an vncircumcided man: for that were a shame vnto vs.

C Neuertheles we wyll consente vnto you, yf ye wylbe like vnto vs, and be circumcided as many as are males amonge you: then will we geue you oure daughters, and take youre daughters vnto vs, and dwell with you, and be one people. But yf ye wyll not herken vnto vs, to be circumcided, then wyl we take oure daughter, and go oure waye.

These wordes pleased Hemor and his sonne wel, and the yonge man deferde not to do the same, for he had lust to Iacobs daughter: and he was holden in honoure aboue all in his fathers house. Then came Hemor and Sichem his sonne vnder y<sup>e</sup> gate of cite, and comened with the citisens of the cite, and saide: These men are peaceable with vs, and will dwell in the lande and occupye: now is the londe brode of both the sydes, we wyl take their daughters vnto vs, and geue them oure daughters.

But then wyll they consent vnto vs, to dwell by vs, and to be one people with vs, yf we circumcise all the men children amonge vs, like as they are circumcysed: their catell and goodes, and all that they haue, shal be ours, yf we consent vnto them, that they maye dwel with vs.

And they herkened vnto Hemor and Sichem his sonne, as many as wente out and in at y<sup>e</sup> gate of his cite, and circumcided all the males, that wente out and in at his cite. And vpon the thirde daye (whan it was panefull to them) <sup>ⁱ</sup>the two sonnes of Iacob Simeon and Leui Dinas brethren, toke euery man his swerde, and wente boldly in to the cite, <sup>ⁱ</sup>and slew all the males, and slew Hemor also and Sichem his sonne with the edge of the swerde, and toke their sister Dina out of Sichems house, and wente their waye.

Then came Iacobs sonnes ouer the slayne, and spoyled the cite (because they had defyled their sister) and toke their shepe, oxen, Asses, and what so euer was in the cite and in the londe, and all maner of goodes: All their children and wyues toke they captyue, and spoyled all y<sup>e</sup> was in the houses.

And Iacob sayde vnto Symeon and Leui: Ye haue brought it so to passe, y<sup>e</sup> I stynke before the inhabitants of this lande, y<sup>e</sup> Cananites and Pheresites, ⁊ I am but a small nombre: Yf they gather them selues now together against me, they shal slaye me, so shal I be destroyed with my house. But they answered: Shulde they thē deale with oure sister as with an whoore?

Then sayde Iacob vnto his housholde and to all ȳ were with him: Put away from you ȳ straunge †goddess, that are amonge you, and clense youre selues, and change youre clothes, and let vs get vp, and go vnto Bethel, that I maye there make an altare vnto the God, <sup>a</sup>which herde me in the tyme of my trouble, and hath bene with me in the waye that I haue gone.

Then gaue they him all the straunge goddess that were vnder their handes, and their earynges, and he buried them vnder an Oke that stode besyde Sichem, † departed. And there came a feare of God vpon the cities that laye roide aboute, so that they folowed not after ȳ sonnes of Iacob. So came Iacob vnto Lus in ȳ lande of Canaan (which is called Bethel) and all the people that were with him, and there he buylded an altare, and called ȳ place Bethel, because the LORDE appeared vnto him there, whan he fled from his brother. Then dyed † Debora Rebeccas nurse, and was buried beneth Bethel vnder the Oke, and it was called the Oke of lamentacion.

<sup>a</sup>And God appeared agayne vnto Iacob, after that he was come out of Mesopotamia, and blessed him, † saide vnto him: <sup>c</sup>Thou art called Iacob, neuertheles thou shalt nomore be called Iacob, but Israel shal be thy name. And so was he called Israel.

And God sayde vnto him: §I am the All mightie God, be frutefull and multiplie: people and a multitude of people shal come of the, and † kynges shall come out of thy loynes: and the lande that I gaue vnto Abraham and Isaac, wyl I geue vnto the, † wyl gene it vnto thy sede after the. So God departed from him, from ȳ place where he talked with him. And Iacob set vp a piler of stone, in the place where he talked with him, † poured drynk-offerynges thereon, and poured oyle vpon it. And Iacob called ȳ place where God talked with him, Bethel.

And he departed from Bethel: and whan he was yet a felde brode from Ephrath, Rachel traueyled, † the byrth came harde vpon hir. But whan she had soch payne in traueylinge, ȳ myd wife sayde vnto her: <sup>d</sup>feare not, for thou shalt haue this sonne also. But as hir soule was departynge, ȳ she must dye, she called him Ben Oni: neuertheles his father called hi Bē Iamin. <sup>e</sup>So Rachel died, † was buried in the waye towarde Ephrath, which now is called Bethlehē. And Iacob set vp a pillar vpon hir graue, there is Rachels grauestone vnto this daye. And Israel departed, and pitched his tent beyonde the tower of † Eder.

And it chaunced, that when Israel dwelt in that londe, Ruben wente <sup>**</sup>and laye with Bilha his fathers concubyne, and that came to Israels eares.

And Iacob had twolue sonnes. The sonnes of Lea were these: Ruben Iacobs first borne sonne, Simeon, Leui, Iuda, Isachar, † Zabulō. The sonnes of Rachel, were Ioseph and Ben Iamin. The sonnes of Bilha Rachels mayde: Dan, and Nephthali. The sonnes of Silpa Leas mayde: Gad and Aser. These are ȳ sonnes of Iacob, which were borne vnto him in Mesopotamia. And he came to his father Isaac to Mamre in to the head cite which is called Hebron, where in Abrahā † Isaac were straungers. And Isaac was an hundreth † foure score yeare olde, † fell sicke, and dyed, † was gathered vnto his people, whan he was olde, † had lyued ynough: and his sonnes Esau † Iacob buried him.

These are y prices of y Horites: The prince Lothan, y prynce Sobal, y prynce Zibeō, y prynce Ana, y prynce Disan, y prince Ezer, y prynce Disan. These are the prynces of the Horites, which ruled in y londe of Seir.

E "The kynges that reigned in the londe of Edumea (before the childrē of Israel had eny kynge) are these: Bela y sonne of Beor was kynge in Edumea, ⁊ y name of his cite was Dinhaba. And whā Bela died, Iobab y sonne of Serah of Bosra was kinge in his steade. When Iobab dyed, Husam out of y lōde of the Themanites was kynge in his steade. Whan Husam dyed, Hadad y sonne of Bedad (which slewe y Madianites in y Moabites felde) was kinge in his steade, ⁊ the name of his cite was Auth. Whan Hadad dyed, Samla of Masreck was kinge in his steade. Whā Samla died, Saul of Rehoboth by y water syde, was kinge in his steade. Whan Saul dyed, Baal Hanā the sonne of Achbor was kynge in his steade. Whā Baal Hanā the sonne of Achbor dyed, Hadad was kinge in his steade, ⁊ the name of his cite was Pagu, ⁊ his wifes name was Mehet Abeel, the daughter of Matred, the daughter of Mesahab. I ACOB dwelt in y lande, wherein his father was a straunger, namely in the lāde of Canaā. And these are y generaciōs of Iacob. Ioseph was seutene yeare olde, whā he became a keper of the catell with his brethren, ⁊ the lad was with the children of Bilha ⁊ Silpa his fathers wyues, and tolde their father of y euell reporte y was of thē. Israel loued Ioseph more thē all his childrē because he had begottē him in his olde age, and he made him a cote of many coloures.

Now whā his brethrē sawe, y his father loued him more thē all his brethrē, they had euell wyll at him, & coude not speake a frēdly worde vnto hi. * Ioseph also had once a dreame, and tolde his brethrē therof. Thē hated they him ſ̄ more, for he sayde: Heare I praye you what I dreamed. Me thought we were byndinge sheeues vpō ſ̄ felde, & my shefe arose, and stode vp, and youre sheeues rounde aboute made obeysaunce vnto my shefe.

Then sayde his brethrē vnto him: Shalt thou be oure kinge, and haue domyniō ouer vs? And they hated him yet ſ̄ more, because of his dreame, & his wordes. And he had yet another dreame, which he tolde his brethrē, & saide: Beholde, I had yet another dreame: Me thought ſ̄ Sonne & ſ̄ Moone & eleuen starres made obeisaunce to me. And whā this was tolde his father and his brethrē, his father reproveth him, & sayde vnto him: What maner of dreame is this, ſ̄ thou hast dreamed? Shall I & thy mother, & thy brethren come & fall before ſ̄ vpon the grounde? And his brethrē had envie at him. But his father marked this sayenge.

Now whā his brethren were gone forth to kepe their fathers catell in Sichē, Israel sayde vnto Ioseph: Do not thy brethren kepe the catell in Sichem? Come, I wil sende the vnto thē. He answered: † Here am I. And he sayde: Go thy waye, and loke whether it be well with thy brethren and with ſ̄ catell, and brynge me worde agayne how it is. And he sent him out of the valley of Hebron, to go vnto Sichem.

Then a certayne man founde him, wandringe out of his waye in the felde, which axed him, and sayde: Whom sekest thou? He answered: I seke my brethren: tell me I pray the where they kepe. The man sayde: They are gone from hence, for I herde them saye: let vs go vnto Dothan. Then folowed Ioseph after his brethren, and founde them at Dothan.

Now whan they sawe him a farre of, afore he came at thē, they denyed to sleye him, and sayde one to another: Lo, there cōmeth the dreamer, † come on, and let vs sley him, & cast him in a pytt, and saye: a wicked beast hath deuoured him: thē shal it be sene, what his dreames are.

When Ruben herde that, he wolde haue delyuered him out of their handes, & sayde: ſ̄ O let vs not sley a soule. Ruben sayde morouer vnto him: Shed no bloude, but cast him in to this pytt ſ̄ is in the wyldernes, & laye ye no hādes vpon him. (He wolde haue delyuered him out of their hādes, ſ̄ he might haue brought him agayne vnto his father.)

Whan Ioseph now came to his brethrē, they stryped him out of his cote, that partye coloured cote which he had vpon him, & toke him and cast him in to a pytt. But the same pytt was emptye, and no water in it, & they sat them downe to eate. In the meane season they lift vp their eyes, and sawe a cōpany of Ismaelites cōmyng from Gilead, with their camels, which bare spyes, balme, and myrrre, and were goinge downe in to Egipte.

Then saide Iuda vnto his brethrē: what helpeth it vs, that we sleye onre brother, and hyde his bloude? Come, let vs sell him vnto the Ismaelites, that oure handes be not defyled vpon him, for he is oure brother, oure flesh and bloude. And they herkened vnto him.

And as the Madianites marchaunt men wente by, they drew Ioseph out of the pytt, and solde him vnto the Ismaelites (for twētye syluer pens) which brought him in to Egipte.

Now whan Ruben came agayne vnto the pytt, & founde not Ioseph therein, he rent his clothes, and came agayne to his brethrē and sayde: The lad is not yonder, whyther shal I go? Then toke they Iosephs cote & slewe a goate, and dypped the cote in ſ̄ bloude, and sent awaye that partie coloured cote, and caused it be brought vnto their father and sayde: This haue we founde, loke, whether it be thy sonnes coate, or no.

But he knewe it, and sayde: It is my sonnes coate, † a wicked beast hath deuoured him, a rauysshinge beast hath rauyshed Ioseph. And Iacob rēte his clothes, and put a sack cloth aboute his loynes, & mourned for his sonne a longe season. And all his sonnes & daughters came vnto him to cōforte him. But he wolde not be cōforted, & saide: With sorowe wil I go downe in to the graue vnto my sonne. And his father wepte for him. But the Madianites † solde him in Egipte vnto Potiphar Pharaos chefe Marshall.

called Hyra at Odollam. And there Iuda sawe a mā of Canaās daughter called Sua, and toke her. And whē he had lyen with her, she conceaued and bare a sonne, whom she called Er.

And she conceaued agayne, & bare a sonne whō she called Onā. She proceeded yet further, & bare a sonne, whō she called Sela. And whā she had borne him, she left of bearinge.

And Iuda gaue his first sonne Er a wife, whose name was Thamar. But he was wicked before the LORDE, therefore the LORDE slew him. Then sayde Iuda vnto his sonne Onan: Go lie with thy brothers wife, and marye thyself with her, that thou mayest rayse
B vp sede vnto thy brother. But when Onan knewe that the sede<sup>a</sup> shulde not be his owne, when he laye with his brothers wife, he let it fall vpon the earth and destroyed it, & he shulde not geue sede vnto his brother. This thinge that he dyd displeased the LORDE sore, and he slewe him also.

Then sayde Iudas vnto Thamar his sonnes wyfe. Remayne a wyddow in thy fathers house, tyll my sonne Sela be growne: for he thought: peradventure he might dye also like as his brethren. So Thamar wente hir waye, and remained in hir fathers house. Now whā many dayes were past, & daughter of Sua Iudas wife dyed. And whan Iuda had left mournynge, he wente vp vnto Thimnath* to clyppe his shepe with his shepherde Hyra of Odollam.

C Then was it tolde Thamar: beholde, thy father in lawe goeth vp vnto Thimnath, to clyppe his shepe. Then put she of & wyddowes garments that she had vpon her, couered and dysgyssed hir self, & sat hir downe without the porte by the waye syde towarde Thymnath. For she sawe that Sela was growne, and she was not geuen vnto him to wife.

Now whan Iuda sawe her, he thought it had bene an whoore, for she had couered hir face: and he gat him to her in the waye, and saide: I praye the let me lye with the, for he knewe not that it was his daughter in lawe. She answered: What wilt thou geue me, that thou mayest lic with me? He sayde: I wil sende the a kydd from the flocke. She answered: Geue me a pledge then, tyll thou sende it me. He sayde: What pledge wilt thou that I geue the?

D She answered: Thy signet, and thy bracelet, and thy staff that thou hast in thy hāde. Then he gaue it her, and laye with her, and she was with childe of him. And she gat hir vp, and wente hir waye, and layed of hir cloke, and put on hir wyddowes garmētes agayne.

Iuda sent the kydd by his shepherde of Odolla, to fetch the pledge agayne from the woman, and he founde her not. Then axed he the men of the same place, & sayde: Where is the whoore & sat without in the waye? They answered: There hath no whoore bene here. And he came agayne vnto Iuda, and saide: I haue not founde her, morouer & men of the same place saide: that there hath no whoore bene there. Iuda sayde: Let her take it vnto her, lest we hāpyly be shamed, for I haue sent the kydd, and thou hast not founde her.

E After three monethes it was tolde Iuda: Thamar thy daughter in lawe hath plaied the whoore: and beholde, by whordome is she gotten with childe. Iuda sayde: brynge her forth, that she maye be brent. And whan she was brought forth, she sent vnto hir father in lawe, and sayde: By the man & oweth these, am I with childe. And she sayde: Knowest thou whose is this signet, this bracelet & this staff? Iuda knewe thē, & sayde: She is more righteous thē I, for I gaue hir not my sonne Sela: But he laye nomore with her.

Whan the tyme came that she shulde be delyuered, there were two twyns founde in hir wombe. And as she was now in trauelynge, the one put out his hande. Then the mydwife toke and boūde a reed threde aboute it, and saide: This shal come out first. But whan he plucked in his hande agayne, his brother came forth. And she sayde: Wherefore is there a rent mayde for thy sake? And he was called† Phares. Afterwarde came his brother forth, which had & reed threde aboute his hande, and he was called Zarah.

in his master & Egipcians house. And his master sawe  $\hat{y}$  the LORDE was with him: for what so euer he dyd, the LORDE made it to prospere in his hāde: so  $\hat{y}$  he founde fauoure in his masters sight, & was his seruauant. He made him ruler of his house, and put all that he had, vnder his hande. And from the tyme forth that he had made him ruler of his house and all his goodes,  $\hat{y}$  LORDE blessed the Egipcians house for Iosephs sake: and there was nothyng but the very blessinge of the LORDE in all  $\hat{y}$  he had in  $\hat{y}$  house & in the felde, therefore left he all  $\hat{y}$  he had, in Iosephs hande. And medled with nothinge himself, saue onely the bred that he ate. And Ioseph was fayre of bewtye, and well fauoured of face.

B And it fortunated after these actes, that his masters wife cast hir eyes vpon Ioseph, and sayde: Slepe with me. But he denyed, and sayde vnto her: Beholde, my master knoweth not what is in  $\hat{y}$  house, and all that he hath, that hath he put vnder my hande. And there is no man so greate in the house as I, and he hath kepte nothinge from me, excepte the: for thou art his wife. How shulde I then do so greate euell, and synne agaynst God? But she spake soch wordes vnto Ioseph daylie. Neuertheles he herkened not vnto her, to slepe by her, or to be in her company.

C It fortunated vpon a tyme, that Ioseph wente in to the house to do his busynesse, and there was none of  $\hat{y}$  folkes of the house thereby. And she caught him by his garment, & sayde: Slepe with me. But he left the garment in hir hande, and fled, and gat him out of the house.

Now whā she sawe that he had left his garmēt in hir hande, and fled out, she called the folkes in the house, and sayde vnto thē: Lo, he hath brought vs in the Hebrue, to do vs shame. He came in here vnto me, to slepe by me: but I cried with loudē voyce. And whan he herde that I made a noyse & cried, he left his garmēt here by me, and fled, and ranne out.

D And she layed vp his garmēt by her, tyll his master came home, and tolde him euen the same wordes, and sayde: The Hebrue seruauant whom thou broughtest here vnto vs, came in here to me, for to do me shame. But whan I made a noyse and cried, he left his garment here by me, and fled out. Whan his master herde the wordes of his wyfe which she tolde him, and sayde: Thus hath the Hebrue seruauant done vnto me, he was very wroth.

Then his master toke him, and put him in the preson, <sup>35</sup> wherin the kinges presoners laie. And there he laye in preson. But the LORDE was with him, and had mercy vpon him, & caused him to fynde fauoure in the sight of the officer of  $\hat{y}$  preson, so that he committed all the presoners of the preson vnto his hādes: that what so euer were done, might be done by him. For the officer of the preson sawe,  $\hat{y}$  the LORDE was with him in all  $\hat{y}$  was vnder his handes, and that what so euer he dyd, the LORDE made it to come prosperously to passe.

The xl. Chapter.

AND it fortunated after this, that  $\hat{y}$  kynge <sup>a</sup> of Egyp̄tes chefe butlar and  $\hat{y}$  chefe baker offended their lorde the kynge of Egyp̄te. And Pharaō was angrie with them, & caused them be put in preson in  $\hat{y}$  chefe marshalls house, where Ioseph laye presoner. And the chefe marshall put Ioseph vnto them,  $\hat{y}$  he might serue them. And so they were in preson for a season.

And they dreamed, both the butlar & the baker in one night, euery mā his owne dreame, and euery dreame had his interpretaciō. Now in the mornyng whan Ioseph came in vnto them, and sawe that they loked sadly, he axed them and sayde: Why loke ye so sadly to daye? They answered: We haue dreamed, and haue no man to declare it vnto vs. Ioseph sayde: Interpretinge belongeth vnto God, but tell it me yet.

Then the chefe butlar tolde Ioseph his dreame, and sayde vnto him: I dreamed that there was a vyne before me, which had thre braunches, and it budded, grewe and bare blossoms, and the grapes therof were rype. And I had Pharaos cuppe in my hande, & toke (the grapes) and wronge thē in to  $\hat{y}$  cuppe, and gaue Pharaō the cuppe in his hāde. <sup>35</sup>

Ioseph sayde: This is the interpretaciō: The thre braunches are thre dayes, and ouer thre dayes shall Pharaō take the, and putt the in thine office agayne, that thou mayest geue him the cuppe in his hande after the olde maner, whā thou wast his butlar. But whan thou art in thy prosperite, thynke vpon me, and shewe me kyndnesse, that thou mayest certifie Pharaο of me, ¶ he maie bringe me out of this house: for I was preuely caried out of the lande of the Hebrues, and here also haue I done nothinge, that they shulde haue put me in this dongeon.

C Whan the chefe baker sawe, that the interpretation was good, he sayde vnto Ioseph: I dreamed, that I bare thre wyker baskettes vpon my heade, and in ¶ vppermost baszket all maner of bakē meates vnto Pharaο, and the foules ate out of the baszket vpon my heade.

Ioseph answered, and sayde: This is the interpretation: The thre baszkettes are thre dayes, and after thre dayes shall Pharaο take the, and hange the vpon the galowe, and the foules shal eate thy flesh from of ¶.

And vpon the thirde daye it came to passe, that Pharaο helde his * byrth daye, and made a feast vnto all his seruantes, and toke the chefe butlar and the chefe baker before all his seruantes, and restored the chefe butlar to his butlarshipe agayne, so that he reached the cuppe in to Pharaοs hande. As for the chefe baker, he caused him be hanged like as Ioseph had interpreted vnto him. Neuerthesse the chefe butlar thought not on Ioseph, but forgot him.

The xli. Chapter.

AND after two yeares Pharaο had a dreame, how that he stode by a water syde: and beholde, out of the water there came seuen goodly kyne, and fatted, and wente fedinge in the medowe. After these he sawe other seuen kyne come out of the water, which were euell faoured and leane fleshed, and wente by the kyne vpon ¶ water syde: and the euell faoured leane kyne ate vp the seuen goodly and fatt kyne. Then Pharaο awaked.

And he slepte agayne, and dreamed the seconde tyme. And he sawe that seuen eares of corne grewe vpon one stalke, full and good. Afterwarde he sawe seuē thynne and blasted eares come vp, and the seuen thynne eares deuoured the seuen greate and full eares. Then Pharaο awaked, and sawe that it was a dreame. And whan it was daye, his sprete was troubled, and he sente out, ¶ caused to call all the soithsayers in Egipte ¶ all the wyse men, and tolde them his dreame. But there was none, that coude tell Pharaο the interpretation of it.

Then spake the chefe butlar vnto Pharaο, B and saide: This daye do I remembre my lawte. Whan Pharaο was angrie with his seruantes, and put me in preson with ¶ chefe baker in ¶ chefe marshals house, we dreamed both in one night euery mā his dreame, hauinge his owne interpretation. Then was there with vs a younge man an Hebrue, the chefe marshals seruaut, vnto whom we tolde it, and he declared oure dreames vnto vs, vnto euery mā acordinge to his dreame. And as he declared it vnto vs, so came it to passe. For I was restored vnto myne office, and he was hanged.

Then Pharaο sent and called for Ioseph and they let him out of the dongeon. And he let himself be shauen, and chaunged his clothes, and came in vnto Pharaο. Then saide Pharaο vnto him: I haue dreamed a dreame, and there is no man that can interpret it: but I haue herde tell of the, that whā thou hearest a dreame, thou declarest it. Ioseph answered Pharaο, and sayde: God shall geue Pharaο a prosperous answer, yee well without me.

Pharaο sayde vnto Ioseph: I dreamed that C I stode by a water syde, and beholde, out of the water there came seuen kyne, fatted and goodly, and wente fedinge in ¶ medowe. And after them I sawe other seuē kyne come out, thynne, euell faoured, and leenfleshed. So euell faoured sawe I neuer in all the lande of Egipte. And the seuen leane and euell faoured kyne, ate vp the seuen first fat kyne. And whan they had eatē them vp, a man coude not perceaue that they had eaten them, ¶ were as euell faoured as they were afore. Then I awaked.

And I sawe agayne in my dreame seuen eares of corne, growinge vpō one stalke, full and good. Afterwarde there spronge vp seuen wythred eares, thynne and blasted, and the seuen thynne eares deuoured the seuen good eares. And I haue shewed it vnto my soithsayers, but they can tell me nothinge therof.

Ioseph answered Pharaο: B Both Pharaοs dreames are one. God sheweth Pharaο what he wil do. The seuen good kyne are seuen yeares, and the seuen good eares are seuen yeares also. It is one dreame. The seven leene and euell fauoured kyne, that came vp after them, are seven yeares. And the seven thyne and blasted eares, shalbe seven yeares of derth. This is now the thinge which I tolde Pharaο, that God sheweth Pharaο, what he will do.

Beholde, there shal come seven yeares with greate plenteousnes in y whole lande of Egipte, and after the same there shall come seven yeares of derth, so that all this plenteousnes shalbe forgotten in y lande of Egipte: and the derth shall consume the lande, so that the plenteousnes shal not be perceaued in the lande, because of the derth that commeth thereafter, for it shall be very greate. Where as Pharaο dreamed the seconde tyme, it signifieth that this thinge is surely prepared of God, and that God wil shortly brynge the same to passe.

Let Pharaο now proude for a man of vnderstandinge & wysdome, whom he maye set ouer the lande of Egipte, and se that he ordene officers in the londe, and take y fifth (parte) of the lande of Egipte in the seven plenteous yeares, and gather all y foode y shal come of the plenteous yeares, that they maye laye vp corne vnder Pharaοs power for sustenance in the cities, and kepe it, y there maye be foode founde prepared for the lande in the seven deare yeares, which shall come vpon the lande of Egipte, that the lande be not destroyed of hunger. The sayenge pleased Pharaο well and all his seruantes. And Pharaο sayde vnto his seruantes: How might we fynde soch a man, in whom is the sprete of God? And sayde vnto Ioseph: For so much as God hath shewed y all this, there is none of soch vnderstandinge & wysdome as thou.

Thou shalt be ouer my house, and acordinge vnto thy worde<sup>a</sup> shall all my people obeye: onely in the kynges seate will I be more then thou. And he sayde: Beholde, I haue set the ouer the whole lande of Egipte. And he toke of his ringe from his hāde, and gaue it Ioseph in his hāde, and clothed him with whyte sylke, and honge a cheyne of golde aboute his neck, and made him ryde vpō the seconde charet: and caused it be proclaimed before him, that men shulde bowe their knees vnto him, as to him whō Pharaο had set ouer the whole lande of Egipte.

And Pharaο sayde vnto Ioseph: I am Pharaο: without thy wyll shall no man moue his hande or his fote in all the lāde Egipte. And he called him * Zaphnath Paena, & gaue him a wife, euen Asnath the daughter of Potiphar the prest of On. So Ioseph wente out, for to vyset the lande of Egipte. (And he was thirtie yeare olde, whan he stode before Pharaο.) And he departed from Pharaο, and wente throw all the lande of Egipte.

And the londe dyd so those seven plenteous yeares, and they gathered all the foode of the seven yeares that were in the lande of Egipte, & layed it in the cities. Loke what foode grewe in the felde rounde aboute euery cite, they put it therin. So Ioseph layed vp the corne in stoare, and that moch aboue measure, as the sonde of the see: in so moch y he left of nombrynge of it, for it coude not be nombred.

<sup>a</sup> And vnto Ioseph there were borne two sonnes (before y derth came) whom Asnath the daughter of Potiphar prest of On bare vnto him. And the first called he Manasses: for God (sayde he) hath caused me to forget all my labour, and all my fathers house. The seconde called he Ephraim: for God (sayde he) hath caused me to growe in y lande of my trouble.

Now whan y seven plenteous yeares were ended in Egipte, then beganne the seven deare yeares to come, wherof Ioseph had sayde. And there was derth in all landes, but in all the lāde of Egipte there was foode. Now whan the lande of Egipte beganne to suffre hunger also, the people cryed vnto Pharaο for bred. But Pharaο sayde vnto all y Egipcians: Go vnto Ioseph, what he sayeth vnto you, y doo. So whan there was derth in all y lāde, Ioseph opened all y was by him, & solde vnto the Egipcians. Thus y derth preuayled in the lande, & all countrees came to Egipte to bye at Ioseph: for the derth was mightie in all landes.

The xliij. Chapter.

WHAN Iacob sawe that there was moch corne in Egipte, he sayde vnto his sonnes: Why gape ye? Beholde, I heare that there is moch corne in Egipte, go downe & bye vs corne, & we maie lyue, & not dye. So Ioseph ten brethrē wente downe to bye corne in Egipte. As for Ben Iamyn Iosephs brother, Iacob wolde not let him go with his brethrē, for he sayde: Some mysfortune might happen vnto him. So & childrē of Israel came to bye corne, amonge other & came with them: for there was derth also in & lande of Canaan. But Ioseph was gouernoure in the lande, and solde corne vnto all the people in the lande.

Now whā his brethrē came to him, they fell downe to the grounde before him vpon their faces. And he sawe them, & knewe thē, and helde him self straunge towarde them, and talked roughly with them, and saide vnto them: Whence come ye? They sayde: Out of the lande of Canaan to bye vytayle. Neuertheles though he knewe them, yet knewe they not him. And Ioseph thought vpon & dreames that he had dreamed of them,* and saide vnto them: Ye are spyes, and are come to se where the lande is open.

33 They answered him: No my lorde, thy seruauantes are come to bye vytayle: we are all one mans sonnes, we are vnfayned, and thy seruauantes were neuer spyes. He sayde vnto thē: No, but ye are come to se where the lande is open. They answered him: We thy seruauantes are twolue brethren, the sonnes of one man in the lāde of Canaan, and the yongest is with oure father: as for one, he is awaye.

Ioseph sayde vnto them: This is it that I sayde vnto you: spyes are ye. Here by wyll I proue you: By the life of Pharao ye shall not get hence, excepte youre yongest brother come hither. Sende awaye one of you to fetch youre brother, but ye shalbe in preson. Thus wyll I trye out youre wordes, whether ye go aboute with trueth or not: for els, by the life of Pharao ye are spyes. And he put thē together in warde thre dayes longe.

6 Vpon the thirde daye he sayde vnto thē: Yf ye wil lyue, thē do thus, for I feare God: Yf ye be vnfayned, let one of youre brethren lye bounde in youre preson: but go ye youre waye, and cary home the necessary foode, & brynge me youre yongest brother, so wyll I beleue youre wordes, that ye shall not dye. And so they dyd.

And they sayde one to another: This haue we deserved against oure brother, in that we sawe the anguysh of his soule, whan he besought vs, and we wolde not heare him: therfore cometh now this trouble vpon vs. Ruben answered them, and saide: Tolde not I you & same, whan I sayde: * O synne not agaynst & lad, but ye wolde not heare. Now is his bloude required. But they knew not that Ioseph vnderstode it, for he spake vnto thē by an interpreter. And he turned him from them, and wepte. Now whan he had turned him to them agayne, and talked with them, he toke Symon from amonge them, & bounde him before their eyes, and commaunded to fyll their sakes with corne, and to put euery mans money in his sack, and to geue euery one his expenses by the waye. And so was it done vnto them.

And they laded their corne vpon their Asses, and departed thence. But whan one opened his sacke to geue his Asse prouender in the Inne, he spied his money in his sack mouth, and sayde vnto his brethren: My money is restored me agayne: lo, it is in my sack. Then their hertes fayled them, and they were afraied amonge them selues, and sayde: Wherefore hath God done this vnto vs?

Now whan they came home to Iacob their father in the lāde of Canaan, they tolde him all that had happened vnto them, & sayde: The man that is lorde of the londe, spake roughly to vs, and toke vs for spyes of the countre. And whan we answered: we are vnfayned, & were neuer spyes, but are twolue brethren the sonnes of oure father: one is awaye, and the yongest is yet this daye with oure father in the lande of Canaan, He sayde: Hereby wyll I marke, that ye are vnfayned: Leane one of youre brethren with me, & take foode necessary for youre houses, & go youre waye, and brynge youre yongest brother vnto me: so shal I knowe that ye are no spyes, but vnfayned: thē shal I deliuer you youre brother also, and ye maye occupie in the lande.

And whan they opened their sackes, euery man founde his boundell of money in his sacke. And whā they and their father sawe, that it was the bundels of their money, they were afraied.

Then sayde Iacob their father: Ye haue robbed me of my children. Ioseph is awaye, * Ge. 37. d.

Simeon is awaye, and ye will take Ben Iamin awaye: It goeth all ouer me. Ruben answered his father & sayde: Yf I brynge him not to the againe, then slaye my two sonnes: delyuer him but in to my hande, I wyl brynge him agayne vnto the. He sayde: my sonne shal not go downe with you: for his brother is deed, and he is left alone. Yf eny mysfortune shulde happen vnto him by the waye y<sup>e</sup> ye go, ye shulde bringe my graye hayre with sorowe downe vnto the graue.

The xliij. Chapter.

BUT the dert<sup>h</sup> oppressed y<sup>e</sup> lande. And whan all the vytales that they had brought out of Egipte were spent, Iacob their father sayde vnto them: Go agayne, and bye vs a little foode.

Thē Iuda answered him, and sayde: The man sware vnto vs, and sayde: ye shal not se my face, excepte youre brother be with you. Yf so be now that thou wilt sende oure brother with vs, we wil go downe, and bye the foode. But yf thou wilt not sende him, we wyl not go downe. For the man sayde vnto vs: Ye shal not se my face, excepte youre brother be with you.

Israel sayde: Wherefore haue ye done this euell vnto me, to tell y<sup>e</sup> man, that ye had yet a brother? They answered: The man enquired so strately of vs and of oure kynrede, & sayde: Is youre father yet a lyue? Haue ye yet a brother? Then tolde we him, as he axed vs. How coulede we knowe, that he wolde saye: brynge youre brother downe with you? Then sayde Iuda vnto Israel his father: Let the lad go with me, that we maye get vs vp and take oure iourney, and lyue, and not dye, both we and thou, and oure childrē. * I wyl be suertye for him, of my handes shalt thou requyre him. Yf I brynge him not vnto the agayne, & set him before thine eyes, I wil beare y<sup>e</sup> blame my life longe. For yf we had not made this tarienge, we had now bene come agayne twyse.

Then sayde Israel their father vnto thē: Yf it must nedes be so, then do this: take of the best frutes of the lande in youre sakes, and brynge the man a present: a curtesy balme, and hony, and spyes, and myrre, and dates, and almondes. Take other money with you also, and the money that was brought agayne in your sacke mouthes, cary it agayne with you: peradventure it was an ouersight. And take youre brother, get you vp, & go agayne vnto the man. The Allmightie God geue you mercy in the sight of y<sup>e</sup> man, that he maye let you haue youre other brother, and Ben Iamin. As for me, I must be as one, that is robbed of his children.

Then they toke the present, and other money with them, and Ben Iamin, gat thē vp, and wente in to Egipte, and stode before Ioseph. Then Ioseph behelde them with Ben Iamin, and sayde vnto the ruler of his house: Bring these men in, and sley, & make ready, for they shal dyne with me at noone. And the man dyd as Ioseph bad him, & brought the men in to Iosephs house.

Whan they were brought in to Iosephs house, they were afayed, and sayde: We are brought hither because of the money, that came agayne in oure sakes at the first, to pyke a quarell with vs, and to laye somethinge to oure charge, and to take vs for bonde seruantes with oure Asses.

Therefore came they to y<sup>e</sup> man, that was ruler of Iosephs house, and talked with him at the doore, and sayde: Syr, † we came downe at the first to bye foode, and whan we came in the Inne, and opened oure sakes, beholde, euery mans money was in his sack mouth with full weight: therefore haue we brought it with vs agayne, & haue brought other money with vs also, to bye foode: but we can not tell, who put oure money in oure sakes.

He sayde: Be content, feare you not, youre God euen y<sup>e</sup> God of youre fathers hath geuē you y<sup>e</sup> treasure in youre sakes, I had youre money. And he brought forth Simeon vnto them, and led them in to Iosephs house, and gaue them water to wash their fete, & gaue their Asses prouender.

And they made ready y<sup>e</sup> present, ageynst Ioseph came at noone: for they herde, y<sup>e</sup> they shulde dyne there. Now whan Ioseph wente in to the house, they brought him home y<sup>e</sup> present that they had, and fell downe to the grounde before him. But he welcomed them curteously, and sayde: Is youre father (that olde man which ye tolde me of,) in good health? Is he yet alyue? They answered: Thy seruau<sup>t</sup> oure father is in good health, and is yet alyue. And they bowed them selues, and fell downe before him.

And he lift vp his eyes, and sawe his brother Ben Iamin his mothers sonne, and saide: * Is this youre yongest brother, that ye tolde me of? And he sayde morouer: God be mercifull vnto the my sonne. And Ioseph made haist (for *the grounde of his hert was kyndled towarde his brother) and sought how he might wepe, & wente in to his chamber, and wepte there.

f And whan he had washed his face, he wente out, and refrayned him self, and sayde: set bred (on the table.) And they brought vnto him by him self, and vnto them by the selues, and to the Egipcians also that ate with them, by them selues. (For the Egipcians darre not eate bred with the Ebrues, that is an abhominacion vnto them.) And they were set ouer agaynst him, the first borne acordinge to his first byrth, and the yongest after his youth. They marueled at it amonge them selues, and there were brought them sundrye meates from his table. But Ben Iamins parte was fyue tymes more then the other. And they dronke, and were mery with him.

The xliij. Chapter.

a AND Ioseph commaunded the ruler of his house, and sayde: Fyll the mens sakes with foode, as moch as they maye carye, and put euery mans money in his sacke mouth, & put my syluer cuppe in the sacke mouth of the yongest with the money for fy vytales. He dyd as Ioseph had sayde. And on the morow whan it was daye, they let fy men go with their Asses.

But whan they were out of the cite, and not come farre, Ioseph sayde to the ruler of his house: Vp, and folowe after the me, and whan thou ouertake them, saie vnto them: Wherefore haue ye rewarded euell for good? Is not that it, that my lorde drynketh out of? and that he prophecieth withall? It is euell done of you, that ye haue done.

b And whan he had ouertaken them, he sayde the same wordes vnto them. They answered him: Wherefore saieth my lorde soch wordes? God forbyd, that thy seruantes shulde do eny soch thinge? Beholde, the money that we foude in oure sakes mouthes, that brought we vnto the agayne, out of the lande of Canaan: how shulde we then haue stollen either syluer or golde out of thy lordes house? Loke by whom it shall be founde amonge thy seruantes, let him dye: yee and we also wyll be my lordes bondmen. He sayde: let it so be, as ye haue spoken. Loke by whom it shall be founde, let him be my seruaut, but ye shalbe harmlesse.

And they made haist, and toke downe euery man his sack to the grounde, and euery man opened his sack: And he searched & beganne at the greatest vnto the yongest, and the cuppe was founde in Ben Iamins sacke. Then rente they their clothes, and euery man lade the burthen vpon his Asse, & wente agayne vnto the cite. And Iuda wente with his brethren vnto Iosephs house (for he was there yet) and they fell before him on the groude. Ioseph sayde vnto them: What maner of dede is this, that ye haue done? Knewe ye not, that such a man as I am, can prophecy?

c Iuda sayde: What shall we saye vnto my lorde? or how shal we speake? and what excuse shal we make? God hath founde out fy wickednesse of thy seruantes. Beholde, we and he, by whom the cuppe is founde, are my lordes seruantes. But he sayde: God forbyd that I shulde do so. The man by whom the cuppe is founde, shall be my seruaut, but go ye vp in peace vnto youre father.

The stepte Iuda vnto him, and sayde: My lorde, let thy seruaut speake one worde in thine eares my lorde, be not displeased at thy seruaut also, for thou art euē as Pharao. My lorde axed his seruantes, and sayde: Haue ye yet a father or brother? Then answered we: We haue a father, which is olde, and a yonge lad begotten in his age, and his brother is deed, & he is left alone of his mother, and his father loueth him.

d Then saydest thou: Brynge him downe vnto me, and I wil se him. But we answered my lorde: The lad can not come from his father, yf he shulde come from him, he were but a deed man. Then saydest thou vnto thy seruantes: * Yf youre yongest brother come not hither with you, ye shall se my face no more. Then wente we vp vnto thy seruaut my father, and tolde him my lordes wordes. Then sayde oure father: Go youre waye agayne, and bye vs a litle foode. But we sayde: We can not go downe, excepte oure yongest brother be with vs, then wyl we go downe: for we darre not loke the man in the face, yf oure yongest brother be not with vs. Then sayde thy seruauant my father vnto vs: Ye knowe that my wife bare me two sonnes, one wente out fro me, and I sayde: he is torne in peces. "Yf ye take this fro me also, and eny mysfortune happē him, then shal ye brynge my gray heer with sorowe downe vnto the graue.

¶ Yf I now come home vnto my father, & the lad be not with me (seyng his soule hangeth by the soule of this) then shall it come to passe, that yf he se not the lad there, he shal dye. So shal we thy seruantes brynge the gray heer of thy seruauant oure father with sorowe downe to the graue. For I thy seruauant became suertye for the lad vnto my father, and sayde: yf I brynge him not agayne, I will beare the blame all my lyfe longe. Therefore let thy seruauant byde here in steade of y lad, to be my lordes bonde man, and let the lad go vp with his brethren. For how can I go vp vnto my father, yf the lad be not with me? Then shulde I se the mysery that shulde happen vnto my father.

The xlv. Chapter.

¶ THEN coude not Ioseph refrayne him self before all them that stode aboute him: and he cōmaunded euery man to go out from him, and there stode no man by him, whan Ioseph vttered him self vnto his brethren. And he wepte loude, so that y Egipcians and Pharaos housholde herde it. "And he sayde vnto his brethren: I am Ioseph, is my father yet alyue? And his brethren coude not answere him, they were so abashed before his face. But he sayde: Come nye vnto me. And they came nye. And he sayde: I am Ioseph youre brother, *whom ye solde in to Egipte. And now vexe not youre selues, & thinke not y there is eny wrath, because ye solde me hither. +For God sent me hither before you, for youre lyues sake. For these are now two yeares, that y derth hath bene in the lande, and there are yet fyue yeares behynde, wherin there shalbe no plowing ner haruest.

¶ But God sent me hither before you, y he might let you remayne vpon earth, and to saue youre lyues by a greate delyueraunce. And now, it was not ye then that sent me hither, but God which hath made me a father vnto Pharao, & lorde ouer all his house, and a pryncie in the whole lande of Egipte. Haist you therefore, and go vp vnto my father, and saye vnto him: Thy sonne Ioseph sendeth the this worde: God hath made me lorde in all Egipte, come downe vnto me, tarye not, thou shalt dwel in the lande of Gosen, and be with me: thou and thy children, and thy childers childrē, thy small and greate catell, and all that thou hast. There wyl I make prouysion for the (for there are yet fyue yeares of derth) that thou perishe not with thine house, and all that is thine. Beholde, youre eyes and the eyes of my brother Ben Iamin se, that I myne owne self speake vnto you by mouth. Shewe my father all my worshipe in Egipte, and all that ye haue sene: haist you, and come downe hither with my father.

And he fell aboute his brother Ben Iamyns neck, and wepte, and Ben Iamin wepte vpon his neck also. And he kyssed all his brethren, and wepte vpon them. And afterwarde talked his brethren with him. And this tydinges came in to Pharaos house: Iosephs brethren are come, which pleased Pharao well, and all his seruantes.

And Pharao spake vnto Ioseph: Saye vnto thy brethren: Do thus, lade youre beastes, go youre waye, and whan ye come in to the lande of Canaan, take youre father and youre houtholdes, and come vnto me, I wyl geue you of the goodes in the lāde of Egipte, so that ye shall eate the fatt in the lande. And he commaunded them, Do thus, Take you charettes out of y lande of Egipte for youre children and wyues, and brynge youre father, and come, and regarde not youre houtholde stuff: for the goodes of all the lāde of Egipte shalbe yours.

The children of Israel dyd so, and Ioseph gaue the chī charettes acordynge to Pharaos commaundement, and expenses by the waye, and gaue them all, vnto euery one a change of rayment: but vnto Ben Iamin he gaue three hundreth syluer pens, and fyue change of rayment. As for his father, he sent him ten Asses laden with goodes out of Egipte, and ten Asses with corne and bred, and vytayles for his father by y waye. So he sent awaye his brethren, and sayde vnto them: Stryue not by the waye.

Thus they departed out of Egipte, and came to the lande of Canaan vnto Iacob their father, and tolde him, and sayde: Thy sonne Ioseph is yet alyue, and is a lorde in all the lande of Egipte. But his hert wauered, for he beleued them not. Thē tolde they him all the wordes of Ioseph, which he had sayde vnto them. And whan he sawe y<sup>e</sup> charettes that Ioseph had sent to fetch him, his sprete reuyued, & he sayde: I haue ynough, that my sonne Ioseph is yet a liue I wil go, and se him, before I dye.

The xlvj. Chapter.

ISRAEL toke his journey with all that he had. And whan he came to Berseba, he offred offerynges vnto y<sup>e</sup> God of his father Isaac. And God spake vnto him in a vision by night: Iacob Iacob. He sayde: here am I. And he saide: I am y<sup>e</sup> mightie God of thy father, be not afraied to go in to Egipte, for there wyl I make a greate people of the. I wyl go downe with the, & wil brynge the vp also. And Ioseph shal laye his hande vpon thine eyes.

Then Iacob gat him vp from Berseba, and y<sup>e</sup> children of Israel caried Iacob their father with their children and wyues vpon the charettes that Pharaο had sent to cary him. And they toke their catell & substaunce which they had gotten in the lande of Canaan, and so came in to Egipte: * Iacob & all his sede with him, his children & his childers children with him, his daughters, and the daughters of his children, & all his sede.

These are y<sup>e</sup> names of the children of Israel, which came in to Egipte, Iacob & his sonnes. † The first borne sonne of Iacob: Ruben. The children of Ruben: Hanoch, Pallu, Hezron and Charmi. † The children of Simeon: Iemuel, Iamin, Ohad, Iachim, Zohar and Saul the sonne of the Cananish woman. The childrē of Leui: Gerson, Cahath & Merari. The childrē of Iuda: Er, Onan, Sela, Phares & Serah. But Er and Onan dyed in the lande of Canaan. The childrē of Phares: Hesron and Hamul. The children of Isachar: Thola, Phua, Iob & Semron. The children of Zabulon: Sered, Elon and Iahleel. These are the childrē of Lea, which she bare vnto Iacob in Mesopotamia with his daughter Dina. These all together with sonnes & daughters make thre & thirtie soules.

The childrē of Gad: Zipheon, Haggi, Suni, Ezbon, Eri, Arodi and Areli. The children of Asser: Iemna, Iesua, Iesui, Bria & Sera their sister. The children of Bria: Heber and Malchiel. These are the children of Silpa, † whom Laban gaue vnto Lea his daughter, and she bare vnto Iacob these sixtene soules.

The childrē of Rachel Iacobs wife: Ioseph and Ben Iamin. And vnto Ioseph in y<sup>e</sup> lande of Egipte † were borne Manasses and Ephraim, whom Asnath the daughter of Potiphar prest of On bare vnto him. The children of Ben Iamin: Bela, Becher, Asber, Gera, Naamā, Ehi, Ros, Mupim, Hupim and Ard. These are the children of Rachel, which were borne vnto Iacob, fourtene soules altogether.

The children of Dan: Husim. The childrē of Nephtali: Iahzeel, Guni, Iezer, Sillem. These are the children of Bilha, whom Laban gaue vnto his daughter Rachel, & she bare Iacob these seuen soules. All the soules y<sup>e</sup> came with Iacob in to Egipte, † which proceeded out of his loynes (besyde the wyues of his childrē) are altogether sixe & sixtie soules. And Iosephs childrē which were borne vnto him in Egipte, were two soules: so that all the soules of the house of Iacob which came in to Egipte, were seuentye.

And he sent Iuda before him vnto Ioseph, to shew him the waye to Gosen, & they came in to the lande of Gosen. Then Ioseph bended his charett fast, and wente vp to mete Israel his father vnto Gosen. And whan he sawe him, he fell aboute his neck, & wepte sore vpon his neck. Then sayde Israel vnto Ioseph: Now am I content to dye, for so moch as I haue sene thy face, that thou art yet alyue.

Ioseph sayde vnto his brethren, & to his fathers house: I will go vp, & tell Pharaο, & saye vnto him: My brethrē and my fathers house are come vnto me out of the lande of Canaan, and are keepers of catell (for they are men that deale with catell:) their small & greate catell, and all that they haue, haue they brought with them. Now yf Pharaο call you, and saye: what is youre occupacio? then ye shal saye: Thy seruantes are men y<sup>e</sup> haue dealt with catell from oure youth vp hytherto, both we & oure fathers, that ye maye dwell in the lande of Gosen: for the Egipcians abhorre all keepers of catell.

The xliij. Chapter.

THEN came Ioseph, and tolde Pharaο & sayde: My father and my brethren, their small & greate catell, & all y<sup>e</sup> they haue, are come out of y<sup>e</sup> lande of Canaan: & beholde, they are in the lande of Gosen. And he toke fyeue of his brethren, & presented them vnto Pharaο. Then sayde Pharaο vnto his brethren: What is youre occupacion? They answered: Thy seruantes are keepers of catell, we and oure fathers also. And they sayde morouer vnto Pharaο: We are come to dwell with you in the lande, for thy seruantes haue no pasture for their catell, so sore doth the dertth oppresse the lande of Canaan. Now therefore let thy seruantes dwell in the lande of Gosen.

B Pharaο sayde vnto Ioseph: Thy father and thy brethren are come vnto the: the lande of Egipte is open before the, let them dwell in the best place of the lande, & se y<sup>e</sup> they dwell euen in the lande of Gosen. And yf thou knowest that there be men of actiuyte amōge thē, make thē rulers of my catell.

Ioseph brought in Iacob his father also, & set him before Pharaο. And Iacob thanked Pharaο. But Pharaο axed Iacob: How olde art thou? Iacob sayde: The tyme of my *pylgremage is an hūdreth and thirtie yeares: litle and euell is the tyme of my pilgremage, and attayneth not vnto the tyme of my fathers in their pylgremages. And Iacob thanked Pharaο, and wēte out from him.

C So Ioseph prepared dwellings for his father and his brethren, & gaue them a possession in the lande of Egipte, euen in the best place of the lande, namely, in the lande of Raemeses, as Pharaο cōmaunded. And he made prouision for his father and his brethren, and all his fathers house with bred, euen as yonge children.

There was no bred in all the londe, for the dertth was very sore: so y<sup>e</sup> the lande of Egipte & the lande of Canaan were famished by y<sup>e</sup> reason of the dertth. And Ioseph brought together all the money that was founde in Egipte and Canaan, for y<sup>e</sup> corne that they bought. And he layed vp all the money in Pharaοs house.

Now whan money fayled in the lande of Egipte and Canaan, all the Egipcians came vnto Ioseph, & saide: Geue vs bred. Why suffrest thou vs to dye before y<sup>e</sup>, because we are without money? Ioseph saide: Brynge hither youre catell, so wil I geue you for youre catell, seynge ye are without money. Then brought they their catell vnto Ioseph. And he gaue thē bred for their horses, shepe, oxen and Asses. So he fed them with bred y<sup>e</sup> yeare, for all their catell.

Whan y<sup>e</sup> yeare was ended, they came vnto him the next yeare, & sayde vnto him: We wil not hyde it from oure lorde, y<sup>e</sup> not onely the money, but all the catell also is spent vnto oure lorde: & there is nothinge left more for oure lorde, but onely oure body & oure lande. Wherefore suffrest thou both vs to dye, and oure londe? Take vs and oure lāde for bred, that we and oure lande maye be bonde vnto Pharaο: geue vs sede, that we maye lyue and not dye, & y<sup>e</sup> the lande become not a wilderness.

So Ioseph toke all the lande of Egipte in for Pharaο: for the Egipcians solde euery man his lande, because y<sup>e</sup> dertth was so mightie vpon them: and so the lōde became Pharaοs, with the people that wente out and in at his cities, from one syde of Egipte vnto the other, excepte the prestes londe, that toke he not in: For it was ordered of Pharaο for the prestes, that they shulde eate that which was appoynted them, which he gaue them, therefore they neded not to sell their londes.

F Then sayde Ioseph vnto the people: Beholde, I haue taken possession of you and youre lande this daye for Pharaο, Beholde, there haue ye sede, sowe the londe, and of the corne ye shall geue the fifth parte vnto Pharaο: foure partes shalbe youre, to sowe the londe for youre sustenance, and for youre houses and children.

They sayde: Let vs but lyue, & fynde grace before the oure lorde, we wyl gladly be Pharaοs seruantes: So Ioseph made thē a lawe vnto this daye ouer the Egipcians londe, to geue Pharaο the fifth parte, excepte the prestes londe, which was not bonde vnto Pharaο.

So Israel dwelt in Egipte in the londe of Gosen, and had it in possession, and grew and multiplied exceedingly. And Iacob lyued seuentene yeare in the lande of Egipte, so that his whole age was an hūdreth and seuen and fourty yeares.

Now when the tyme came that Israel shulde dye, he called Ioseph his sonne, and sayde vnto him: Yf I haue founde grace in thy sight, * then laye thine honde vnder my thye, y thou shalt shewe mercy and faithfulness vpon me, and not burye me in Egipte, but I will lye by my fathers, and thou shalt carye me out of Egipte, ¶ burye me in their buryall. He sayde: I wil do as thou hast sayde. But he sayde: † Then sweare vnto me. And he sware vnto him. Thē Israel bowed himself towardē the bed heade.

The xliiij. Chapter.

AFTER this it was tolde Ioseph: Beholde, thy father is sicke. And he toke with him his two sonnes Manasses and Ephraim. Then was it tolde Iacob: beholde, thy sonne Ioseph cōmeth vnto y. And Israel toke a corage vnto him, ¶ sat vp vpō y bed, ¶ sayde vnto Ioseph: The Allmyghty God appeared vnto me: at Lus in y lāde of Canaan, ¶ blessed me, ¶ saide vnto me: Beholde, I wil cause y to growe ¶ increase ¶ wyll make a multitude of people of y, ¶ wil geue this lāde vnto thy sēde after y for an euerlastinge possession. Therefore shal now thy two sonnes<sup>a</sup> Manasses ¶ Ephraim (which were borne vnto the in Egipte, before I came hither vnto the) be myne, like as Ruben ¶ Simeon. As for those that thou begettest after thē, they shal be thine owne. But these shalbe named with the names of their brethren in their inheritaunce.

And whā I came out of Mesopotamia, Rachel dyed by me in the<sup>b</sup> lande of Canaan, by the waye, whan there was yet but a felde brede vnto Ephrath: and I buried her in the waye towardē Ephrath, which now is called Bethlehem.

And Israel loked vpon Iosephs sonnes, ¶ sayde: What are these? Ioseph answered: They are my sonnes, which God hath geuen me here. He sayde: Brynge thē hither to me, y I maye blesse thē. (For Israels eyes were heuy for age, ¶ he coude not well se.)

And he brought thē vnto him. So he kyssed them, ¶ embraced thē, ¶ saide vnto Ioseph: Beholde, I haue sene thy face, which I thought not: ¶ lo, God hath caused me to se thy sēde also. And Ioseph toke them from his lappe, and they fell downe to the grounde vpon their face.

And Israel saide vnto Ioseph: Beholde, I dye, ¶ God shall be with you, ¶ brynge you agayne in to y lande of youre fathers. ¶ I haue geuen the a pece of londe, without thy brethren, which I gat with my swerde and my bowe out of the hande of the Amorites.

And whan Iacob had ended this commaundement vnto his children, he pluckte his fete together vpon the bed, and died, and was gathered vnto his people. Thē fell Ioseph vpon his fathers face, and wepte, and kyssed him.

Now when the mournynge dayes were ended, Ioseph spake vnto Pharaos housholde, ⁊ sayde: Yf I haue founde fauoure in youre sight, thē speake vnto Pharao and saie: My father hath taken an ooth of me, ⁊ sayde: Beholde, I dye, *burie me in myne owne graue, which I dygged for myself in the lāde of Canaan. Therfore wyl I now go vp, and burye my father, and come agayne. Pharao saide: Go thy waye vp, and burye thy father, acordinge as thou hast sworne vnto him.

33 So Ioseph wēte vp, to burye his father. And there wēte with him all Pharaos seruātes † were the elders of his courte, and all † elders of the lande of Egipte, ⁊ all Iosephs housholde, and his brethren, and his fathers housholde. Onely their children, shepe ⁊ oxen left they in † lāde of Gosen, ⁊ toke their iourney vp with him, vpō charettes and horses, and the company was exceedinge greate.

Now when these came to the playne of Atad † lyeth beyonde Iordane, they made there a very greate and bytter lamentacion, ⁊ * he mourned for his father seuē dayes. And whā the people in the lande (the Cananites) sawe the mournynge in the playne of Atad, they sayde: The Egipcians make there greate lamētacion. Therfore is the place called: The lamentacion of the Egipcians, which lyeth beyonde Iordane.

And his brethren wente, and fell downe before him, and sayde: Beholde, here are we thy seruāntes. Ioseph sayde vnto thē: Feare ye not, for I am vnder God. Ye thought euell ouer me, but God hath turned it vnto good, to do as it is come to passe this daye, for the sauynge of moch people. Therfore be not ye now afrayed, I wyl care for you and youre children. And he comforted them, and spake louyngly vnto them.

Thus dwelt Ioseph in Egipte with his fathers house, and lyued an hūdreth and ten yeare, † and sawe Ephrayms children, vnto † thirde generacion: In like maner the children of Machir the sonne of Manasses, begat children also vpon Iosephs lappe. 34

And Ioseph sayde vnto his brethren: † I dye, and God wyl vyset you, and brynge you out of this lande, to the lande that he sware vnto Abraham, Isaac and Iacob. Therfore toke he an ooth of the childrē of Israel, and sayde: Whan God shal vyset you, † thē cary my bones frō hence. So Ioseph dyed, whā he was an hūdreth and ten yeare olde, and they embawmed him, ⁊ layed him in a chest in Egipte.

The first Chapter.

A THESE are y names of the "childrē of Israel, that came with Iacob in to Egipte: euery one came in with his house, Ruben, Simeon, Leui, Iuda, Isachar, Zabulō, Ben Iamin, Dan, Nephtali, Gad and Aser. And of all the soules that came out of the loynes of Iacob, there were seuentie.

As for Ioseph, he was in Egipte all ready. Now whā Ioseph was deed, and all his brethren, and all they that lyued at that tyme, the children of Israel grewe,<sup>a</sup> and increased, and multiplied, and became exceedinge mightie, so y the lande was full of them.

B The came there a new kynge ouer Egipte, which knewe nothinge of Ioseph, and sayde vnto his people: Beholde, the people of the children of Israel are many, & mightier then we: Vp, let vs deale wysely with them, y there be not so many of them. For yf there shulde ryse vp eny warre agaynst vs, they might ioyne them selues also vnto oure enemies, and ouercome vs, & so get them out of the lande.

And he set worke masters ouer them, to kepe them vnder with burthens. (For they buylded the cities Phiton and Raemeses, for treasuries vnto Pharaο.) But the more they vexed them, the more they multiplied and grew.

C Therefore had they indignaciō on the children of Israel, and the Egiptians compelled the children of Israel without mercy to do serunyce, and made their lyues bytter vnto them with greuous labour in claye and brycke, and with allmaner of bondage in y fælde, and with allmaner of labour, which they layed vpon them without mercy.

And the kynge of Egipte sayde vnto the mydwuyes of the Hebrueswomen. (Of the which one was called Siphra, and the other Pua:) Whan ye helpe the women of the Hebrues, and se vpon the stole, that it is a sonne, then slaye him: but yf it be a daughter, let her lyue. Neuertheles the mydwuyes feared God, & dyd not as the kinge of Egipte commaunded them, but let the children lyue.

D Then the kynge of Egipte called the mydwuyes, and sayde vnto them: Wherefore do ye this, that ye let the children lyue? The mydwuyes answered Pharaο: The women of the Hebrues are not as the women of Egipte, for they are sturdy wemen: or euer the mydwuyes come at them, they are deluyered.

Therefore God dealt well with the mydwuyes. And the people multiplied, and became exceedinge mightie. And for so moch as the mydwuyes feared God, * he made them houses. Then Pharaο commaunded all his people and sayde: All the sonnes that are borne, cast in to the water, but let all the daughters lyue.

The ij. Chapter.

A ND there wente forth a man of the house of Leui,<sup>c</sup> and toke a daughter of Leui. † And the wife conceived and bare a sonne. And whan she sawe y it was a proper childe, she hyd him thre monethes. And whan she coude hyde him no longer, she toke an Arke of redes, and dawbed it ouer with slyme and pitch, and layed the childe therein, and set it amonge the redes by the waters brynke. But his sister stode a farre of, to wete what wolde come of him.

And Pharaοs daughter came downe, to wash herself in the water: And hir maydens walked by the water syde: and whan she sawe the Arke amonge the redes, she sent one of hir maydens, and caused it to be fett. And whan she opened it, she sawe y childe: and beholde the babe wepte. Then had she pytie vpon it, and sayde: It is one of the Hebrues children.

B Then sayde his syster vnto Pharaοs daughter: Shal I go, and call the a nurse of the Hebrues wemen, to nurse y the childe? Pharaοs daughter sayde vnto her: Go thy waye. The mayde wente, and called the childes mother. Then sayde Pharaοs daughter vnto her: Take this childe, and nurse it for me, I wyll geue y thy rewarde. The woman toke the childe, and nursed it.

And whan the childe was growne, she brought it vnto Pharaοs daughter, and it became hir sonne, and she called him Moses. For she sayde: I toke him out of the water.

Vpon a tyme whan Moses was greate, he wente forth vnto his brethren, and loked vpon their burthens, and sawe, that an Egiptia smote one of his brethren y Hebrues. And he loked rounde aboute him: and whan he sawe that there was no man, he slew the Egiptian, and buried him in the sonde.

The next daye he wente forth also, and sawe two men of the Hebrues stryunge together, and sayde to the vngodly: Wherefore smyttest thou thy neyghboure? But he sayde: * Who made the a ruler or iudge ouer vs? Wilt thou slaye me also, as thou slewest the Egipcian? Thē was Moses afraied, and sayde: How is this knowne? And Pharaο herde of it, and sought for Moses, to slaye him. But Moses fled from Pharaο, and kepte him in the lande of Madian, and sat him downe by a wells syde.

The prest Madian had seuen daughters, which came to drawe water, and fylled the troughe, to geue their fathers shepe to drinke. Then came the shepherdes, and droue thē awaye. But Moses gat him vp, and helped them, and gaue their shepe to drynke. And when they came to Reguel their father, he sayde: How came ye so soone to daie? They sayde: A man of Egipte deliuered vs from y shepherdes, and drew vnto vs, and gaue the shepe to drynke. He sayde vnto his daughters: Where is he? Wherefore let ye the man go, that ye called him not to eate with vs?

And Moses was content to dwell with the man. And he gaue Moses his daughter Zipora, which bare him a sonne, and he t called him Gerson, for he sayde: I am become a straunger in a straunge lande. And she bare him yet a sonne, whom he called Elieser, and sayde: The God of my father is my helper, and hath deliuered me from Pharaοs hāde.

But after this in processe of tyme, the kynge of Egipte dyed. And the childrē of Israel sighed ouer their laboure, and cried. And their crye ouer their laboure, came before God. And God herde their cōplaynte, t remebred his couenaunt t with Abraham Isaac and Iacob. And God lokēd vpon the childrē of Israel, and God knew it.

The iij. Chapter.

MOSSES kepte the shepe of Iethro his father in lawe prest of Madian, t droue the shepe on the backsyde of the wyldernes, and came to the mountayne of God, Horeb. <sup>a</sup>And the angell of y LORDE appeared vnto him in a flāme of fyre out of the bush. And he thrust it in to his bosome, & toke it out: beholde, thē was it leper like snowe. And he saide: Put it in to thy bosome agayne. And he put it agayne in to his bosome, & toke it out: beholde, thē was it turned agayne as his flesh. Yf they wil not beleue the, ner heare y<sup>e</sup> voyce of the first token, yet shal they beleue the voyce of the seconde token. But yf they wil not beleue these two tokens ner heare thy voyce, then take of the water of the ryuer, and poure it vpon the drye londe: so shall the same water y<sup>e</sup> thou hast takē out of y<sup>e</sup> ryuer, be turned vnto bloude vpō y<sup>e</sup> drye londe.

But Moses sayde vnto the LORDE: <sup>c</sup> Oh my LORDE, I am a man that is not eloquēt, from yesterdaye & yesterdaye, & sence the tyme y<sup>e</sup> thou hast spoken vnto thy seruauit: for I haue a slowe speach, & a slowe tunge. The LORDE sayde vnto him: Who hath made the mouth of man? Or who hath made the domme, or the deaf, or the seynge or y<sup>e</sup> blynde? Haue not I the LORDE done it? Go now thy waye therfore, I wil be with thy mouth, & teach the what thou shalt saye.

But Moses sayde: My LORDE, sende whom thou wilt sende. Then was the LORDE very angry at Moses, and saide: Do not I knowe then, y<sup>e</sup> thy brother Aaron the Leuite is well spoken? And beholde, he shal go forth to mete y<sup>e</sup>: & whan he seyth the, he shal reioyse from his hert. Thou shalt speake vnto him, & put the wordes in his mouth: & I wil be with thy mouth & his, and teach you what ye shall doo: & he shall speake vnto the people for the. He shal be thy mouth, & thou shalt be his God. And take in thine hande this staff, wherewith thou shalt do tokens.

D Moses wēte, and came agayne vnto Iethro his father in lawe, and sayde vnto him: Let me go (I praye the) that I maye turne agayne vnto my brethrē, which are in Egipte, and se whether they be yet alyue. Iethro sayde vnto him: Go thy waye in peace. The LORDE sayde also vnto him in Madian: Go thy waye, turne agayne in to Egipte, for y<sup>e</sup> mē are deed, that sought after thy life. So Moses toke his wife, and his sonnes, and caried them vpon an Asse, & wente agayne in to the lande of Egipte, & toke the staff of God in his hande. And the LORDE saide vnto Moses: When thou comest agayne in to Egipte, se y<sup>e</sup> thou do all the wonders (before Pharaο) which I haue put in thy hāde. <sup>a</sup>But I wil hardē his hert, <sup>y</sup> he shal not let the people go. And thou shalt saie vnto Pharaο: Thus sayeth <sup>y</sup> LORDE: Israel is my firstborne sonne, <sup>α</sup> I saye vnto the: Let my sonne go, <sup>y</sup> he maye serue me: Yf thou wilt not let him go, <sup>b</sup> then wil I slaye thy firstborne sonne.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Aaron: Go mete Moses in the wildernes. And he wēte, <sup>α</sup> met him on the mount of God, and kyssed him. And Moses tolde Aaron all the wordes of the LORDE, which had sent him: <sup>α</sup> all the tokens <sup>y</sup> he had charged him withall. And they wēte, <sup>α</sup> gathered all the elders of the childrē of Israel. And Aaron tolde all <sup>y</sup> wordes, <sup>y</sup> the LORDE had spokē vnto Moses: <sup>α</sup> dyd the tokens before the people, <sup>α</sup> the people beleued. And whan they herde <sup>y</sup> the LORDE vysited the children of Israel, and loked vpon their trouble, they bowed them selues, and worshipped.

The b. Chapter.

cōmaunde the workmasters of the people, and their officers, and sayde: Ye shal not gather and geue the people eny more strawe, to burne bryck, as yesterdaye and yeryesterdaye. Let them go, and gather them strawe them selues. And the nombre of the brycke which they made yesterdaye <sup>α</sup> yeryesterdaye, shall ye laye vpon them neuertheles, and mynish nothinge therof: for they are ydle. Therfore crye they and saye: We wil go, and do sacrifice vnto oure God. Let the men be kepte downe with labour, <sup>y</sup> they maye haue to do, <sup>α</sup> not to turne them selues to false wordes.

Then wente the workmasters of the people <sup>α</sup> their officers out, <sup>α</sup> spake vnto the people: Thus sayeth Pharaο: There shall no strawe be geuen you, go youre waye youre selues, and get you strawe, where ye can fynde it. But of youre labour there shall nothinge be mynished. Then were the people scaured in all <sup>y</sup> lande of Egipte, to gather stubble, that they might haue strawe.

And the workmasters haisted them forwarde, <sup>α</sup> sayde: Fulfill youre daye worke, like as whan ye had strawe. And the officers of <sup>y</sup> children of Israel, whom Pharaοs workmasters had set ouer them, were beaten, <sup>α</sup> it was saide vnto them: Wherefore haue ye not fulfilled youre appoynted daye worke to daye and yesterdaye, like as in tymes past?

But Moses came agayne vnto the LORDE, and sayde: LORDE, wherfore dealest thou so euell with this people? Wherfore hast thou sent me? For sence the tyme that I wente in vnto Pharaο, to speake vnto him in thy name, he hath dealt euell with this people, and thou hast not delyuered thy people. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Now shalt thou se, what I will do vnto Pharaο, for thorow a mightie hande must he let them go, thorow a mightie hande must he dryue them from him out of his londe.

The bi. Chapter.

AND God spake vnto Moses, & sayde vnto him: I am ſ LORDE, & I appeared vnto Abraham, Isaac & Jacob, an Allmightie God: but *my name, LORDE, haue I not shewed vnto them: My couenaunt also haue I made with them, <sup>b</sup> that I wil geue them the londe of Canaan, the londe of their pilgrimage, wherin they haue bene straungers. Morouer I haue herde the complaynte of the children of Israel, whom ſ Egipcians oppresse with labour, and haue remembred my couenaunt.

Therefore saye vnto the childrē of Israel: I am the LORDE, & wil brynge you out from youre burthens in Egipte, & wil rydd you from youre labour, and wil delyuer you thorow a stretched out arme & greate iudgmētes, and will receaue you for my people, & will be youre God: so that ye shal knowe, that I the LORDE am youre God, which brynge you out from the burthen of Egipte, and will brynge you in to the lande, ouer the which I haue lift vp my hande, to geue it vnto Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, ſ same will I geue vnto you for a possession. I the LORDE.

B Moses tolde this vnto the childrē of Israel. But they herkened not vnto him, for very anguysh of sprete, & for sore labour. Thē spake the LORDE vnto Moses, & sayde: Go thy waye, & speake vnto Pharaο the kyng of Egipte, ſ he let the childrē of Israel go out of his lande. But Moses spake before ſ LORDE, & saide: Beholde, ſ childrē of Israel herke not vnto me, how shulde Pharaο thē heare me? <sup>c</sup> And I am also of vncircumcised lyppes.

So the LORDE spake vnto Moses & Aaron, & gaue thē a commaundemēt vnto the childrē of Israel, & vnto Pharaο the kyng of Egipte, ſ they shulde brynge the childrē of Israel out of Egipte.

The children of Simeon are these: Iemuel, Iamin, Ohad, Iachin, Zophar, and Saul the sonne of the Cananitish woman: These are the generacions of Symeon.

These are the names of the childrē of Leui C in their generaciōs: <sup>e</sup> Gerson, Kahath and Merari: Leui was an hundreth and seuen & thirtie yeare olde. The children of Gerson are these: Libni and Semei in their generacions. The childrē of Kahath are these: Amram, Iezear, Hebron, Vsiel. <sup>f</sup> Kahath was an hundreth & thre & thirtie yeare olde. The children of Merari are these: Maheli and Musi. These are ſ generacions of Leui in their kynreds.

And Amram toke <sup>g</sup> his vnclēs doughter <sup>h</sup> Iochebed to wife, which bare him Aaron & Moses. Amram was an C. & vij. & thirtie yeare olde. The childrē of Iezear are these: Korah, Nepheg, Sichri. The children of Vsiel are these: Misael, Elzaphan, Sithri.

Aaron toke Elizaba ſ doughter of Aminadab Nahassons sister to wife, which bare him Nadab, Abihu, Eleasar, Ithamar.

The childrē of Korah are these: Assir, D Elkana, & Abiassaph. These are ſ generaciōs of ſ Korahites. Eleasar Aarons sonne toke one of the daughters of Putiel to wife, which bare him Phineas. These are the heades amonge the fathers of the generacions of the Leuites.

This is ſ Aaron & Moses, vnto whom ſ LORDE sayde: Bringe ſ childrē of Israel out of the lande of Egipte with their armies. It is they (namely Moses & Aaron) ſ spake vnto Pharaο the kyng of Egipte, ſ they might brynge the children of Israel out of Egipte. The same daie spake ſ LORDE vnto Moses in ſ lande of Egipte, & sayde: I am ſ LORDE, speake thou vnto Pharaο ſ kyng of Egipte, all ſ I saye vnto ſ. And he answered before ſ̄ LORDE: Beholde, I am of vncircumcised lippes,* how shall Pharao thē heare me?

The viij. Chapter.

A THE LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, I haue made the a God ouer Pharao, ⁊ Aarō thy brother shal be thy prophet. Thou shalt speake all ſ̄ I cōmaūde ſ̄: but Aaron thy brother shal speake vnto Pharao, ſ̄ he maye let the childrē of Israel go out of his lande. <sup>b</sup>Neuertheles I wil harden Pharaos hert, ſ̄ I maye multiplie my tokens ⁊ wonders in the londe of Egipte. And Pharao shal not heare you, ſ̄ I maye shewe my hande in Egipte, ⁊ brynge myne armyes, euen my people the childrē of Israel out of ſ̄ lande of Egipte, by greate iudgmētes. And ſ̄ Egipcians shal knowe, ſ̄ I am the LORDE, whan I shal stretch out my hande vpon Egipte, and brynge the children of Israel out from amonge them.

B Moses and Aaron dyd as the LORDE cōmaūded them. And Moses was foure score yeare olde, ⁊ Aaron thre ⁊ foure score yeare olde, whan they spake vnto Pharao. And ſ̄ LORDE sayde vnto Moses ⁊ Aaron: Whan Pharao sayeth vnto you: Shew youre wonders, then shalt thou saye vnto Aaron: Take thy staff, and cast it before Pharao, ⁊ it shal turne to a serpent.

Then wēte Moses ⁊ Aaron in vnto Pharao, ⁊ dyd as the LORDE cōmaūded them. And Aaron cast his staff before Pharao ⁊ before his seruantes, ⁊ it turned to a serpēt. Then Pharao called for ſ̄ wyse men ⁊ Sorcerers. And the Sorcerers of Egipte also dyd like wyse with their Sorceries, and euery one cast his staff before him, ⁊ they turned vnto serpentes. But Aarons staff deuoured their staues. So Pharaos hert was hardened, and he herkened not vnto them, euen as the LORDE had sayde.

C And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: The hert of Pharao is hardened, he refuseth to let ſ̄ people go. Get ſ̄ vnto Pharao in the mornyng, beholde, he shal come vnto ſ̄ water, mete thou him vpō the waters brynke, ⁊ take ſ̄ staff which turned to a serpēt, in thine hande, ⁊ saye vnto him: The LORDE God of the Hebrues hath sent me vnto the, ⁊ sendeth ſ̄ worde: <sup>c</sup>Let my people go, that they maye serue me in the wyldernes: but hither to thou woldest not heare.

Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: Hereby shalt thou knowe, ſ̄ I am ſ̄ LORDE. Beholde, with the staff ſ̄ I haue in my hande, wil I smyte the water which is in ſ̄ ryuer, ⁊ it shal be turned in to bloude: so that the fishes in the ryuer shall dye, ⁊ the ryuer shall stynke: ⁊ it shal greue the Egipcians to drynke of ſ̄ water of the ryuer.

And ſ̄ LORDE spake vnto Moses: Saye B vnto Aaron: Take thy staff, ⁊ stretch out thine hāde ouer ſ̄ waters of Egipte, ouer their ryuers ⁊ brokes ⁊ pondes, ⁊ ouer all water poles, ſ̄ they maye be turned to bloude, ⁊ that there maye be bloude in all ſ̄ lande of Egipte, both in vessels of wodd and stone.

The viij. Chapter.

A THE LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Go thy waye to Pharao, ⁊ speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE: Let my people go, ſ̄ they maye serue me: Yf thou wilt not let thē go, beholde, I wil smyte all ſ̄ borders of thy lōde with frogges, so ſ̄ the ryuer shal scraule with frogges: these shal clymme vp, ⁊ come in to thine house, in to thy chamber, where thou slepest, vpon thy bed, and in to the houses of thy seruantes, amonge thy people, in to thine ouens, and vpon thy dowe: and the frogges shall come vp vpon the, and vpon thy people, and vpon all thy seruantes.

thy staff ouer the streames, ⁊ ryuers, ⁊ pondes, and let frogges come vpon the londe of Egipte. And Aaron stretched his hāde ouer the waters in Egipte, ⁊ there came vp frogges, so ⁊ the londe of Egipte was couered.

The Sorcerers also dyd likewise, with their Sorcerirs, ⁊ caused frogges to come vpō ⁊ lōde of Egipte. Thē called Pharao for Moses ⁊ Aaron, ⁊ sayde: * Praye the LORDE for me, ⁊ he maye take awaye the frogges fro me ⁊ fro my people, ⁊ I will let ⁊ people go, ⁊ they maye do sacrifice vnto the LORDE.

Ⓒ Moses sayde: Hauē thou the honoure before me, ⁊ appoynte me, whā I shal praye for ⁊, for thy seruantes and for thy people: ⁊ the frogges maye be dryuen awaye frō the ⁊ frō thy house, ⁊ remayne onely in the ryuer. He sayde: Tomorow. He sayde: Euen as thou hast sayde, ⁊ thou mayest knowe, ⁊ there is none like vnto the LORDE oure God: And the frogges shal be takē from the, ⁊ from thy house, from thy seruantes, ⁊ from thy people, ⁊ remayne onely in the ryuer.

So Moses ⁊ Aaron wēte from Pharao, ⁊ Moses cried vnto the LORDE for the appoyntment ouer the frogges, which he had promysed vnto Pharao. And ⁊ LORDE dyd as Moses sayde. And the frogges dyed in ⁊ houses, in ⁊ courtes, ⁊ vpon ⁊ felde: ⁊ they gathered the together, here an heape, ⁊ there an heape, ⁊ the lande stanke of them. But whan Pharao sawe ⁊ he had gotten breth, his hert was hardened, and he herkened not vnto thē, euen as the LORDE had sayde.

Ⓓ And the LORDE spake vnto Moses: Saie vnto Aaron: Stretch out thy staff, ⁊ smyte the dust vpon the earth, ⁊ there maye be lyse in the whole lōde of Egipte. They dyd so. And Aaron stretched out his hande with his staff, ⁊ smote the dust vpon the earth, ⁊ there were lyse vpon men and vpon catell: All the dust of the lande was turned vnto lyse in all the lande of Egipte.

The Sorcerers also assayde likewise with their Sorcerirs ⁊ they might brynge forth lyse, but they coude not. And ⁊ lyse were vpon men ⁊ catell. Then sayde ⁊ Sorcerers vnto Pharao: It is the fynger of God. But Pharaos hert was hardened, ⁊ he herkened not vnto thē, euen as the LORDE had sayde.

beholde, he wil go vnto the water, ⁊ speake thou vnto him: Thus saith ⁊ LORDE: let my people go, ⁊ they maye serue me: yf not, beholde, I wil cause cruell wormes (or flyes) to come vpon the, thy seruantes, thy people, ⁊ thy house, so ⁊ all the Egipcians houses, ⁊ the felde, and what theron is shall be full of cruell wormes: ⁊ the same daye wil I separate the londe of ⁊ Gosen, wherin my people are, so ⁊ no cruell worme shalbe there, that thou mayest knowe, that I am ⁊ LORDE in the myddest of the earth. And I wil set a deluyeraunce betwene my people and thynne. Tomorow shal this token come to passe.

And the LORDE dyd so. And there came perulous cruell wormes in to Pharaos house, in to his seruantes houses, ⁊ vpon all the londe of Egipte: and the londe was marred with noysome wormes.

Ⓕ Thē called Pharao for Moses ⁊ Aaron, ⁊ sayde: Go youre waye, ⁊ do sacrifice vnto youre God in ⁊ londe. Moses sayde: It is not mete, ⁊ we shulde so do, so shulde we offer ⁊ abhominacion of ⁊ Egipcians vnto the LORDE oure God. Beholde, yf we shulde offer the abhominacion of ⁊ Egipcians before their eyes, shulde they not stone vs? Thre dayes iourney will we go in the wyldernes, and do sacrifice vnto the LORDE oure God ⁊ like as he hath sayde vnto vs.

Pharao sayde: I wil let you go, ⁊ ye maie do sacrifice vnto the LORDE youre God in the wyldernes (ouely ⁊ ye go no farther) ⁊ praye for me. Moses sayde: Beholde, whan I am come forth from ⁊, I wil praye vnto ⁊ LORDE, ⁊ the cruell wormes maye be taken from Pharao, ⁊ from his seruantes, ⁊ frō his people, euen tomorow: onely disceauē me nomore, that thou woldest not let the people go to do sacrifice vnto the LORDE.

And Moses wēte out from Pharao, and prayed vnto the LORDE. And the LORDE dyd as Moses sayde, ⁊ toke awaye the cruell wormes from Pharao, from his seruantes, and from his people, so ⁊ there remayned not one. But Pharao hardened his hert euē then also, and let not ⁊ people go.

The ix. Chapter.

Ⓖ THE LORDE saide vnto Moses: Go in to Pharao, and speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE God of ⁊ Hebrues:

* 3 Re. 13. b. Exod. 9. f. and 10. c. Acto. 8. c.

† Ge. 47. g. ‡ Exod. 3. c.

let my people go, y they maye serue me. Yf thou wilt not, but holde them longer, beholde, the hande of the LORDE shal be vpon thy catell in the felde, vpon horses, vpon Asses, vpon Camels, vpon oxen, vpon shepe with a very sore pestilence. And y LORDE shal make a diuysion betwene the catell of the Israelites & the Egipcians, so y there shal nothinge dye of all that the children of Israel haue. And y LORDE appoynted a tyme, and sayde: Tomorrow shal the LORDE do this vpon earth.

35 And the LORDE dyd the same on the morow. And there dyed of all maner of catell of the Egipcians: but of y catell of y childre of Israel there dyed not one. And Pharaos sent thither, & beholde, there was not one of the catell of Israel deed. But Pharaos hert was hardened, so y he let not y people go. Then sayde y LORDE vnto Moses & Aaron: Take youre handes full of aszshes out of the furnace, & let Moses sprenkle it towarde heauen before Pharaos, that it maye be dust in all the lande of Egipte, & that there maye be sores & blaynes vpon men & vpon catell in all the lande of Egipte.

And they toke aszshes out of y furnace, & stode before Pharaos, & Moses sprenkled it towarde heauē. Then were there sores and blaynes vpon men & vpon catell, so that the Sorcerers might not stōde before Moses by reason of the sores. For there were sores vpon the Sorcerers as well as vpon all the Egipcians. But the LORDE hardened Pharaos hert, so that he hekened not vnto them, euē as the LORDE had sayde vnto Moses.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Moses: Get the vp tomorrow by tynes, & stonde before Pharaos, & speake vnto him: Thus sayeth y LORDE God of the Hebrues: let my people go, y they maye serue me, els wyll I at this tyme sende all my places in to thine hert, & vpon thy seruantes & vpon thy people: that thou mayest knowe, y there is none like me in all londes. For I will now stretch out my haude, & smyte the & thy people with pestilence, so y thou shalt be roted out from the earth. Yet haue I *stered y vp for this cause, euen to shew my power vpon y, and that my name might be declared in all londes.

D Thou holdest my people yet, & wilt not let them go, beholde, tomorrow aboute this tyme wyll I cause a mightie greate hayle to rayne, soch as hath not bene in the londe of Egipte, sence the tyme that it was grouēd, hither to. And now sende thou, & saue thy catell, & all y thou hast in the felde: for all men & catell that shalbe founde in the felde, & not brought in to the houses, yf the hayle fall vpon them, they shall dye. Now who so feared the worde of the LORDE amonge Pharaos seruantes, caused his seruantes & catell to flye in to the houses: but loke whose hertes regarded not the worde of y LORDE, left their seruantes and catell in the felde.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Moses: 35 Stretch out thy hande towarde heauē, that it maye hayle vpon all the lande of Egipte, vpon men, vpon catell, & vpon all herbes of the felde in the lande of Egipte. "So Moses stretched out his staff towarde heauen, and the LORDE caused it to thunder & hayle, so y the fyre ranne alonge vpon the earth. Thus the LORDE hayled & rayned vpon the londe of Egipte, so that the hayle & fyre wente so horribly together, as neuer was in all the lade of Egipte, sence the tyme that there were people therein. And the hayle smote the whole 36 land of Egipte, all that was vpon y felde, both men & catell, & smote all the herbes vpon the felde, & brake all the trees vpon y felde, saue onely in the lande of Gosen, where the childre of Israel were, there it hayled not. Then sent Pharaos & called for Moses & Aaron, & sayde vnto them: Now haue I synned, y LORDE is righteous, but I & my people are vngodly. Yet praye ye vnto the LORDE, that the thonder & hayle of God inaye cease, then wyl I let you go, that ye shal tary here no longer. Moses sayde vnto him: Whan I am come out of the cite, I wyll stretch out myne handes vnto the LORDE, so shal the thonder cease, & there shal be nomore hayle: that thou mayest knowe, that the earth is the LORDES. But I knowe, y both thou & thy seruantes feare not yet the LORDE God. 37 Thus the flax and the barlye were smytten: for the barlye was shot vp, & y flax was boulded: but the wheate and y rye were not smytten, for they were late sown.

So Moses wente from Pharaos out of y cite, & stretched out his hādes vnto y LORDE. And y thōder & the hayle ceased, & the rayne dropped not vpon the earth. But whā Pharaos sawe  $\hat{y}$  the rayne  $\tau$  thonder  $\tau$  hayle ceased, he synned agayne, and hardened his hert, he  $\tau$  his seruauentes. So Pharaos hert was hardened,  $\hat{y}$  he let not the childrē of Israel go, euē as the LORDE had sayde by Moses.

The x. Chapter.

AND the LORDE saide vnto Moses: Go in vnto Pharao, for I haue hardened his hert  $\tau$  the hertes of his seruauētes,  $\hat{y}$  I might do these my tokēs amonge thē,  $\tau$  that thou mightest shewe it in the eares of thy children  $\tau$  of thy childers children, what I haue done in Egipte, and how I haue shewed my tokens amōge thē, that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

So Moses  $\tau$  Aaron wente in vnto Pharao,  $\tau$  spake vnto him: Thus sayeth  $\hat{y}$  LORDE God of the Hebrues: How longe refuseth thou to submyt thy self vnto me, to let my people go,  $\hat{y}$  they maye serue me? Yf thou wilt not let my people go, beholde, to morrow wil I cause greshoppers to come vpon all places,  $\hat{y}$  they maye couer the lande, so  $\hat{y}$  the lande can not be sene,  $\tau$  they shal eate vp  $\hat{y}$  is left you  $\tau$  was deliuered frō the hayle:  $\tau$  B shal eate vp all youre grene trees vpon the felde,  $\tau$  shal fyll thy house, all thy seruauētes houses,  $\tau$  all the Egiptians houses: soch as thy fathers  $\tau$  thy fathers fathers haue not sene, sens the tyme  $\hat{y}$  they were vpon earth vnto this daye. And he turned him,  $\tau$  wente out from Pharao. Then saide Pharaos seruauentes vnto him: How longe shall we be snared after this maner? Let the men go, that they may serue  $\hat{y}$  LORDE their God. C Knowest thou not yet,  $\hat{y}$  Egipte is destroyed? Moses  $\tau$  Aaron were brought agayne to Pharao, which saide vnto them: Go youre waye,  $\tau$  serue  $\hat{y}$  LORDE youre God. But who are they  $\hat{y}$  shall go? Moses sayde: We wil go with yonge  $\tau$  olde, with sonnes and daughters, with shepe and oxē: for we haue a feast of the LORDE. He sayde vnto thē: Let it be so, the LORDE be with you: Shulde I let you go  $\tau$  youre childrē also? loke that ye haue not some myschefe in hāde. Not so, but go ye that are men, and serue the LORDE, for that was youre desyre. And they thrust them out from Pharao.

the \*greshoppers,  $\hat{y}$  they maye come vpō  $\hat{y}$  londe of Egipte,  $\tau$  eate vp all the herbes in the londe, with all  $\hat{y}$  escaped the hayle. Moses stretched out his staff ouer  $\hat{y}$  lande of Egipte,  $\tau$  the LORDE brought an east wynde in to the londe all  $\hat{y}$  daye  $\tau$  all  $\hat{y}$  night,  $\tau$  in the mornynge, the east wynde brought the greshoppers. And they came ouer the whole lande of Egipte, and lighted in all places of Egipte, so excedeinge many, that before tyme there were neuer soch, nether shalbe here after: for they couered the londe, and made it darcke. And they ate vp all the herbes in  $\hat{y}$  londe,  $\tau$  all the frutes vpon the trees which remayned from  $\hat{y}$  hayle,  $\tau$  left no grene thinge behinde in the trees  $\tau$  herbes vpon the felde in all the lande of Egipte.

Then Pharao called for Moses  $\tau$  Aaron in all  $\hat{y}$  haist,  $\tau$  saide: I haue synned against the LORDE youre God,  $\tau$  agaynst you: forgeue me my synne this once also,  $\tau$  pray the LORDE youre God,  $\hat{y}$  he maye take awaye fro me this death onely. And he wēte out from Pharao,  $\tau$  prayed vnto the LORDE. Thē the LORDE turned a maruelous strōge west wynde, and toke vp the greshoppers,  $\tau$  cast them in to the reed see, so that there was not one left in all the quarters of Egipte. But the LORDE hardened Pharaos hert, that he let not the childrē of Israel go. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Stretch out thine hāde toward heauen, that it be so darcke in the londe of Egipte,  $\hat{y}$  it maye be felt. And Moses stretched out his hāde toward heauen, thē was there a thicke darcknesse <sup>a</sup> in all the londe of Egipte thre dayes, so  $\hat{y}$  in thre dayes no mā sawe another, nor rose vp from  $\hat{y}$  place where he was. But with the childrē of Israel there was light in their dwellings. Then Pharao called for Moses,  $\tau$  sayde: Go youre waye  $\tau$  serue the LORDE: onely leaue youre shepe  $\tau$  youre oxen here: let youre childrē go with you also. Moses sayde: Thou must geue vs offringes and brent offeringes, that we maye do sacrifice vnto the LORDE oure God. Oure catell shal go with vs, and there shal not one hooffe be left behynde: for we must take therof for the seruyce of the LORDE oure God. Morouer we knowe not wherewithall we shal serue  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, tyll we come thither. But the LORDE hardened Pharaos hert,  $\hat{y}$  he wolde not let them go. And Pharaoy sayde vnto him: Get the hence fro me, & bewarre, that thou come nomore in my sight: For loke what daie so euer thou comest in my sight, thou shalt dye. Moses answered: Euē as thou hast sayde, I wil come no more in thy sight.

The xi. Chapter.

AND the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: I wil yet brynge a plague vpon Pharaoy and Egipte: after y<sup>e</sup> shal he let you go from hence, & shal not onely let all go, but also dryue you hence. Therefore saye now vnto the people, y<sup>e</sup> euery man borowe of his neighbour, & euery woman of hir neighbour, Jewels of syluer & golde: "for the LORDE shal geue the people fauoure in the sight of y<sup>e</sup> Egipcians." And Moses was a very greate man in the lande of Egipte, in y<sup>e</sup> sight of Pharaos seruautes, & in the sight of the people.

B And Mossesayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: At mydnight wil I go out in the lande of Egipte, & all y<sup>e</sup> first borne in the lande of Egipte shall dye: from Pharaos first sonne (y<sup>e</sup> sytteth vpon his seate) vnto the first sonne of the mayde seruaunte which is behynde y<sup>e</sup> myll: & all the first borne amonge the catell: & there shalbe a greate crie in all the lande of Egipte, soch as neuer was, ner shalbe. But amonge all the childrē of Israel there shall not a dogg quatch with his tonge, fro men vnto catell, y<sup>e</sup> ye maye knowe, how y<sup>e</sup> the LORDE hath put a differēce betwixte Egipte & Israel. Thē shal all these thy seruautes come downe vnto me, & fal at my fote, & saye: Get the out, thou & all the people that are vnder the. After that wyl I departe. And he wēte frō Pharaoy with a wroth full displeasure. The LORDE saide vnto Moses: Pharaoy herkeneth not vnto you, y<sup>e</sup> many wōders maye be done in y<sup>e</sup> lāde of Egipte. And Moses & Aaron dyd all these wōders before Pharaoy: but y<sup>e</sup> LORDE hardened his hert, y<sup>e</sup> he wolde not let y<sup>e</sup> childrē of Israel go out of his londe.

The xij. Chapter.

ye vnto all the congregacion of Israel, & saye: Vpon y<sup>e</sup> tenth daye of this moneth let euery one take a * lābe (or a kydd) where a housholder is, to euery house a lābe. But yf the housholde be to few for a lambe, thē let him & his neighbour y<sup>e</sup> is next vnto his house, take it accordinge to the nombre of y<sup>e</sup> soules, and counte to the lambe, what euery man maye eate. But it shal be a lambe without blemish, a male, & of a yere olde. From amonge the lambes & goates shal ye take it.

And ye shal kepe it vnto y<sup>e</sup> fourtene daye of the moneth. And euery man of the congregacion of Israel shal slaye it aboute the eueninge. And they shal take of his bloude, and stryke it on both the syde postes of the dore, and on the vpperdore post of the house, that they eate it in. And so shal they eate flesh y<sup>e</sup> same night, roasted at the fyre, & vleuended bred, and shal eate it with sowre sawse. Ye shal not eate it rawe, ner sodden with water, but onely roasted at the fyre, his heade with his fete and pertenance. And ye shal leaue nothyng of it ouer vntyll the mornynge: but yf eny thinge be left ouer vntyll the mornynge, ye shal burne it with fyre.

Of this maner shal ye eate it: Ye shal be gyrded aboute youre loynes, and haue youre shues vpon youre fete, and stauies in youre handes, and ye shal eate it with haist: for it is y<sup>e</sup> LORDES Passeouer. † For in the same night wil I go thorow the londe of Egipte, & smyte all the firstborne in the lande of Egipte, from men vnto catell, & vpon all the goddes of Egipte wyl I do execucion. Euen I the LORDE. And the bloude shal be youre token, vpon the houses wherin ye are: y<sup>e</sup> when I se the bloude, I maye passe ouer, and that the plage happen not vnto you, to destroye you, when I smyte the londe of Egipte.

And this daye shall ye haue for a remembrance, and ye shal kepe it holy for a feast vnto the LORDE, ye & all youre posterities, for a perpetuall custome. † Seuen dayes shal ye eate vleuended bred: namely, vpon the first daie shal ye leaue of with leuended bred in youre houses. Who so euer eateth leuended bred from the first daye vnto y<sup>e</sup> senenth that soule shall be roted out from Israel. The first daye shall be called holy amonge you, and the senenth also. No maner of worke shall ye do therin, saue what belongeth to the meate for all maner of soules, that onely maye ye do for you. And kepe you to leuended bred.

For euen vpon that same daye wil I brynge youre armies out of the londe of Egipte, therefore shall ye and all youre posterities kepe this daye for a perpetuall custome. Vpon the fourtene daye of the first moneth, at euen, shall ye eate vleuended bred, vnto the one and twente daye of the moneth, at euen: so that there be no leuended bred founde in youre houses seuen dayes. For who so euer eateth leuended bred, that soule shall be roted out from the congregacion of Israel, whether it be a straunger or borne in the londe. Therefore eate no leuended bred, but onely vleuended bred in all youre dwellynges.

And Moses called all the Elders of Israel, and sayde vnto them: Chose out, and take to euery housholde a shepe, and kyll Passeouer vnto the LORDE; and take a bunch of ysopo, and dyppe it in the bloude in the basen, and stryke it vpon the vpperposte and vpon the two syde postes, and none of you go out at the dore of his house vntyll y mornyng, for the LORDE wyll go aboute and plage the Egipcians. And whan he seyth the bloude vpon the vpperposte, and vpon the two syde postes, he wyl passe ouer by the dore, and not suffre the destroyer to come in to youre houses to plage. Therefore kepe this custome for the and thy children for euer.

And whan ye be come in to y londe that the LORDE shal geue you, (as he hath sayde) then kepe this seruyce.* And whan youre children saye vnto you: What seruyce is this, that ye haue? Ye shal saye: It is the sacrifice of the LORDES Passeouer, which passed ouer by the children of Israel in Egipte, whan he played the Egipcians, and saued oure houses. Then the people bowed them selues, and worshipped. And the children of Israel wente and dyd, as the LORDE had commaunded Moses and Aaron.

And at mydnight the LORDE smote all the firstborne in the lande of Egipte: from Pharaos first sonne (which sat vpon his seate) vntyll the first sonne of the presoner that was in the preson, and all the firstborne of the catell. Then Pharaos arose y same night, and all his seruantes, and all the Egipcians, &

there was a greate crye in Egipte: for there was no house wherin there was not one deed.

And he called for Moses and Aaron in y night, and sayde: Get you vp, and departe out fro my people, ye and the children of Israel: go youre waye, and serue the LORDE, as ye haue sayde: and take youre shepe and youre oxen with you, as ye haue sayde, and departe, and lesse me also. And the Egipcians were feare vpon the people, to dryue them haistely out of the londe, for they saide: we are all but deed.

And the people toke the rawe dowe, before it was leuended (for their foode) bounde in their clothes vpon their shulders. And the children of Israel had done as Moses sayde, and borrowed Jewels of syluer and golde, and clothes of the Egipcians: the LORDE also had geuen the people fauoure in the sight of the Egipcians, that they lent them, and so they spoyled the Egipcians.

Thus y children of Israel toke their journey from Raemes to Suchoth, sixe hundreth thousand men of fote, besyde childre. There wente with them also moch comō people, and shepe, and oxen, and exceedinge many catell.

And of the rawe dowe that they brought out of Egipte, they baked vleuended cakes: for it was not leuended, in so moch as they were thrust out of Egipte, and coude not tary: nether had they prepared them eny other meate.

The tyme y the children of Israel dwelt in Egipte, is foure hondreth and thirtie yeares. Whan the same were ended, the whole hoost of the LORDE wente out of the londe of Egipte in one daye. Therefore shall this night be kepte vnto the LORDE, because he brought them out of the londe of Egipte: And the children of Israel shall kepe it vnto the LORDE, they and their posterities.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses and Aaron: This is the maner of the keypyng of Passeouer: There shal no straunger eate of it. But who so is a bought seruaunt let him be circumcysed, & then eate therof. A straunger and an hyred seruaunt shal not eate of it. In one house shal it be eatē. Ye shal cary none of his flesh out of the house, and y ye shal not breake a bone of him. The whole congregacion of Israel shal do it.

But yf there dwell a straunger with the, ⁊ wil holde Passeouer vnto the LORDE, let him circumeysse euery one that is male, and then let him first come, and do it, and be as one that is borne in the londe: for there shal no vncircumeysed eate therof. One maner of lawe be vnto him ⁊ is borne in the londe, ⁊ vnto the straüger ⁊ dwelleth amöge you. And all the childrē of Israel dyd as the LORDE commaunded Moses ⁊ Aaron. So vpō one daye the LORDE brought the childrē of Israel out of the löde of Egipte with their armyes.

The liij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, ⁊ saide: "Sanctifie vnto me euery firstborne, ⁊ breaketh all maner of Matrices amonge the childrē of Israel, both of men ⁊ catell: for they are myne. Then saide Moses vnto ⁊ people: Thinke vpō this daye, in the which ye are gone out of Egipte from the house of bödage, how ⁊ ⁊ LORDE brought you out frō thence with a mightie häde. Therefore shall ye eate no sowre dowe. This daye are ye gone out, euē in ⁊ moneth of Abib.

Now whā ⁊ LORDE hath brought ⁊ in to ⁊ lande of ⁊ Cananites, Hethites, Amorites, Henites ⁊ Iebusites, which *he sware vnto thy fathers to gene ⁊ (euen a londe that floweth with mylke ⁊ hony) then shalt thou kepe this seruyce in this moneth. Seuē dayes shalt thou eate vlnuendred bred, ⁊ vpon the seuenth daye is the LORDES feast: therefore shalt thou eate vlnuendred bred seuē dayes, that there be no sowre dowe, ner sowred bred sene in all thy quarters.

33 And thou shalt tell thy sonne at the same tyme, ⁊ saye: Because of that, which ⁊ LORDE dyd for me, when I departed out of Egipte. Therefore shalt it be a signe vnto ⁊ in thine hande, and a token of remembraunce before thine eyes, that the lawe of ⁊ LORDE maye be in thy mouth, how that ⁊ LORDE brought the out of Egipte with a mightie hande: Therefore kepe this maner yearly in his tyme.

When the LORDE now hath brought ⁊ in to ⁊ lande of the Cananites (as he hath sworne vnto the and thy fathers) and hath geuen it the, then shalt thou sunder out vnto the LORDE all that breaketh the Matrice, and firstborne amonge thy catell, such as is male.

The firstborne of the Asse shalt thou bye out with a shepe: but yf thou redeme it not, then breake his neck. All the firstborne of men amonge thy children shalt thou redeme.

And whan thy childe axeth the to daie or tomorow: What is this? Thou shalt saye vnto him: The LORDE brought vs out of Egipte from the house of bondage with a mightie hande: for when Pharaο was loth to let vs go, the LORDE slew all the firstborne in the lande of Egipte, from the firstborne of men vnto ⁊ firstborne of the catell: therefore offer I vnto the LORDE all that breaketh ⁊ Matrice, beyng a male, and ⁊ firstborne of my children I redeme. And this shal be a signe vnto the in thine hande, and a token to thinke vpon before thine eyes, how that the LORDE brought vs out of Egipte with a mightie hande.

Now whan Pharaο had let ⁊ people go, D God led them not the waye thorow the löde of the Philistynes, which was ⁊ nexte: for he thoughte: The people might repēt, whā they se warre, and so turne in agayne in to Egipte. Therefore led he the people aboute, euen the waye thorow the wyldernes by ⁊ reed see. And the childrē of Israel wente harnesssed out of the londe of Egipte. And Moses toke Iosephs bones with him, †for he toke an oath of the children of Israel, and sayde: God wyll surely vyset you, therefore cary awaye my bones with you from hence.

So they toke their iourney frō Suchoth, ⁊ pitched their tētes in Ethā in ⁊ edge of the wilderness. And ⁊ LORDE wēte before thē by daye in a piler of a cloude, to lede thē ⁊ right waye: and by night in a piler of fyre, that he might shewe thē light to walke both by daie and night. The piler of the cloude departed neuer from the people by daye, and the pyler of fyre departed not from thē by night.

The liij. Chapter.

“The LORDE is my strength, and my songe, and is become my saluacion.

This is my God, I wil magnifie him: He is my fathers God, I wil exalte him.

The LORDE is the right man of warre, LORDE is his name. The charettes of Pharaō & his power, hath he cast in to the see.

His chosen captaynes are drowned in the reed see, y depe hath couered them: they fell to the grounde as a stone.

Thy right hande (O LORDE) is glorious in power: thy right hāde (O LORDE) hath smytten the enemies.

And with thy greate glory thou hast destroyed thine aduersaries: thou sentest out thy wrath, & it cōsumed them, euen as stobble.

In the breth of thy wrath the waters fell together, the floudes wente vpon a heape: The depes plomped together in y myddest of the see.

B The enemie thought: I wil folowe vpon them, and ouertake them, and deuyde y spoyle, and coole my mynde vpon them.

I wil drawe out my swerde, and my hande shal destroye them.

Thou blewest with thy wynde, the see couered them, and they sancke downe as leed in the mightie waters.

LORDE, who is like vnto the amonge y goddes? Who is so glorious in holynes, fear full, laudable, and doinge wonders?

Whan thou stretchedest out thy right hande, the earth swallowed them vp.

Thou of thy very mercy hast led this people, whom thou hast delyuered, and with thy strength thou hast brought them vnto the dwellynge of thy Sanctuary.

Whan y nacions herde this, they raged, sorowe came vpon the Philistynes.

Then were y prynces of Edom afrayed, tremblyng came vpō y mightie of Moab, all the indwellers of Canaan waxed faynte harted.

Let feare and drede fall vpon them thorow thy greate arme, that they maye be as styll as a stone, tyll thy people (O LORDE) be gone thorow, tyll thy people whom thou hast gotten, be gone thorow.

Bryng them in, and plante them vpon the mountayne of thy enheritaunce, vnto y place that thou hast made for thyne owne dwellynge: euen to thy tēple (O LORDE) which thy handes haue prepared.

The LORDE shal be kynge for euer & euer. For Pharaō wente in to the see with horses, and charettes, and horsmen, and the LORDE made the see fall agayne vpon them.

But the children of Israel wēte drye thorow the myddest of the see.

And Miriam the prophetisse, Aarons sister, toke a tymbrell in hir hande, and all the women folowed out after her with tymbrells in a daunse. And Miriam sange before thē: O let vs syng vnto the LORDE, for he hath done gloriously, man and horse hath he ouer throwne in the see.

“Moses caused the children of Israel to departe out from the reed see, vnto the wyldernes of Sur, & they wente thre dayes in y wildernes, y they founde no water. Then came they to Marath, but they coude not drinke y water for bytternes, for it was very bytter. Therefore was it called Marah, (y is bytternes.) Then y people murmured against Moses, & sayde: What shal we drynke? And Moses cried vnto y LORDE, which shewed him a tre: this he put in y water, thē was it swete.

There he made thē a statute, and a lawe, and tempted them, and sayde: Yf thou wylt herken vnto the voyce of y LORDE thy God, & do that which is right in his sighte, and geue eare vnto his commaundementes, & kepe all his statutes, then wyl I laye vpon y none of the sicknesses, that I layed vpon Egipte, for I am the LORDE thy surgione.

The xvi. Chapter.

AND they came vnto Elim, where there were twolue welles of water, and seuentie palme trees, and there they pitched by  $\text{f}$  water syde. From Elim they toke their journey, and the whole congregacion of the children of Israel came in to the wyldernesse of Sin (which lyeth betwene Elim and Sinai) vpon the fyftene daye of the seconde moneth, after that they were departed out of the londe of Egipte. And  $\text{f}$  whole multitude of the children of Israel \* murmured agaynst Moses and Aaron in  $\text{f}$  wildernes, and saide vnto them: Wolde God we had dyed in the londe of Egipte by the hande of the LORDE, when we sat by  $\text{f}$  flesh pottes, and had bred ynough to eate: for ye haue brought vs out in to this wyldernes, to cause this whole multitude dye of hunger.

The sayde  $\text{f}$  LORDE vnto Moses: beholde I wyl rayne you bred from heauen, and let the people go out, and gather daylie, what they nede, that I maye proue whether they walke in my lawe or not. But vpon the sixte daye they shal prepare thē selues, that they maye brynge in twyse as moch as they gather daylie.

Moses and Aaron saide vnto all the children of Israel: At euen ye shall knowe, that the LORDE hath brought you out of the lode of Egipte, and in the mornynge shall ye se the glory of the LORDE: for he hath herde youre grudginges agaynst the LORDE. For what are we, that ye grudge agaynst vs?

\* Moses sayde morouer: At euen shall the LORDE geue you flesh to eate, and in the mornynge bred ynough: because  $\text{f}$  LORDE hath herde youre grudginges, that ye haue grudged agaynst him. For what are we? Your murmuringe is not agaynst vs, but against the LORDE. And Moses sayde vnto Aaron: Speake vnto the whole multitude of  $\text{f}$  children of Israel: Come forth before the LORDE, for he hath herde youre murmuringes.

C And whyle Aaron spake thus vnto the whole congregacion of the childrē of Israel, they turned them towarde the wyldernes: and beholde, the glory of the LORDE appeared in a cloude, and the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: I haue herde the murmuringe of  $\text{f}$  children of Israel. Tell them: At euen shall ye haue flesh to eate, and in the mornynge shal ye be fylled with bred,  $\alpha$  ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE youre God.

And at euen the quayles came vp, and couered the tentes: and in the mornynge the dewe laye rounde aboute the tentes. And whan the dew was fallē, beholde, there laye a thinge in the wildernes, thynne and small, as the horefrost vpon the grounde.

And whan the children of Israel sawe it, they saide one to another:† This is Mā. For they wyst not what it was. But Moses sayde vnto them: It is the bred that  $\text{f}$  LORDE hath geuē you to eate. This is it that  $\text{f}$  LORDE hath commaūded: Euery one gather for himself as moch as he eateth, and take a Gomor for euery heade, acordinge to the nombre of the soules in his tente.

And the children of Israel dyd so, and gathered some more, some lesse. But whan it was measured out with  $\text{f}$  Gomor, <sup>b</sup> be that gathered moch, had not the more: and he  $\text{f}$  gathered litle, wanted nothinge, but euery one gathered for himself, as moch as he ate. And Moses sayde vnto them: Let no mā leaue ought therof vntyll the mornynge. But they harkened not vnto Moses. And some left of it vntill the mornynge. Then waxed it full of wormes and stanke. And Moses was angrie at them.

And euery mornynge they gathered for them selues, as moch as euery one ate: but as soone as it was whote of the Sonne, it melted awaye. And vpon the sixte daye they gathered twyse as moch of bred, two Gomors for one. And all the rulers of the congregaciō came in, and tolde Moses. And he sayde vnto them: This is it, that the LORDE hath sayde: Tomorrow is the Sabbath of the holy rest of the LORDE: loke what ye wil bake, that bake: and what ye wyl seeth, that seeth and that remayneth ouer, let it remayne,  $\text{f}$  it maye be kepte vntyll the mornynge. And they let it remayne tyll the morow, as Moses commaūded. Then stanke it not, nether was there eny worne therein. Thē sayde Moses: Eate that to daye, for to daye is  $\text{f}$  Sabbath of the LORDE, to daye shal ye fynde none in the felde. Sixe dayes shal ye gather it, but the seuenth daye is the Sabbath, wherein there shal be none.

But vpon the seuenth daye there wente out some of the people to gather, and founde nothinge. Then sayde  $\hat{y}$  LORDE vnto Moses: "How longe refuse ye to kepe my commaundementes and lawes? Beholde,  $\hat{y}$  LORDE hath geuen you the Sabbath, therefore vpon the sixte daye he geueth you bred for two dayes: therefore let euery man now byde at home, and noman go forth of his place vpon the seuenth daye.

$\hat{J}$  So the people rested  $\hat{v}\hat{p}\hat{o}$   $\hat{y}$  seuenth daye. And the house of Israel called it Man, and it was like Coriander sede, and whyte,  $\tau$  had a taist like symnels with hony.

And Moses sayde: This is it that  $\hat{y}$  LORDE hath commaunded: Fill a Gomor therof to be kepte for youre posterities,  $\hat{y}$  they maye se the bred, wherwith I fed you, whan I brought you out of  $\hat{y}$  lande of Egipte. And Moses sayde vnto Aaron: Take a cruse, and put a Gomor full of Man therin,  $\tau$  laye it vp before the LORDE, to be kepte for youre posterities, as the LORDE commaunded Moses. So Aaron layed it vp there for a testimony to be kepte.

$\hat{d}$  And the children of Israel ate man fourtye yeaes, tyll they came vnto a lande, where people dwelt: euen vntyll they came to  $\hat{y}$  borders of the lande of Canaan ate they Man. A Gomor is the tenth parte of an Ephā.

The xviij. Chapter.

$\hat{A}$  ND the whole multitude of the children of Israel wete on their iourneys out of the wyldernes of Sin (as the LORDE cōmaunded thē)  $\tau$  pitched in Raphidim. "Then had the people no water to drynke. And they chode with Moses,  $\tau$  sayde: Geue vs water,  $\hat{y}$  we maye drynke. Moses sayde vnto thē: Why chydye ye with me? Wherefore tēpte ye  $\hat{y}$  LORDE? But whan the people thyrsted there for water, they murinured agaynst Moses,  $\tau$  sayde:  $\hat{J}$  Wherefore hast thou caused vs to come out of Egipte? to let vs, oure children, and oure catell dye of honger?

$\hat{J}$  Moses cried vnto the LORDE, and sayde: What shal I do with this people? They are had sent backe to stone me. The LORDE saide vnto him: Go before the people,  $\tau$  take some of the elders of Israel with  $\hat{y}$ , and take in thine hande thy staff, wherwith thou smotest the water, and go thy waye: Beholde,  $\hat{I}$  wyl stonde there before the vpon a rock in Horeb, there shalt thou smyte the rocke, so shall there water runne out, that the people maye drynke. Moses dyd so before the elders of Israel. "Then was that place called Massa Meriba, because of the chydyinge of the children of Israel, and because they tempted  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, and sayde: Is the LORDE amonge vs, or not?

Then came Ameleck,  $\tau$  fought agaynst Israel in Raphidim. And Moses sayde vnto Iosua: Chose vs out men, go out,  $\tau$  fight against Amaleck, tomorow wil I stōde  $\hat{v}\hat{p}\hat{o}$  the toppe of the hyll,  $\tau$  haue  $\hat{y}$  staff of God in my hande. And Iosua dyd as Moses bade him,  $\tau$  fought agaynst Amalek. Moses  $\tau$  Aaron  $\tau$  Hur wente vp to  $\hat{y}$  toppe of the hyll. And whā Moses helde vp his hāde, Israel had the victory: "but whan he let downe his hande, Amalek had the victory.

But Moses hādes were heuy, therefore toke they a stone,  $\tau$  layed it vnder him, that he might syt vpon it. And Aaron  $\tau$  Hur stayed vp his hādes, the one vpon the one syde, and the other vpon  $\hat{y}$  other syde. So his handes were stedfast vnto  $\hat{y}$  Sonne wente downe. And Iosua discomfited Amalek,  $\tau$  his people thorow the edge of the swerde.

And  $\hat{y}$  LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Wryte this for a remēbraunce in a boke,  $\tau$  cōmytte it vnto  $\hat{y}$  eares of Iosua: "for I wyll rote out Amalek from vnder heauen, so that he shall nomore be remembered. And Moses buylded an altare vnto the LORDE, and called it: "The LORDE Nissi, for he sayde: The battayll of the LORDE shalbe agaynst Amalek thorow an hande vnder the defence of God from childe to chilles childe.

The xviij. Chapter.

$\hat{A}$  ND whan Iethro  $\hat{y}$  prest in Madian had done with Moses  $\tau$  his people of Israel, how  $\hat{y}$  the LORDE had brought Israel out of Egipte, he toke Zipora Moses wife, whom he had sent backe, with her two sonnes. The one was called Gerson, for he saide: "I am become a straunger in a straunge londe.

And the other was called Eliaser, for he sayde: The God of my fathers hath bene my helpe, and hath delyuered me from Pharaos swerde.

Now whā Iethro Moses father in lawe, and his sonnes and his wife came vnto him in the wyldernes by the mount of God, where he had pitched his tent, he sent worde vnto Moses: I Iethro thy father in lawe am come vnto the, and thy wife and both hir children with her. Then wente Moses forth to mete him, and dyd obeysaunce vnto him, and kyssed him. And whan they had saluted ech other, they wente in to the tente.

B Then Moses tolde his father in lawe all that the LORDE had done vnto Pharaao and the Egipcians for Israels sake, and all the traunyle that had happened them by ſ waye, and how the LORDE had delyuered them. Iethro reioysed ouer all ſ good that the LORDE had done for Israel, ſ he had delyuered them from the hāde of the Egipcians. And Iethro sayde: Prayed be the LORDE, which hath delyuered you from the hande of the Egipcians and of Pharaao, (and) that knoweth how to delyuer his people from the Egipcians hande. Now I knowe, that the LORDE is greater thē all goddes, because they dealt proudly with them. And Iethro toke brentofferynges, and offered vnto God. Then came Aaron and all ſ elders of Israel to eate bred with Moses father in lawe before God.

C On the next morow sat Moses to iudge the people, and the people stode rōude aboute Moses from the mornynge vntyll ſ euen. But whan his father in lawe sawe all that he dyd with the people, he sayde: What is this, that thou doest with the people? Wherefore syttest thou alone, and all ſ people stonde rounde aboute from the morninge vntyll the euen? Moses answered him: The people come to me, & axe counsell at God: for whan they haue eny thinge to do, they come vnto me, that I maye iudge betwixte euery one & his neighbour, and shewe them the statutes of God, and his lawes.

His father in lawe sayde vnto him: It is not well that thou doest. Thou weeriest thy self, and the people that is with the. This busynesse is to sore for the, thou canst not perfourme it alone. But herken vnto my voyce, I will geue the counsell, and God shall be with the. Be thou vnto the people to God warde, and brynge the causes before God, and prouide them with statutes and lawes, that thou mayest shewe thē the waie wherin they shulde walke, and the workes that they shulde do.

But loke out amonge all the people, for honest men, that feare God, such as are true, & hate couetousnes: make these rulers ouer them, some ouer thousandes, ouer hundredes, ouer fiftie, and ouer ten, that they maye allwaye iudge the people. But where there is eny greate matter, that they brynge the same vnto the, and iudge the small causes them selues: so shall it be lighter for the, yf they beare the burthen with the. Yf thou shalt do this, then mayest thou endure the thinge that God chargeth the withall, and all this people maie go peaceably vnto their place.

B Moses herkened vnto the voyce of his father in lawe, and dyd all that he sayde. And he chose honest men out of all Israel, and made them heades ouer the people, some ouer thousandes, ouer hundredes, ouer fiftie, and ouer ten, that they might allwaye iudge the people. As for such causes as were herde, they brought them vnto Moses, and iudged the small matters them selues. So Moses let his father in lawe departe in to his owne londe.

The xix. Chapter.

IN the thirde moneth after that the children of Israel were gone out of the londe of Egipte, they came the same daye in to the wyldernes of Sinai (for they were departed from Raphidim, and wolde in to the wyldernes of Sinai) and there they pitched in the wyldernes ouer against the mounte. And Moses wente vp vnto God.

A And the LORDE called vnto him out of the mount, and sayde: Thus shalt thou saye vnto the house of Iacob, and tell the children of Israel: Ye haue sene what I haue done vnto the Egipcians, and how I haue borne you vpon Eagles wynges, & brought you vnto my self. Yf ye wyll harken now vnto my voyce, and kepe my couenaunt, ye shal be myne owne before all people: for the whole earth is myne: and ye shall be vnto me a presterly kingdome, and an holy people. And Moses tolde the wordes of the people vnto the LORDE agayne. And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, I wyll come vnto the in a thicke cloude, that the people maye heare my wordes, which I speake vnto the, and beleue the for euer. And Moses shewed the wordes of the people vnto the LORDE.

The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Go vnto the people, and sanctifie thē to daye and to-morrow, ŷ they maye wash their clothes, and be ready agaynst the thirde daye: for vpon the thirde daye shall the LORDE come downe vpon mount Sinai before all the people. And set markes rounde aboute the people, and saye vnto them: Bewarre, that ye go not vp in to ŷ mount, ner touch ŷ border of it. † For who so euer toucheth ŷ moūt, shal dye ŷ death. There shal no hāde touch it, but he shall either be stoned, or shot thorow: whether it be beest or man, it shal not lyue. When the horne bloweth, then shal they come vp vnto the mounte.

C Moses wente downe from the mount vnto the people, and sanctified them. And they waszshed their clothes. And he sayde vnto them: Be ready agaynst the thirde daye, and no man come at his wife.

Now when the thirde daye came (and it was early) it beganne to thonder and lighten, and there was a thicke cloude vpon the mount, and a noyse of a trompet exceedinge mightie. And the people that were in the tentes, were afrayde. *And Moses brought the people out of the tentes to mete with God, and they stode vnder the mount.

But all mount Sinai smoked, because ŷ LORDE came downe vpō it with fyre. And the smoke therof wente vp as the smoke of a fornace, so that the whole mount was exceedinge terrible. And the noyse of the trompet wete out, and was mightie. Moses spake, ¶ God answered him loude. Now when the LORDE was come downe vpon mount Sinai, euen vpon the toppe of it, he called Moses

The rulers also that come nye vnto ŷ LORDE, shal sanctifie them selues, lest the LORDE smyte thē. But Moses sayde vnto the LORDE: The people can not come vp vpon mount Sinai, for thou hast charged vs, ¶ sayde: Set markes aboute the mount, and sanctifie it.

The LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye, get ŷ downe. Thou and Aaron with the shalt come vp: but the rulers and ŷ people shal not preasse to come vp vnto ŷ LORDE, lest he smyte thē. And Moses wente downe to the people, and tolde them.

Thou shalt make staues also for the altare, of Fyrr tre, ouer layed with golde, and shalt put the staues in the rynges, that the staues maye be on both the sydes of  $\hat{y}$  altare, to beare it withall. And holowe with bordes shalt thou make it, like as it is shewed in the mount.

B And to  $\hat{y}$  habitacion thou shalt make a courtte, an hangyng of whyte twyned sylke: vpō  $\hat{y}$  one syde an C. cubytes lōge toward the south,  $\tau$  xx. pilers vpon xx. brasen sokettes,  $\tau$  the knoppes with their whopes of syluer. Likewise vpon  $\hat{y}$  north syde there shal be an hanginge of an C. cubytes lōge, twenty pilers vpon twenty brasen sokettes, and their knoppes with their whopes of syluer.

But vpon the west syde the bredth of  $\hat{y}$  courtte shal haue an hanginge of fiftie cubites longe,  $\tau$  ten pilers vpon ten sokettes. Vpō the east syde also shal the bredth of the courtte haue fiftie cubytes, so that the hangyng haue vpon one syde fyftene cubites, and thre pilers vpō thre sokettes: And vpon  $\hat{y}$  other syde fiftene cubytes also, and thre pilers vpō thre sokettes.

C And in the courtte gate there shalbe an hangyng twenty cubytes brode, of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, and whyte twyned sylke, wrought with nedle worke, and foure pilers vpon their foure sokettes. All the pilers rounde aboute the courtte shall haue syluer whopes,  $\tau$  syluer knoppes,  $\tau$  sokettes of brasse. And the length of  $\hat{y}$  courtte shal be an hūdreth cubytes, the bredth fiftie cubytes, the heygth fyue cubytes, of whyte twyned sylke and  $\hat{y}$  sokettes therof shalbe of brasse. All  $\hat{y}$  vessels also of the habitacion to all maner seruyce, and all the nales of it, and all the nales of the courtte shalbe of brasse.

Commaunde  $\hat{y}$  children of Israel, "  $\hat{y}$  they bringe vnto  $\hat{y}$  the most cleare  $\tau$  pure oyle oliue beaten, to geue lighte,  $\hat{y}$  it maye all waye be put in the lāpes in the Tabernacle of wytnes without the vayle, that hangeth before the wytnesse. And Aarō and his sonnes shal dresse it from the euenyng vntyll  $\hat{y}$  mornyng before the LORDE. This shalbe vnto you a perpetuall custome for youre posterities amonge the children of Israel.

The xxviiiij. Chapter.

A ND thou shalt take vnto the Aaron thy brother and his sonnes frō amonge the childrē of Israel, that he maye be my prest: namely Aaron  $\tau$  his sonnes Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar:  $\tau$  thou shalt make holy clothes for Aarō thy brother, honorable and glorious,  $\tau$  shalt speake vnto all them that are wise of hert, whom I haue fylled with the sprete of wiszdome, that they make garmentes to Aaron for his consecracion, that he maye be my prest.

These are  $\hat{y}$  garmentes which they shal make: a brestlappe, an ouerbody cote, a tuncycle, an albe, a myter and a girdell. Thus shal they make holy garmentes for thy brother Aarō and his sonnes, that he maye be my prest. They shal take therto golde, yalow silke, scarlet, purple, and whyte sylke.

B The ouerbody cote shal they make of golde, yalow sylke, scarlet, purple,  $\tau$  whyte twyned sylke of broderd worke, that it maye be festened together vpon both the sydes by  $\hat{y}$  edges therof. And his gyrnell vpō it shall be of  $\hat{y}$  same workmāshippe  $\tau$  stuff, euen of golde yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, & whyte twyned sylke. And thou shalt take two Onix stones, and graue in them the names of the children of Israel. Syxe names vpon the one stone, and the sixe other names vpon the other stone accordinge to the order of their age. This shalt thou do by the stonegrauers that graue signettes, so that y stones with the names of the children of Israel to be set rounde aboute with golde: and thou shalt put them vpon the two shulders of the ouer body cote, that they maye be stones of remembrance for the children of Israel, that Aaron maye beare their names vpon both his shulders before the LORDE for a remembrance.

C Thou shalt make hokes of golde also, and two wrethē cheynes of pure golde, and shalt fasten them vnto the hokes.

The brestlappe of iudgment shalt thou make of broderd worke, euen after the worke of the ouerbody cote: of golde, yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, and whyte twyned sylke. Foure square shall it be and dubble, an hande bredth longe, and an handebredth brode. And thou shalt fill it with foure rowes full of stones. Let the first rowe be a Sardis, a Topas, and a Smaragde. The seconde: a Ruby, a Saphyre, and a Dyamonde. The thirde: a Ligurius, an Achatt, and an Ametyst. The fourth: a Turcas, an Onix, and a Iaspis. In golde shall they be sett in all the rowes, and shal stonde accordinge to y twolue names of the children of Israel, grauen of the stonegrauers, euery one with his name accordinge to the twolue trybes.

D And vpon the brestlappe thou shalt make wrethen cheynes by y corners of pure golde, and two golde rynges, so, that thou fastē the same two rynges vnto two edges of the brestlappe, and put the two wrethē cheynes of golde in the same two rynges, that are in two edges of the brestlappe. But the two endes of y two wrethen cheynes shalt thou fasten in the two hokes vpon the ouerbody cote one ouer agaynst another.

And thou shalt make two other rynges of golde, and fasten them vnto y other two edges of y brestlappe, namely to y borders therof, wherwith it maye hange on the ynsyde vpon the ouerbody cote. And yet shalt thou make two rynges of golde, and fasten them vpon the two edges beneth to the ouerbody cote, vpon the outsyde one ouer agaynst another, where the ouerbody cote ioyneth together. And the brestlappe shall be fastened by his rynges vnto the rynges of the ouerbody cote with a yalow lace, that it maye lye close vpon the ouerbody cote, and that the brestlappe be not lowsed from the ouerbody cote.

Thus shall Aaron beare the names of the children of Israel in y brestlappe of iudgment vpon his hert, whan he goeth in to the Sanctuary, for a remembrance before the LORDE allwaye. And in the brestlappe of iudgment thou shalt put * light and perfectnesse, that they be vpon Aarōs hert, whan he goeth in before the LORDE, and that he maye beare the iudgment of the children of Israel vpon his hert before the LORDE allwaye.

F Thou shalt make the tunykle also to the ouerbody cote all of yalow sylke, and aboue in the myddest there shal be an hole, and a bonde folden together rounde aboute the hole, that it rente not. And beneth vpon the hemme thou shalt make pomgranates of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple rounde aboute, and belles of golde betwixte the same rounde aboute: that there be euer a golden bell and a pomgranate, a golden bell and a pomgranate* rounde aboute the hemme of the same tunycke. And Aaron shall haue it vpon him whā he mynistreth, that the soude therof maye be herde, whan he goeth out and in at the Sanctuary before the LORDE, that he dye not.

Thou shalt make a foreheade plate also of pure golde, and graue therin (after the workmanshipe of the stone grauer): the holynes of the LORDE, & with a yalow lace shalt thou fasten it vnto the fore front of the myter vpon Aarons fore heade, y Aaron maie so beare y synne of the holy thinges, which the childrē of Israel halowe in all their giftes and Sanctuary. And it shall be allwaye vpon his fore heade, that he maye reconcyle them before the LORDE.

G Thou shalt make an albe also of whyte sylke, and a myter of whyte sylke, and a gyrdle of needle worke.

And for Aarons sonnes thou shalt make cotes, gyrdles and bonetes, honorable and glorious, and shalt put them vpon thy brother Aaron and his sonnes, and shalt anoynte them, and fyll their handes, and consecrate them, that they maye be my prestes. And thou shalt make them linnen breches, to couer the flesh of their preuities, from the loynes vnto the thyes. And Aaron and his sonnes shall haue them on, whan they go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, or go vnto the altare to mynister in the Holy, that they beare not their synne, and dye. This shalbe a perpetual custome for him, and his sede after him.

The xxij. Chapter.

THIS is it also, that thou shalt do vnto them, that they maye be consecrated prestes vnto me. <sup>a</sup>Take a yonge bullocke, and two rammes without blemish, vneleuened bred, <sup>q</sup>vneleuened cakes myxte with oyle, and wafers of swete bred tempered with oyle: Of wheate floure shalt thou make them all, and put them in a maunde, <sup>r</sup>brynge them in the maunde, with the bullocke <sup>r</sup>two rammes.

And thou shalt fylle the hādes of Aaron and his sonnes, and brynge forth the bullocke before the Tabernacle of wytnesse. *And Aaron and his sonnes shall laye their hādes vpon the heade of the bullocke, and thou shalt sley the bullocke before the LORDE, at the dore of the tabernacle of wytnesse, and shalt take of his bloude, and put it vpon the hornes of the altare with thy fynger, and poure all the other bloude vpon the botome of the altare.

<sup>b</sup>And thou shalt take all the fat that couereth the bowels and the nett vpon the leuer, and the two kydneyes with the fat that is aboute them, and burne them vpon the altare. But the bullockes flesh, skynne and donge, shalt thou burne with fyre without the hoost: for it is a synneofferynge.

The one ramme shalt thou take also, and Aaron with his sonnes shall laye their handes vpon his heade. Then shalt thou sleye him, and take of his bloude, and sprenkle it vpon the altare rounde aboute. But the ramme shalt thou deuyde in peces, and wash his bowels and his legges, and laye them vpon the peces and the heade, and burne the whole ramme vpon the altare: for it is a burnt-offerynge, and a swete sauoure of the sacrifice vnto the LORDE.

And the holy garmentes of Aaron shall his sonnes haue after him, that they maie be anoynted therin, ⁊ ⁊ their handes maye be fylled. * Loke which of his sonnes shalbe prest in his steade, the same shal put them on seuē dayes, that he maye go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, to mynister in the Sanctuary.

f But the ramme of consecration shalt thou take, ⁊ seeth his flesh in an holy place. And Aaron with his sonnes shal eate the flesh of the same ramme with the bred in the maunde, at the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse: for there is an attonement made therewith, to fylle their handes, that they maye be consecrated. A straüger shal not eate thereof, for it is holy.

But yf eny of the flesh of the consecration, and of the bred remaine vntyll the mornyng, thou shalt burne it with fyre, and not let it be eaten, for it is holy. And thus shalt thou do with Aaron and his sonnes all that I haue commaunded ⁊. Seuen dayes shalt thou fylle their handes, and offer a bullocke daylie for a synne offeringe, because of them ⁊ shalbe reconciled. And thou shalt halowe the altare, whan thou reconceylest it: ⁊ shalt anoynte it, that it maye be consecrated. Seuen dayes shalt thou reconceyle the altare, ⁊ consecrate it, that it maye be an altare of the Most holy. Who so wyll touch the altare, must be consecrated.

6 And this shalt thou do with the altare: * Two lambes of one yere olde shalt thou offer euery daye vpon it: the one lambe in the mornyng, and the other at euen. And to one lambe a tenth deale of wheate floure, mēgled with ⁊ fourth parte of an Hin of beaten oyle, and ⁊ fourth parte of an Hin of wine for a drynk offeringe. With the other lambe at euen shalt thou do like as with ⁊ meate offeringe and drynk offeringe in the mornyng, for a swete sauoure of sacrifice vnto ⁊ LORDE. This is the daylie burnt-offerynge amonge youre posterities, at the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse before the LORDE, * where I will proteste vnto you, and talke with the. There wil I proteste vnto the children of Israel, and be sanctified in my glory, and wyl halowe the Tabernacle of wytnes and the altare, and consecrate Aarō and his sonnes, to be my prestes. * And I wyl dwell amonge the children of Israel, ⁊ wyll be their God: so ⁊ they shal knowe, how that I am the LORDE their God, which brought them out of the londe of Egipte, that I might dwell amonge them, euen I the LORDE their God.

The xxx. Chapter.

THOU shalt make also an incense altare a to burne incense, of Fyrr tre, a cubyte longe ⁊ brode, eauen foure squared, and two cubytes hye with his hornes, ⁊ shalt ouerlaye it with pure golde, the rose ⁊ the walles of it rounde aboute, and the hornes therof, ⁊ a crowne of golde shalt thou make rounde aboute it, and two golde rynges on ether syde vnder the crowne, that there maie be staues put therin, to beare it with all.

The staues shalt thou make of Fyrr tre also, and ouerlaye thē with golde: and shalt set it before the wayle, that hangeth before the Arke of wytnesse, and before the Mercy seate ⁊ is vpon the wytnesse, from whence I wyl proteste vnto the. And Aaron shal burne swete incense thereon euery mornyng, whā he dresseth the lampes. In like maner whan he lighteth the lampes at euen, he shall burne soch incense also. This shal be the daylie incense before the LORDE amonge youre posterities.

* Ye shall put no straunge incense therin, ⁊ offer no burnt-offerynge, ner meat-offerynge, nether drynk-offerynge thereon. And * vpon ⁊ hornes of it shall Aaron reconceyle once in a yere, with ⁊ bloude of the synne-offerynge, which they shall offer that are reconceyled. This shal be done amonge youre posterities for this is the most holy vnto the LORDE.

⁊ And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Whan thou nombrest the heades of the children of Israel, then shal euery one geue vnto the LORDE the reconcylinge of his soule, ⁊ there happē not a plage vnto them, whan they are nombred. Euery one that is tolde in the nombre, shall geue half a Sycle, after the Sycle of the Sanctuary: * one Sycle is worth twentye Geras. This half Sycle shal be ⁊ LORDES Heue offeringe. C And this money of recoilinge shalt thou take of the children of Israel, & put it to the Gods seruyce of the Tabernacle of wytnes, that it maye be a remembraunce vnto the children of Israel before the LORDE, that he maye let himself be reconcyled ouer their soules.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: "Thou shalt make a brassen lauer also with a fote of brasse to wash, and shalt set it betwixte the Tabernacle of wytnesse and ſy altare, and put water therin, that Aarō and his sonnes maye wash their handes and fete therout, when they go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, or to the altare, to mynistrer vnto the LORDE with offeringe incense, ſy they dye not. Thou shalt anoynte Aaron also, and his sonnes, and consecrate them to be my prestes.

And thou shalt speake vnto the childrē of Israel, and saye: This oyle shalbe an holy oyntment vnto me amonge youre posterities: It shal not be poured vpon mans body, nether shalt thou make eny soch like it, for it is holy: therefore shal it be holy vnto you. Who so maketh eny soch like, or geueth a strainger therof, the same shalbe roted out from amonge his people.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Take vnto the spyces: Balme, Stacte, Galban, and pure franckencense, of one as moch as of another, and make incense therof (after the craft of the Apotecary) myngled together, that it maye be pure & holy. And thou shalt beate it to poulder, and shalt put of the same before the wytnesse in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, from whence I wyll proteste vnto the, but it shalbe holy vnto the for the LORDE. Who so maketh soch to cense therwith, shalbe roted out from amonge his people.

The xxxi. Chapter.

A ND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, & A saide: "I haue called by name Bezaleel the sonne of Vri ſy sonne of Hur, of ſy trybe of Iuda, * and haue fylled him with ſy sprete of God, with wysdome and vnderstōdyng and knowlege, and to worke with all maner of connyng worke, in golde, syluer, brasse, to graue stones connyngly, and to set them, to carue well in tymbre, and to make all maner worke. And beholde, I haue geuen him Ahaliab the sonne of Ahisamach of the trybe of Dan, to be his companion, and haue geuen wysdome in to the hertes of all that are wyse, that they shall make all that I haue commaunded the: the Tabernacle of wytnesse, " the Arke of wytnesse, the Mercyseate theron, and all the ornamentes of ſy Tabernacle: the table and his apparell, the candilstick and all his apparell, the altare of incense, the altare of burntofferings with all his apparell, the lauer with his fote, the mynistryng vestimentes of Aaron ſy prest, and the garmentes of his sonnes to serue like prestes, the anoyntinge oyle, and the incēse of spyces for ſy Sāctuary. All that I haue commaunded the, shal they make.

C And the LORDE talked vnto Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, and saye: "Kepe my Sabbath, for it is a token betwene me and you, and youre posterities, that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE which haloweth you: therefore kepe my Sabbath, for it shalbe holy vnto you. † Who so vnhaloweth it, shall dye the death: For who so doth eny worke therin, shalbe roted out from amonge his people.

The xxxij. Chapter.

BUT when the people sawe that Moses made lōge taryenge to come downe frō the mount, they gathered thē together agaynst Aaron, & sayde vnto him: <sup>b</sup> Vp, and make vs goddes, to go before vs, for we can not tell what is become of this man Moses, that brought vs out of Egipte. Aaron sayde vnto them: <sup>c</sup> Plucke of the golden earynges from the eares of youre wyues, of youre sonnes, & of youre daughters, & brynge them vnto me. Then all the people pluckte of their golden earynges from their eares, & brought them vnto Aaron. And he toke them of their handes, & fashioned it with a grauer. <sup>d</sup> And they made a molten calfe, and sayde: These are thy goddes (O Israel) that brought the out of the lande of Egipte.

Whan Aaron sawe that, he buylded an altare before him, and caused it be proclaimed, and sayde: Tomorrow is the LORDES feast. And they arose vp early in the mornynge, and offred burntofferynge, and brought dead-offerynges also: <sup>e</sup> Then the people sat them downe to eate and drynke, & rose vp to playe.

But the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Go get the downe, for thy people whom thou broughtest out of the lande of Egipte, haue marred all: they are soone gone out of the waie, which I commaunded them. They haue made them a molten calfe, and haue worshipped it, & offred vnto it, & sayde: † These are thy goddes (O Israel) that brought the out of the lande of Egipte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: I se, <sup>f</sup> that it is a styffnecked people, and now suffre me, that my wrath maye waxe whote ouer them, & that I maye consume them, so wil I make a greate people of the.

But Moses be sought the LORDE his God, & sayde: Oh LORDE, wherfore wil thy wrath waxe whote ouer thy people, whom thou hast brought out of the lōde of Egipte with greate power & a mightie hāde? Wherfore shulde the Egipcians speake, & saye: He hath brought thē for their myschefe, to slaye them in the mountaynes, and to destroye thē vtterly from the earth? O turne the from the fearenesse of thy wrath, & be gracious ouer the wickednesse of thy people. Remembre thy seruātes Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, vnto whō † thou swarest by thyne owne self, and saydest: I wil multiplie youre sede as the starres of heauen, and all the lande that I haue promysed you, wil I geue vnto youre sede, & they shall inheret it for euer. Thus the LORDE repented of the euell, which he sayde he wolde do vnto his people.

Moses turned him, & wente downe from the mount, and in his hande he had the two tables of wytnesse, which were wryttē vpon both the sydes, and were Gods worke, & the wrytinge was the wrytinge of God therin. Now whan Iosua herde the noyse of ȝ people, as they shouted, he sayde vnto Moses: This is a noyse of warre in the hoost. He answered: It is not a noyse of them that haue the victory, and of them that haue the worse, but I heare a noyse of synginge at a daunse.

Whan he came nye vnto the hoost, and sawe the calfe, and the daunsynge, <sup>g</sup> he was moued with wrath, and cast the tables out of his hande, and brake them beneath the mount. <sup>h</sup> And he toke the calfe that they had made, and brent it with fyre, and stamped it vnto poulder, and strowed it in the water, & gaue it vnto the children of Israel to drynke, & sayde vnto Aaron: What dyd this people vnto the, that thou hast brought so greate a synne vpon them?

a wicked people. They sayde vnto me: Make vs goddes to go before vs, for we can not tell what is become of this man Moses, <sup>y</sup> brought vs out of the londe of Egipte. I sayde vnto them: Who so hath golde, let him plucke it of, and geue it me: and I cast it in the fyre, therof came this calfe.

F Now whan Moses sawe, that the people were naked (for Aaron, whan he set them vp, made them naked to their shame) he wote in to the gate of the hoost, and sayde: who so belongeth vnto the LORDE, let him come hither vnto me. Then all the children of Leui gathered them selues vnto him, and he sayde vnto them: Thus sayeth the LORDE, the God of Israel: Euery man put his swerde by his syde, and go thorow in and out from one gate to another in the hoost, and slaye euery man his brother, frende, & neighbour.

The children of Leui dyd, as Moses sayde vnto them. And there fell of the people the same daye thre thousande men. The sayde Moses: Cōsecrate youre handes this daie vnto the LORDE, euery man vpon his sonne and brother, that the prayse maye be geuen ouer you this daye.

B On the morow Moses sayde vnto the people: Ye haue done a greate synne. Now I wil go vp vnto the LORDE, yf peraduenture I maye make an attonement for youre synnes.

Now whā Moses came agayne vnto <sup>y</sup> LORDE, he saide: Oh this people haue done a greate synne, & haue made them goddes of golde. * Now for geue them their synne: yf not, thē wye me out of thy boke, that thou hast wrytten. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: What? Him that synneth against me, wil I wye out of my boke. Go thou thy waye therfore, and brynge <sup>y</sup> people thither as I haue sayde vnto the, <sup>2</sup> Beholde, myne angell shall go before the. But in the daye of my visitacion I wyll vyset their synnes vpon them. So the LORDE played the people, because they made <sup>y</sup> calfe which Aaron made.

The xxxij. Chapter.

A THE LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Go, departe hence, thou and the people, whom thou hast brought out of the lande of Egipte, vnto <sup>y</sup> londe that I sware vnto Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, and sayde: <sup>6</sup> vnto thy sedde wil I geue it, <sup>7</sup> and I wyl sende an angell before the (and cast out the Cananites, Amorites, Hethites, Pheresites, Heuites and Iebusites) in to the londe that floweth with mylke and hony, for I wyll not go vp with the: <sup>8</sup> for thou art an hardnecked people, I might consume the by the waye. Whan the people herde this enell tydings, they sorowed, and no man put on his best rayment.

And <sup>y</sup> LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Speake vnto the children of Israel: Ye are a styf-necked people, I must once come sodenly vpon the, and make an ende of the. And now put of thy goodly aray from the, <sup>y</sup> I maie knowe what to do vnto the. So the children of Israel laied their goodly aray from thē, euen before the mount Horeb.

Moses toke the Tabernacle, & pitched it without afarre of from <sup>y</sup> hoost, and called it the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And who so euer wolde axe eny question at the LORDE, wente out vnto the Tabernacle of wytnesse before the hoost. And whan Moses wente out vnto the Tabernacle, all the people rose vp, and stode euery one in his tent dore, and loked after Moses, tyll he was gone in to the Tabernacle. ¶ And whan Moses entred in to the Tabernacle, the cloudy pyler came downe, and stode in the dore of the Tabernacle, and he talked with Moses. And all the people sawe the cloudy piler stonde in the dore of the Tabernacle, and rose vp, and worshipped, euery one in his tent dore.

He sayde: My presence shal go before the, there with wyll I lede the. But he sayde vnto him: Yf thy presence go not, then cary

AND the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Hew the two tables of stone,<sup>b</sup> like as  $\hat{y}$  first were, that I maye wryte in them the wordes,  $\hat{y}$  were in the first tables, which thou brakest: and be ready in the mornyng, that thou mayest come vp early vnto mount Sinai, and stonde me vpon the toppe of the mount. And let no man come vp with the, that there be no man sene thorow out all  $\hat{y}$  mount: and let nether shepe ner oxen fede before the mount.

And Moses hewed two tables of stone, like as the first were,  $\alpha$  arose early in the mornyng,  $\alpha$  wente vp vnto mount Sinai, as  $\hat{y}$  LORDE cōmaunded him,  $\alpha$  toke  $\hat{y}$  two tables of stone in his hāde. Thē came the LORDE downe in a cloude. And there he stepte vnto him,  $\alpha$  called vpō  $\hat{y}$  name of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE. And whan  $\hat{y}$  LORDE passed by before his face, he cryed: LORDE LORDE, God, mercifull  $\alpha$  gracious,<sup>c</sup>  $\alpha$  longe sufferinge, and of greате mercy and trueth, thou that kepest mercy in stoare for thousandes, and forgeuest wickednes, trespace and synne (before whom there is no man innocent)† thou that visitest the wickednesse of the fathers vpon  $\hat{y}$  children and childers children, vnto the thirde and fourth generacion.

And Moses bowed him self downe vnto the earth, and worshiped him, and saide: LORDE, yf I haue founde grace in thy sight, thē let the LORDE go with vs (for it is an hard necked people) that thou mayest haue mercy vpon oure wickednesses and synnes, and let vs be thyne inheritance.

And he sayde: Beholde, I make a couenaunt before all thy people,  $\alpha$  wil do wonders, such as haue not bene done in all londes, and amonge all people. ### The xxxv. Chapter.

AND Moses gathered all the cōgregacion A of  $\hat{y}$  childrē of Israel together, and sayde vnto them: This is it,  $\hat{y}$  the LORDE hath commaunded you to do: \*Sixe dayes shall ye worke, but the seuenth daye shall ye kepe holy: a Sabbath of the LORDES rest. Who so euer doeth eny worke therein, shall dye. Ye shal kyndle no fyre vpon the Sabbath daye in all youre dwellynges.

And Moses sayde vnto  $\hat{y}$  whole congregacion of the children of Israel: This is it, that the LORDE hath commaunded: 'Geue from amonge you Heue offerynges vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, so that euery one brynge the LORDES Heue offerynge with a fre hert: golde, syluer, brasse, yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, whyte sylke, and goates hayre, reed skynnes of rammes, doo skynnes, and Fyrre tre, oyle for the lampes, and spyes for the anoyntynge oyle and for swete incense. Onix stones, and stones to be set in  $\hat{y}$  ouerbody cote, and for the brestlappe.

And who so is wyse of hert amonge you, let B him come,  $\tau$  make what the LORDE hath commaunded: namely, the Habitation with the tent  $\tau$  couerynge therof, the rynges, bordes, barres, pilers  $\tau$  sokettes: The Arke with the stauēs therof, the Mercyseate  $\tau$  the vayle: the table with his stauēs  $\tau$  all his apparell:  $\tau$  the shewbred: The cādilstickē of light and his apparell, and his lampes,  $\tau$  the oyle for the lightes: The altare of incense with his stauēs: The anoyntynge oyle and spyes for incense: The hangynge before  $\hat{y}$  Tabernacle dore: The alter of burntofferynge with his brasen gredyron, stauēs and all his apparell: The lauer with his fote: The hanginges of the courte, with the pilers and sokettes therof,  $\tau$  the hangynge of the courte dore: The nales of the habitacion and of  $\hat{y}$  courte with their coardes: The mynistringe garmentes for the seruce in the Holy,  $\hat{y}$  holy vestimentes of Aaron the prest with the vestimentes of his sonnes for  $\hat{y}$  prestes office.

wolde of fre will, the same brought they for an Heue offerynge vnto the LORDE for þe worke of the Tabernacle of witness, and for all the seruyce therof, and for the holy vestimētes. Both men and women that were of a wyllinge hert, brought bracelettes, earynges, rynges and gyrdels, and all maner Jewels of golde: Euery man also brought golde for Waue offerynges vnto the LORDE.

And who so euer fōude by him yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, whyte sylke, goates hayre, reed skynnes of rāmes, and Doo skynnes, brought it. And who so euer houe up syluer and brasse, brought it for þe Heue offerynge vnto the LORDE. And who so euer founde Fyrre tre by him, brought it for all maner of worke of the Gods seruyce. And soch women as were wyse herted, spanne with their hādes, and brought their sponne worke of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, and whyte sylke. And soch women as had hye vnderstandinge in wysdome, spanne goates hayre.

As for þe prynces, they brought Onix stones, and set stones, for þe ouerbody coate, and for the brestlappe, and spyes, and oyle for þe lightes, and for the anoyntinge oyle, and for swete incense. Thus the children of Israel brought fre wyllinge offerynges, both man and wemē, for all maner of worke, that the LORDE had commaunded by Moses, to be made.

And Moses saide vnto the childrē of Israel: Beholde, þe LORDE hath called by name Bezaleel þe sonne of Vri, þe sonne of Hur of the trybe of Iuda, and hath fylled him with the sprete of God, that he maye haue wysdome, vnderstandinge, and knowlege for all maner of worke, to worke connyngly in golde, syluer and brasse, to graue precious stones and to set them, to carue in wodd, to make all maner of connynges workes, and hath geue instruction in his hert, both him and Ahaliab the sonne of Ahisamah of þe trybe of Dan. These hath he fylled with wysdome of hert, to make all maner of worke, to carue, to broder, to worke with nedle worke, with yalow sylke, scarlet, purple and whyte sylke, and with weeuynge to make all maner of worke, and to deuyse connynges workes.

The lxxvi. Chapter.

THEN wrought Bezaleel and Ahaliab and all the wyse herted men, vnto whom the LORDE had geuen wysdome and vnderstandinge to knowe, how they shulde make all maner worke for the seruyce of the Sanctuary, acordinge vnto all þe the LORDE commaunded. And Moses called for Bezaleel and Ahaliab, and all the wyse herted men, vnto whom the LORDE had geuen wysdome in their hertes, namely, all soch as wyllingly offred them selues there, and came to labour in the worke. And they receaued of Moses all the Heue offerynges, that the children of Israel had brought for the worke of the seruyce of the Sanctuary, that it might be made: and euery morninge brought they their willinge offerynges vnto him.

Then came all the wyse men wrought in the worke of the Sanctuary, euery one fro his worke that he made, and sayde vnto Moses: The people bryngeth to moch, more than nede is for the worke of this seruice, which the LORDE hath commaunded to make. The commaunded Moses, that it shulde be proclaimed thorow out the hoost: No man brynge more to the Heue offerynge of the Sanctuary. Then were the people forbydden to brynge: for there was stuff ynough for all maner of worke, that was to be made, and to moch.

So all the wyse herted men amonge them wrought in þe worke of the Habitation, made ten curtaynes of whyte twyned sylke, yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, with Cherubyns of broderd worke. The length of one curtayne was eight and twentye cubites, and the bredth foure cubites, and were all of one measure: and he coupled the curtaynes fyue and fyue together one to the other.

And made yalow loupes a longe by the edge of euery curtayne, where they shulde be coupled together: fiftie loupes vpon euery curtayne, wherby one might be coupled to another. And made fiftie buttons of golde, and with the buttons he coupled the curtaynes together one to the other, that it might be one couerynge.

And he made xj. curtaynes of goates hayre (for the tent ouer the habitation) of thirtie cubytes longe, and foure cubytes brode, all of one measure, and coupled fyue together by them selues, and sixe by them selues, and made fiftie loupes a longe by the edge of euery curtayne, wherby they might be coupled together, and made fiftie buttons of brasse, to couple the tent together withall. And made ouer the tent a couerynge of reed skynnes of rāmes, and ouer that a couerynge of Doo skynnes

B And made standinge bordes for the Habitation, of Fyrre tre, euery one ten cubytes longe, and a cubyte and a half brode, & two fete vnto euery one, wherby one might be ioyned to another: that on the south syde there stode twentye of the same bordes: and made fourty syluer sokettes there vnder, vnder euery borde two sokettes for his two fete. In like maner for the other syde of the Habitation towarde the north, he made twentye bordes also with fourty syluer sokettes, vnder euery borde two sokettes: But behynde the Habitation vpon the west syde, he made sixe bordes, and two other for the corners of the Habitation behynde, that either of them both might be ioyned with his corner borde from vnder vp, and aboue vpon the heade to come together with a clampe: so that there were eight bordes, and sixtene sokettes of syluer, vnder euery one two sokettes.

E And he made barres of Fyrre tre, fyue for the bordes vpon the one syde of the Habitation, and fyue vpon the other syde, and fyue behynde towarde the west: and made the barres to shute thorow the bordes, from the one ende to the other, and ouerlayde the bordes with golde. But their rynges made he of golde for the barres, and ouerlayde fy barres with golde.

And made Cherubyns vpon the hangynge with broderd worke, of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, & whyte twyned sylke. And made for the same, foure pilers of Fyrre tre, and ouerlayed them with golde, and their knoppes of golde, and cast foure sokettes of syluer for them.

And made an hanginge in the Tabernacle dore, of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, and whyte twyned sylke, of nedle worke, and fyue pilers therto with their knoppes (& ouerlayed their knoppes and whopes with golde) and fyue sokettes of brasse there to.

The xxxij. Chapter.

A ND Bezaleel made the Arke of Fyrre tre, two cubites and a half löge, a cubyte and a half brode, and a cubyte & a half hye, and ouerlayed it with fyne golde within and without, and made a crowne of golde vnto it rounde aboute, and cast for it foure rynges of golde to the foure corners of it, vpon euery syde two. And made staues of Fyrre tre, and ouerlayed the with golde, and put them in the rynges a longe by fy sydes of the Arke, to beare it withall.

And he made fy Mercyseate of pure golde two cubytes and a half longe, and a cubite and a half brode, & made two Cherubyns of fyne beaten golde vpon the two endes of the Mercyseate: One Cherub vpon the one ende, and the other Cherub vpon the other ende: and the Cherubyns spredde out their wynges aboue an hye, and couered fy Mercyseate ther with: and their faces stode one ouer against the other, and loked vnto the Mercyseate.

And he made fy table, of Fyrre tre, two cubytes longe, a cubyte brode, and a cubyte & a half hye, and ouerlayed it with fyne golde, and made therto a crowne of golde rounde aboute, and made vnto it an whoope of an hande bredth hye, and made a crowne of golde rounde aboute the whoope. And for it he cast foure golde rynges, & put them in the foure corners by the fete harde by the whoope, that the staues might be therin, to beare the table withall: & made the staues of Fyrre tre, and ouerlayed the with golde, to beare the staues withall. And the vessels vpon the table made he also of fyne golde: the disshes, spones, flat peces and pottes, to poure in and out withall.

And he made the candilstick of fyne beaten golde, where vpon was the shaft with braüches, cuppes, knoppes, & floures. Sixe braüches proceeded out of fy sydes therof, vpon either syde thre braüches: vpon euery braüch were thre cuppes like allmödes, with knoppes and floures. Vpon the candilstick self were foure cuppes with knoppes and floures, vnder euery two braüches a knoppe. The knoppes & braüches therof proceeded out of it, and were all one peece of fyne beaten golde. And he made the seven lampes with their snoffers & outquenchers of pure golde. Of an hüdreth weight of golde made he it, and all the apparell thereof.

He made also the altare of incense, of Fyrre tre, a cubyte longe and brode, eauen foure squared, and two cubytes hye with the hornes of it, and ouerlayed it with fyne golde, the toppe and the sydes of it rounde aboute, and the hornes therof, and made a crowne vnto it rounde aboute of pure golde, & two golde rynges vnder the crowne on both the sydes, to put the staues therin, and to beare it withall: but the staues made he of Fyrre tre, and ouerlayed them with golde.

The lxxviii. Chapter.

AND the altare of burntoffrynges made he of Fyrre tre, "fyue cubytes lōge & brode, eauen foure squared, & thre cubites hye. And made foure hornes, which proceeded out of the foure corners therof, and ouerlaid it with brasse. And he made all maner of vessels for the altare, cauldrons, shouels, basens, fleshokes, and colepannes all of brasse. And vnto the altare he made a brasen gredyron of net worke rounde aboute, from vnder vp vnto the myddest of the altare, & cast foure rynges in the foure corners of the brasen gredyron, for the staues: which he made of Fyrre tre, and ouerlaid them with brasse, and put them in the rynges by the sydes of the altare, to beare it withall, and made it holowe with bordes.

And he made the Lauer of brasse, & his fote also of brasse vpon the place of ſ hoost, that laye before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse.

B And he made the courte on ſ south syde: hangynges an hundreth cubytes longe, of whyte twyned sylke, with the twetye pilers therof, and twentye sokettes of brasse: but the knoppes and whoopes of syluer. In like maner vpon the north syde an hundreth cubytes with twentye pilers, and twentye sokettes of brasse, but their knoppes & whoopes of syluer. Vpon the west syde fiftie cubytes with ten pilers and tē sokettes, but their knoppes and whoopes of syluer. Vpon the East syde fiftie cubytes. Filtene cubytes vpon either syde of the courte dore, with thre pilers and thre sokettes: So that all the hanginges of the courte were of whyte twyned sylke, and the sokettes of the pilers were of brasse, & their knoppes and whoopes of syluer: their heades were ouerlaid with syluer, & all the pilers of the courte were whooped aboute with syluer.

C And the hangyng in ſ courte gate made he with nedle worke, of yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, & whyte twyned sylke, twentye cubytes longe, & fyue cubytes hye, after the measure of the hanginges of the courte: foure pilers also therto, & foure sokettes of brasse, and their knoppes of syluer, and their heades ouerlaid, and their whoopes of syluer. And all the nales of the Habitation and of the courte rounde aboute, were of brasse.

This is now the summe of the Habitation of wytnesse (which was counted at the commaundemēt of Moses to ſ Gods seruice of the Leuites vnder the hāde of Ithamar the sonne of Aaron the prest) which Bezaleel the sonne of Uri, the sonne of Hur of the trybe of Iuda made, all as the LORDE commaunded Moses. And with him Ahaliab ſ sonne of Ahisamach of the trybe of Dan, a connyng grauer, to worke nedle worke, with yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, & whyte sylke.

All the golde ſ was wrought in all this worke of the Sanctuary (which was geuen to the Waue offerynge) is nyne & twenty hūdreth weight, seuen hundreth & thirtie Sycles, after ſ Sycle of ſ Sanctuary. * The syluer ſ came of the congregacion, was fyue score hundreth weight, a thousande, seuen hundreth, fyue and seuentye Sycles, after ſ Sycle of the Sanctuary: so many heades so many half Sycles, after the Sycle of the Sanctuary, of all that were nombred from twentye yeaere olde and aboue, euen sixe hundreth thousande, thre thousande, fyue hundreth and fitye.

Of the fyue score hundreth weight of syluer, were cast the sokettes of the Sanctuary, and the sokettes of the vayle, an hūdreth sokettes of the fyue score hundreth weight, an hundreth weight to euery sokett. Of the thousande, seuen hundreth and fyue and seuentye Sycles were made the knoppes of the pilers (and their heades ouerlaid) and their whoopes.

As for the Waue offerynge of brasse, it was seuentye hundreth weight, two thousande and foure hundreth Sycles: Wherof were made the sokettes in the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the brasen altare, and the brasen gredyron therto, and all the vessels of the altare, and the sokettes of ſ courte rounde aboute, and the sokettes of ſ courte gate, all ſ nales of the Habitation, & all ſ nales of ſ courte rounde aboute.

The lxxix. Chapter.

OF the yalowe sylke, scarlet, & purple, they made Aarons mynistringe vestimentes, to do seruice in the Sanctuary, as ſ LORDE cōmaunded Moses.

And he made the ouer body cote, of golde, yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, & whyte twyned sylke, and bett the golde in to thinne plates, and cut it in to wyres, that it might be wrought amonge the yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple and whyte sylke, & made it so, that  $\text{f}$  ouerbody cote came together by the edges on both the sydes. And his gyrdel was after the same craft & worke: euē of golde, yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple and whyte twyned sylke, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

And they wrought two Onix stones, set rounde aboute with golde, grauen by the stone grauer with the names of the childrē of Israel: and fastened them vpō the shulders of the ouerbody cote, that they might be stones of remēbraunce vnto the children of Israel, as the LORDE cōmaunded Moses.

And they made the brestlappe after the craft & worke of the ouerbody cote: of golde, yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, & whyte twyned sylke, so that it was foure square & dubble, an hande bredth longe and brode, and fylled it with foure rowes of stones. The first rowe was: a Sardis, a Topas, and a Smaragde. The secōde: a Ruby, a Saphyre, and a Dya-monde. The thirde: a Ligurius, an Achat, and an Amatist. The fourth: a Turcas, an Onix & a Iaspis: closed rounde aboute with golde in all the rowes. And the stones stode after the twolue names of the children of Israel, grauen by the stone grauer, euery one with his name, accordinge to the twolue trybes.

And vpon the brestlappe they made wrythen cheynes of pure golde, and two hokes of golde, & two golde rynges, and fastened the two rynges vpon the two edges of the brestlappe: and  $\text{f}$  two wrythen cheynes put they in the two rynges vpon the corners of the brestlappe. But the two endes of  $\text{f}$  wrethen cheynes put they to the two hokes, & fastened them vpon the corners of the ouer body cote, one ouer agaynst another.

And they made two other rynges of golde, & fastened them to the other two corners of the brestlappe by the edge of it, that it might hange vpon the out syde of the ouerbody cote. And they made yet two other golde rynges, which they put beneth vpon the two corners of the ouerbody cote, one ouer agaynst another, where the ouerbody cote ioyneth together, that the brestlappe might be festened by his rynges vnto  $\text{f}$  rynges of the ouerbody cote with a yalowe lace, that it might lye close vpon  $\text{f}$  ouerbody cote, and not be lowsed from  $\text{f}$  ouerbody cote, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

And he made the tunycle vnto the ouerbody cote, wrought all of yalow sylke, & the hole therof aboue in the myddest, & a bonde foldē together rounde aboute the hole, that it shulde not rente. And beneth vpon  $\text{f}$  hemme of it, they made pomgranates of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, & whyte twyned sylke: & they made belles of pure golde, which they put betwixt  $\text{f}$  pomgranates rounde aboute vpon the hemme of the tunycle, a bell & a pomgranate, a bell & a pomgranate rounde aboute, to do seruyce in, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

And they made albes also wrought of whyte sylke for Aaron & his sonnes, &  $\text{f}$  myter of whyte sylke, and the goodly bonettes of whyte sylke, and breches of twyned whyte linnen, and the girdle of nedle worke euen of whyte twyned sylke, yalow sylke, scarlet, and purple, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

They made the fore heade plate also to  $\text{f}$  holy crowne, of pure golde, and wrote therein with grauen worke: the holynes of the LORDE, and festened a yalowe lace theron, to tye it vnto the myter aboue, as the LORDE cōmaunded Moses.

Thus the whole worke of  $\text{f}$  Habitation of  $\text{f}$  Tabernacle of wytnesse, was fynished. And the childrē of Israel dyd all that the LORDE cōmaunded Moses, & brought the Habitation vnto Moses: the Tabernacle & all the apparell therof, the buttons, bordes, barres, pilers, sokettes,  $\text{f}$  couerynge of reed skynnes of rammes, the couerynge of doo skynnes, & the vāyle,  $\text{f}$  Arke of wytnesse with the staues therof, the Mercyseate, the table & all his apparell, & the shewbred, the candilsticke, with the lampes prepared, and all his apparell, & oyle for the lightes, the golden altare, the anoyntinge oyle & incense, the hanginge in the Tabernacle dore, the brasen altare, & his brasen gredyron with his staues, & all his apparell,  $\text{f}$  lauer with his foote, the hangynges of  $\text{f}$  courte with the pilers & sokettes therof,  $\text{f}$  hanginge in the courte gate with his pilers & nales, & all the ordynance for the seruyce of the Habitation of  $\text{f}$  Tabernacle of wytnesse,  $\text{f}$  mynistringe vestimētes of Aarō  $\text{f}$  prest, to do seruyce in  $\text{f}$  Sanctuary, & the garmētes of his sonnes,  $\text{f}$  they might execute  $\text{f}$  prestes office. Accordinge to all that  $\text{f}$  LORDE cōmaunded Moses, euē so dyd the childrē of Israel in all this seruyce. And Moses sawe all  $\text{f}$  worke,  $\text{f}$  they dyd it euē as  $\text{f}$  LORDE had commaunded, and he blessed them.

The xl. Chapter.

AND  $\S$  LORDE spake vnto Moses,  $\tau$  sayde: In the fyrst daye of the first moneth shalt thou set vp  $\S$  Habitaciō of  $\S$  Tabernacle of wytnesse, and shal put the Arke of wytnes therin, and hange the vayle before  $\S$  Arke. And thou shalt bringe in the table, and garnish it, and brynge in the cādilstickes, and put the lampes theron. And  $\S$  goldē altare of incense shalt thou set before  $\S$  Arke of wytnesse,  $\tau$  hange vp the hanginge in the dore of the Habitaciō. But the altare of burntofferings shalt thou set before the dore of the Habitacion of the Tabernacle of wytnesse:  $\tau$  the lauer betwixte the Tabernacle of wytnesse and the altare, and put water therin,  $\tau$  set the courte rounde aboute, and hange vp the hanginge in the courte gate.

33 And thou shalt take the anyntyngē oyle, and anynte the Habitacion and all that is there in, \*and shalt consecrate it, and all  $\S$  apparell therof, that it maye be holy. And thou shalt anynte the altare of burntofferings and all his vessels, and consecrate it, that it maye be most holy. The lauer also  $\tau$  his fote shalt thou anynte  $\tau$  consecrate.

“And thou shalt brynge Aaron  $\tau$  his sonnes vnto the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and wash them with water,  $\tau$  put the holy vestimentes vpon Aaron, and anynte him, and consecrate him, that he maye be my prest. And thou shalt brynge his sonnes also, and put the albes vpon them, and anynte them, as thou hast anynted their father,  $\S$  they maye be my prestes. And this anyntyngē shall they haue for an euerlastinge presthode amonge their posterities. †And Moses dyd all as the LORDE cōmaunded him.

C \*Thus was the Tabernacle set vp in the seconde yeare vpon the first daye of the first moneth. And whan Moses reared it vp, he fastened  $\S$  sokettes and the bordes, and barres, and set vp the pilers, and spred out the tent ouer the Habitacion, and put the couerynge of the tent aboue an hye, as the LORDE commaunded him. And he toke the wytnesse, and layed it in the Arke, and put  $\S$  staues in the Arke, and set the Mercyseate aboue vpon the Arke, and brought the Arke in to the Habitacion, and hanged the vayle before the Arke of wytnesse, as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he set the table in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, in the corner of the Habitacion vpon the north syde without the vayle, and prepared bred theron before  $\S$  LORDE †as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he set in the candilstickes also, euen ouer agaynst the table, in the corner of the Habitacion vpon the south syde, and put the lampes theron before  $\S$  LORDE, as the LORDE commaunded him. And the golden altare set he in also before the vayle, and brent swete incense theron, as the LORDE commaunded him. And hanged vp the hanginge in the Tabernacle dore. As for the altare of burntofferings, he set it before the dore of the Habitacion of  $\S$  Tabernacle of wytnesse, and offred burntofferings and meate offeringes theron, as the LORDE commaunded him.

“And the Lauer set he betwixte the Tabernacle of wytnesse and  $\S$  altare, and put water therin to wash withall. And Moses, Aaron and his sonnes washed their hādes and fete ther at: for they ought to wash thē, whan they wente in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, or whan they wente vnto the altare, as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he set vp the courte rounde aboute the Habitacion and the altare, and hanged vp  $\S$  hanginge in  $\S$  courte gate. Thus Moses fynished the whole worke.

Then a cloude couered  $\S$  Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the glory of the LORDE fylled the Habitacion. And Moses coulde not go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, whyle the cloude abode theron, and the glory of  $\S$  LORDE fylled the Habitacion.

And whan the cloude remoued from the Habitacion, then wente the children of Israel forth, as oft as they toke their iourney. But yf the cloude remoued not, then toke not they their iourney, tyll the daie that it remoued: for in the daye tyme was the cloude of the LORDE vpon the Habitacion,  $\tau$  in the night season was fyre therin, in  $\S$  sight of all  $\S$  house of Israel, in all their iourneis.

The first Chapter.

AND the LORDE called Moses,* and spake vnto him out of ſ̄ Tabernacle of wytnesse, and sayde: Speake vnto ſ̄ childrē of Israel, & saie vnto them: Who so euer amōge you wyl brynge an offerynge vnto the LORDE, let him brynge it of ſ̄ catell, euen of the oxen, & of the shepe.

Yf he wyl brynge a burntofferynge of ſ̄ oxen (or greate catell) thē let him offre a male without blemish, before ſ̄ dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, to reconyle him self before the LORDE,† let him laye his hande vpon the heade of the burntofferynge, then shal he be reconcyed, so ſ̄ God shalbe mercifull vnto him.

And he shall kyll the yonge ox before ſ̄ LORDE: and ſ̄ prestes Aarons sonnes shal brynge the bloude, and sprenkle it rounde aboute vpon the altare, that is before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And the skynne shalbe flayne from of the burntofferynge, and it shalbe hewen in peces. And the sonnes of Aaron the prest shal make a fyre vpon the altare, and laye wod aboute theron: and ſ̄ peces, the heade, and the fatt shal they laye vpon the wodd that lyeth vpon ſ̄ fyre on the altare. But ſ̄ bowels & legges shal be waszhen with water, and the prest shal burne altogether vpon the altare for a burnt sacrifice:

this is an offerynge of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE.

Yf he wyl offre a burnt sacrifice of the small catell, that is, of the lambes or goates, then let him offre a male without a blemish. And he shall kyll it before the LORDE, euen at the corner of the altare on the north syde before ſ̄ LORDE. And (the prestes) Aarons sonnes shal sprenkle his bloude rounde aboute vpon ſ̄ altare, and it shal be hewen in peces. And the prest shall laye them with the heade and the fatt, vpon the wodd that lyeth vpon the fyre on the altare. But the bowels and ſ̄ legges shal be waszhen with water. And ſ̄ prest shal offre it altogether, and burne it vpon ſ̄ altare for a burnt sacrifice. This is an offerynge of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE.

But yf he wil offre a burnt sacrifice of ſ̄ foules vnto the LORDE, then let him offre it of the turtill doves or of ſ̄ yonge pigeons. And the prest shal brynge it vnto the altare, and wrynge the neck of it a sunder, that it maye be burnt vpon the altare, and let the bloude of it runne out vpon the sydes of the altare, and the crope of it with the fethers shalbe cast vpon the heape of aszshes besyde the altare toward the east, and he shall deuyde the wynges of it, but not breake thē cleane of. And thus shall the prest burne it vpon the altare, euen vpon the wodd that lyeth vpon the fyre, for a burnt sacrifice. This is an offerynge of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

WHAN a soule wyll offere a meatofferynge vnto the LORDE,* then shal it be of fyne flour, and he shal poure oyle vpon it, and put frankencense thereon, ⁊ so brynge it vnto Aarons sonnes the prestes. Then shal one of them take his handfull of the same flour, and oyle with all the frankencense, and burne it for a remembrance vpon the altare. This is an offeringe of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE. *As for † remnaunt of the meatofferynge, it shalbe Aarons and his sonnes. This shalbe ‡ most holy of the offeringes of the LORDE.

But yf he wyll brynge a meatofferynge of that which is baken in the oven, then let him take swete cakes of wheate, mixte with oyle, and vneleuened wafers anoynted with oyle. Neuertheles yf thy meatofferynge be eny thinge of that which is fryed in the panne, then shal it be of fyne swete flour mixte with oyle: And thou shalt cut it in peces, ⁊ poure oyle thereon: so is it a meatofferynge. But yf thy meatofferynge be ought broyled on the gredyron, then shalt thou make it of fyne flour with oyle. And the meatofferynge that thou wilt make of such thinges for the LORDE, shalt thou brynge vnto † prest, which shal brynge it vnto the altare, ⁊ shal Heue vp the same meatofferynge for a remembrance, and burne it vpon the altare. This is an offeringe of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE. As for the remnaunt, it shal be Aarons and his sonnes. This shal be the most holy of the offeringes of the LORDE.

All the meatofferynges that ye wil offere vnto the LORDE, shal ye make without leuē. For there shal no leuē nor hony be burnt for an offeringe vnto the LORDE. But for the offeringe of the firstlings shal ye offer the vnto the LORDE. Neuertheles they shal come vpon no altare for a swete sauoure.

All thy meatofferynges shalt thou † salt. And thy meatofferynge shal neuer be without ‡ salt of the couenaunt of thy God: for in all thy offeringes shalt thou offere salt.

But yf thou wilt offere a meatofferynge of the first frutes vnto † LORDE, then shalt thou drye that which is grene, by the fyre, ⁊ beate it small, and so offere the meatofferynge of thy first frutes. And thou shalt put oyle vpon it, and laye frankencense thereon, so is it a meatofferynge. And then shall the prest beate it, and burne of the oyle with all the frankencense for a remembrance. This is an offeringe vnto the LORDE.

The iij. Chapter.

BUT yf his offeringe be a deedofferynge A of greate catell (whether it be ox or cowe) then shal he offere such as is without blemish before the LORDE, ⁊ shal laie his hande vpon the heade of it, and kyll it before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And the prestes Aarons sonnes, shall sprenkle the bloude rounde aboute vpon the altare, and shal offere of † deedofferynge vnto the LORDE: namely, all the fat that is within, and the two kyndeyes with the fat that is thereon vpon the loynes, and the nett on the leuer vpō the kyndeyes also. And Aarons sonnes shal burne it vpon the altare for a burntofferynge, euen vpon the wod that lyeth on the fyre. This is an offeringe of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE.

Yf his deedofferynge be of small catell, B whether it be male or female, it shal be without blemish: Yf it be a lambe, then shall he brynge it before the LORDE, ⁊ shal laie his hande vpon the heade of it, and sleue it before the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And Aarons sonnes shal sprenkle his bloude rounde aboute vpon the altare, and so offere of the deedofferynge vnto the LORDE: namely, the fat of it, all the rompe with the backe, and the fat that couereth the bowels, with all † fat that is within, and the two kyndeyes with the fat that is thereon vpon the loynes, ⁊ the nett on the leuer vpon the kyndeyes also. And the prest shal burne it vpon the altare, for † meate of the offeringe vnto † LORDE.

But yf his offeringe be a goate, and bringeth C it before the LORDE, he shal laie his hande vpon the heade of it, and kyll it before the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And Aarons sonnes shal sprēkle the bloude rounde aboute vpō the altare, ⁊ shal offer therof a sacrifice vnto the LORDE: namely, the fat † couereth the bowels, and all the fat † is within, the two kyndeyes with the fat that is thereon vpon the loynes, ⁊ the net on the leuer vpon the kyndeyes. And the prest shal burne it vpō

The iij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, & sayde: Speake vnto the childrē of Israel, and saye: When a soule synneth thorow ignorance in any commaundemēt of the LORDE, which he ought not to do: As namely, yf a prest which is anoynted, synne, that he make the people do amysse, he shall brynge for †synne that he hath done, a yonge bullocke without blemyshe vnto the LORDE for a synofferynge. <sup>a</sup>And the bullocke shall he brynge to the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse before the LORDE, & laie his hāde vpō his heade, & kyll him before †LORDE. <sup>c</sup>And †prest †is anoynted, shal take of his bloude, & brynge it in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And he shall dyppe his fynger in to the bloude, & sprenkle therewith seū tymes before the LORDE, towards the vayle of †Holy. And he shal put of the same bloude vpon the hornes of the altare of incense, †stondeth before †LORDE in the Tabernacle of wytnesse: & all the bloude of the bullocke shal he poure vpon the botome of the altare of burntofferings, †stondeth at the entringe in of †Tabernacle of wytnesse. And all the fat of the synofferynge shal he Heue vp: namely, the fat †couereth the bowels, & all the fat †is within, †two kydneyes with the fatt that is theron vpon the loynes, and the net on the leuer vpon the kydneyes also (like as he Heueth it from the oxe in the dead-offerynge) and shall burne it vpon the altare of burntofferings. But the skyne of the bullocke, <sup>a</sup>and all the flesh, with the heade & legges, & the bōwels and the donge, shal he cary altogether out of the hoost, in to a cleane place, where †aszshes are poured out, & shal burne it vpon wodd with fyre.

done, they shal bringe a yonge bullocke for a synofferynge, and set him before †dore of †Tabernacle of wytnesse. And the Elders of the congegacion shall laye their handes vpon his heade before the LORDE, & kyll †bullocke before the LORDE. And †prest †is anoynted shal brynge of †bullockes bloude in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, & dyppe ther in with his fynger, and sprenkle therwith seuen tymes before the LORDE, euē before the vayle of the Holy. And shall put of the bloude vpon the hornes of the altare, †stondeth before the LORDE in the Tabernacle of wytnesse: & all †other bloude shal he poure vpō the botome of †altare of burnt-offerynges, †stondeth before the dore of †Tabernacle of wytnesse. But all his fatt shal he Heue vp, & burne it vpō the altare: & shal do with this bullocke, as he dyd with †bullocke of the synofferynge: Thus the prest shal make an attonement for them, & it shall be forgiven them. And the bullocke shall he brynge without the hoost, and burne him, as he brent †first bullocke. This shalbe †synofferynge of the congegacion.

Whā a soule of †comon people synneth ignorauntly, doinge eny thinge agaynst the cōmaundement of the LORDE, †he ought not to do, & so offendeth, & cometh to †knowledge of the synne †he hath done, he shal bringe for his offeringe a she goate without blemyshe, for the synne †he hath done, and shal laye his hande vpon the heade of the synofferynge, & slaye it in the place of the burntofferings. the bloude with his synger, ⁊ put it vpon the hornes of ſ̃ altare of burntofferynge, ⁊ poure all the bloude vpon the botome of the altare. But all the fat of it ſhal he take awaye, like as he taketh awaye the fat of the dead-offerynge, and ſhal burne it vpon the altare for a ſwete ſauoure vnto the LORDE. And ſo ſhal the preſt make an attonemēt for him, and it ſhal be forgeuen him.

But yf he brynge a lambe for a ſynofferynge, then let him brynge a female without blemiſh, and laye his hande vpon the heade of the ſynofferynge, ⁊ kyll it for a ſynofferynge, in the place where the burntofferyngeſ are ſlayne. And the preſt ſhal take of ſ̃ bloude with his ſynger, ⁊ put it vpon the hornes of the altare of burntofferyngeſ, ⁊ poure all the bloude vpon the botome of the altare. But all ſ̃ fatt therof ſhall he take frō it, like as he dyd the fat of the lambe of the healthofferynge, ⁊ ſhal burne it vpon ſ̃ altare for the LORDES ſacrifice. And ſo ſ̃ preſt ſhal make an attonement for the ſynne that he hath done, and it ſhalbe forgeuen him.

The b. Chapter.

WHAN a ſoule ſynneth, ⁊ ſ̃ he heare a curſynge, and is wytnes therof, or hath ſene it, or knowne it, ⁊ telleth it not,⁹ he is giltye of a trespae. Or whan a ſoule* toucheth eny vncleane thiſge, whether it be ſ̃ carion of an vncleane beaſt, or catell, or worme, ⁊ was not aware of it, he is vncleane, and hath offended. Or whan he toucheth an vncleane man (what vn clenneſſe ſo euer a man is defyled withall) ⁊ was not aware of it, ⁊ afterwarde cōmeth to ſ̃ knowlege therof, ſ̃ ſame hath offended. Or whan a ſoule ſweareth, ſo ſ̃ he pronounceth with his mouth to do euell or good (what ſo euer it be that a man pronounceth with an oath) ⁊ was not aware of it, ⁊ afterwarde cōmeth to the knowlege therof, he hath offended in one of theſe.

Now whan it ſo is, ſ̃ he hath offended in one of theſe, ⁊ is enſourmed therof, what he hath ſynned, he ſhal bringe vnto ſ̃ LORDE for his trespae of this his ſynne ſ̃ he hath done, a female from the flocke, either a yewe or a ſhe goate for a ſynofferynge: ſo ſhal the preſt make an attonement for him concernynge his ſynne. † But yf he be not able to brynge a ſhepe, then let him brynge vnto ſ̃ LORDE for his offence that he hath done, two turtill doues or two yonge pigeons: one for a ſynofferynge, the other for a burntofferynge, and brynge them to the preſt: Which ſhall make the firſt a ſynofferynge, and fyrſt wringe the neck of it, ſo that he plucke it not cleane of, and ſprenkle with the bloude vpon the ſydes of the altare, and let the reſyde of the bloude blede out vpon the botome of the altare: This is the ſynofferynge. As for the other, he ſhal make it a burntofferynge, after the maner therof. And thus ſhall the preſt make an attonement for him concernynge the ſynne that he hath done, ⁊ it ſhalbe forgeuen him. But yf he be not able to brynge two turtill doues or two yonge pigeons, then let him brynge his offerynge for his ſynne, a tenth deale of an Ephā of ſyne floure for a ſynofferynge. But he ſhall put no oyle thereon, ner laye frankēcenſe vpon it, for it is a ſynofferynge. And he ſhal brynge it vnto the preſt, ⁊ ſ̃ preſt ſhal take his hal full of it for a remembrance, and burne it vpon the altare for an offerynge vnto the LORDE. This is a ſynofferynge. And ſo ſhal the preſt make an attonement for him, concernynge his ſynne that he hath done, ⁊ it ſhalbe forgeuen him. And the remnaunt ſhall be the preſtes, like a meatofferynge.

And the LORDE ſpake vnto Moſes, ⁊ ſayde: Yf a ſoule trespae, ſo ſ̃ thorow ignoraunce he offendeth in any thing ſ̃ is halowed vnto the LORDE, he ſhal brynge his trespaeofferynge vnto the LORDE, euen a ramme from ſ̃ flocke without blemiſh, worth two Sycles of ſyluer, ‡ after the Sytle of the Sanctuary, for a trespae offerynge: and loke what he hath offended in the halowed thinge, he ſhall make reſtitucion, ⁊ geue the fifth parte more therto. And he ſhal delyuer it vnto ſ̃ preſt, which ſhall make an attonement for him with the ramme of the trespaeofferynge, ⁊ it ſhalbe forgeuen him.

Whan a ſoule ſynneth, and doth ought agaynſt eny cōmaundement of the LORDE, ſ̃ he ſhulde not do, ⁊ is inſourmed therof, he hath trespaſed, ⁊ is giltye of the ſynne. And he ſhall brynge from the flocke a ramme with out blemiſh (that is worth a trespaeofferynge) vnto the preſt, which ſhal make an attone-ment for him concernynge his ignoraunce which he dyd, and was not aware, and it shalbe forgeuen him. This is the trespac-offerynge, because he trespassed agaynst the LORDE.

¶ And ¶ LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Whan a soule synneth, & trespaceth agaynst the LORDE, so that he denyeth vnto his neyghboure that which he gaue him to kepe, or that was put vnder his hande, or that he hath violently taken awaye, or gotten vnrighteously, or founde that was lost, and denyeth it with a false ooth, what so euer it be, wherin a man synneth agaynst his neyghboure. Now whan it commeth so to passe, that he synneth after this maner, & trespaceth, he shal restore agayne that he toke violently awaye, or gat wrongeously, or that was geuen him to kepe, or that he hath founde, or what so euer it be aboute ¶ which he hath sworne falsely, he shal restore it agayne whole altogether, and geue the fifth parte more therto, euen to him that it belonged vnto, the same daye that he geueth his trespac-offerynge. But for his trespac he shall brynge for the LORDE (euen vnto the prest) a ramme from the flocke without blemyshe, that is worth a trespac-offerynge. Then shall the prest make an attonement for him before the LORDE, and all that he hath synned in, shalbe forgeuen him.

The vi. Chapter.

¶ AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Commaunde Aaron and his sonnes, and saye: This is the lawe of the burnt-offerynge. The burnt-offerynge shall burne vpon the altare all night vntyll the mornynge. But the fyre of the altare onely shal burne thereon. ¶ And ¶ prest shal put on his linnen albe, and his linnen breeches vpon his flesh, and shal take vp the aszshes, that the fyre of the burnt-offerynge vpon the altare hath made, and shall poure them besyde the altare. Then shall he put of his rayment, and put on other rayment, and cary out the aszshes without the hoost, in to a cleane place.

The fyre vpon the altare shal burne, and neuer go out. The prest shal kyndle wod thereon euery mornynge, and dresse the burnt-offerynge vpon it, and burne the fat of the deed offerynges thereon. The fyre shall euer burne vpon the altare, and neuer go out.

¶ And this is the lawe of the meat-offerynge, which Aarons sonnes shall offre before the LORDE vpon the altare. One of them shall Heue his handfull of fyne flour of ¶ meat-offerynge, and of the oyle, and all the frankincense that lyeth vpon the meat-offerynge, and shall burne it vpon the altare for a swete sauoure a remembraunce vnto the LORDE. As for the remnaunt, Aaron and his sonnes shal eat it, and vnleued shall they eate it in the holy place, namely, in the courte of the Tabernacle of witness. With leue shall they not bake their porcion, which I haue geuen them of my offerynges. It shalbe vnto them most holy, as the synofferynge and trespac-offerynge. All the males amonge the children of Aaron shall eate of it. Let this be a perpetuall lawe for youre posterities in the sacrifices of the LORDE. No man shall touch it, excepte he be consecrated.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: This shalbe the offerynge of Aaron and of his sonnes, which they shall offre vnto the LORDE in the daie of their anyointynge. The tenth parte of an Ephah of fyne flour for a meat-offerynge daylie, the one half parte in the mornynge, the other half parte at euen. In the panne with oyle shall thou make it, and brynge it fryed, and in peces shalt thou offer it for the swete sauoure of the LORDE. And the prest which amonge his sonnes shalbe anyointed in his steade, shall do this. This is a perpetuall dewtye vnto the LORDE. It shal be burnt altogether: for all the meat-offerynges of the prest shalbe consumed with the fyre, and not be eaten.

¶ And ¶ LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto Aaron and his sonnes, and saye: This is the lawe of the synofferynge: In the place where thou slayest ¶ burnt-offerynge, shalt thou slaye the synofferynge also before the LORDE. This is most holy. ¶ The prest that offereth the synofferynge, shal eate it in the holy place, in the courte of ¶ Tabernacle of wytnesse. No man shal touch ¶ flesh therof, excepte he be halowed. And yf eny garment be sprenkled with the bloude of it, it shalbe washē in the holy place. And ¶ the earthē pot that it is sodden in, shalbe broken. But yf it be a brasen pot, it shalbe scoured, and rēsed with water. All ¶ males amonge the prestes shall eate therof, for it is most holy. Notwithstandinge all ¶ synofferynge whose bloude is brought in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse to make an attone-ment, shall not be eaten, but burnt with fyre.

The vij. Chapter.

AND this is the lawe of the trespac-offerynge, and it shal be most holy. In the place where the burntofferynge is slayne, shall the trespacofferynge be slayne also, & there shall of his bloude be sprenkled rounde aboute vpon the altare. And all his fat shalbe offered: the rompe and the fat  $\hat{y}$  couereth the bowels, the two kydneyes with the fat  $\hat{y}$  is theron vpon the loynes, and the net on the leuer vpon the kydneyes also. And the prest shal burne it vpon the altare for an offerynge vnto the LORDE. This is a trespac-offerynge.

All the males amonge the prestes shal eate it in the holy place, for it is most holy: euen as the synofferynge, so shall the trespac-offerynge be also, they shall both haue one lawe: and it shal be the prestes, that recon-cyleth ther with. Loke which prest offereth eny mans burntofferynge, the skynne of the same burntofferynge that he hath offered, shalbe his. And euery meatofferynge that is baken in the ouen, roasted vpon the gredyron, or fryed in the panne, shal be the prestes  $\hat{y}$  offereth it. And euery meatofferynge  $\hat{y}$  is myngled with oyle, or drye, shal belonge vnto all Aaron sonnes, vnto one as well as another.

B And this is  $\hat{y}$  lawe of the healthofferynge, that is offered vnto the LORDE, \* Yf they wyll offre a sacrifice of thankesgeuynge, then shal they offre vneleuēded cakes mēgled with oyle, and swete wafers straked ouer with oyle, and fryed cakes of fyne floure mengled with oyle. This offerynge also shall they brynge vpon a cake of leuēded bred, to the thank-offerynge of his healthofferynge: and of them all he shall offre one for an Heueofferynge vnto the LORDE. And it shalbe the prestes, that sprenkleth the bloude of the health-offerynge. And the flesh of the thankofferynge in his healthofferynges, shalbe eaten the same daye that it is offred, and there shall nothinge be left ouer vntyll the mornyng.

And whether it be a vowe or a fre wyl-offerynge,  $\dagger$  it shalbe eaten the same daye that it is offred: yf ought be left ouer vntyll the mornyng, yet maye it be eaten. But loke what remaineth vnto  $\hat{y}$  thirde daye of the flesh that is offred, it shalbe brent with the fyre. And yf eny man vpon the thirde daie eate of  $\hat{y}$  offred flesh of his healthofferynge, he shall not be accepted that offred it. Nether shall it be rekened vnto him, but it shalbe refused. And loke which soule eateth therof, the same is giltye of a mysdede.

And the flesh that toucheth eny vnclane thinge, shal not be eaten, but burnt with the fyre. But who so euer is cleane of body, shal eate of the flesh: and the soule that eateth of  $\hat{y}$  flesh of  $\hat{y}$  healthofferynge which belongeth vnto the LORDE, his vnclennes be vpon him, and he shalbe roted out from amonge his people.

And whan a soule toucheth eny vnclane thinge, whether it be an vnclane man, catell, or eny other abhominacion that is, and eateth of the flesh of the burntofferynge, that belongeth vnto the LORDE, the same shalbe roted out from amonge his people.

And the LORDE talketh with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, & saye: "Ye shall eate no fat of oxen, lambes, and goates: neuerthelesse the fat of it that dyeth alone, and of such as is torne of wyld beasts, that maye ye occupye to all maner of vses, but ye shall not eate it.

For who so euer eateth the fat of  $\hat{y}$  beest that is geuen vnto the LORDE for an offerynge, the same soule shalbe roted out from his people. Morouer,  $\dagger$  ye shall eate no bloude, nether of catell, ner of foules, where so euer ye dwell. What soule eateth eny bloude, the same shall be roted out from his people.

And the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, and saye: Who so wyll offre his healthofferynge vnto the LORDE, the same shall also brynge with all, that belongeth vnto  $\hat{y}$  healthofferynge for the LORDE. But he shall brynge it with his hande for the offerynge of the LORDE: namely the fat vpon the brest shal he brynge, with the brest, to be a Waueofferynge before the LORDE. And the prest shal burne the fat vpon the altare, and the brest shalbe Aarons and his sonnes.

the same shall haue the right shulder for his parte. * For the Wauebrest and the Heue-shulder haue I taken of the children of Israel, and of their healthofferynges, and haue geuen them vnto Aaron the prest and vnto his sonnes for a perpetuall dewtye.

This is the anoyntinge of Aaron and of his sonnes, of the offerynges of the LORDE, in the daye whā Moses presented them to be prestes vnto the LORDE, what tyme as the LORDE commaunded (in the daye whan he anoynted them) to be geuen them of the children of Israel for a perpetuall dewtye, and vnto all their posterities. And this is the lawe of the burntofferynge, of the meatofferynge, of the synofferynge, of the trespass offerynge, of the offerynge of consecracion, and of the healthofferynges, which the LORDE commaunded Moses vpon mount Sinai, in the daye whan he gaue him in commaundement vnto the children of Israel, to offere their offerynges vnto y LORDE in the wyldernesse of Sinai.

The viij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, ¶ sayde : Take Aaron and his sonnes with him, ¶ their vestimentes, ¶ the anoyntinge oyle, ¶ and a bullocke for a synofferynge, two rammes, and a maunde with vneleuended bred, and call the whole congregacion together, before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse. Moses dyd as the LORDE commaunded him, and gathered the congregacion together vnto the dore of y Tabernacle of wytnesse, and sayde vnto them : This is it, that the LORDE hath commaunded to do.

B And he toke Aaron and his sonnes, and waszshed them with water, and put the albe vpō him, and girde him with the girdell, and put vpon him the yalowe tuncyle, and put the ouerbody cote vpon him, and girde him vpon the ouerbody cote, ¶ put the brestlappe theron, and in y brestlappe light and perfectnesse : And set the myter vpon his heade. And vpon the myter euen aboue his foreheade, put he a plate of golde on the holy crowne : as y LORDE cōmaunded Moses.

And Moses toke the anoyntinge oyle, ¶ anoynted the Habitacion, and all that was therein, and consecrated it, and sprenkled therewith seue tymes vpon the altare, and anoynted the altare with all his vessels, the laver with his fote, that it might be consecrated : † and poured the anoyntinge oyle vpon Aarons heade, and anoynted him, y he might be consecrated.

And he brought Aarons sonnes, and put albes vpon them, and girde them with the girdle, and put bonettes vpon their heades, as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he caused bringe a bullocke for a syn offrynge. And Aaron with his sonnes layed their handes vpon his heade, and then was he slayne. And Moses toke of the bloude, ¶ put it vpon the hornes of the altare rounde aboute with his fynger, and purified the altare, and poured the bloude vpon the botome of the altare, and consecrated it, that he might reconceyle it. And toke all the fat vpō the bowels, the nett vpon the leuer, and the two kydneyes with the fat theron, and burned it vpon the altare. But the bullocke with his skynne, flesh, ¶ donge, burned he with fyre without the hoost, ¶ as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he brought a ramme for a burnt-offerynge. And Aaron with his sonnes layed their handes vpon his heade, ¶ then was he slayne. And Moses sprenkled of y bloude vpon the altare rounde aboute, hewed the ramme in peces, and burnt the heade, the peces, and the fatt. And waszshed the bowels and the legges with water, and so burnt y whole ramme vpō the altare. This was a burnt offerynge for a swete sauoure, euen a sacrifice vnto the LORDE, ¶ as the LORDE commaunded him.

He brought also the other ramme of the offerynge of the consecracion. And Aaron with his sonnes layed their hādes vpon his heade, and then was it slayne. And Moses toke of his bloude, and put it vpon the type of Aarons right eare, and vpon the thombe of his right hande, and vpon the greate too of his right fote.

And he brought Aarons sonnes, and put of the bloude vpon the type of the right eare of them, and vpon y thombes of their righte handes, and vpon the greate toes of their righte fete, and poured the resydue of the bloude vpon the altare rounde aboute. And he toke the fat and the rompe, ¶ and all the fat vpon the bowels, and the nett vpon the leuer, the two kydneyes with the fat theron, and the righte shulder. And out of the maunde of vleuened bred before the LORDE, he toke an vleuēd cake, and a cake of oyled bred, and a wafer, and layed them vpon the fat, and vpon the right shulder, and put altogether vpon the handes of Aaron and of his sonnes, and wauned it for a Waueofferynge before the LORDE.

And afterwarde toke he all agayne from their hondes, and burned them on the altare, euen vpon the burntofferynge: for it is an offerynge of consecration for a swete sauoure, euen a sacrifice vnto ¶ LORDE. And Moses toke the brest, and ¶ wauned it a Waueofferynge before the LORDE, of the ramme of the offerynge of consecration: the same was Moses parte, as the LORDE commaunded Moses. And Moses toke of ¶ anyntinge oyle, ¶ of the bloude vpon the altare, ¶ and sprenkled it vpon Aaron ¶ his vestimentes, vpon his sonnes ¶ vpon their vestimentes, and so cōsecrated Aaron ¶ his vestimentes, his sonnes and their vestimentes with him.

And he sayde vnto Aaron ¶ his sonnes: Seeth ¶ flesh before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, ¶ and there eate it, ¶ and the bred in ¶ maunde of the cōsecration offeringes, as it is cōmaunded me, ¶ sayde: Aaron ¶ his sonnes shall eate it. As for ¶ which remaineth of the flesh ¶ bred, ye shal burne it with fyre. And in seuē dayes shall ye not departe from ¶ dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, vntyll the daye, ¶ the dayes of youre consecration offeringes be at an ende: for seuē dayes must your handes be consecrated, as it is come to passe this daye: The LORDE hath cōmaunded to do it, that ye might be reconcyled. And ye shal tary before the Tabernacle of wytnesse daye and night seuē dayes longe, ¶ and shal kepe ¶ watch of ¶ LORDE, that ye dye not, for thus am I cōmaunded. And Aaron with his sonnes dyd all, that ¶ LORDE commaunded by Moses.

The ix. Chapter.

AND vpon the eight daye Moses called Aaron and his sonnes, and the Elders in Israel, and sayde vnto Aaron: Take vnto the a yonge calfe for a synofferynge, and a ramme for a burntofferynge, both without blemysh, and brynge them before the LORDE, and speake vnto the children of Israel, and saye: Take an he goate for a synofferynge: and a calf, and a shepe, both of a yeare olde, and without blemysh for a burntofferynge: and an oxe and a ramme for an healthofferynge, that we maye offre before the LORDE: and a meatofferynge myngled with oyle. For to daye shal the LORDE appeare vnto you.

And they toke what Moses commaunded before ¶ dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the whole cōgregation came nye, and stode before the LORDE. Then sayde Moses: This is it, which the LORDE commaunded that ye shulde do, and then shall the glory of ¶ LORDE appeare vnto you. And Moses sayde vnto Aaron: Go vnto ¶ altare, and ¶ offre thy synofferynge and thy burntofferynge, and make an attonemēt for the and for the people. Then offre the peoples offerynge, and reconcile them also, as the LORDE hath commaunded.

Afterwarde he slewe the burntofferynge, and Aarons sonnes brought the bloude vnto him, ¶ and he sprenkled it rounde aboute vpon the altare. And they brought him the burnt-offerynge in peces, ¶ and the heade: ¶ and he burnt it vpon the altare. And he washed the bowels and the legges, and burnt them aboute vpon the burntofferynge on the altare.

¶ Then brought he the offerynge of the people, and toke the goate, that synofferynge of the people, and slewe it, and made a synofferynge therof, as of the fyrst. And brought the burntofferynge, and dyd as the lawe is: and brought the meatofferynge, and toke his handfull, ¶ and burnt it vpon the altare, besyde the burntofferynge of the mornyng.

Afterwarde slewe he the oxe and the ramme for the healthofferynge of the people. And his sonnes brought him the bloude, which he sprekled vpon the altare rounde aboute. But the fat of the oxe & of the ramme, the rompe, and the fat that couereth the bowels, & the kydneyes, & the net vpon the leuer, all soch fat laied they vpon the brest, and burnt the fat vpon the altare. But the brest and the right shulder waued Aaron for a Waue-offerynge before the LORDE, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

And Aaron lift vp his hāde ouer the people, and blessed them, and came downe from the worke of the synofferynge, burntofferynge, and healthofferynge. And Moses and Aaron wente in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And whan they came out agayne, they blessed the people. Then appeared the glory of the LORDE vnto all the people. For there came a fyre from the LORDE, and vpon the altare it consumed the burntofferynge and the fat. Whan all the people sawe that, they reioysed, and fell vpon their faces.

The 1. Chapter.

AND  $\text{f}$  sonnes of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu,  $\text{t}$ oke ether of thē his censoure, & put fyre therin, & layed incense vpon it, and brought straunge fyre before the LORDE,  $\text{t}$  which he commaūded them not. Then wente there out a fyre from  $\text{f}$  LORDE, and consumed them, so that they dyed before the LORDE. Then sayde Moses vnto Aaron: This is it, that the LORDE sayde: I wil be sanctified vpō them that come nye me, and before all the people wil I be glorified. And Aaron helde his peace.

Moses called Misael and Elzaphan the sonnes of Vsiel Aarons vnclē, and sayde vnto them: Go to, and cary youre brethren out of the Sanctuary, without the hoost. And they wente, and caried them forth in their albes without the hoost, as Moses sayde.

Then sayde Moses vnto Aaron & to his sonnes Eleasar and Ithamar:  $\text{t}$  Ye shall not vncover youre heades, ner rente youre clothes, that ye dye not, and the wrath come vpon the whole congregacion: Let youre brethrē of the whole house of Israel bewepe this burnynge, which the LORDE hath done. As for you, ye shall not go out from the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, lest ye dye: for the anyontinge oyle of the LORDE is vpon you. And they dyd as Moses sayde.

The LORDE spake vnto Aaron, & sayde: Thou & thy sonnes with the shal drynke no wyne ner stronge drynke, whan ye go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse: that ye dye not. Let this be a perpetuall lawe vnto all youre posterities:  $\text{f}$  ye maye haue knowlege to discerne, what is holy and vnholly, what is cleane & vnclane: & that ye maye teach the children of Israel all the lawes, which the LORDE hath spoken vnto you by Moses.

And Moses sayde vnto Aaron, and vnto Eleasar and Ithamar his sonnes that were left: Take the remnaunt of the meatofferynge in the sacrifices of  $\text{f}$  LORDE, and eate it without leuen besyde the altare, for it is most holy, euen in the holy place shal ye eate it. For it is thy dutye and thy sonnes dutye in the sacrifices of the LORDE: for thus am I commaunded. But the Wauebrest and the Heushulder shalt thou eate, and thy sonnes and thy daughters with the in a cleane place. For this dutye is geuen vnto the and thy children in the deedofferynges of the children of Israel. For the Heushulder and the Wauebrest to the offerynges of the fat, shalbe brought in, that they maye be waued for a Waueofferynge before the LORDE. Therefore is it thine and thy childrens for a perpetuall dutye, as the LORDE commaunded.

And Moses sought for the goate of the synofferynge, and founde it burnt. And he was angrie at Eleasar and Ithamar  $\text{f}$  sonnes of Aaron, which were left alyue, and sayde: Wherefore haue ye not eaten the synofferynge in the holy place? for it is most holy, & he hath geuen it you, that ye might beare  $\text{f}$  synne of the cōgregacion, to make agremēt for them before the LORDE. Beholde, the bloude of it came not in to the Sanctuary: Ye shulde haue eaten it in the Sanctuary, as I was commaunded.

Aaron sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, this daye haue they offred their synofferynge & their burntofferynge before  $\text{f}$  LORDE. And it is chauned me after this maner. And shulde I eate of the synofferynge to daye, & be mery before the LORDE? Whan Moses herde that, he was content.

The xi. Chapter.

AND  $\S$  LORDE talked with Moses  $\tau$  Aaron  $\tau$  sayde:  $\alpha$  These are the beestes which ye shal eate amonge all  $\S$  beestes vpō earth: What so euer hath hōffe,  $\tau$  deuydeth it in to two clawes,  $\tau$  cheweth cud amonge the beestes, that shal ye eate. But loke what cheweth cud  $\tau$  hath hōffe,  $\tau$  deuydeth it not, as the Camell, the same is vnclane vnto you,  $\tau$  ye shal not eate it. The Conyes chewe cud, but they deuyde not the hōffe in to two clawes, therefore are they vnclane vnto you. The Hare cheweth cud also, but deuydeth not  $\S$  hōffe in to two clawes, therefore is he vnclane vnto you. And the Swyne deuydeth  $\S$  hōffe in to two clawes, but cheweth not the cud, therefore is it vnclane vnto you. Of the flesh of these shall ye not eate, ner touch their carcases, for they are vnclane vnto you.

These shall ye eate of all that are in the waters: What so euer hath fynnes and scales in the waters, sees  $\tau$  ryuers, that shal ye eate. But what so euer hath not fynnes and scales in the sees and ryuers, amonge all  $\S$  moue in the waters,  $\tau$  of all that lyue in the waters, it shalbe an abhominacion vnto you, so that ye eate not of their flesh, and that ye abhorre their carcases. For all that haue not fynnes  $\tau$  scales in the waters, shall ye abhorre.

C And these shal ye abhorre amonge  $\S$  foules, so that ye eate them not: The Aegle, the Goshauke, the Cormoraunte, the Vultur,  $\S$  Kyte, and all his kynde, and all Rauens with their kynde: the Estrich,  $\S$  Nightcrow, the Cocow, the Sparow hauke with his kynde, the litle Oule, the Storke, the greate Oule,  $\S$  Backe, the Pellycane, the Swanne, the Pye, the Heron,  $\S$  Iaye with his kynde, the Lapwyng, and  $\S$  Swalowe. And what so euer crepeth amonge the foules, and goeth vpon foure fete, shalbe an abhominaciō vnto you. Yet these shal ye eate of the foules that crepe and go vpon foure fete: euen those that haue no knyves aboute vpon  $\S$  legges, to hoppe withall vpon earth. Of these maye ye eate, as there is the Arbe with his kynde, and the Selaam with his kynde,  $\tau$  the Hargol with his kynde,  $\tau$  the Hagab with his kynde. But what so euer els hath foure fete amonge the foules, it shalbe an abhominacion vnto you, and ye shal take it for vnclane.  $\beta$  Who so euer toucheth the carcase of soch, shall be vnclane vntill  $\S$  euen: and who so euer beareth the carcase of eny of these, shall wash his clothes, and shalbe vnclane vntyll the euen.

Therefore euery beest that hath hōffe, and deuydeth it not in to two clawes,  $\tau$  cheweth not cud, shalbe vnclane vnto you. Who so euer toucheth soch, shalbe vnclane. And what so euer goeth vpon handes amonge  $\S$  beestes that go vpon foure fete, shalbe vnclane vnto you. Who so euer toucheth the carcases of thē, shalbe vnclane vntyll euen. And he  $\S$  beareth their carcase, shall wash his clothes, and be vnclane vntyll the euē: For soch are vnclane vnto you.

These shalbe vnclane vnto you also, E amonge the beestes that crepe vpon earth:  $\S$  Wesell, the Mouse, the Tode, euery one with his kynde, the Hedgehogge, the Stellio, the Lacerte, the Snale, and the Moule, these are vnclane vnto you amonge all that crepe. Who so euer toucheth the deed carcase of thē, shalbe vnclane vntyll the euen. And what so euer eny soch deed carcase falleth vpon, it shalbe vnclane, what so euer vessell of wodd it be, or rayment, or skynne, or bagge. And euery vessell that eny thinge is occupied withall, shalbe put in the water, and is vnclane vntyll the euen, and then shal it be cleane.  $\gamma$  All maner of earthen vessell that eny soch carcase falleth in to, shal all be vnclane that therin is,  $\tau$  ye shal breake it. All meate which is eatē, that eny soch water commeth in to, is vnclane:  $\tau$  all maner of drynke that is dronkē in all maner of soch vessell, is vnclane. And what so euer eny soch carcase falleth vpō, it shalbe vnclane, whether it be ouen or kettell, so shal it be brokē, for it is vnclane, and shalbe vnclane vnto you. Neuertheles the fountaynes, welles,  $\tau$  poundes of water are cleane. But who so euer toucheth their carcases, is vnclane.

F And though the deed carcase of eny soch fell vpon the sede that is sowne, yet is it cleane. But whan there is water poured vpon the sede, and afterwarde eny soch deed carcase falleth thereon, then shall it be vnclane vnto you.

Whan a beest dyeth that ye maye eate, he that toucheth the deed carcase therof, is vnclane vntyll euen. Who so eateth of eny soch carcase, shall wash his clothes, and be vnclane vntyll the euen. Likewyse he that beareth eny soch carcase, shall wash his clothes, and be vnclane vntyll the euen.

What so euer crepeth vpon earth, shall be an abhominacion vnto you, and shall not be eaten. And what so euer crepeth vpon fyre, or all that goeth vpon foure or mo fete, amōge all that crepeth vpon earth, shall ye not eate, for it shalbe an abhominacion vnto you. Make not youre soules abhominable, and defyle you not in them, to stayne youre selues: for I am the LORDE youre God. * Therefore shall ye sanctifie youre selues, that ye maye be holy, for I am holy. And ye shall not defyle youre selues on eny maner of crepyng beest, that crepeth vpon earth: for I am the LORDE, which brought you out of the londe of Egipte, that I might be youre God: therefore shall ye be holy, for I am holy.

This is the lawe ouer fyre beestes and foules, and all maner of soules of crepyng beestes in the waters, and all maner of soules fyre crepe vpon earth: that ye maie knowe to discerne what is vnclane and cleane, and what maner of beestes are to be eaten, and which are not to be eaten.

The xij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, and saye: When a woman hath conceaued, and beareth a manchilde, she shalbe vnclane seuen dayes, so longe as she suffreth hir disease, * and in fyre eight dayes shall fyre flesh of his foreskynne be cut awaie. And she shall byde at home thre and thirtie dayes in fyre bloude of hir purifienge: she shall touch no holy thinge, ner come in to fyre Sactuary, tyll the daies of hir purifienge be out. But yf she beare a maydechilde, thē shall she be vnclane two wekes, so longe as she suffreth hir disease, and sixe and thre score daies shall she byde at home in the bloude of hir purifienge.

† And whan the dayes of hir purifienge are out, for the sonne or for the daughter, she shall brynge a lambe of one yeare olde for a burntofferynge, and a yonge pigeon or a turtill doue for a synofferynge to the dore of fyre Tabernacle of wytnesse vnto fyre prest, which shall offre it before the LORDE, and make an attonemēt for her, and so shall she be clesned from her bloudysseue. This is the lawe for her that beareth a manchilde or mayde childe.

‡ But yf she be not able to bringe a shepe, then let hir take two turtill doues, or two yonge pigeons, the one for a burntofferynge, the other for a synofferynge, then shall the prest make an attonement for her, so that she shall be cleane.

The xij. Chapter.

AND fyre LORDE spake vnto Moses and Aaron, and sayde: When there ryseth vpon eny thinge in the skynne of a mans flesh, whether it be a scabbe or a glistryng whyte (as though there wolde be a leprosy in fyre skynne of his flesh) he shall be brought vnto Aaron the prest, or to one of his sonnes amōge fyre prestes. And whan the prest seyeth the plage vpon the skynne of the flesh, that the hayres are turned to whyte, and it seme deper in that place then the other skynne of his flesh, then is it surely a leprosy, therefore shall the prest loke vpon him, and iudge him vnclane.

But whan there is eny whyte plecte in the skynne of his flesh, and yet seme no deper then the other skynne of the flesh, and the hayres be not turned to whyte, thē shall the prest shut him vp seuen dayes, and on fyre seuenth daye loke vpon him: yf the plage seme vnto him as afore, and hath frett nō deper in the skynne, then shall the prest shut him vp yet seuen dayes mo. And whan he loketh on him agayne vpon the seuenth daye, and fyndeth, that the plage be darkish, and hath frett nō deper in the skynne, thē shall he iudge him cleane, for it is but a skyrfe, and he shall wash his clothes, and then is he cleane.

But whan the scabbe fretteth farther in the skynne (after that he is sene of the prest, and iudged cleane) and he be now sene of the prest agayne: whan the prest seyeth thē, fyre the scabbe hath frett farther in the skynne, he shall iudge him vnclane, for it is surely a leprosy.

Whan a plage of leprosy is vpon a man, he shalbe brought vnto the prest. Whan he seyeth and fyndeth, that there is whyte rysen vpon in the skynne, and the hayre turned vnto whyte, and there be rawe flesh in the sore, * Leui. 19. a. 1 Pet. 1. c.

thē is it surely an olde leprosy in ȝ szkynne of his flesh, therefore shal the prest iudge him vnclane, and not shut him vp, for he is vnclane already.

But whan the leprosy breaketh out in the szkynne, and couereth the whole szkynne, from the heade vnto the fote, all that the prest can se, So whan the prest loketh vpon it, and fyndeth, that ȝ leprosy hath couered all the flesh, he shal iudge him cleane, for so moch as it is turned all in to whyte vpon him, for he is cleane.

Notwithstōdinge yf there be rawe flesh there, in the daye whan he is loked vpon, thē is he vnclane. And whan the prest seyth ȝ rawe flesh, he shall iudge him vnclane, for he is vnclane, τ it is surely a leprosy. But yf the rawe flesh chaunge agayne, and be turned in to whyte, then shall he come vnto the prest. And whan the prest loketh vpon him, and fyndeth, that the plage is turned to whyte, he shall iudge him cleane, for he is cleane.

Whan there is a byle in the szkynne of any mans flesh, and healeth agayne, and afterwarde in the same place there aryse vp any whyte thinge, or a glisterynge whyte somewhat reedish, he shal be sene of the prest. So whan the prest, seyeth, that it appeareth to be lower then the other szkynne, and the hayre turned to whyte, then shall he iudge him vnclane, for it is surely a plage of leprosy broken out of the byle. But yf the prest se and fynde, that the hayres are not whyte, and it not lower then the other szkynne, and is darkysh, he shal shut him vp seuen dayes. Yf it hath frett farther in the szkynne, then shall he iudge him vnclane, for it is surely a plage of leprosy. But yf the glisterynge whyte abyde styll, and freate no farther, thē is it but a prynte of the byle, and the prest shal iudge him cleane.

Whan the szkynne of eny mans flesh is hurt with fyre, and the prynte of the burninge be reedysh or whyte, and the prest loketh vpon him, and fyndeth the hayre turned to whyte vpon the mark of the burnyng, τ it apeare deper then the other szkynne, thē is there surely a leprosy brokē out of ȝ prynte of ȝ burnyng: therefore shal ȝ prest iudge hī vnclane, for it is a plage of leprosy. But yf the prest se and fynde, that ȝ hayre vpon the prynte of the burninge is not turned vnto whyte, τ is no lower then the other skynne, and is darkish also, he shall shut him vp seuen dayes.

And vpon the seuenth daye he shall loke vpon him: yf it hath frett farther in ȝ skynne, then shal he iudge him vnclane, for it is a leprosy. But yf it stōde styll vpō the mark of the burnyng, and frett no farther in the szkynne, and is darkysh, then is it a sore in ȝ mark of the burnyng, τ the prest shal iudge him cleane, for it is but the prynte of the burnyng.

Whan a man or woman is skyrue vpon the heade or beard, and the prest seyth the mark, and fyndeth that it appeareth deper then the other skynne, and the hayre be there goldē and thynne, then shal he iudge him vnclane: for it is a skyrfe of leprosy of the heade or of the beerde. But yf the prest se that ȝ skyrfe apeare no deper thē the skynne, and that the hayre is not of a pale coloure, he shall shut him vp seūē dayes. And vpō the seuenth daye whan he loketh, and fyndeth, that the skyrfe hath frett no farther, and there be no golden hayre there, and that the skyrfe apeare no deper then the other skynne, then let him be shauen: but so that he shauē not of the scabbe, and the prest shall shut him vp yet seuen dayes moo. And vpon the seūēth daye whā he loketh, and fyndeth that the skyrfe hath frett no farther in the skynne, and that it apeareth no deper then the other skynne, then shall the prest iudge him cleane. And he shall wash his clothes, for he is cleane. But yf the scabbe freate farther in the skynne (after ȝ he is iudged cleane) and the prest loketh, and fyndeth, that ȝ scabbe hath frett farther in the skynne, then shal he seke nomore for golden hayres, for he is vnclane. Neuerthelesse yf he se that the scabbe stondeth styll, τ that pale hayres are there rysen vp, then is ȝ scabbe hole, and he is cleane, therefore shall ȝ prest iudge him to be cleane.

Whā there is eny glisterynge whyte vpō ȝ skynne of the flesh of a man or woman, and the prest seyth there that the glisterynge whyte vanysleth: then is it but a whyte scabbe rysen vp in ȝ skynne, τ he is cleane.

Whan the hayres fall out of the heade of a man or a woman, so that he is balde, the same is cleane. Yf they fall out of his fore heade, then is he fore heade balde τ cleane. But yf there be a whyte reedish sore in the balde heade, or balde fore heade, then is there a leprosy rysen vp in the balde heade or balde foreheade: therefore shal  $\text{f}$  prest loke vpon him. And whan he fyndeth the whyte reedysh sore rysen vp in his balde heade or balde fore heade, then shal  $\text{f}$  skynne of the flesh be as leporous, therfore is he a leporous man and vncleane. And the prest shall iudge him vncleane, because of  $\text{f}$  same sore vpō his heade.

Who so now is leporous, his clothes shal be rent, and the heade bare,  $\text{a}$  the lippes moffled, and shall in eny wyse be called vncleane.  $\text{a}$  And as longe as the sore is vpon him, he shal be vncleane, dwell alone, and haue his dwelling without the hoost.

Whan the plague of leprosy is in a cloth, whether it be wollen or lynnē, in the warpe or weft, whether it be lynen or wollen, or in a skynne, or in eny maner thyng that is made of skynne. And whan  $\text{f}$  plague is pale or reedish in the cloth or skynne, either in the warpe or weft, or in eny maner thinge that is made of skynne, the same is surely the plague of leprosy, therfore shall the prest loke vpon it. And whan he seyth the plague, he shal shut it vp seuen dayes. And vpon the seuēth daye whan he seyth that  $\text{f}$  plague hath frett farther in the cloth, in the warpe or weft, in a skynne or in eny maner thinge that is made of skynne, then is it a fretinge plague of leprosy, and is vncleane. And the cloth shal be burnt, either warpe or weft, whether it be wollen or lynnē, or eny thyng made of skynne, wherin is eny soch plague. For it is a plague of leprosy, and shal be burnt with fyre.

But yf the prest se that the plague hath frete no farther in  $\text{f}$  cloth, either in the warpe or weft, or eny thinge made of skynne, then shal he commaunde to wash the thinge that the plague is in, and shall shut it vp other seuen dayes. And whan the prest seyth (after that the plague is waszhen)  $\text{f}$  the plague is not chaūged before his eyes, and hath frett no farther also, yet is it vncleane,  $\text{a}$  shal be burnt with fyre: for it is depe fretē inwarde, and hath made skyrfes. Neuertheles whan the prest seyth that the prynte is vanyshed after the washinge of it, then shall he rente it out of the clothe, and of the skynne, out of the warpe or weft. But yf it appeare eny more in the clothe (either in the warpe, or in the weft) or eny maner thinge made of skynne, then is it a waxinge plague: and with fyre shal it be burnt that eny soch plague is in. As for the cloth, either warpe or weft, or eny maner thyng made of skynne that is waszhen, and the plague be departed from it, it shalbe waszhen once agayne,  $\text{a}$  then is it cleane.

This is the lawe ouer the plague of leprosy in clothes, whether they be wollen or lynnē (ether in the warpe or in the weft) and in eny maner of thinge made of skynne, to iudge them cleane or vncleane.

The iiii. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses,  $\text{a}$  and sayde: This is the lawe ouer  $\text{f}$  leper, whan he shalbe censed.  $\text{a}$  He shall come vnto  $\text{f}$  prest, and the prest shal go out of the hoost, and loke how the plague of leprosy is healed vpon the leper. And he shal commaunde him that is to be censed, to take two luyngē byrdes, which are cleane, and Ceder wodd, and purple woll, and ysope: and shall commaunde the one byrde to be kylled in an earthen vessell ouer sprynginge water. And he shall take the luyngē byrde with the Ceder wodd, the purple woll, and ysope, and dyppe them in the bloude of the slaine byrde vpon the springyngē water, and sprenkle it seuen tymes vpon him that must be censed from  $\text{f}$  leprosy. And so cense him, and let the luyngē byrde flye at libertye in to the felde.

But he that is censed, shall wash his clothes,  $\text{b}$  and shaue of all his hayre, and bathe him self with water, so is he cleane. Afterwarde let him go in to the hoost, yet shall he tarye without his tent seuen dayes. And vpon the seuenth daye shal he shaue of all  $\text{f}$  hayre vpon his heade, vpō his beerde, vpon his browes, so that all the hayre be shauen of, and he shall wash his clothes and bathe his flesh in water, then is he cleane.

And vpō the eight daye shal he take two lambes without blemysh, and a shepe of a yere olde without blemysh, and thre tenth deales of fyne floure for a meatofferynge, myngled with oyle,  $\text{a}$  a Logg of oyle. Thē shall the prest presente him that is censed and these thynges before the LORDE, before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytuesse, and shal take  $\text{f}$  one lambe, and offre it for trespase offerynge, with the Logg of oyle,  $\text{a}$  shall waue them, before  $\text{f}$  LORDE, and afterwarde slaye the lambe, where the synofferynge and burntofferynge are slayne, namely, in the holy place. For as the synofferynge, so is the trespase offerynge the prestes also, for it is most holy.

¶ And the prest shall take of the bloude of the trespase offerynge, and put it vpon the type of  $\text{f}$  right eare of him that is clesed, and vpon the thombe of his right hande, and vpon the greate too of his right fote. Afterwarde shall he take of the oyle out of the Logg, and poure it in to his awne left hande, and dyppe his right fynger in the oyle that is in his left hande, and sprenkle the oyle with his fynger seuen tymes before the LORDE. As for the remnaunt of the oyle in his hande, he shall put it vpon the type of the right eare of him that is clesed, and vpon the thombe of his right hande,  $\tau$  vpon the greate too of his right fote, euen aboue vpon the bloude of the trespase offerynge. But the remnaunt of the oyle in his hande, shall he poure vpon the heade of him that is clesed, and make an attonement for him before the LORDE. And he shall make the synofferynge, and reconyle him that is clesed, because of his vnclennesse. And afterwarde shall he sleve the burntofferynge, and shal offre it vpon the altare with the meatofferynge, and make an attonement for him,  $\tau$  than is he cleane.

¶ But yf he be poore, and getteth not so moch with his hande, then let him take one lambe for a trespaseofferynge to waue it, to make an attonement for him, and a tenth deale of fyne floure myngled with oyle for a meatofferynge, and a Logg of oyle,  $\tau$  two turtyll doues, or two yonge pigeons which he is able to get with his hande, let the one be a synofferynge, the other a burntofferynge: and let him brynge them vpon the eight daye of his clensynge vnto the prest before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse before the LORDE.

Then shall the prest take the lambe for the synofferynge, and the Logg of oyle, and shall waue them all before the LORDE, and sleve the lambe of the trespase offerynge: and take of  $\text{f}$  bloude of the same trespaseofferynge, and put it vpon the type of the righte eare of him that is clesed, and vpon the thombe of his right hande, and vpon the greate too of his righte fote, and poure of the oyle in to his awne lefte hande, and with his right fynger sprenkle the oyle that is in his left hande, seuen tymes before the LORDE.

As for the remnaunt of the oyle in his hande, he shall put it vpon the type of the right eare of him that is clesed, and vpon the thombe of his right hande,  $\tau$  vpon the greate too of his right fote, euen aboue vpō  $\text{f}$  bloude of  $\text{f}$  trespaseofferynge. The other oyle in his hāde shal he poure vpō  $\text{f}$  heade of him  $\text{f}$  is clesed, to make an attonement for him before the LORDE. And afterwarde of the one of the turtill doues or yonge pigeons (acordinge as his handes are able to get) he shal make a synofferynge, of  $\text{f}$  other a burnt-offerynge, with the meatofferynge: and so shal the prest make an attonemēt for him that is clesed before the LORDE.

¶ And the LORDE spake vnto Moses and Aaron, and sayde: When ye are come in to the lande of Canaan, which I geue you to possesse: and yf there happen a plague of leprosy in any house of youre possession, then shal he that owneth the house, come and tell the prest, and saye: Me thynke there is as it were a plague of leprosy in my house. Then shal the prest commaunde to rydde all thyng out of the house or euer the prest go in to se  $\text{f}$  plague, lest all that is in the house be made vnclane. Afterwarde shall  $\text{f}$  prest go in, to se the plague.

Now when he loketh, and fyndeth,  $\text{f}$  there be holowe strakes yalowe or reedish in the walles of the house,  $\tau$  they seme to be lower then the wall besyde, then shall he go out at the dore of the house, and shut vp the house for seuen dayes. And vpon the seuenth daye whan he commeth, and seyth that the plague hath fretten farther in the walles of the house, thē shall he commaunde to breake out the stones wherin the plague is,  $\tau$  to cast thē in a foule place without the cite,  $\tau$  the house to be scraped within rounde aboute, and the dust  $\text{f}$  is scraped of, to be poured without  $\text{f}$  cite in an vnclane place,  $\tau$  to take other stones, and put them in the place of the other, and to take other playster, and playster the house.

Whan the plague then commeth agayne, and breaketh forth in the house, after  $\text{f}$  the stones are brokē out, the playster scraped of, and the house playsterd of the new, the shal the prest go in: and whan he seyth that the plague hath fretten farther in the house, then is there surely a fretinge leprosy in the house, and it is vnclene: therefore shal the house be broken downe, both the stones, and y tumber and all the dust of the house, and shal be caried out of the cite in to an vnclene place. And who so goeth in to the house, whyle it is shut vp, is vnclene vntyll y euen. And he y lyeth therein, or eateth therein, shal wash his clothes.

But yf the prest se (whā he goeth in) that this plague hath frett no farther in the house, after that the house is new playsterd, the shal he iudge it to be cleane, for the plague is healed. And to a synofferinge for the house, he shal take two byrdes, Cedar wodd, and purple woll, and ysoppe, and slaye the one byrde in an erthen vessell vpon sprynginge water, and shall take the Cedar wodd, the purple woll, the ysoppe, and the lyuinge byrde, and dyppe them in the bloude of the slayne byrde vpon the sprynginge water, and sprenkle the house with all seuē tymes: and so shal he purifie the house with the bloude of the byrde, with the springinge water, with the lyuinge byrde, with the Cedar wodd, with the ysoppe, and with the purple woll. And the lyuinge byrde shall he let flye at libertye out of the towne in to the felde, and make an attouement for the house, and then is it cleane.

This is the lawe ouer all maner plague of leprosy and skyrfe, ouer y leprosy of clothes and of houses, ouer sores, scabbes, and glisteringe whyte, that it maye be knowne, whan eny thinge is vnclene or cleane. This is y lawe of leprosy.

The xv. Chapter.

AND the LORDE talked with Moses and Aaron, and sayde: Speake to the children of Israel, and saie vnto him: Whan a man hath a runnyng yssue from out of his flesh, y same is vnclene: but the is he vnclene by the reason of this yssue, whan his flesh is fretten of y yssue or wounde. Euery bed where on he lyeth, and what so euer he sytteth vpon, shalbe vnclene.

And he that toucheth his bed shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euen.

And he y sytteth where he sat, shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euē. Who so toucheth his flesh, shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euen. Whan he spytteth vpon him that is cleane, y same shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euen.

And the saddell and what so euer he rydeth vpon, shalbe vnclene. And who so euer toucheth eny thinge that hath bene vnder him, shalbe vnclene vntyll the euen. And who so beareth eny soch, shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euen. And whom so euer he toucheth, and washeth not his handes first, the same shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euen. *Whan he toucheth an erthen vessell, it shal be broken: but the treen vessell shal be rensed with water. And whā he is cleane of his yssue, he shal nombre vij. dayes, after y he is made cleane, and wash his clothes, and bathe him self with sprynginge water, the is he cleane. And vpon the eight daye shal he take two turtill doues or two yonge pigeons, and bryngte them before the LORDE before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and geue them vnto the prest. And the prest shal make of the one a synofferinge, of the other a burntofferynge, and make an attouement for him before the LORDE, as concerninge his yssue.

Whan a mans sede departeth from him in slepe, the same shal bathe all his flesh with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euen. And all clothes, and euery skynne that is stained with soch sede, shall he wash with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euen. A woman, by whom soch one lyeth, shall bathe hir self with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euen.

Whan a woman hath the bloude yssue of hir flesh, she shalbe put a parte vij. daies in to a sundrie place. Who so euer toucheth her, shal be vnclene vntyll the euē. And all that she lyeth vpon (as longe as she is put aparte) shalbe vnclene. And that she sytteth vpon, shalbe vnclene. And who so euer toucheth hir bed, shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euen. And who so euer toucheth eny maner thinge that she hath sytten vpon, shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, and be vnclene vntyll the euē.

<sup>b</sup> But when a woman hath hir blonde yssue a longe season, not onely at the tyme of hir naturall course, but also out of the tyme of hir naturall course, then shall she be vncleane so longe as she hath the yssue: euē as she is at the tyme when she is put aparte, so shall she be vncleane here also. What so euer she lyeth vpon all the tyme of hir yssue, shalbe as hir bed, when she is put aparte. And all that she sytteth vpon, shalbe vncleane, as is hir vnclennesse, when she is put aparte. Who so euer toucheth eny of them, shal be vncleane, and shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, & be vncleane vntyll the euen.

<sup>c</sup> But yf she be cleane of hir yssue, thē shal she nombre seven dayes, afterwarde shall she be cleane: and vpon the eight daye shall she take two turtill doues, or two yonge pigeons, and brynge them vnto the prest before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And the prest shall make of the one a synofferynge, of the other a burntofferynge, and make an attonement for her before the LORDE, as concernynge the yssue of hir vnclennesse.

Thus shal ye se that the childrē of Israel kepe them selues from their vnclennesse, that they dye not in their vnclennesse, when they defyle my habitation, which is amōge you.

This is the lawe ouer him that hath a runnyng sore, & him whose sede departeth from him in slepe, so that he is vncleane therof. And ouer her that hath hir blonde yssue, and who so euer hath a runnyng sore, whether it be man or woman, and when a man lyeth with her that is vncleane.

The xvi. Chapter.

<sup>d</sup> AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses (after that Aarons two sonnes were deed, * when they offered before the LORDE) & sayde: Speake vnto Aaron thy brother, y he go not at all tymes in to the ynnermer Sanctuary, within the vale before the Mercyseate, which is vpon the Arke, y he dye not: † for I wyl appear in a cloude vpon y Mercyseate. But herewithall shal he go in, euen with a yonge bullocke for a synofferynge, and with a ramme for a burntofferynge, and shal put on the holy linnen albe, and haue lynnen breches vpon his flesh, and gyrdle him with a lynnē girdell, and haue the linnen myter vpon his heade.

For these are y holy garmentes: & he shal bathe his flesh with water, & put them on: & of the cōgregacion of the childrē of Israel he shal take two he goates for a synofferynge, and a ramme for a burntofferynge.

And Aaron shal brynge the bullocke his owne synofferynge, † and make an attonemēt for himself and his house: and afterwarde shall he take the two goates, and present them before the LORDE, euen before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and shall cast lottes ouer the two goates: the lot of the one goate for the LORDE, and the other for the fre goate. And the goate that y LORDES lot fell vpon, shal he offre for a synofferynge. But the goate, that the fre goates lot fell vpon, shal he present alyue before y LORDE, to make an attonement for him, and to let the fre goate go in to y wyldernes. And so shal he brynge the bullocke of his synofferynge, and make an attonement for him and his housholde, and shal kyll him.

And he shall take a censor full of coales from the altare that stondeth before the LORDE, and his handfull of beaten incense, and brynge them in within y vayle, and put the incense vpon the fyre before y LORDE, that the cloude of the incense maye couer the Mercyseate, which is vpon the wytnesse, that he dye not. And he shall take of the bloude of the bullocke, and sprenkle it with his fynger toward the Mercyseate on the fore-syde. Seven tymes shall he sprenkle of the bloude thus with his fynger before the Mercyseate. Thē shal he kyll the goate which is the peoples synofferynge, & brynge in of his bloude within the vayle, & shall do with his bloude, as he dyd with the bloude of the bullocke, and sprenkle therwith also on the foresyde toward the Mercyseate, and so shal he reconyle the Sactuary from the vnclennesse of the childrē of Israel, and frō their trespasses in all their synnes. Thus shal he do vnto the Tabernacle of wytnesse, which is the habitation with them amōge their vnclenneses.

No man shalbe in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, when he goeth in to make an attonement.

And whā he goeth forth vnto the altare that stondeth before the LORDE, he shal reconeyle it, and shal take of ŷ bullockes bloude, and of the goates bloude, ⁊ put it vpon the hornes of the altare rounde aboute. And with his fynger shal he sprēkle of the bloude theron seuen tymes, and halowe it, and consecrate it from the vncleennesse of the children of Israel.

¶ And whan he hath made an ende of reconcyling the Sanctuary, and the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the altare, he shal bringe the luyngge goate.

Thē shal Aaron laie both his hādes vpō ŷ heade of him, ⁊ confesse ouer him all the mysdedes of ŷ childrē of Israel, ⁊ all their trespasses in their synnes, ⁊ shal laye thē vpō ŷ heade of the goate, ⁊ by some man ŷ is at hande, shal he let him runne in tō the wilderness: ŷ the goate maye so beare all their mysdedes vpon him in to ŷ wyldernes, and he shal leaue him in the wyldernes.

But he ŷ caried out the fre goate, shal wash his clothes, and bathe him self with water, ⁊ then come in to the hoost.

The bullocke of the synofferynge, and ŷ goate of the synofferynge (whose bloude was brought in to the Sanctuary to make an attonemēt) shalbe caried out of ŷ hoost, ⁊ brent with fyre, both their skynnes, flesh, and donge. youre attonemēt made, that ye maye be clesned from all youre synnes before the LORDE: therfore shall it be a fre Sabbath vnto you, and ye shal humble youre soules. Let this be a perpetuall lawe.

But the prest that is anoynted, and whose hande was fylled to be prest in his fathers steade, shal make this attonement, and shal put on the lynnyn clothes, namely the holy vestimētes, so shal he recōeyle the holy Sāctuary, and the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the altare, and ŷ prestes, and all the people of the congregacion. * This shal be a perpetuall lawe vnto you, that ye reconeyle ŷ children of Israel from all their synnes once a yeaere. And Moses dyd, as the LORDE commaunded him.

¶ Yf eny man take his sister, his fathers doughter, or his mothers doughter, and se hir preuyte, and she agayne se his secretes, it is a wicked thinge. They shalbe roted out in the sight of their people. For he hath vncouered his sisters preuyte, he shal beare his synne.

Yf eny man lye with his vncles wyfe, the same hath vncouered the preuytie of his vncle: they shal beare their synne, without children shal they dye.

The xxi. Chapter.

AND the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: ¶ Speake to y prestes y sonnes of Aaron, & saye vnto thē: ¶ A prest shal defyle him self vpō no soule of his people, but vpon his nexte kynne y belongeth vnto him: as vpon his mother, vpō his father, vpō his sounne, vpō his doughter, vpon his brother, & vpon his sister, which is yet a virgin, & hath bene no mans wife (which belongeth vnto him) vpon her maie he defyle himself. Morouer he shal not defyle him self vpō eny ruler in his people, to vn halowe him self.

¶ He shall make no crowne also vpon his heade, ner shaue of his beard, nether shall they cut out eny markes i their fleshe. They shalbe holy vnto their God, and not vnhalowe y name of their God: for they offre the sacrifice of the LORDE, the bred of their God, therefore shal they be holy.

They shal take no whore, ner one that is defyled, or y is put awaye from hir huszbande, for he is holy vnto his God: therefore shal he sanctifie him self, for he offreth the bred of thy God. He shal be holy vnto the, for I am holy, euen the LORDE that sanctifieth you.

Yf a prestes doughter fall to whoringe, she shalbe burnt with fyre, for she hath shamed hir father. He that is hye prest amonge his brethren, vpō whose heade the anoyntinge oyle is poured, and his hande fylled (y he might be arayed with the vestimentes) shal not vncouer his heade, ner cut his clothes, & shal come at no deed, & shal defyle him self nether vpon father ner mother. Who so euer now of the sede of Aaron ſ̄ prest hath eny blemysh vpō him, shal not come nye to offere ſ̄ sacrifice of the LORDE. For he hath a deformyte. Therefore shall he not preasse vnto the bred of his God, to offere it. Notwithstandinge he shal eate of the bred of his God, both of the holy, & of ſ̄ most holy: but he shal not go in to ſ̄ vayle, ner come nye the altare (for so much as he hath a blemysh vpō him) ſ̄ he vnhalowe not my Sactuary. For I am ſ̄ LORDE ſ̄ sanctifieth thē. And Moses spake this vnto Aaron & to his sonnes, and to all the children of Israel.

The xxiij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE talked with Moses, & sayde: Speake vnto Aaron, & his sonnes, ſ̄ they absteyne from ſ̄ halowed thinges of the childrē of Israel, which they haue halowed vnto me, & ſ̄ they vnhalowe not my holy name: for I am ſ̄ LORDE. Saie now vnto them & their posterities: Who so euer he be of youre sede, ſ̄ commeth nye vnto the holy thinges, which the childrē of Israel halowe vnto the LORDE, & so defyleth him self vpon the same, his soule shal perishe before my face: for I am the LORDE.

Who so euer of the sede of Aaron is a leper, or hath a runnyng yssue, shall not eate of the holy thinges, tyll he be censed. Who so toucheth eny vncleane thinge, or whose sede departeth from him by night, or who so toucheth eny worme that is vncleane vnto him, or a mā ſ̄ is vncleane vnto him, & what so euer defyleth hī, loke what soule toucheth eny soch, is vncleane vntyll the euen, & shall not eate of the holy thinges, but shall first bath his flesh with water. And whā ſ̄ Sonne is gone downe, and he cleane, then maye he eate therof, for it is his foode. Loke what dyeth alone, or is rent of wyld beestes, shall he not eate, ſ̄ he be not vncleane thereon: for I am ſ̄ LORDE. Therefore shall they kepe my lawe, ſ̄ they lade not synne vpon them, & dye therin, whan they vnhalowe them selues in it. For I am ſ̄ LORDE, ſ̄ halowe them.

A straunger shal not eate of the holy thinges, ner an housholde gest of the prestes, ner an hyred seruāūt. But yf ſ̄ prest bye a soule for his money, ſ̄ same maye eate therof. And loke who is borne in his house, maye eate of his bred also. Neuertheles yf the prestes doughter be a straungers weife, she shal not eate of the Heueofferings of holynes. But yf she be a wedowe, or deuorced, or haue no sede, & commeth agayne to hir fathers house as afore (whan she was yet a mayden in hir fathers house) then shall she eate of hir fathers bred. But no straūger shal eate therof.

Who so els eateth of the halowed thynges, vnwyttlingly, shal put ſ̄ fifti parte there vnto, and gene it vnto the prest with the halowed thinge, that they vnhalowe not ſ̄ halowed thinges of the children of Israel, which they Heue vp vnto the LORDE, lest they lade them selues with myszdoinge and trespase, whā they eate their halowed thynges, for I am ſ̄ LORDE which halowe thē.

And ſ̄ LORDE talked with Moses, & saide: Speake vnto Aaron & his sonnes, & to all ſ̄ childrē of Israel: †What so euer Israelite or straunger in Israel wyll do his offeringe, whether it be their vowe, or of fre wyl, that they wyll offere a burntofferenge vnto the LORDE, to reconeyle them selues, it shal be a male, and without blemysh, of the oxen, or lambes or goates. †What so euer hath eny blemish, shal they not offere, for they shal fynde no fauoure therewith.

And who so wyl offere an healthofferenge vnto the LORDE to separate out a vowe, or of fre wyl, oxen or shepe, it shalbe without blemysh, ſ̄ it maye be accepted. It shal haue no deformite. Yf it be blynde, or brokē, or wounded, or haue a wen, or skyrvye, or scabbed, they shal offere none soch vnto the LORDE, ner put an offeringe of eny soch vpō the altare of the LORDE.

An oxen or shepe ſ̄ hath myszshappē membres, or no rompe, mayest thou offere of a fre wyl: but to a vowe it maye not be accepted. Thou shalt offere also vnto the LORDE no-thinge ſ̄ is brused, or broken, or rent, or cutt out, & ye shal do no soch in youre londe. Morouer ye shall offere no bred vnto youre God of a straungers hande: for it is marred

D And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, ⁊ sayde: Whā an oxe, or lābe, or goate is brought forth, it shal be seuen dayes with the dame, and vpon the eight daye ⁊ therafter it maie be offered vnto the LORDE, thē is it accepted. Whether it be oxe or lambe, it shall not be slayne with his yonge in one daye.

But whā ye wil offre a thākoffringe vnto the LORDE ⁊ it maye be accepted, ye shal eate it the same daye, ⁊ kepe nothinge ouer vntyll the mornynge: for I am the LORDE. Therfore kepe now my commaundementes, and do them: for I am the LORDE, ⁊ ye vnhalowe not my holy name, ⁊ that I maye be halowed amonge the children of Israel. For I am he that halowe you, euē ⁊ LORDE, which brought you out of ⁊ lōde of Egip̄te, ⁊ I might be youre God: Euen I ⁊ LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE talked with Moses, ⁊ sayde: Speake vnto ⁊ children of Israel, and saye vnto them: These are ⁊ feastes of the LORDE, which ye shal call holy dayes. Sixe dayes shalt thou worke,* but the seuenth daie is the rest of the Sabbath, and shalbe called holy. Ye shal do no worke therin, for it is the Sabbath of the LORDE, where so euer ye dwell.

These are the feastes of the LORDE, ⁊ are called holy, which ye shal call youre feastes: * Vpon ⁊ fourtene daye of ⁊ first moneth at enen, is the LORDES Easter. And vpon ⁊ fiftene daye of the same moneth is the feast of vñleuēced bred of the LORDE. Then shall ye eate vñleuēced bred seuen dayes.

B The first daie shalbe called holy amonge you,† ye shal do no worke of bōdage therin, ⁊ seuē daies shal ye offre vnto ⁊ LORDE. The seuēth daie shalbe called holy likewise, wherin ye shal do no worke of bondage also.

And ⁊ LORDE talked with Moses, ⁊ sayde: Speake to the childrē of Israel, ⁊ saye vnto them: Whan ye come in to the lande ⁊ I shall gene you, and reape downe youre haruest, ye shal brynge a shefe of the first frutes of youre haruest vnto the prest, thē shall the shefe be waued before the LORDE, that ye maye be accepted: but this shal the prest do the nexte daye after the Sabbath. And ⁊ same daie that youre shefe is waued, shalye offre a burnt-offeringe vnto the LORDE, of a lambe which is without blemish and of one yeare olde, with the meat-offerynge, two tenth deales of fyne flour mengled with oyle, for an offerynge of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE: ⁊ the drynk-offerynge also, euē the fourth parte of an Hin of wyne.

⁊ And ye shall eate nether bred, nor cakes, ner furmentye (of new corne) tyll the same daye that ye brynge an offerynge vnto youre God. This shalbe a lawe vnto youre posterities, where so euer ye dwell.

⁊ Then shal ye nombre (from the nexte daye after the Sabbath, whan ye brought ⁊ Waueshefe) seuen whole wekes, vntyll the nexte daie after ⁊ seuēth weke, namely, fiftie daies, shal ye nombre, and offre new meat-offerynges vnto the LORDE. And out of all youre dwellings shal ye offre, namely, two Waue loaues of two tenth deales of fyne flour leuēced, and baken for the first frutes vnto ⁊ LORDE. ⁊ And with youre bred ye shal brynge seuen lambes of one yeare olde without blemish, and a yonge bullocke, and two rammes: this shalbe the LORDES burnt-offerynge, meat-offerynge, and drynk-offerynge. This is a sacrifice of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE.

D Morouer ye shal offre an he goate for a syn-offerynge, and two lambes of a yeare olde for an health-offerynge. And ⁊ prest shal waue it vpon the bred of the first frutes before the LORDE with the two lambes. And they shalbe holy vnto the LORDE, and shal be the prestes. And this daye shal ye proclame, for it shalbe called holy amonge you: no serulye worke shal ye do therin. A perpetuall lawe shall it be amonge youre posterities, where so euer ye dwell.

⁊ Whan ye reape downe ⁊ haruest of youre londe, ye shal not cut it cleane downe vpon the felde, ner gather vp all, but shal leaue it for the poore and straungers. I am the LORDE youre God.

And ⁊ LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, ⁊ saye:† Vpon the first daye of the seuenth moneth shal ye haue the holy rest of the

¶ And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: * Vpon the tenth daye in this seuenth moneth is the daye of reconcylinge, which shalbe an holy conuocation with you. Ye shal humble youre soules therin, and offre vnto the LORDE, and shal do no seruyle worke in this daye: for it is the daye of attonement, that ye maye be reconcyled before the LORDE youre God. For what soule so euer humbleth not him self vpon this daye, the same shalbe roted out from amonge his people. And what soule so euer doth eny worke this daye, the same wil I destroye from amonge his people: therefore shall ye do no worke. This shalbe a perpetuall lawe vnto youre posterities, where so euer ye dwell. It is the rest of youre Sabbath, that ye maye humble youre soules. Vpon the nyenth daye of ʒ moneth at euen, shal ye kepe this holy daye from the euen forth vntyll the euē daye.

¶ And the LORDE talked with Moses, ʒ sayde: "Vpon the fiftene daye of the seuenth moneth, is the feast of Tabernacles seuen dayes vnto the LORDE. The first daye shalbe an holy cōuocation: no seruyle worke shal ye do therin. Seuen dayes shal ye offre vnto the LORDE. The eight daye shalbe an holy conuocation vnto you also, and ye shal offre vnto the LORDE: for it is the daye of gatheringe together: No seruyle worke shall ye do therin.

These are the holy daies of the LORDE, which ye shall proclame and holde for holy conuocations, that ye maye offre vnto the LORDE burntofferings, meatofferings, drynkofferings and other offeringes, euery one accordinge to his daye, besyde ʒ Sabbathes of ʒ LORDE, and youre giftes, and vowes, and frewylofferynges, that ye offre vnto the LORDE.

¶ So vpon the fiftene daye of the seuenth moneth, whan ye haue brought in the increase of the londe, ye shall kepe the LORDES feast seuen dayes longe. The first daye shalbe kepte holy daye, and the eight daye shalbe kepte holy daye also. And vpon the first daie ye shal take of ʒ goodly frutefull trees, branches of palme trees, ʒ bowes of thicke trees, and Wyllies of the broke, and seuē dayes shal ye be mery before ʒ LORDE youre God: and thus shal ye kepe the feast vnto the LORDE seuen dayes in the yere. This shalbe a perpetuall lawe amonge youre posterities, that they kepe holy daye thus in ʒ seuenth moneth. Seuen dayes shal ye dwell in bothes. Who so euer is an Israelite borne, shal dwell in bothes, that they which come after you, maye knowe, how that I made ʒ children of Israel to dwell in bothes, whan I brought them out of the lōde of Egipte. I am the LORDE youre God. And Moses tolde the children of Israel these holy daies of the LORDE.

The xxiij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, ʒ A sayde: "Cōnaunde the children of Israel, that they brynge pure oyle olyue beaten for lightes, that it maye be allwaye put in the lampes, without before the vayle of wytnesse in the Tabernacle of wytnesse. The lāpes shal he dresse vpon the pure candilstick before the LORDE perpetually.

And thou shalt take fyne floure, and bake twolue cakes therof: "two tēth deales shal euery cake haue, ʒ thou shalt laye them sixe on a rowe vpō the pure table before the LORDE. ¶ He that slayeth a man, shall dye † death, but * he that slayeth a beest, shall paye for it. Soule for soule. Moses tolde the children of Israel. And they brought him that had cursed, out of † hoost, and stoned him. Thus dyd the childre of Israel as the LORDE cōmaunded Moses.

The xrb. Chapter.

¶ AND the LORDE talked with Moses vpon mount Sinai, and sayde: Speake to the children of Israel, and saye vnto them: † Whan ye come in to the londe, † I shal geue you, the londe shal rest vnto the LORDE, so that thou sowe thy felde sixe yeares, and sixe yeares cut thy vines, and gather in the frutes. But in the seuenth yeare the lōde shal haue his Sabbath of rest for a Sabbath vnto the LORDE, wherein thou shalt not sowe thy felde ner cut thy vines.

Loke what groweth of it self after thy harvest, thou shalt not reape it. And the grapes that growe without thy labour, shalt thou not gather, for so much as it is the yeare of the londes rest: † But the rest of the londe shalt thou kepe for this intent, that thou mayest eate therof, thy seruante, thy mayde, thy hyrelinge, thy gest, thy straüger with the, thy catell, and the beestes in thy londe. All the increase shal be meate.

And thou shalt nombre seuen of these 33 yeare Sabbathes, that seuen yeares maye be tolde seuen tymes, and so the tyme of the seuen yeare Sabbathes make nyne and fourty yeares. Then shalt thou let the blast of the horne go thorow all youre londe, vpon the tenth daye of the seuenth moneth, euen in † daye of attonement. And ye shal halowe the fiftieth yeare, and shall call it a fre yeare in † londe, for all them that dwell therein: for it is the yeare of Iubilye. † Then shall euery one amonge you come agayne to his possession and to his kynred: for the fiftieth yeare is † yeare of Iubilye. Ye shal not sowe ner reape it that groweth of it self, ner gather the grapes, that growe without labour. For the yeare of Iubilye shall be holy amonge you. But loke what the felde beareth, that shall ye eate. This is the yeare of Iubilye, wherein ye shal come agayne euery man to his owne.

Now whan thou sellest ought vnto thy neighbour, or byest eny thinge of him, there shal none of you oppresse his brother: but accordinge to the nombre of the yeare of Iubilye shalt thou bye it of him: and accordinge to the nombre of the yeares of increase shall he sell it vnto the. Accordinge to the multitude of the yeares shalt thou rayse the pryce, and accordinge to the fewnesse of the yeares shalt thou mynish the pryce: for he shall sell it vnto the accordinge to the nombre of the increase. Therefore let no man defraude his neighbour, but feare thy God. For I am the LORDE youre God. Wherefore do after my statutes, and kepe my lawes, so † ye do them that ye maye dwell safe in the londe. For the londe shal geue you hir frute, so that ye shal haue ynough to eate, and dwell safe therein.

And yf ye wolde saye: What shall we eate in the seuenth yeare, in as much as we shal not sowe, ner gather in oure increase? I wyll sende my blessinge vpon you in the sixte yeare, that it shal brynge forth frute for thre yeare: so that ye shal sowe in † eight yeare, and eate of the olde frute vntyll the nyenth yeare, that ye maye eate of the olde tyll new frutes come agayne. ¶ When thy brother waxeth poore, and selleth  $\hat{y}$  his possession, and his nexte kynszmā commeth to him,  $\hat{y}$  he maye redeme it: then shall he redeme that his brother solde. But whan a man hath none to redeme it, and cā get so moch with his hande as to redeme one parte, then shall it be rekened how many yeares it hath bene solde, and the remnaunt shal be restored vnto him to whom he solde it,  $\hat{y}$  he maie come agayne to his possession. But yf his hande can not get so moch, as to haue one parte agayne, thē shal it  $\hat{y}$  he solde be styll in the hande of the byer vntyll  $\hat{y}$  yeare of Iubilye: In  $\hat{y}$  same shal it go out, and returne to his owner agayne.

¶ He that selleth a dwellinge house within the walles of the cite, hath an whole yeare respyte to lowse it out agayne: that shall be the tyme, wherin he maye redeme it. But yf he redeme it not afore the whole yeare be out, then shal he that bought it, and his successeurs kepe it for euer, and it shall not go out lowse in the yeare of Iubilye. Neuertheles yf it be an house in a vyllage that hath no wall aboute it, it shall be counted like vnto the felde of the cōtre, and maye be redeemed and shal go out fre in the yeare of Iubilye.

The cities of the Leuites, and the houses in the cities that their possession is in, maye allwaye be redeemed. Who so purchaceth ought of the Leuites, shal leaue it in the yeare of Iubilye, whether it be house or cite that he hath had in possession. For the houses in the cities of the Leuites are their possession amonge the children of Israel. But the felde before their cities shal not be solde, for it is their awne for euer.

¶ Whan thy brother waxeth poore, and falleth in decaye besyde the, thou shalt receaue him as a straunger, or gestic, that he maye lyue by the: and thou shalt take no  $\dagger$  vsury of him, ner more then thou hast geuē, but shalt feare thy God, that thy brother maye lyue besydes the. For thou shalt not lende him thy money vpon vsury, ner delyuer him thy meate vpon vantage. For I am the LORDE youre God, which haue brought you out of the lode of Egipte, to geue you the lande of Canaan, and to be youre God.

¶ When thy brother waxeth poore besyde the, and selleth himself vnto the, thou shalt not holde him as a bōde mā: but as an hyred seruaunte and as a sojourner shal he be with the, and serue the vntyll  $\hat{y}$  yeare of Iubilye. Then shal he departe lowse from the,  $\tau$  his childrē with him,  $\tau$  shal returne to his awne kinred, and to his fathers possession: for they are my seruautes, whom I brought out of the londe of Egipte. Therefore shal they not be solde like bondmen. And thou shalt not raigne ouer them with crueltie, but shalt feare thy God. But yf thou wylt haue bōde seruautes and maydens, thou shalt bye them of the Heithen, that are rounde aboute you: of the children of the sojourners and straungers amonge you, and of their generacions with you, and that are borne in youre londe, the same shal ye haue for bonde seruautes,  $\tau$  shal possesse them,  $\tau$  youre children after you for an euerlastinge possession, these shalbe youre bondmen. ¶ But ouer youre brethren the children of Israel, there shall none of you raigne ouer another with crueltie.

¶ Whan a straunger or sojourner waxeth ryche by the, and thy brother waxeth poore besyde him,  $\tau$  selleth him self vnto  $\hat{y}$  straunger or sojourner by the, or to eny of his kynne, then shall he haue right (after that he is solde) to be redeemed agayne. And eny of his brethren maye lowse him out: or his vnclē or his vnclēs sonne, or eny other kynszman of his kynred: Or yf his awne hande getteth so moch, he shal lowse him self out, and shal reken with him that bought him, from  $\hat{y}$  yeare that he solde him self, vntyll the yeare of Iubilye. And  $\hat{y}$  money shal be counted acordinge to the nombre of the yeares that he was solde, and his wages of the whole tyme shalbe rekened withall.

Yf there be yet many yeares vnto  $\hat{y}$  yeare of Iubilye, then shal he (acordinge to the same) geue the more for his delyueraunce, therafter as he is solde. Yf there remayne but few yeares vnto the yeare of Iubilye, then shall he geue agayne therafter for his redemption. And his wages from yeare to yeare shall he reken withall, and thou shalt not let \* Ye shall make you no Idols ner ymage, and ye shal reare you vp no pilier, ner set vp eny markstone in youre londe, to bowe youre selues therto. For I am the LORDE youre God. Kepe my Sabbathes, and stonde in awe of my Sanctuary. I am the LORDE.

The xxvi. Chapter.

A Yf ye wyl walke now in my statutes, and kepe my commaundementes and do them, the wyl I geue you rayne in due season, and y londe shal geue hir increase, and the trees of y felde shal brynge forth their frute. And the thesreshinge tyme shall reache vnto the wyne haruest, and the wyne haruest shal reache vnto the sowynge tyme. And ye shall eate youre bred in plenteousnes, and shal dwell safe in youre londe. I wil geue peace in youre londe, so that ye shall slepe, and no man shall make you afayed. I wyl ryd euell beestes out of youre londe, and there shall no swerde go thorow youre londe.

Ye shal chace youre enemies, and they shal fall in to y swerde before you. † Fyue of you shal chace an hundreth: and an hundreth of you shal chace ten thousande. For youre enemies shall fall in to the swerde before you.

B And I wyl turne me vnto you, and wyl cause you to growe and increase, and wyl set vp my couenaunt with you. And ye shal eate of the olde stoare, and shall let go the olde for plenteousnesse of the new. † I will haue my dwellinge amonge you, and my soule shall not refuse you. And I wyl walke amonge you, and wyl be youre God, and ye shalbe my people. For I am the LORDE youre God, which brought you out of the londe of Egipte, that ye shulde not be their bondmen. And I haue brokē the cepter of youre yocke, and caused you to go vp right.

‡ But yf ye wil not harken vnto me, ner do all these commaundementes, and wyl despyse my statutes, and yf youre soules refuse my lawes, y ye wyl not do all my commaunde-mentes, and shal let my couenaunt stonde, then wyl I do this agayne vnto you. I wyl vyset you shortly with swellnges and feuers, which shal destroye y eyes, and consume awaie y hert. Ye shal sowe youre sede in vayne, and youre enemies shal eate it vp.

And I wyl set my face agaynst you, and ye shal be slayne before youre enemies. And they that hate you, shal haue dominion ouer you. § And ye shall flye, whā no man chaseth you.

But yf ye wyl not herken vnto me for all this, then wyl I make it yet seuen tymes more, to punysh you for youre synnes, that I maye breake y pryde of youre strength, and wyl make youre heauen lyke yron, and youre earth as brasse: and youre trauaile and labour shal be but lost, so that youre londe shall not geue hir increase, and the trees in the londe shal not brynge forth their frute.

Yf ye walke yet agaynst me, and wyl not harken vnto me, then wyl I make it yet seuen tymes more, to punysh you because of youre synnes: and wyl sende wyld beestes amonge you, which shal robbe you, and destroye youre catell, and make you fewer, and youre hye waye shal become waite.

But yf ye wyl not yet be reformed here withall, and wyl walke contrary vnto me, then wyl I walke contrary vnto you also, and wyl punysh you yet seuen tymes for youre synnes. And I wyl brynge vpon you a swerde of vengeance, which shall auenge my Testament. And though ye gather you together in to youre cities, yet wyl I sende the pestilence amonge you, and wyl delyuer you in to the handes of youre enemies. For I wil destroye youre prouysion of bred, so y ten women shall bake youre bred in one oven, and youre bred shal be delyuered out by weight. ¶ And whan ye eate, ye shall not haue ynough.

Yf ye wyl not yet for all this harken vnto me, and wyl walke contrary vnto me, then wyl I also walke cōtrary vnto you in wrathfull displeasure, and wyl punysh you seuenfolde because of youre synnes, so that ye shal eate the flesh of youre sonnes and daughters. And I wyl destroye youre hye altares, and rote out youre ymages, and wyl cast youre bodies vpon the bodies of youre Idols, and my soule shall abhorre you. And youre cities wyl I make waist, and brynge youre churches to naught, and wyl not smell youre swete odoures.

Thus wyl I make the londe desolate, so that youre enemies shall dwell therin, and make it waist: but you will I scater amonge the Heythen, and drawe out the swerde after you, so that youre londe shal be waist, & youre cities desolate.

F Then shall the londe reioyse in hir Sabbathes, as longe as it lyeth wayst, and ye be in the enemies londe. Yee then shal the londe kepe holy daye, and reioyse in hir rest, as longe as it lieth wayst, because it coude not rest in youre Sabbathes, whan ye dwelt therin.

And as for them that remayne of you, I wyl make them faynte harted in the londe of their enemies, so that a shakynge leaf shall chace them. And they shall flye from it, as though a swerde persecuted them, and shal fall noman folowynge vpon them. And they shall fall one vpon another (as it were before the swerde) and noman yet chacynge them. And ye shall not be so bolde, as to withstonde youre enemies, and shal perishe amonge the Heythen, and the londe of youre enemies shal eate you vp.

And they that are left of you, shall pyne awaye in their mysdede, euen in the enemies londe, and in the mysdedes of their fathers shall they consume awaye. Then shall they knowlege their mysdedes, and the mysdedes of their fathers in the trespase, wherwith they haue trespassed agaynst me, and walked contrary vnto me. Therefore wyl I also walke contrary vnto thē, and wyl brynge them in to the enemies londe.

E Then shal their vncircumcysed herte be tamed. And then shall they ende their mysdedes. And I shal thinke vpō my couenaūt with Iacob, and vpon my couenaunt with Isaac, and vpon my couenaunt with Abraham, and wyl thynke vpon the lōde. As for the londe, whan it shalbe left of them, it shal reioyse in hir Sabbathes, euen then, whan it lyeth waist, and they tulle it not. And they shall make attonement for their mysdedes, because they despyed my lawes, & their soules refused my statutes. Morouer I haue not so refused them, that they shulde be in the enemies londe: nether haue I so vtterly abhorred them, that I wolde brynge them to naught, and breake my couenaunt with them:

for I am <sup>g</sup> LORDE their God. And for their sake I wyl remēbre *my first couenaūt, whā I brought them out of <sup>g</sup>londe of Egyp̄te in the sight of the Heythen, <sup>g</sup>I might be their God. Euen I the LORDE.

These are the ordinaunces, statutes and lawes, which <sup>g</sup>LORDE made betwixte him and the children of Israel vpon mount Sinai, by the hande of Moses.

The xxvij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE talked with Moses, & A sayde: Speake to <sup>g</sup>children of Israel, & saye vnto them: Yf eny man make a speciall vowe vnto <sup>g</sup>LORDE, so <sup>g</sup>he pryse a soule, then shal this be the valuacion: A mā of twentye yeare olde vnto the thre score yeare, shalt thou set at fiftie syluer Sycles, after the Cycle of the Sanctuary: but a woman at thirtie Sycles. Yf it be fyue yeare olde vnto twentye yeare, thou shalt set it at twentye Sycles, whan it is a man childe: <sup>b</sup>but a woman at ten Sycles. Yf it be a moneth olde vnto fyue yeare, thou shalt set it at fyue Sycles of syluer, whan it is a māchilde: but a woman at thre Syluer Sycles. Yf he be thre score yeare olde and aboue, thē shalt thou set him at fiftene Sicles whā it is a mā: a womā at tē Sicles. Yf he be to poore so to be set, thē let him present himself to <sup>g</sup>prest, & <sup>g</sup>prest shal value him. Neuertheles he shal value him, accordinge as <sup>g</sup>hāde of him that vowed, is able to get. But yf it be a beest <sup>g</sup>maye B be offred vnto <sup>g</sup>LORDE, all <sup>g</sup>is offred vnto <sup>g</sup>LORDE of soch, is holy: it shal not be altered ner chaunged, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good. Yf eny man chaunge it, one beest for another, then shal they both be holy vnto <sup>g</sup>LORDE. But yf <sup>g</sup>beest be vncleane which maye not be offred vnto <sup>g</sup>LORDE, thē shal it be set, before <sup>g</sup>prest, and <sup>g</sup>prest shal value it, whether it be good or bad, & it shal stonde at the prestes valuyng. But yf eny man wil bye it out, he shal geue the fifth parte more, to that it was set at.

Whan eny mā sanctifieth his house vnto the LORDE for <sup>g</sup>Sanctuary, the prest shal value it, whether it be good or bad. And as the prest valueth it, so shal it stonde. But yf he <sup>g</sup>sanctified it, wyl redeme it, he shal geue <sup>g</sup>fifth parte of syluer therto, aboue that it was set at: So shal it be his.

C Yf eny man halowe a pece of lode of his heretage vnto the LORDE, it shalbe set acordinge to  $\hat{y}$  it beareth. Yf it beare an Homer of barlye, it shalbe valued at fiftye Sycles of syluer. But yf he halowe his londe immediatly from the yeare of Iubilye forth, then shal it be set acordinge to  $\hat{y}$  value therof. Yf he haue halowed it after the yeare of Iubilye, then shal the prest rekē it, acordinge to  $\hat{y}$  yeares  $\hat{y}$  remayne vnto  $\hat{y}$  yeare of Iubilye, & thereafter shal he set it the lower.

But yf he  $\hat{y}$  sanctified the londe, wil redeme it agayne, then shal he geue the fifth parte of syluer therto, aboue that it was set at: So shal it be his. Yf he wil not lowse it out, but selleth it vnto another, then shal he redeme it nomore: but the same londe whan it goeth out fre in  $\hat{y}$  yeare of Iubilye, shal be holy vnto the LORDE, as a dedicated felde, and shalbe the prestes inheritaunce.

B Yf eny man halowe vnto the LORDE a felde, which he hath bought, and is not his inheritaunce, then shal  $\hat{y}$  prest reken it, what it is worth vnto the yeare of Iubilye, & the same daye shall he geue the pryce that it is set at, vnto the LORDE for the Sanctuary. But in  $\hat{y}$  yeare of Iubilye it shal returne vnto him that bought it,  $\hat{y}$  it maye be his inheritaunce in the londe. All maner of prysinge shalbe made acordinge to the Sytle of the Sactuary.\* One Sytle maketh xx. Geras.

* Exo. 30. b. Nu. 3. g. Eze. 45. b.

\* The first borne amonge  $\hat{y}$  catell (which belongeth vnto the LORDE) shall no man Sanctifie vnto the LORDE, whether it be oxen or shepe, for it is the LORDES all ready. But yf there be eny vnclene thinge vpon the beest, thē shal it be lowsed out thereafter as it is worth, and the fifth parte shalbe geuen more therto. Yf he wil not redeme it, thē let it be solde, as it is worth.

There shall no dedicated thinge be solde BE ner bought out,  $\hat{y}$  eny man dedicateth vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, of all  $\hat{y}$  is his good, whether it be mē, catell or lode. For euery dedicated thīge, is most holy vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE. There shal no dedicated thīge of mā be bought out, but shal dye the death. All the tythes in the londe, both of the sedē of the londe, & of  $\hat{y}$  frutes of the trees, are the LORDES, & shal be holy vnto the LORDE. But yf eny man wil redeme his tithes, he shall geue the fifth parte more therto. And all the tithes of oxen & shepe, & that goeth vnder the rod, the same is an holy tythe vnto the LORDE. It shall not be axed whether it be good or bad, nether shall it be chaunged. But yf eny man chaunge it, then both it & that it was chaunged withall, shal be holy, & not redemed.

These are the cōmaundementes, which  $\hat{y}$  LORDE gaue Moses in charge vnto childrē of Israel vpon mount Sinai.

The iij. Chapter.

THESE are the generacios of Aaron & Moses, whan ŷ LORDE spake vnto Moses at ŷ same tyme vpon mount Sinai. And these are ŷ names of the sonnes of Aron. <sup>a</sup>The firstborne, Nadab: then Abihu, Eleasar & Ithamar. These are ŷ names of the sonnes of Aaron, † which were anoynted to be prestes, & their handes fylled for ŷ presthode. <sup>a</sup>But Nadab & Abihu dyed before ŷ LORDE, whā they offred straūge fyre before ŷ LORDE, in ŷ wyldernesse of Sinai, & had no sonnes. But Eleasar and Ithamar executed ŷ prestes office with their father Aaron.

<sup>a</sup>And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, & sayde: Bringe hither the trybe of Leui, and set them before Aaron the prest, ŷ they maye serue with him, & wayte vpon him & vpō the whole congregacion before ŷ Tabernacle of witesse, and execute the seruyce of the habitacion, and kepe all the apparell of the Tabernacle of witesse, and wayte vpon the children of Israel, to mynistrre in the seruyce of the habitacion.

§ And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and saide: Beholde, I haue takē the Leuites frō amonge the childrē of Israel, for all the first borne that open the Matrix amonge the children of Israel, so that the Leuites shalbe myne. ¶ For the firstborne are myne, sence ŷ tyme that I smote all the first borne in ŷ lande of Egipte, whā I sanctified vnto me all the first borne in Israel, from mē vnto catell, that they shulde be myne. I the LORDE.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses in the wyldernesse of Sinai, and sayde: Nombre the children of Leui after their fathers houses and kynreds, all that are males of a moneth olde and aboue.

So Moses nombred them acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, as he had commaunded. And these were the children of Leui with their names: <sup>a</sup>Gerson, Kahath, Merari. The names of the children of Gerson in their kynreds, were: Libni and Semei.

The childrē of Kahath in their kynreds were, Amram, Iezehar, Hebron and Vsiel.

The children of Merari in their kynreds, were Maheli and Musi. These are the kynreds of Leui after their fathers houses.

These are ŷ kynreds of Gerson: The Libnites and Semeites, the summe was founde in nombre, seuen thousande and fyue hundreth, of all that were males of a moneth olde and aboue. And the same kynreds of the Gersonites shal pitche behinde the Habitation on the west syde: Let Eliasaph the sonne of Lael be their ruler. And they shal waite vpon the Tabernacle of witesse, of the habitacion, and of the tent, and couerynges therof, and the hangynge in the dore of the Tabernacle of witesse, the hangynge aboute the courte, & the hangynge in ŷ courtedore, which (courte) goeth aboute the habitacion and the altare, and the cordes of it, & all that belongeth to the seruyce therof.

These are the kynreds of Kahath: The Amramites, the Iezeharites, the Hebronites, and Vsielites, all that were males of a moneth olde & aboue, in nombre eight thousande and sixe hundreth, waytinge vpon the Tabernacle of the Sanctuary, & shal pitch on the south syde of ŷ Habitation: Let Elisaphan the sonne of Vsiel be their ruler. ### The iiij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses ¶ Aaron, ¶ sayde: Take ¶ summe of the childrē of Kahath from amonge the childrē of Leui, after their kynreds ¶ fathers houses; from thirtie yeare and aboue vntill fiftye yeare, all that are mete for the warre, that they maye do the worke in the Tabernacle of witnesse. This shal be the office of the children of Kahath in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, which is most holy.

When the hoost breaketh vp, Aaron and his sonnes shall go in, and take downe the vayle, and couer the Arke of wytnesse therewith, and laye the couerynge of doo skynnes vpon it, and sprede a whole yalowe clothe aboue theron, and put his stauers therein. And vpon the shewe table they shal sprede a yalowe clothe also, and set theron the disshes, spones, flatpeces and pottes to poure out and in, and the daylie bred shal lye vpon it, and they shal sprede a purple clothe therouer, and couer it with a couerynge of doo skynnes, and put the stauers of it therein.

And they shal take a yalowe clothe, and couer the cādilstick of light therewith, and his lampes, with his snuffers and outquenchers, and all the oyle vessels that belonge to the seruyce, and aboute all this shal they put a couerynge of doo skynnes, and put it vpon stauers.

They shal swepe the ashes also from the altare, and sprede a clothe of scarlet ouer it, and set all his vessels thereon, that they occupye vpon it: colepannes, fleshokes, shouels, basens, with all the apparell of the altare, and they shal sprede a couerynge of doo skynnes thereon, and put his staues therto.

Now whan Aaron and his sonnes haue done this, and haue couered the Sanctuary & all the ornamētes therof, whan the hoost breaketh vp, <sup>a</sup>then shal the children of Kahath go in, that they maye beare it, and the Sanctuary shall they not touche, * lest they dye. This is the charge of the childrē of Kahath in the Tabernacle of wytnesse.

¶ And Eleasar the sonne of Aaron †prest, shal haue the office, to prepare the oyle for the light, and the spyces for the incense, and the daylie meat offeringe, and the anoyntinge oyle, to order the whole habitation, & all that therin is, in the Sanctuary and the ornamentes therof.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses and Aaron, & sayde: Ye shal not destroye the trybe of the kynred of the Kahathites amōge the Leuites, but this shal ye do with them, ‡they maye lyeue & not dye, yf they touche the most holy. Aaron and his sonnes shal go in, and appoynte euery one vnto his office & charge. But they shal not go in, presumptuously to lōke vpon §the Sanctuary, lest they die. And ¶the LORDE spake vnto Moses and Aaron & sayde: Take the summe of the children of Gerson also, ¶after their fathers house & kynred, from thirtie yeare & aboue, vntyll fiftie yeare, & appoynte them all ¶they are mete for the warre, to haue an office in the Tabernacle of wytnesse.

¶ This shalbe the office of the kynred of the Gersonites, euē to serue & to beare. They shal beare the curtaynes of the habitation and of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and his couerynge and the coueringe of doo skynnes, that is aboue thereon, and the hanginge in the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the hanginge aboute the courte, which goeth aboute the habitation and the altare, and their cordes, and all the instrumentes ¶they serue for the, and all that belongeth to their occupiēge. Acordinge vnto the worde of Aaron and of his sonnes, shal all the office of the children of Gerson be done, what so euer they shall beare and occupye. And ye shal se, that they wayte vpon all their charge. This shal be ¶the office of ¶the kynred of ¶the childrē of ¶the Gersonites in ¶the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And their waytinge shal be vnder ¶the hāde of Ithamar, the sonne of Aarō the prest.

The children of Merari after their kynred and fathers house, shalt thou appoynte also, from thirtie yeare and aboue, vnto fiftie yeare, all that are mete for the warre, ¶they maye haue an office in the Tabernacle of wytnesse. But vpon this charge shall they wayte acordinge to all their office in ¶the Tabernacle of wytnesse, that they beare the bordes of the Habitation, and the barres, and pilers, and sokettes: the pilers of the courte also rounde aboute, and the sokettes and nales and cordes, with all their apparell, acordinge to all their seruyce. And vnto euery one shall ye appoynte his porcion of charge to waite vpon the apparell. Let this be the office of the kyured of the children of Merari, all that they shall do in the Tabernacle of wytnesse vnder the hande of Ithamar the sonne of Aaron the prest.

And Moses and Aaron with the captaynes of the congregacion, nombred the children of ¶the Kahathites, acordinge to their kynreds and houses of their fathers, from thirtie yeare and aboue, vntyll fiftie, all that were mete for the warre, to haue offyce in the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And the summe was, two thousande, seuen hundred and fyftie. This is the summe of the kynred of the Kahathites (which all had seruyce in the Tabernacle of wytnesse) whom Moses and Aaron nombred, acordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.

The children of Gerson were nombred also in their kynreds and fathers houses from thirtie yeare and aboue vntyll fiftie, all that were mete for the warre, to haue office in ¶the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the summe was two thousande, syxe hundred and thirtie. This is ¶the summe of the kynred of the childrē of Gerson, which all had to do in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, whom Moses and Aaron nombred, acordinge to ¶the worde of ¶the LORDE.

from thirtie yeare and aboue vntyll fyfthe, all that were mete for the warre, to haue office in the Tabernacle of witnessse, & the summe was thre thousande, and two hundred. This is the summe of the kynred of the childrē of Merari, whom Moses and Aaron nombred, accordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.

The summe of all the Leuites, whom Moses and Aaron with the captaynes of Israel tolde, after their kinreds and fathers houses, from thyrtye yeare and aboue vntyll fyfthe, all that wente in to do euery one his office, and to beare the burthen in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, was eight thousande fyue hundred and foure score, which were nombred accordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses, euery one to his office & charge, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

The 6. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Commaunde the children of Israel, * they put out of the hoost * all the lepers, and all that haue yssues, and that are defyled vpon the deed, both men and womē shall they putt out of the hoost, that they defyle not their tentes, wherin I dwell amonge them. And the children of Israel dyd so, and put them out of the hoost, as the LORDE had sayde vnto Moses.

And the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel & saye vnto them: Whan a man or woman doth a synne to eny body, and offendeth therewith agaynst the LORDE, then hath that soule a trespase vpon it. † And they shall knowlege their synne, that they haue done, and shall make amendes for their trespase, euen with the whole summe, and put the fifth parte more therto, and geue it vnto him, agaynst whom they haue trespassed. But yf there be noman to make the amendes vnto for the offence, he hath trespassed agaynst him, then shal the reconcylynge be made vnto the LORDE for the prest, besydes the ramme of the attonemēt, wherwith he shalbe reconcyled.

Likewyse all the Heueofferynges of all that the children of Israel halowe vnto the LORDE, and offre vnto the prest, shall be his. And who so haloweth eny thinge, it shalbe his. And who so geueth the prest eny thinge, it shal be his also.

And the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake to the children of Israel, and saye vnto them: Whan eny mans wife goth asyde, and trespaceth agaynst him, & eny mā lye with her fleshlye, and the thinge be yet hyd from his eyes, and is not come to light that she is defiled, and he can brynge no witnessse agaynst her (for she was not takē therin) and the sprete of gelousye kyndleth him, so that he is gelous ouer his wife: whether she be vncleane or not vncleane, then shal he brynge her vnto the prest, and brynge an offerynge for her, euen the tenth parte of an Ephā of barley meele, and shal poure no oyle theron, ner put frankensence vpon it: for it is an offerynge of gelousy, and an offerynge of remembraunce, that remembreth synne.

Then shall the prest brynge her, and sett her before the LORDE, and take of the holy water in an earthen vessel, and put of the dust that is on the floore of the habitacion, in to the water. And he shal set the wife before the LORDE, and vncouer hir heade, and the offeringe of remembraunce which is an offeringe of gelousy, shall he laye vpon hir handes. And the prest shal haue in his hande bytter cursinge water, and shal coniure the wife, & saye vnto her: Yf no man haue lyē with the, and thou hast not gone asyde from thy huszbande, to defyle thy self, then shall not these bytter cursinge waters hurte the. But yf thou hast gone asyde from thy huszbande, so that thou art defyled, and some other man hath lyen with the besyde thy huszbande, then shall the prest coniure the wife with this curse, and shal saye vnto her: The LORDE sett the to a curse and a coniuration amonge thy people, so that the LORDE make thy thye rotte, and thy wombe to berst. So go this cursed water in to thy body, that thy wombe berst, and thy thye rotte. And the wife shal saye: Amen Amen.

So the prest shall wryte this curse in a byll, and wash it out with the water, and shall geue the wife of the bytter cursinge waters to drynke. And whā the cursinge water is gone in her, so the it is bytter vnto her then shal the prest take the gelousy offerynge out of the wyues hande, and waue it for a meatofferynge before the LORDE, and offre it vpon the altare: namely, he shall take an handfull of the meatofferynge for hir remembrance, & burne it vpon the altare, & then geue the wife the water to drinke. And whā she hath dronken the water, yf she be defyled and haue trespassed agaynst hir huszbande, then shal the cursinge water go in to her, and be so bytter, that hir wombe shal berst, and hir thye shall rotte, and the wife shal be a curse amonge hir people. But yf the same wife be not defyled, but is cleane, then shall it do her no harme, so that she maye be with childe.

This is the lawe of gelousy, whan a wyfe goeth asyde from hir huszbande, and is defyled: Or whan ſprete of gelousy kyndleth a man, so that he is gelous ouer his wyfe, ſhe brynge her before the LORDE, and that ſhe prest do all with her acordinge vnto this lawe. And ſhe man shalbe gittlesse of the synne, but the wife shall beare hir mysdede.

The vi. Chapter.

AND the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, and saye vnto them: Whan a man or woman separateth them selues, to vowe a vowe of abstinence vnto the LORDE, he shal absteyne from wyne and strōge drynke. * Vyneger of wyne & of stronge drynke shal he not drynke, ner that is pressed out of grapes: he shall nether eate fresh ner drye grapes, so longe as his abstinence endureth. Morouer he shall eate nothinge that is made of the vyne tre, from the vyne cornels vnto the hulle.

As longe as the vowe of his abstinence endureth, there shall no rasoure come vnto his heade, tyll the tyme be out which he absteyneth vnto the LORDE, for he is holy.

And he shall let the heer of his heade growe, and stonde bare openly. All the tyme ouer y he absteyneth vnto the LORDE, shal he go to no deed. Nether shal he defyle him self at ſ death of his father, of his mother, of his brother, or of his sister. For the abstinence of his God is vpon his heade, and ſ whole tyme of his abstinence shall he be holy vnto the LORDE.

B And yf it chaunce eny man to dye sodenly before him, then shal ſ heade of his abstinence be defyled. Therefore shal he shauē his heade in the daye of his clensynge, that is vpon the seuenth daye: and vpon y eight daye shall he brynge two turtill doues, or two yonge pigeons, vnto the prest before ſ dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And the prest shall make the one a synofferynge, and the other a burntofferynge, and make an attonement for him, because he defyled him self vpon ſ deed, and so shal he halowe his heade the same daye, that he maye holde out the tyme of his abstinence vnto the LORDE, and he shall brynge a lambe of a yere olde for a trespaceofferynge. But ſ daies afore shal he but lost, because his abstinence was defyled.

This is the lawe of the absteiner. Whan the tyme of his abstinence is out, he shal be brought before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And he shal brynge his offeringe vnto the LORDE, euen an he lambe of a yere olde without blemish for a burntofferynge, & a she lambe of a yere olde without blemish for a synofferynge, and a ramme with out blemish for an healthofferynge, & a maide with vleuended cakes of fyne floure myngled with oyle, and swete wafers anoynted with oyle, & their meatofferings & drynkofferings.

And the prest shall brynge it before the LORDE, and shal make his synofferynge and his burntofferynge, and ſ ramme shal he make an healthofferynge vnto the LORDE, with ſ maunde of the vleuended bred. His meatofferynge and drinkofferynge shal he make also. And he shall shauē the heade of the absteyners abstinence before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and shall take the heade heer of his abstinence, and cast it vpon the fyre that is vnder ſ healthofferynge.

And the sodden shulder of the ramme shall he take, and an vleuended cake out of the maunde, and a swete wafer, and laye them vpon the handes of the absteiner: (after that he hath shauen of his abstinence.) And he shal Waue them before the LORDE. This is holy for the prest with the Waue brest, and Heue shulder. After that, maye the absteiner drynke wyne. This is the lawe of the absteiner, which voweth his offeringe vnto the LORDE for his abstinence, besydes that, which his hande can get. As he hath vowed, so shall he do acordinge to the lawe of his abstinence.

and saye: Thus shal ye saye vnto the childre of Israel, whan ye blesse them.

* The LORDE blesse the, and kepe the.

The LORDE make his face to shyne vpō the, and be mercifull vnto the.

The LORDE lift vp his countenance vpon the, and geue the peace.

For they shal put my name vpō the children of Israel, that I maye blesse them.

The vij. Chapter.

AND whan Moses had set vp the Habitation and anoynted it,* and sanctified it with all the apparell therof: and had anoynted and halowed the altare also with all his vessels, Then offred the captaynes of Israel, which were the rulers in their fathers houses.

For they were the captaynes amonge f kynreds, and stode ouer the that were nombred. And they brought their offerynges before the LORDE, sixe couered charettes, and twolue oxen, for euery two captaynes a charett, and an oxe for euery one, and brought them before the habitacion.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Take it of them, that it maye serue for the mynistracion of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and geue it vnto the Leuites, vnto euery one accordinge to his office. Then toke Moses the charettes and oxen, and gaue them vnto the Leuites.

Two charettes and foure oxen gaue he vnto f children of Gerson accordinge to their office: and foure charettes and eight oxen gaue he vnto the children of Merari accordinge to their office, vnder the hande of Ithamar the sonne of Aaron the prest.

But vnto the children of Kahath he gaue nothyng, because † they had an holy office vpon them, and must beare vpō their shulders. And the captaines offred to the dedicacion of the altare, in the daye whan it was anoynted, and offred their giftes before the altare.

And f LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Let euery captayne brynge his offerynge vpon his daye to the dedicacion of the altare.

On the first daye, Nahasson the sonne of Aminadab, of the trybe of Iuda, offred his gifte. And his gifte was a syluer charger, worth an hundreth and thyrtye Sycles: A syluer boule, worth seuentye Sycles (after the Sycle of the Sanctuary) both full of fyne floure myngled with oyle for a meatofferynge:

And a golden sponne, worth ten Sycles of golde, full of incense: A bullocke from amonge the greate catell, a ramme, a lambe of a yeare olde for a burntofferynge, an he goate for a synofferynge: And for an health offerynge two oxen, fyue rammes, fyue he goates, and fyue lambes of a yeare olde. This is the gifte of Nahasson the sonne of Aminadab.

On the seconde daye offred Nathaneel the sonne of Zuar, the captayne of Isachar. #### The viij. Chapter.

7 AND the LORDE talked with Moses, ⁊ sayde: Speake to Aaron, ⁊ saye vnto him: *Whan thou settest vp y lāpes, thou shalt set the so, that they maye all seue geue light aboute vpō y candilstick. And Aaron dyd so, ⁊ set y lampes vpō y candilstick, as y LORDE comaunded Moses. The worke of y candilstick was of beatē golde, both y shaft ⁊ floures therof: Acordynge to y visio that the LORDE had shewed Moses, euen so made he the candelstick.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Take the Leuites frō amonge the children of Israel, ⁊ cense them. But thus shalt thou do with them, that thou mayest cense them. Thou shalt sprenkle purifieng water vpon them, and lett a rasure go ouer their whole body, and washe their clothes, and then are they cleane. Then shall they take a yonge bullocke, and his meatofferynge of fyne floure myngled with oyle. And another yonge bullocke shalt thou take for a synn-offeringe.

And thou shalt brynge the Leuites before the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and gather together the whole congregacion of y children of Israel, and brynge the Leuites before the LORDE. And the children of Israel shall laye their handes vpon the Leuites. And Aaron shal waue y Leuites before the LORDE for the children of Israel, that they maye mynistr in the seruyce of the LORDE.

And the Leuites shall laye their handes vpon the heedes of the bullockes, and the one shalbe made a synnofferynge, the other a burntofferinge vnto the LORDE, to make an attouement for the Leuites. And thou shalt set the Leuites before Aaron and his sonnes, and waue them before the LORDE, and so shalt thou separate them from y children of Israel, that they maye be myne. Thē shall they go in, that they maye do seruyce in the Tabernacle of witnesse. Thus shalt thou cense thē, ⁊ waue them: for they are my gifte of the children of Israel, ⁊ and I haue taken them vnto me for all that openeth the Matrix, namely for the first borne of all the children of Israel.

For euery first borne amonge the children of Israel is myne, both of men and of catell,<sup>a</sup> sens the tyme that I smote all the first borne in the lande of Egipte, and sanctified them vnto myself, and toke the Leuites for all the first borne amonge the childrē of Israel, and gaue them for a gifte vnto Aarō and his sonnes from amonge the children of Israel, y they shulde do the seruyce of the children of Israel

And Moses with Aaron and the whole congregaciō of the childrē of Israel, dyd with the Leuites all as the LORDE had commaūded Moses. And they purified the Leuites, and wasshed their clothes. And Aaron waued them before the LORDE, and made attonement for them, that they might be cleane.

After that wente they in, to do their office in the Tabernacle of witnessse before Aaron and his sonnes: as the LORDE commaūded Moses concernynge the Leuites, euen so dyd they with them.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses & sayde: This is it that belongeth vnto the Leuites: * From fyue and twentye yeare and aboue, shal they go in to the office of the Tabernacle of witnessse. But frō fyftie yeare forth, they shal cease from the waitinge of the seruyce therof, and shall mynister nomore, but shal appoynte their brethren to waite and to serue in the Tabernacle of wytnesse: but the office shal not they execute. Thus shalt thou do with the Leuites in their seruyces, that euery one maye wayte vpon his awne charge.

The ix. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in ꝑ first moneth of the seconde yeare that they were departed out of the lande of Egipte, & sayde: * Let the children of Israel kepe Easter in his season, euen vpon the fourtene daye of this moneth at euen, in his season shall they kepe it, acordinge to all the statutes & lawes therof. And Moses spake to ꝑ childrē of Israel, ꝑ they shulde kepe Easter. And they kep Easter vpō the fourtene daye of the first moneth at euen in the wilderness of Sinai. Acordinge to all that the LORDE cōmaūded Moses, euen so dyd the children of Israel.

Then were there certayne men defyled of a deed man, so that they coulde not kepe Easter vpon that daye: these came before Moses and Aaron the same daye, and sayde vnto him: We are defiled of a deed mā: wherfore shulde we be despyed, that we must not bringe oure giftes in his season amonge the children of Israel? Moses sayde vnto them: Stonde styll, I wil heare what the LORDE commaundeth you.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, & saie: Whā eny man is defyled of a deed coarse, or is gone farre from you ouer the felde, * or is amonge youre kynszfolkes, yet shall he kepe Easter, but in the seconde moneth vpō ꝑ fourtene daye at euen, and they shal eate it with vneleuded bred and sowre sawse, and shall leaue none of it vntyll the mornynge,† ner breake eny bone therof, and shal kepe it acordinge to all ꝑ maner of ꝑ Easter.

But he that is cleane, and not gone in a iourney, and is negligent to kepe the Easter, the same soule shal be roted out from amōge his people: because he brought not his gifte to the LORDE in his season, he shal beare his synne. And whan there dwelleth a straunger amonge you, he shal kepe Easter also vnto the LORDE, & shal holde it acordinge to ꝑ ordinance and lawe of ꝑ Easter. This statute shal be vnto you alike, to the straunger as to him that is borne in the londe.

And ꝑ same daye ꝑ the Habitation was set vp, a cloude couered it vpō the Tabernacle of witnessse, & at euen there was a symilitude of fyre vpon the Habitation vntill the mornynge. So came it to passe allwaye, ꝑ the cloude couered it by daye, & the symilitude of fyre by night. And whan the cloude was takē vp from the Habitation, then the children of Israel wente on their iourney. And loke in what place the cloude abode, there the childrē of Israel pitched their tentes. Acordinge to the worde of the LORDE toke the children of Israel their iourney, and acordinge to his worde pitched they their tentes. So longe as the cloude abode vpon the Habitation, they laye styll. And whan the cloude taried many dayes vpon the Habitation, the childrē of Israel wayted vpon the LORDE, & wente not on their iourney.

And whan it chaunced that the cloude abode vpō ꝑ Habitation eny space of dayes, then pitched they acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, & after the worde of the LORDE wente they on their iourney. Whan the cloude was there from the euenynge vntyll the mornynge, and so was taken vp, then wete they

But whan it taried vpon the habitacion two dayes, or a moneth, or a longe season, then laye the children of Israel, and iourneyed not: and so whan it was taken vp, they wente on their iourney. For accordinge to the mouth of the LORDE they laye, and after the mouth of the LORDE they iourneyed, so y they kepte the LORDES watch, accordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.

The x. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Make the two trompettes of beaten syluer, that thou mayest vse them, to call the cōgregacion together, and whan the hoost shal breake vp. Whan they blowe with both, then shall the whole congregacion gather them selues together vnto the before the dore of the Tabernacle of witnessse. Whan they blowe but with one, then the captaynes, the rulers ouer the thousandes in Israel shal gather them selues together vnto the. Whan ye trompe, then shal the hoostes that lye on the East syde, breake vp. And whan ye trompe the seconde tyme, the hoostes that lye on the South syde, shal breake vp. For ye shall trompe, whan they shal take their iourneys. *But whan y congregacion is to be gathered together, ye shal blowe, and not trompe. This blowinge with the trompettes shal the sonnes of Aaron the prest do. And it shall be youre lawe for euer amonge youre posterities.

Whan ye go to a battayll in youre londe agaynst youre enemies y vexe you, ye shall trompe with the trompettes, that ye maye be remembred before the LORDE youre God, and delyuered from youre enemies.

B Like wyse whan ye are mery, and in youre feast dayes, & in youre new Monethes, ye shal blowe with the trompettes ouer youre burnt-sacrifices & healthofferings, y it maie be a remembraunce vnto you before youre God. I am the LORDE youre God.

Vpon the twentye daye in the seconde moneth of the seconde yeare, arose the cloude from the habitacion of witnessse. And the childrē of Israel wente on their iourney out of the wyldernesse of Sinai, and the cloude abode in the wyldernesse of Paran, First brake vp (accordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.) Namely, the baner of the hoost of Iuda wente forth first with their armies, and ouer their hoost was Nahasson the sonne of Aminadab. And ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Isachar was Nathaneel the sonne of Zuar. And ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Zabulon was Eliab the sonne of Elon. And the habitacion was taken downe, and the children of Gerson and Merari bare the habitacion.

After that wente the baner of the hoost of Ruben with their armies, and ouer their hoost was Elizur the sonne of Seducr. And ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Simeon was Selumiel the sonne of Zuri Sadai. And Eliasaph the sonne of Deguel ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Gad. Then wente the Kahathites forward also, and bare the Sanctuary, and caused y habitacion be set vp agaynst they came.

After that wente the baner of the hoost of the children of Ephraim with their armies, and ouer their hoost was Elisama the sonne of Amihud. And Gamaliel the sonne of Pedazur ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Manasse. And Abidan the sonne of Gedeoni ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Ben Iamin.

After that wente the baner of the hoost of the children of Dan with their Armyes, (and so were all the hoostes vp) and Ahieser the sonne of Ammi Sadai was ouer their hoost. And Pagiel y sonne of Ochran, ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Asser. And Ahira the sonne of Enan ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Nephthali. Thus the childrē of Israel wēte forth with their armies.

D And Moses spake vnto his brother in lawe, Hobab the sonne of Raguel of Madian: We go vnto the place, of the which y LORDE sayde: I wil geue it you: Come now with vs therfore, and we wil do y best with the, for the LORDE hath promysed good vnto Israel. But he answered: I wil not go with you, but wil go in to myne awne londe vnto my kynred. He sayde: Oh nay, leaue vs not: for thou knowest where is best for vs to pyche in the wyldernesse, and thou shalt be oure eye. And yf thou goest with vs, loke what good the LORDE doth vnto vs, the same wil we do vnto the. So they departed from the mount

And whan the Arke wente forth, Moses sayde: *Aryse LORDE, let thine enemies be scatered, and let them that hate the, flye before the. And whan it rested, he sayde: Come agayne O LORDE vnto the multitude of the thousands of Israel.

Then the comon sorte of people y<sup>e</sup> was amōge them, fell a lusting, and sat & wepte with the children of Israel, and sayde: Who wyll geue vs flesh to eate? We remembre the fish, the we ate in Egipte for naught, & Cucumbers, Melouns, lekes, onyons, & garleke: But now is oure soule dried awaye, oure eyes se nothinge then the Manna.

B The Manna was like Coriader sede, and to loke vpon, like Bedellion. <sup>b</sup>And the people ranne here and there, & gathered it, & grounde it in Milles, and beate it in morters, and baked it in pānes, and made cakes of it, and it had a taist like an oyle cake. And whan y<sup>e</sup> dew fell vpon the tētes in the night, y<sup>e</sup> Manna fell therwith.

Now whan Moses herde the people wepe amōge their kynreds, euery one in his tēt dore, then the wrath of the LORDE waxed excedinge whote. And it greued Moses also. And Moses sayde vnto the LORDE: Why vexest thou thy seruante? And why fynde not I fauoure in thy sight, y<sup>e</sup> thou layest y<sup>e</sup> burthen of all this people vpō me? Haue I thē cōceaued all this people, or begotten them, that thou shuldest saye vnto me: Cary them in thine armes (as a nurse beareth a childe) vnto the londe, that thou hast sworne vnto their fathers? Where shal I get flesh, to geue all this people? They wepe before me, and saye: Geue vs flesh, that we maye eate. I am not able to beare all this people alone, for it is to heuy for me. And yf thou wylt deale thus with me: O kyll me then, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, that I se not my wretchednesse.

And the LORDE saide vnto Moses: D Gather vnto me <sup>t</sup>seuentye men amonge the Elders of Israel, whom thou knowest y<sup>e</sup> they are the Elders in y<sup>e</sup> people and officers ouer them, and brynge them before the Tabernacle of witnesse, and set them there with the: then wil I come downe, and talke with the euen there, & take of thy sprete that is vpon the, and putt it vpon them, that they maye beare the burthen of the people with the, y<sup>e</sup> thou beare not all alone.

And vnto y<sup>e</sup> people thou shalt saye: Sāctifye youre selues agaynst tomorow, <sup>e</sup>y<sup>e</sup> maye eate flesh: for youre wepyng is come in to the eares of the LORDE, ye that saye: Who shal geue vs flesh to eate? for we were well at ease in Egipte. <sup>t</sup>Therefore shal the LORDE geue you flesh to eate, not one daye, not two, not fyue, not ten, not twentye dayes longe, but a moneth longe, tyll it go out at youre noses, and tyll ye lothe it: euen because ye haue refused the LORDE, which is amōge you, and haue wepte before him, & sayde: <sup>t</sup>Wherfore wente we out of Egipte?

And Moses sayde: E Sixe hundreth thousande <sup>f</sup>fote men are there of the people amōge whom I am, and thou sayest: I wyll geue you flesh to eate a moneth lōge. Shal the shepe and oxen be slayne to be ynough for them? Or shal all the fishes of the see be gathered together, to be sufficient for them? The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: <sup>t</sup>Is the LORDES hande shortened then? But now shalt thou se, whether my wordes shall be fulfilled in dede, or no?

And Moses wēte out, and tolde the people y<sup>e</sup> worde of the LORDE, and gathered the seuentye men amonge the Eldest of the people, & set them rounde aboute the Tabernacle. Then came the LORDE downe in a cloude, & spake vnto him, & toke of the sprete y<sup>e</sup> was vpon him, & put it vpon the seuentie Elders.

And when the sprete rested vpon them, they prophced, and ceased not.

F But in the hoost there remayned yet two men, of whom the one was called Eldad, & other Medad, & the sprete rested vpon them. For they were wrytten vp also, & yet were they not gone out vnto the Tabernacle, and they prophced in the hoost. Then ran there a lad, & tolde Moses, & sayde: Eldad and Medad prophcie in the hoost. Then answered Iosua & sonne of Nun Moses seruauante (whom he had chosen) and sayde: My lorde Moses for bydde them. But Moses sayde vnto him: Art thou gelous for my sake? * wolde God, & all the people of & LORDE coule prophcie, and that & LORDE wolde geue them his sprete. So Moses and the Elders of Israel gat them to the hoost.

C Then wente out the wynde from & LORDE, & caused quayles to come from the see, & scatred the ouer the hoost, here a dayes iourne, there a dayes iourney rounde aboute & hoost, two cubytes hye aboue & earth. Then the people stode vp all that daye and all & night, and all the nexte daye, and gathered quayles: and he that gathered the leest, gathered ten Homers, & they kylled them rounde aboute the hoost.

But whye & flesh was yet betwene their tethe, & or euer it was vp, the wrath of the LORDE waxed whote amonge the people, & slewe them with an excedinge greate slaughter. Therefore is the same place called the graues of lust, because the voluptuous people were buried there. From the lust-graues toke the people their iourney vnto Hazeroth, and abode at Hazeroth.

The xij. Chapter.

AND Miriam & Aaron spake agaynst <sup>d</sup>Moses because of his wife the Morian: which he had taken, because he had takē a Morian to wife, and they sayde: Doth the LORDE speake onely thorow Moses? Speaketh he not also by vs? And the LORDE herde it. § But Moses was a very meke man, aboue all men vpon earth. And haistely spake the LORDE vnto Moses, and to Aaron, and to Miriam: Go out ye thre vnto & Tabernacle of wytnesse. And they wente out all thre.

Then came the LORDE downe in the cloudy piler, & stode in the dore of the Tabernacle, & called Aaron & Miriam, & they both wete out. And he sayde: Heare my wordes: Yf eny man be a prophet of the LORDE, vnto him wil I shewe my self in a vision, or wil speake vnto him in a dreame. But not so with my seruauant Moses, which is faithfull in all my house. ¶ Mouth to mouth speake I vnto him, & he seyth the LORDE in his fashion, not thorow darke wordes or licknesses: Wherefore were ye not afrayed then to speake agaynst my seruauant Moses?

And & wrath of the LORDE waxed whote B ouer them, & he turned him awaye, and & cloude also departed from the Tabernacle. And beholde, then was Miriam become leporous, as it were snowe. And Aaron turned him vnto Miriam, and sawe that she was leporous, and sayde vnto Moses: Oh my lorde, put not the synne vpon vs, which we haue foolishly committed and synned, that she be not as one that commeth deed out of his mothers wombe: It hath eaten vp half hir flesh already.

But Moses cried vnto the LORDE, & sayde: Oh God, heale her. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Yf hir father had spyte in hir face, shulde she not be ashamed seuē dayes? ¶ Let her be shut out of & hoost seuē dayes, after & let her be receaued agayne. So Miriam was shut out of the hoost seuē dayes, & the people wente no farther, tyll Miriam was receaued againe. Afterwarde departed the people from Hazeroth, and pitched in & wilderness of Paran.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, & A sayde: Sende forth men to spye out & lande of Canaan (which I wil geue vnto & children of Israel) of euery trybe of their fathers a man, and let them all be such as are captaynes amonge them. Moses sent the out of the wilderness of Paran, according to the worde of the LORDE, such as were all heades amonge the children of Israel, and these are their names:

Samma the sonne of Zacur, of the trybe of Ruben. Saphat the sonne of Hori, of the trybe of Simeon. Caleb ſonne of Iephune, of the trybe of Iuda. Igeal the sonne of Ioseph, of the trybe of Isachar. Hosea the sonne of Nun, of ſonne of Ephraim. Palti the sonne of Raphu, of the trybe of Ben Iamin. Gadiel the sonne of Sodi, of ſonne of Zabulon. Gaddi the sonne of Susi, of the trybe of Ioseph of Manasse. Ammiel the sonne of Gemalli, of the trybe of Dan. Sethur ſonne of Michael, of the trybe of Asser. Nahebi the sonne of Vaphsi, of the trybe of Nephtali. Guel the sonne of Machi, of the trybe of Gad. These are the names of the men, whom Moses sent forth to spye out the lande. As for Hosea the sonne of Nun, Moses called him Iosua.

B Now whan Moses sent the forth to spye out the lande of Canaan, he sayde vnto the: Go vp southwarde, and get you vp to the mountaynes, and loke vpon the lande how it is: and the people that dwell therein, whether they be stronge or weake, fewe or many: and what maner of lande it is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad: & what maner of cities they be that they dwell in, whether they be fenced with walles, or not: and what maner of lande it is, whether it be fatt or leane, and whether there be trees therein, or not. Be of a good corage, and bringe of the frutes of the lande. It was euen aboute the tyme, that grapes are first ripe.

They wente vp, & spied the lande, from ſonne of wildernes of Zin, vntyll Rehob, as me go vnto Hemath. They wente vp also towarde the south, and came vnto Hebron, where Ahiman was, and Sesai and Thalmay, the children of Enack (Hebron was buylded seven yere before Zoan in Egipte.)

C And they came to the ryuer of Escol, and there they cut downe a cluster of grapes, and caused two to beare it vpon a staffe, pomegranates also and fygges. The place is called the ryuer of Escol, because of the cluster of grapes, which the children of Israel cut downe there.

And whan they had spied out the lande, they turned bake againe after fourtye daies, and wente, and came to Moses and Aaron, & to the whole congregacion of ſonne of children of Israel in to ſonne of wildernes of Paran, euē vnto

Cades, and brought them worde agayne, and to the whole congregacion, how it stode, and let them se the frute of the lande, and tolde them, and sayde: We came in to ſonne of lande, whither ye sent vs, where it floweth with mylke and hony, and this is the frute therof: sauynge that stronge people dwell therein, and the cities are exceedinge stronge and greate. And we sawe the children of Enack there also. The Amalechites dwell in the south countre, the Hethites, and Iebusites and Amorites dwell vpon the mountaynes, but the Cananites dwell by the see, and aboute Iordane.

D Howbeit Caleb stilled ſonne of people that was agaynst Moses, and sayde vnto them: Let vs go vp, and conquere the lande, for we are able to ouercome it. But the men that wente vp with him, sayde: <sup>b</sup> We are not able to go vp agaynst that people, for they are to stronge for vs. And of the lande that they had searched, they brought vp an euell reporte amonge the childre of Israel, and saide: The lande that we haue gone thorow to spye out, eateth vp the indwellers therof: and all the people that we sawe therein, are men of greates stature. We sawe giantes there also, yee giantes as the children of Enack: and we semed in oure sighte as ſonne of greshoppers, and so dyd we in their sighte.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THEN the whole cōgregacion toke on, <sup>a</sup> and cryed, and the people wepte ſonne of night. And all the childre of Israel murmured agaynst Moses and Aaron, and the whole congregacion sayde vnto them: Oh that we had dyed in the lande of Egipte, or that we might dye yet in this wyldernes. Wherefore bryngeth the LORDE vs in to this lande, that oure wyues shulde fall thorow the swerde, and oure children be a praye? Is it not better, that we go agayne in to Egipte? And they sayde one to another: Let vs make a captayne, and go in to Egipte agayne.

But Moses & Aaron fell vpon their faces before ſonne of whole cōgregacion of the multitude of the childre of Israel. * And Iosua ſonne of Nun, & Caleb ſonne of Iephune (which also had spied out the lande) rente their clothes, & spake to the whole cōgregacion of the children of Israel: The lande ſonne of we haue walked thorow to spye it out, is a very good lande. Yf the LORDE haue lust vnto vs, he shal brynge vs in to the same londe, ⁊ geue it vs, which is a lāde that floweth with mylke ⁊ hony. But in anye wyse rebell not ye agaynst the LORDE, ⁊ * feare not ſ̄ people of this lande, for we wil eate thē vp as bred. Their defence is departed frō them, † but the LORDE is with vs, be not ye afraied of them.

33 And all the people, bad stone them with stones. Then appeared the glory of the LORDE in the Tabernacle of witnesse vnto all the children of Israel, ⁊ the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: How longe shal this people blaspheme me? And how longe wil it be, or they beleue me, for all the tokēs that I haue shewed amouge them? I wil smyte them with pestilence ⁊ destroye thē, ⁊ wil make of the a greater ⁊ mightier people then this is.

⁊ But Moses sayde vnto ſ̄ LORDE: Then shal ſ̄ Egipcians heare it (for with thy power hast thou brought this people from amōge thē) so shal it be tolde the inhabiteurs of this lande also, which haue herde, ſ̄ thou O LORDE art amouge this people, ſ̄ thou art sene from face to face, ⁊ that thy cloude stondesth ouer them, ⁊ that thou goest before them in the cloudy piler on the daye tyme, and in the fyrie piler on the night season. Yf thou shuldest now slaye this people as one man, then the Heythen that haue herde so good reporte of the, shulde saye: "The LORDE was not able to brynge the people in to the londe, that he sware vnto them, therefore hath he slayne them in the wyldernes.

C So let the power of the LORDE now be greate, acordinge as thou hast spoken and sayde: The LORDE is of longe sufferance and of greate mercy, and forgeueth synne and trespass, and leaueth no man innocent, ⁊ visiteth the mysdzede of the fathers vpon the children in to the thirde and fourth generacion. O be gracious now vnto the synne of this people acordinge to thy greate mercy, like as thou hast forborne this people also, euer from Egipte vnto this place. And the LORDE sayde: I haue forgeuē it, as thou hast saide. But as truly as I lyue, all ſ̄ worlde shal be full of my glory. ⁊ For of all ſ̄ men that haue sene my glory ⁊ my tokens, which I dyd in Egipte and in the wilderness, and tempted me now ten tymes, ⁊ haue not herkened vnto my voyce, there shall not one se the londe that I sware vnto their fathers: nether shal eny of them that haue blasphemed me, se it. † But my seruānt Caleb, because there is another maner sprete with him, ⁊ because he hath folowed me, him wil I brynge in to the lande, which he hath gone thorow, ⁊ his sede shal conquere it, and ſ̄ Amalechites also and the Cananites, that dwell in the lowe countrees. Tomorow turne you, and get you to the wyldernes, in the waye towarde the reed see.

D And ſ̄ LORDE spake vnto Moses ⁊ Aaron, ⁊ sayde: How lōge shal this euell multitude murmur agaynst me? For I haue herde the murmuringe of the childrē of Israel, ſ̄ they haue murmured agaynst me. Tell them therefore: § As trulye as I lyue (sayeth ſ̄ LORDE) I wil do vnto you, euen as ye haue spoken in myne eares: Your carcasses shal lye in this wilderness. And all ye that ¶ were nombred from twentye yeare and aboue, which haue murmured agaynst me, shall not come in to the lande (cōcernynge the which I lift vp my hāde, ſ̄ I wolde let you dwell therein) saue Caleb ſ̄ sonne of Iephune, and Iosua the sonne of Nun.

Your children, of whom ye sayde: ¶ They shalbe a spoyle, them wyll I brynge in, so ſ̄ they shal knowe the lande, which ye haue refused. But ye with youre carcasses shall lye in this wilderness, and youre children shal wander in this wilderness fortye yeares, ⁊ beare youre whordome, tyll youre carcasses be waisted in the wilderness, acordinge to the nombre of ſ̄ fortye dayes, wherin ye spyed out the londe. ¶ A daye for a yeare, so ſ̄ § fortye yeares ye shall beare youre mysdzede, that ye maye knowe what it is, when I withdrawe my hande. Euen I the LORDE haue sayde it, ⁊ wil do it in dede vnto all this euell congregacion, that haue lift vp them selues agaynst me: In this wilderness shall they be consumed, and there shal they dye.

⁊ So there dyed and were playged before the LORDE all the mē, whom Moses sent to spye out the lāde, ⁊ came agayne, and made the whole cōgregacion to murmur agaynst it, because they brought vp a mysreporthe of the lande, that it was euell. But Iosua the sonne of Nun, and Caleb y sonne of Iephune were left alyue, of the men that wente to spye out the lande. And Moses spake these wordes vnto all the children of Israel. Thē toke the people greate sorowe.

F And they arose early in y mornynge, and wente vp to the toppe of y mountayne, and sayde: <sup>a</sup>Lo, here are we, and will go vp to the place, wherof the LORDE hath sayde: for we haue synned. But Moses sayde: wherfore go ye on this maner beyonde y worde of the LORDE? It shall not prospere with you: go not vp (for y LORDE is not amōge you) y ye be not slayne before youre enemies. For the Amalechites and Cananites are there before you, & ye shal fall thorow y swerde, because ye haue turned youre selues from the LORDE, and the LORDE shal not be with you.

But they were blinded to go vp to the toppe of the mountaine: neuertheles the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt & Moses came not out of the hooste. Then came downe y Amalechites & Cananites which dwelt vpon that mountayne, and smote them and hewed them, euen vnto Horna.

The xvj. Chapter

AND the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake to the childrē of Israel, & saye vnto them: Whan ye come in to the lande of youre dwellinge, which I shal geue you, and wil do sacrifice vnto the LORDE, whether it be a burntofferynge, or an offrynge for a speciall vowe, or a frewyll offerynge, or youre feast offerynges, that ye maye make a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE, of oxen or of shepe.

<sup>b</sup>He y wil offire now his gifte vnto y LORDE, shal brynge for the meatofferynge a tēth deale of fyne flour myngled with oyle of the fourth parte of an Hin, and wyne for y drynkofferynge the fourth part of an Hin also: to the burnt-offerynge, or any other offerynge, whan a lambe is offred. But whā there is a ramme offred, thou shalt make the meatofferynge two tēth deales of fyne flour myngled with oyle, of the thirde parte of an Hin, and y thirde parte of an Hin of wyne also for a drynkofferynge: this shalt thou offire for a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE.

B But yf thou wilt offire an oxe for a burnt-offerynge, or for a speciall vowe offerynge, or for an healthofferynge vnto the LORDE, thou shalt brynge to the oxe, the meatoffrynge, euen thre tenth deales of fyne flour mingled with half an Hin of oyle, & half an Hin of wyne for a drynkoffrynge. This is an offerynge of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE. Thus shalt thou do with an oxe, with a ramme, with a lambe, and with a goate. Acordinge as the nombre of the offerynges is, thereafter shall the nombre of the meatofferynges and drynkofferynges be also.

He that is one of youre selues, shall do this, that he maye offire a sacrifice of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE. And yf there dwell a straunger with you, or is amōge youre kynszfolkes, and wil do an offerynge vnto the LORDE for a swete sauoure, the same shal do as ye do. Let there be one statute for the whole cōgregation, both vnto you and to the straungers. A perpetuall statute shal it be vnto youre posterities, that the straunger be euē as ye before y LORDE. One lawe, and one ordinaunce shalbe vnto you and to the straunger that dwelleth with you.

And the LORDE talked with Moses, & sayde: Speake to the children of Israel, and saye vnto them: Whan ye come in to the lande, in to y which I shal brynge you, so that ye eate the bred of the londe, ye shal heue vp an Heueofferynge vnto the LORDE, namely, a cake of the firstlings of youre dowe shall ye geue for an Heueofferynge: * as the Heueofferynge of the barne, euen so shal ye geue the firstlings of youre dowe also vnto the LORDE, for an Heueofferynge amonge youre posterities.

C And whan ye thorow ignoraunce ouer se eny of these commaundementes, <sup>d</sup>which the LORDE hath spoken by Moses, and all y the LORDE hath commaunded you by Moses (from the daye that the LORDE beganne to commaunde for youre posterities) and the cōgregation do ought ignorauntly, thē shal the whole cōgregation offire a yonge bullocke from amonge the greate catell to a burnt-offerynge, for a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE, with his meatofferynge and drynk-offerynge as the maner is, and an hegoate for a synofferynge. And so shal the prest make an attonement for the whole cōgregation of the children of Israel, and it shalbe forgeuen them: for it is an ignoraunce. And they shal brynge these their giftes for an offerynge vnto the LORDE, and their synofferynge before the LORDE for their ignoraunce, and it shalbe forgeuen the whole congregacion of the childrē of Israel, ⁊ the straunger also ⁊ dwelleth amonge you, for so moch as all the people is in soch ignoraunce.

Yf one soule synne thorow ignoraunce,<sup>a</sup> the same shal brynge a she goate of a yere olde for a synofferynge. And the prest shall make an attonement for soch an ignoraunt soule with the synofferynge for the ignoraunce before the LORDE, that he maye reconceyle him, and it shal be forgeuen him. And it shal be one lawe, (that ye shal do for ⁊ ignoraunce) both vnto him that is borne amonge the children of Israel, and to the straunger that dwelleth amonge you.

D Now whyle the children of Israel were in the wyldernesse, they founde a man gatherynge stickes vpon the Sabbath daye. And they that founde him gatherynge stickes, brought him vnto Moses and Aaron, and before the whole congregacion. <sup>c</sup> And they put him in preson, for it was not declared what shulde be done vnto him. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: The man shall dye the death, the whole congregacion shal stone him without the hoost. Then the whole cōgregacion brought him out of ⁊ hoost, and stoned him that he dyed. as ⁊ LORDE commaunded Moses.

And ⁊ LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Speake to the childrē of Israel, ⁊ saye vnto thē, <sup>d</sup> ⁊ they make them gardes vpon ⁊ quarters of their garmentes amonge all youre posterities, and put yalowe rybandes vpon the gardes in ⁊ quarters. And ⁊ gardes shal serue you, ⁊ ye maye loke vpon thē, and remembre all the cōmaundementes of the LORDE, ⁊ do them: that ye order not youre selues after ⁊ meanyng of youre awne hert, ner go a whorynge after youre awne eyes. Therefore shal ye remembre and do all my commaundementes, and be holy vnto youre God. I am the LORDE youre God, which brought you out of the lande of Egipte, to be youre God. Euen I the LORDE youre God.

The xvi. Chapter.

AND Corah the sonne of Iezehar the sonne of Kahath, <sup>e</sup> the sonne of Leui, with Dathan and Abiram the sonne of Eliab, and On the sonne of Peleth, ⁊ sonnes of Rubē, stode vp agaynst Moses, with certayne men amonge the childrē of Israel, two hundredre ⁊ fyftie captaynes of the congregacion, councelers, ⁊ famous men. And they gathered them selues agaynst Moses ⁊ Aarō ⁊ sayde vnto them: Ye make to moch a doo, <sup>f</sup> for all the congregacion is holy euery one, and the LORDE is amonge them: Why lifte ye youre selues vp then aboute the congregacion of the LORDE?

Whan Moses herde ⁊, he fell vpō his face, ⁊ saide vnto Corah, ⁊ to all his company: Tomorrow shal ⁊ LORDE shewe who is his, ⁊ who is holy to come vnto him. Whō so euer he choseth, ⁊ same shal come vnto him. This do: Take ⁊ censors, thou Corah ⁊ all thy cōpanye, ⁊ do fyre therin, ⁊ put incense thereon tomorrow before the LORDE: then whom so euer the LORDE choseth, the same shal be holy. Ye make to moch a doo, ye children of Leui.

And Moses sayde vnto Corah: Heare ye childrē of Leui, Is it not ynough vnto you, <sup>g</sup> ⁊ ⁊ God of Israel hath separated you frō ⁊ multitude of Israel, ⁊ ye shulde come nye him, to do the seruyce of the dwellynge place of the LORDE, and stonde before the people to mynister vnto them? He hath caused the and all thy brethren the childrē of Leui with the, to come nye vnto him: and now ye seke the presthode also. Thou and all thy cōpany conspyre agaynst the LORDE. What is Aaron, that ye shulde murmur agaynst him?

And Moses sent to call Dathā ⁊ Abirā ⁊ sonnes of Eliab. But they sayde: We wil not come vp. Is it to litle ⁊ thou hast brought vs out of ⁊ lande of Egipte (⁊ floweth with mylke ⁊ hony) to kyll vs in ⁊ wildernesse: but thou must raigne ouer vs also? How goodly well hast thou brought vs in to a londe, that floweth with milke and hony, ⁊ geuē vs felde and vynyards in possession? Wilt thou put out these mens eyes? We will not come vp.

Then was Moses very wroth, ⁊ saide vnto ꝑ LORDE: Turne ꝑ not vnto their meatofferings. I haue not takē so moch as an Asse frō thē, nether haue I hurte eny of thē. And Moses sayde vnto Corah: Tomorrow be thou ⁊ all thy companie before ꝑ LORDE, thou, and they, ⁊ Aaron. And take euery one his censer, and put incense therin, and come before the LORDE, euery one with his censer (that is two hundreth and fiftie censers) and both thou and Aaron take either his censer.

And euery one toke his censer, and put fyre therin, and layed incense thereon, and came before the dore of the Tabernacle of witnes, and Moses and Aaron also. And Corah gathered ꝑ whole congregaciō agaynst thē before the dore of the Tabernacle of witnes.

But ꝑ glory of the LORDE appeared before ꝑ whole congregation. And ꝑ LORDE spake vnto Moses ⁊ Aaron, ⁊ sayde: Separate youre selues frō this congregaciō, ꝑ I maye shortly consume them. And they fell vpon their faces, ⁊ sayde: O God, thou God of the spretes of all flesh, yf one man haue synned, wilt thou therefore be wroth ouer the whole congregacion? And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, ⁊ saide: Speake to the congregaciō, and saye: Come vp from ꝑ dwellynge of Corah, and Dathan, and Abiram.

And Moses stode vp, ⁊ wente vnto Dathan ⁊ Abiram, ⁊ the Elders of Israel folowed him, ⁊ he spake to ꝑ cōgregaciō, ⁊ saide: Departe frō ꝑ tentes of these vngodly mē ⁊ touche nothinge ꝑ is theirs, ꝑ ye perishe not in eny of their synnes. And they gat them vp from the dwellynge of Corah, Dathan, ⁊ Abiram. But Dathan and Abirā came out, and stode in the dore of their tentes, with their wyues, and sonnes and children.

And Moses sayde: Hereby shal ye knowe that the LORDE hath sent me, to do all these workes, and that I haue not done them of myne awne hert. Yf these men dye the comon death of all men, or be vysited as all men are vysited, then hath not the LORDE sent me. But yf the LORDE make a new thinge, and the earth open hir mouth, and swalowe them with all that they haue, so ꝑ they go downe quyeke in to hell, thē shal ye knowe, that these men haue blasphemed the LORDE.

And whā he had spokē out all these wordes, ꝑ grouēde cloue asunder vnder thē, ⁊ the earth opened hir mouth, ⁊ swallowed thē, with their houses, ⁊ all the mē ꝑ were with Corah, ⁊ all their substañce, and they wente downe quyeke in to the hell, with all that they had.

And the earth closed vpō them, ⁊ so they perished from amonge ꝑ congregaciō. And all Israel ꝑ were aboute thē, fled at ꝑ crye of thē, for they sayde: That ꝑ earth swalowe not vs also. Morouer the fyre came out frō the LORDE, and consumed the two hundreth and fyttye men, that offred the incense.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, ⁊ sayde: Speake to Eleasar ꝑ sonne of Aaron ꝑ prest, ꝑ he take vp ꝑ censers out of ꝑ burninge, ⁊ scater ꝑ fyre here ⁊ there (For the censers of these synners are halowed thorow their soules) ꝑ they maye be beatē in to thinne plates, ⁊ fastened vpon ꝑ altare. For they are offred before ꝑ LORDE, ⁊ halowed: and they shalbe a token vnto ꝑ childrē of Israel.

And Eleasar the prest toke ꝑ brasen censers which they ꝑ were burnt, had offred, ⁊ bet thē to plates, to fasten thē vpon ꝑ altare for a remēbraunce vnto ꝑ children of Israel ꝑ no straunger (and he that is not of ꝑ sede of Aaron) come nye to offre incense before the LORDE, ꝑ it happē not vnto him as vnto Corah and his companie, acordinge as the LORDE sayde vnto him by Moses.

On the nexte morow murmured ꝑ whole congregacion of ꝑ childrē of Israel against Moses ⁊ Aarō, ⁊ saide: Ye haue slayne ꝑ people of ꝑ LORDE. And whan the cōgregaciō was gathered agaynst Moses ⁊ Aarō, they turned thē towarde ꝑ Tabernacle of witnes. And beholde, thē ꝑ cloude couered ꝑ Tabernacle, ⁊ ꝑ glory of ꝑ LORDE appeared. And Moses ⁊ Aarō wēte in before ꝑ Tabernacle of witnes. And ꝑ LORDE spake vnto Moses ⁊ sayde: Get you out of this cōgregacion, I wil shortly consume thē. And they fell vpon their faces. And Moses sayde vnto Aaron: Take the cēser ⁊ put fyre therin frō of the altare, ⁊ laye incēse thereon, ⁊ go soone to the cōgregacion, ⁊ make an attonement for them. For the wrath is gone out from the LORDE, and the plage is begōne amonge the people.

And Aaron came agayne vnto Moses before the dore of the Tabernacle of witnessse. And the plage ceased.

The xliij. Chapter.

AND ſ LORDE spake vnto Moses, & sayde: Speake to the children of Israel, & take of thē twolue staues, of euery captayne of his fathers house one, and wryte euery mans name vpon his staffe. But Aarons name shalt thou wryte vpon the staffe of Leui. For euery heade of their fathers house shal haue a staffe. And laye thē in the Tabernacle of witnessse, before the witnessse where I testifie vnto you. And loke whom I shall chose, his staffe shal florish, ſ I maye styll the grudgings of the children of Israel, which they grudge agaynst you.

And Moses spake vnto the childrē of Israel, & all their captaynes gaue him twolue staues, euery captayne a staffe, after ſ house of their fathers. And Aarons staffe was amonge their staues also. And Moses layed the staues before the LORDE in the Tabernacle of witnessse.

13 On the morow whā Moses wēte in to ſ Tabernacle of witnessse, he fōūde ſ + Aarōs rodde of the house of Leui florished, and brought forth blossoms, & bare almondes. And Moses brought forth all ſ staues frō ſ LORDE before all ſ childrē of Israel, that they might se it. And they toke euery mā his staffe.

The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Bring Aarōs staffe againe before the wytnesse, ſ it maye be kepte for a tokē to the children of rebellion, that their murmuringes maye cease fro me, lest they dye.

Moses dyd as ſ LORDE cōmaunded him. And ſ childrē of Israel sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, we cōsume awaie, we are destroyed, & perishe. Who so cōmeth nye ſ dwellynge place of ſ LORDE, he dyeth. Shal we thē vtterly cōsume awaie?

The xliij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE sayde vnto Aaron: A Thou & thy sonnes, & thy fathers house with the shal beare the myszdede of ſ Sāctuary: & thou & thy sonnes with the, shall beare the myszdede of youre presthode. † But thy brethren of the trybe of Leui thy father, shal come nye the, & be ioyned vnto the, that they maye mynistrer vnto ſ. But thou & thy sonnes with the, shal mynistrer before ſ Tabernacle of witnessse. And they shal wayte vpō thy seruyce & vpon ſ seruyce of the whole Tabernacle. But nye vnto the vessels of ſ Sāctuary & to the altare, shall they not come, ſ both they & ye dye not: howbeit they shal be ioyned vnto the, to wayte vpō the mynistracion in the Tabernacle of witnessse, in all the seruice of the Tabernacle. And there shal no straunger come nye vnto you.

Therefore wayte now vpon the seruice of the Sanctuary, and vpon the seruice of the altare, that there come no more wrath vpon the children of Israel. For lo, I haue takē youre brethrē the Leuites frō amonge the children of Israel, to be youre gifte, for a presente vnto ſ LORDE, to do ſ seruyce in ſ Tabernacle of witnessse. As for ſ, and thy sonnes with the, ye shal waite vpon youre prestes office, that ye maye ministrer in all maner busynes of the altare, and within the vayle: for youre prestes office geue I vnto you for a gifte to do seruyce. Yf a straunger come nye, he shall dye.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Aaron: beholde, I haue geuen the my Heueofferynges: And all that the children of Israel halowe, haue I geuen vnto the, and to thy sonnes for a perpetuall dewtye. This shalt thou haue of the most holy thinges that they offer. All their giftes with all their meatofferings, and with all their synofferynges, and with all their trespace offerynges, that they geue me, the same shal be most holy vnto the and thy sonnes. In the most holy place shalt thou eate it. All that are males shall eate therof: For it shal be holy vnto the.

The Heue offerynge of their giftes in all the Waueofferynges of the children of Israel, † haue I geuen vnto the also, and to thy sonnes, and to thy daughters for a perpetuall dewtye. Who so is cleane in thy house, shal eate therof. All the fat of the oyle, and all  $\hat{y}$  fat of the wyne and corne of their firstlinges, that they geue vnto the LORDE, haue I geuen vnto  $\hat{y}$ . The first frutes of all that is in their londe, which they bringe vnto the LORDE, shal be thine. Who so euer is cleane in thine house, shal eate therof.

All dedicate thinges in Israel shal be thine. All that breaketh the Matrix amonge all flesh, which they brynge vnto the LORDE, whether it be man or beest, shalbe thine. But so, that thou cause the firstborne of mā to be redemed, and that thou cause the first borne of vnclane beestes to be redemed also (They shal redeme it when it is a moneth olde, and shall geue it lowse for money, euen for fyue Sycles, after the Sytle of the Sanctuary, * which Sytle is worth twentye Geras.)

But the first frutes of an oxe, or lambe, or goate shalt thou not cause to be redemed for they are holy. Their bloude shalt thou sprenkle vpon the altare, and their fat shalt thou burne for an offerynge of a swete sauoure vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE. Their flesh shalbe thine, like as  $\hat{y}$  Wauebrest and  $\hat{y}$  right shulder is thine also. All the Heueofferings that  $\hat{y}$  childrē of Israel halowe vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, haue I geuen vnto the,  $\tau$  to thy sonnes,  $\tau$  to thy doughters with the for a perpetuall dewtie. This shalbe a salted couenānt for euer before  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, vnto the and thy sede with the.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Aarō: Thou shalt inheret nothings in their londe,\* ner haue eny porciō amonge them: for I am thy porcion, and thine enheritaunce amōge the children of Israel. Vnto the children of Leui haue I geuen all the tithes in Israel to inheritance, for  $\hat{y}$  seruyce which they do vnto me in the Tabernacle of witness, that from hēce forth the children of Israel come not nye the Tabernacle of witness, to lade them selues with synne, and to dye: But the Leuites shal do the seruyce in the Tabernacle of witness,  $\tau$  shal beare their synne, for a perpetuall lawe amonge youre posterities. † And they shall inheret none inheritance amonge the children of Israel. For  $\hat{y}$  tithes of the childrē of Israel, which they Heue vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, haue I geuen vnto the Leuites for an heretage. Therefore haue I sayde vnto them, that they shall inheret no inheritance amonge the children of Israel.

And  $\hat{y}$  LORDE talked with Moses,  $\tau$  saide: Speake to the Leuites,  $\tau$  saye vnto them: Whā ye take of  $\hat{y}$  childrē of Israel  $\hat{y}$  tithes,  $\hat{y}$  I haue geuen you of thē for youre inheritance, ye shal take an Heueofferynge of the same vnto the LORDE, euen the tenth of the tithe. And the same youre Heueofferynge shall ye reken, as though ye gaue corne out of the barne, and fullnesse out of the wynepresse.

Thus shal ye geue an Heueofferynge vnto the LORDE of all youre tithes, which ye take of the children of Israel,  $\hat{y}$  ye maie geue the same Heueofferynge of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, vnto Aarō  $\hat{y}$  prest. And all  $\hat{y}$  ye geue of  $\hat{y}$  tythes,  $\tau$  halowe vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE for a gifte,  $\hat{y}$  same shall be his of the best. And saye thou vnto them: Whan ye thus Heue vp  $\hat{y}$  fat therof, it shal be rekened vnto the Leuites as the increase of the barne, and as the increase of the wine presse. And ye maye eate it in all places, ye  $\tau$  youre children: for it is youre rewarde for youre seruyce in the Tabernacle of witness: and ye shal not lade synne vpon you in the same, whan ye Heue the fat therof, and vnhalowe not the halowed thinges of the children of Israel, and ye shal not dye.

The xix. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses  $\tau$  Aarō  $\tau$  sayde: This custome shall be a lawe, which the LORDE hath cōmaunded,  $\tau$  sayde: Speake vnto  $\hat{y}$  children of Israel,  $\hat{y}$  they brynge vnto  $\hat{y}$  a reed cow without spot, wherin is no blemyshe,  $\tau$  vpon whō there came neuer yock: and ye shal geue her vnto Eleasar the prest,† which shall brynge her without the hooste, and cause her to be slayne there before him.

And Eleasar  $\hat{y}$  prest shal take of hir bloude with his fynger, and sprenkle it seuen tymes straight towarde the dore of the Tabernacle of witness, and † cause the cow to be burnt before him, both hir szkynne and hir flesh, and hir bloude also with hir donge. And the prest shal take Cedar wodd and ysope, and purple woll, and cast it vpō the cow as she burneth,  $\tau$  he shal washe his clothes, and bathe his body with water, and thē go in to the hoost, and be vnclane vntyll  $\hat{y}$  euē.

And he that burnt her, shal wash his clothes

also with water, and bathe his body in water, ⁊ be vnclene vntyll ⁊ euen. And one ⁊ is cleane, shal gather vp the * aszshes of ⁊ cow, and poure them without the hoost in a cleane place, that they maye be kepte there, for sprenklinge water to the congregacion of the childrē of Israel, for it is a synofferinge. And he that gathered vp the aszshes of the cow, shall wash his clothes, and be vnclene vntyll the euen. This shalbe a perpetuall lawe vnto ⁊ children of Israel, and to the straungers that dwell amonge you.

¶ Who so now toucheth a deed mā, shal be vnclene seuen dayes: the same shall purifie himself here with, on the thirde daye and on the seuenth daie, and then shall he be cleane. And yf he purifye not himself on the thirde daye, ⁊ on the seuenth daye, thē shall he not be cleane. But whā eny mā toucheth a deed personne, and wil not purifie himself, he defyleth the dwellynge of the LORDE, and the same soule shal be roted out of Israel, because the sprenklinge water is not sprenkled vpon him: and he is vnclene, as long as he letteth not himself be poured therof.

¶ This is the lawe. Whan a mā dyeth in ⁊ tente, who so euer goeth in to the tente, and all ⁊ is in the tente, shal be vnclene seū daies. And euery open vessel that hath no lydd nor couerynge, is vnclene. And who so euer toucheth one ⁊ is slayne with the swerde vpon ⁊ felde, or eny other deed, or a deed mans bone, or a graue, ⁊ same is vnclene seū dayes.

So now for the vnclene personne, they shal take of ⁊ aszshes of this burnt synofferinge, ⁊ put springinge water theron in to a vessell, and a cleane man shall take † ysope, ⁊ dyppe it in the water, and sprenkle it vpon the tente, and vpon all the vessels, and all the soules that are therein. Likewise also vpon him, ⁊ hath touched a deed mans bone, or a slayne personne, or a deed body, or a graue.

And he that is cleane, shal sprenkle vpon the vnclene, ⁊ thirde daye, ⁊ the seūth daie, ⁊ purifye him on ⁊ seūth daye. And he shal washe his clothes, ⁊ bathe him self with water, and so at euen he shalbe cleane.

¶ But he ⁊ is vnclene, and wil not purifye him self, ⁊ same soule shal be roted out of ⁊ cōgregacion. For he hath defyled the Sanctuary of the LORDE, ⁊ is not sprēkled with sprēklinge water, therfore is he vn cleane. And this shalbe a perpetuall lawe vnto thē. And he ⁊ sprenkled with the sprēklinge water, shall wash his clothes also. And who so euer toucheth the sprēklinge water, shal be vn cleane vntill the euen. † And what so euer he toucheth, shalbe vn cleane: ⁊ loke what soule he toucheth, shalbe vn cleane vntill the euen.

The xx. Chapter.

AND the childrē of Israel came with the whole cōgregacion in to the wilderness of Zin in the first moneth, § ⁊ the people abode at Cades. And there dyed Miriam, ⁊ was buried there. And the congregacion had no water, ⁊ they gathered them selues together agaynst Moses ⁊ Aaron, ⁊ the people chode with Moses, ⁊ sayde: Wolde God ⁊ we had perished, ¶ whan oure brethrē perished before the LORDE. Wherfore haue ye brought the congregacion of the LORDE in to this wilderness, ⁊ we shulde dye here with oure catell? And wherfore haue ye brought vs out of Egipte in to this place, where men can not sowe, where are nether fygges, ner vynes, ner pomegranates, ⁊ where there is no water to drynke?

And Moses ⁊ Aaron wēte frō the congregacion vnto ⁊ dore of ⁊ Tabernacle of witnessse, ⁊ fell vpon their faces. And the glory of the LORDE appeared vnto them. And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: ¶ Take the staffe, ⁊ gather the cōgregacion together, thou ⁊ thy brother Aaron, ⁊ speake vnto the rocke before their eyes, ⁊ it shall geue his water. And thus shalt thou prouyde thē water out of the rocke, ⁊ geue the congregacion drynke, and their catell also.

Thē toke Moses the staffe before ⁊ LORDE, as he commaunded him, ⁊ Moses ⁊ Aaron gathered the congregacion together before the rocke, ⁊ sayde vnto thē: Heare ye rebellions: Shal we prouyde you water out of this rocke? And Moses lift vp his hande, ⁊ smote ⁊ rocke with the staffe two tymes. ¶ Then came ⁊ water out abundantly, so ⁊ the cōgregacion dranke, and their catell also.

But the LORDE sayde vnto Moses ⁊ Aaron: ¶ Because ye beleued me not, to sanctifye me before y childre of Israel, ye shal not bringe this congregacion in to the londe that I shal geue the. This is y water of strife, where the children of Israel stroue with the LORDE and he was sanctified vpon them.

And Moses sent messaungers fro Cades vnto y kynge of y Edomites: This worde sendeth the thy *brother Israel: Thou knowest all y trauaile that happened vnto vs, how that oure fathers wente downe in to Egipte, & how we haue dwelt in Egipte a longe tyme, & how the Egiptians dealte euell with vs & oure fathers. And we cryed vnto y LORDE which herde oure voyce, and sent his angell, & hath brought vs out of Egipte: And beholde, we are at Cades in y cite without the borders of thy londe. † O let vs go thorow thy londe, we wyl not go thorow y felde ner vynyardes, ner drynke the water out of the fountaynes. We wyl go the hye strete, and turne nether to y right hande ner to y lefte, tyll we be come past y borders of thy councoun.

But the Edomite answered him: Thou shal not go by me, † or I wyl come agaynst y with y swerde. The children of Israel saide vnto him: We wil go y comō hye waye, & yf we or oure catell drynke of thy water, we wil paye for it: we wil do nothinge, but passe thorow on fote only. But he sayde: Thou shalt not go thorow, And the Edomites came out agaynst them with a mightie people & a strōge hande. Thus y Edomites denied to graunte Israel passage thorow the borders of the lande. And Israel turned awaye from them.

And the children of Israel brake vp fro Cades, and came with the whole congregacion vnto mount Hor. And the LORDE spake vnto Moses & Aaron at mount Hor harde vpon the coastes of y lande of y Edomites, & sayde: Let Aarō be gathered vnto his people: for he shal not come in to y lande y I haue geuen vnto y children of Israel, because ye were dishobedient vnto my mouth at the water of strife. Take Aaron and Eleasar his sonne, and brynge them vp vnto mount Hor, and strype Aaron out of his vestimentes, and put the vpon Eleasar his sonne and there shall Aaron be gathered (vnto his people) and dye.

Then dyd Moses as the LORDE commaunded him, and they wente vp vnto Mount Hor in y sight of the whole congregacion. And Moses toke Aarons clothes, & put the vpon Eleasar his sonne. † And Aaron dyed there, euen aboue vpon the mount. And Moses & Eleasar came downe from the mount. And whan the whole congregacion sawe that Aaron was awaye, they mourned for him thirtie daies thorow out the whole house of Israel.

The xxi. Chapter.

AND whan Arad<sup>s</sup> the kynge of the Cananites (which dwelt towarde the south) herde, that Israel came in by y waie y the spyes had founde out, he fought agaynst Israel, and toke some of them presoners. Then vowed Israel a vowe vnto y LORDE, and sayde: Yf thou wylt geue this people vnder my hande, I wyl vtterly destroye their cities. And the LORDE herde y voyce of Israel, and delyuered them the Cananites, and they vtterly destroyed them with their cities also. † And he called the place Horma.

Then departed they fro mount Hor on y waye towarde the reed see, that they might go aboute the lande of the Edomites. And the soules of the people faynted by the waie † and they spake agaynst God and agaynst Moses: Wherefore hast thou brought vs out of the lande of Egipte, to slaye vs in the wilderness? For here is nether bred ner water, and oure soule lotheth this lighte meate.

Than sent the LORDE fyrie serpentes amonge the people, which bote the peple, so that there dyed moch people in Israel. The came they vnto Moses, and sayde: We haue synned, because we haue spoken agaynst the LORDE and agaynst the. † Praye thou vnto the LORDE, that he take awaye the serpentes from vs. And Moses prayed for the people.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Moses: Make the a brasen serpente, and set it vp for a token. Who so euer is bytten, and loketh vpon it, shal lyue. † Then made Moses a serpent of brasse, and set it vp for a token: and whan a serpent had bytten eny man, he behelde the brasen serpente, and recouered.

<sup>a</sup> And the children of Israel departed, and pitched in Oboth. And from Oboth they wente on, and pitched in Igin by Abarim in the wyldernesse ouer agaynst Moab, on the Eastsyde. From thence departed they, & pitched by the ryuer of Sared. From thence departed they, and pitched on this syde Arnon, which is in the wyldernesse, and commeth out of the coastes of the Amorites. For Arnon is the border betwixte Moab and <sup>c</sup> Amorites. Wherefore it is spoken in the boke of the warres of the LORDE: And go with violence both on the ryuer of Arnon, & on the founteyne of the riuier, which boweth downwarde to dwell at Ar, & leaneth thereon, to be the border of Moab.

And from thence they came to the well. This is the well, wherof the LORDE spake vnto Moses: gather the people together, I wil geue them water. Then sange Israel this songe, and they sange one after another ouer the well: This is the well, that the prynces dygged: the nobles amonge the people haue digged it thorow <sup>f</sup> teacher and their staues.

And from this wyldernes they wente vnto Mathana, & from Mathana vnto Nahaliel, and from Nahaliel to Bamoth, and frō Bamoth vnto the valley that lieth in <sup>f</sup> felde of Moab at the toppe of Pisga, and turneth toward the wyldernesse.

And Israel sent messangers vnto Sihō the kynge of the Amorrites, & caused to saye vnto him: Let me go thorow thy lande, we wyl not turne in to <sup>f</sup> felde ner in to the vynyardes: nether will we drynke the water of the welles, <sup>f</sup> hye strete wil we go, till we be past the borders of thy countre.

foughten before with the kynge of the Moabites, and conquered all his londe from him vntyll Arnon.

Wherefore it is sayde in the prouerbe: Come vnto Heszbōn, let vs buylde and prepare <sup>f</sup> cite of Sihon. For there is a fyre gone out of Heszbōn, and a flamme from the cite of Sihon, which hath consumed Ar of <sup>f</sup> Moabites, and the citisens of <sup>f</sup> toppe of Arnon. Wo vnto the Moab, thou people of Camos art vndone. His sonnes are put to flighte, & his daughters brought captiue vnto Sihon the kynge of the Amorites. Their glory is come to naught from Heszbōn vnto Dibon: waisted are they vnto Nopha, which reacheth vnto Mediba. Thus dwelt Israel in the lande of the Amorites.

And Moses sent out spyes vnto Iahezar, & they toke the townes belongynge therto, & cōquered the Amorites <sup>f</sup> were therein. And they turned, <sup>b</sup> & wente vp the waye toward Basan. Then Og the kynge of Basan wete out agaynst them with all his people, to fight in Edrei. And <sup>f</sup> LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Feare him not, for I haue geuen him with his lande & people in to thy hande, & thou shalt do with him, as thou dydest with Sihon the kynge of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heszbōn. And they smote him, & his sonnes, & all his people (so <sup>f</sup> there remayned none) & cōquered the londe. Afterwarde wete <sup>f</sup> children of Israel, & pitched in <sup>f</sup> felde of Moab beyonde Iordane by Iericho.

The xxiij. Chapter.

And he sent out messangers vnto <sup>a</sup> Balaam the sonne of Beor, which was an interpreter. (The same dwelt by the water of the lande of <sup>f</sup> children of his people) that they shulde call him, and he caused to saye vnto him: Beholde, there is come out of Egipte, a people, which couereth <sup>f</sup> face of <sup>f</sup> earth, and lyeth ouer agaynst me. Come now therefore, and curse me this people, for they are to mightie for me, yf peraduenture I might be able to smyte them, and to dryue them out of the lande. For I wote, that whom thou blessest, he is blessed: and whom thou cursest, he is cursed.

13 And the Elders of the Moabites wente on with  $\hat{y}$  Elders of the Madianites, and had the rewarde of  $\hat{y}$  soyth sayenge in their handes, and they came vnto Balaam,  $\tau$  tolde him the wordes of Balaac. And he saide vnto thē: Tary here all night,  $\tau$  I will bringe you worde agayne, euen as the LORDE shal saye vnto me. So  $\hat{y}$  prynces of  $\hat{y}$  Moabites abode with Balaam.

And God came vnto Balaam,  $\tau$  sayde: What men are these, which are with  $\hat{y}$ ? Balaam sayde vnto God: Balac  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Ziphor the kynge of the Moabites hath sent vnto me: Beholde, there is a people come out of Egypte, and couereth the face of the earth, come now therefore,  $\tau$  curse me thē, yf peraduenture I maye be able to fighte with them,  $\tau$  to dryue thē out. But God sayde vnto Balaam: Go not with them,  $\tau$  curse not that people, for they are blessed.

C Then rose Balaam vp in the mornyng,  $\tau$  sayde vnto the prynces of Balac: Get you vnto youre londe, for the LORDE wyll not suffer me to go with you.

And the prynces of  $\hat{y}$  Moabites gat thē vp, came to Balac,  $\tau$  saide: Balaam refuseth to come with vs. Then sent Balac yet a greater cōpany of prynces,  $\tau$  more honorable thē they. When they came to Balaam, they tolde him: Balac  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Ziphor sendeth  $\hat{y}$  this worde: Oh refuse not to come vnto me, for I wyll promote the vnto hye honoure,  $\tau$  wil do what so euer thou sayest vnto me. Come I praye the, curse me this people.

Balaam answered,  $\tau$  sayde vnto  $\hat{y}$  seruantes of Balac: \* Yf Balac wolde geue me his house full of syluer  $\tau$  golde, yet coulde I not go beyonde  $\hat{y}$  worde of the LORDE my God, to do litle or greate. Neuertheles tary ye here this night,  $\hat{y}$  I maye wete, what the LORDE wil saye more vnto me. Then came God to Balaam by night,  $\tau$  saide vnto him: Yf the men are come to call the, get the vp then, and go with thē: but what I shal saye vnto the, that shalt thou do.

D Then rose Balaam vp in the mornyng,  $\tau$ saddled his Asse,  $\tau$  wente with the prynces of  $\hat{y}$  Moabites. But the wrath of God waxed whote, because he wēte. And the angell of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE stode in the waye, to withstode him. But he rode vpō his Asse,  $\tau$  two seruantes with him. And  $\hat{y}$  Asse sawe  $\hat{y}$  angell of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE stōdinge in  $\hat{y}$  waye,  $\tau$  his swerde drawn in his hāde. And  $\hat{y}$  Asse turned a syde out of  $\hat{y}$  waye,  $\tau$  wēte in to the felde. But Balaam smote her,  $\hat{y}$  she shulde go in the waye.

Then stode the angell of the LORDE in  $\hat{y}$  pathe by the vynyardes, where there were walles on both the sydes. And whan  $\hat{y}$  Asse sawe the angell of the LORDE, she wrenshed vnto the wall,  $\tau$  thrust Balaams fote vnto the wall. And he smote her agayne. Thē wēte the angell of the LORDE farther,  $\tau$  stode in a narrow place, where there was no waye to turne, nether to the righte hāde ner to  $\hat{y}$  lefte. And whan the Asse sawe the angell of the LORDE, she fell downe vnder Balaam. Then was Balaams wrath furious,  $\tau$  smote the Asse with a staffe.

Then opened the LORDE the mouth of  $\hat{y}$  Asse, and she sayde vnto Balaam: What haue I done vnto the, that thou hast smytten me now thre tymes? Balaam sayde vnto  $\hat{y}$  Asse: Because thou hast mocked me. Oh  $\hat{y}$  I had a swerde now in my hande, I wolde kyll the. The Asse sayde vnto Balaam: Am not I thine Asse, which thou hast rydden vpon in thy tyne vnto this daye? Was I euer wonte to do so vnto the? He sayde: No.

Then opened the LORDE the eyes of Balaam,  $\hat{y}$  he sawe  $\hat{y}$  angell of the LORDE stōdinge in  $\hat{y}$  waye,  $\tau$  a drawē swerde in his hāde. And he enclyned him selfe,  $\tau$  bowed downe with his face. And the angell of the LORDE sayde vnto him: Wherefore hast thou smyttē thine Asse now thre tymes? Beholde, I am come out to resistē  $\hat{y}$ , for thy waye is frowarde,  $\tau$  cōtrary vnto me. And  $\hat{y}$  Asse sawe me,  $\tau$  auoyded fro me thre tymes: or els yf she had not turned asyde fro me, I had slayne the,  $\tau$  saued the Asse alyue.

Then sayde Balaam vnto  $\hat{y}$  angell of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE: I haue synned, for I wyst not, that thou stodest in the waye agaynst me. And now yf it displease  $\hat{y}$ , I wil turne agayne. The angell of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE saide vnto him: Go with the mē: but thou shalt speake nothing els, then  $\hat{y}$  I shal saye vnto  $\hat{y}$ . So Balaam wente forth with the princes of Balac. Whan Balac herde þæt Balaam came, he wente out to mete him (in the cite of the Moabites þæt lieth on the coaste of Arnon, which is on þæt vttemost border) ⁊ sayde vnto him: Dyd not I sende for þæt to call the? Wherefore earnest thou not then vnto me? Thinkest thou þæt I am not able to promote þæt vnto honoure? Balaam answered him: Lo, I am come vnto þæt. \*But how can I saye any thinge els, thē þæt God putteth in my mouth? þæt I must speake.

So Balaam wente with Balac, and they came vnto the cite on the vttemost border of his lande. And Balac slewe oxen and shepe, and sent for Balaam, and for the prynces that were with him.

The xliiiij. Chapter.

AND in the mornyng, Balac toke Balaam, and they wēte vp to the hye place of Baal, that from thēce he might se vnto the vttemost parte of þæt people. And Balaam sayde vnto Balac: Buylde me here seuen altares, and prouyde me here seuen bullockes, and seue rammes. Balac dyd as Balaam sayde. And both Balac and Balaam offred, on euery altare a bullocke ⁊ a ramme. And Balaam sayde vnto Balac: Stonde thou by thy burntofferynge, I wil go, yf happily the LORDE wil mete me, ⁊ call me, þæt I maye tell the, what so euer he sheweth me. And he wente his waye, as he sayde.

And þæt LORDE mett Balaam. And Balaam sayde vnto him: Seuen altares haue I prepared, and offred on euery altare a bullocke and a ramme. The LORDE put þæt worde in Balaams mouth, and sayde: Go agayne vnto Balac, and saye on this wise. And whan he came agayne vnto him, beholde, he stode by his burntofferynge, with all þæt prynces of the Moabites.

Then toke he vp his parable, ⁊ sayde: Balac the kyng of the Moabites hath caused to fet me out of Syria from the moūtaynes towarde the East, (⁊ sayde:) Come, curse me Iacob: come, defye me Israel. How shall I curse, whom God curseth not? How shal I defye, whom þæt LORDE defyeth not? For frō þæt toppe of þæt stonye rockes I se him, ⁊ from the hilles I beholde him. Beholde, þæt people shal dwell by thē selues, ⁊ shal not be rekened amōge the Heithē. Who can tell the dust of Iacob, ⁊ the nombre of the fourth parte of Israel? My soule die þæt death of þæt righteous, and my ende be as the ende of these.

Thē saide Balac vnto Balaam: What doest thou vnto me? I caused to fet þæt for to curse myne enemies, ⁊ beholde, thou blessest thē. He answered ⁊ sayde: †Must I not kepe ⁊ speake þæt, which the LORDE putteth in to me mouth? Balac sayde vnto him: Come with me yet vnto another place, frō whence thou mayest se þæt vttemost parte of them, ⁊ not se them all, and curse me them there.

And he toke him vp to a fre place, eue vnto the toppe of Pisga, ⁊ buylde seuen altares, and offred on euery altare a bullocke ⁊ a ramme. And he sayde vnto Balac: Stonde so by thy burntofferynge, whyle I go yonder. And the LORDE mett Balaam, ⁊ put the worde in his mouth, ⁊ sayde: Go agayne vnto Balac, ⁊ saye on this wyse. And whan he came to him agayne, beholde, he stode by his burntofferynge with the prynces of the Moabites. And Balac sayde vnto him: What hath the LORDE sayde?

And he toke vp his parable, ⁊ sayde: Ryse vp Balac ⁊ heare, marke my testimony with thine eares thou sonne of Ziphor. †God is not a man þæt he shulde lye, ner a mans childe þæt eny thinge shulde repent him. Shulde he saye and not do? Shulde he speake ⁊ not make it good? Beholde, I am brought hither to blesse, I blesse, ⁊ can not go back there fro. There is no weerynes sene in Iacob, nether eny laboure in Israel. The LORDE his God is with him, ⁊ the kynges trompet is amōge thē. *God hath brought thē out of Egipte, his strēgh is as of an Vnicorne. For there is no Sorcerye in Iacob, ⁊ no Soyth sayer in Israel. Whan the tyme cōmeth, it shal be saide vnto Iacob, ⁊ to Israel, what God doth. Beholde, the people shall ryse vp as a Lyonesse, ⁊ heue vp him self as a Lyon. He shal not lye downe, tyll he eate of the pray, and drynke the bloude of the slayne.

Then sayde Balac vnto Balaam: Thou shalt nether curse him ner blesse him. Balaam answered, ⁊ sayde vnto Balac: Haue I not tolde the: All þæt the LORDE speaketh, þæt must I do? Balac sayde vnto him: Oh come, I wil bryng þæt to another place, yf it maye happily please God, þæt thou mayest curse thē there. And he brought him vp to the toppe of mount Peor, þæt boweth towarde the

The xxiiij. Chapter.

NOW when Balaam sawe  $\hat{y}$  it pleased the LORDE, that he shulde blesse Israel, he wente not (as he dyd before) to seke witches, but set his face straight toward the wyldernesse, lifte vp his eyes, and sawe Israel, <sup>a</sup> how they laye accordinge to their trybes, and the sprete of God came vpon him, and he toke vp his parable, and sayde: <sup>a</sup> Thus sayeth Balaam the sonne of Beor: Thus sayeth the man whose eyes are opened: Thus sayeth he which heareth the wordes of God, which sawe the vision of  $\hat{y}$  Allmightie: which fell downe, and his eyes were opened.

How goodly are thy tētes O Iacob, and thy habitacions O Israel? Euen as the brode valleys, as the gardens by the waters syde, as  $\hat{y}$  tentes which the LORDE hath plāted,  $\tau$  as the Cedar trees vpon  $\hat{y}$  water. The water shal flowe out of his boket, and his sede shalbe a greate water. His kyngye shal be hyer then Agag,  $\tau$  his kyngdome shalbe exalted. God hath broughte hi out of Egipte, <sup>b</sup> his strength is as of an vnicone. He shal eate vp the Heithen his enemies, and grynde their bones to poulder, and shute thorow them with his arowes. <sup>c</sup> He hath layed him downe as a Lyon and as a Lyonesse. Who wyll rayse him vp? Blessed be he,  $\hat{y}$  blesseth the: and cursed, that curseth the.

Thē was Balac furious  $\bar{i}$  wrath against Balaam,  $\tau$  smote his hādes together,  $\tau$  sayde vnto him: I haue called the,  $\hat{y}$  thou shuldest curse myne enemies, and beholde, thou hast blessed thē now thre tymes:  $\tau$  now get the hēce to thy place. I thoughte  $\hat{y}$  I wolde promote the vnto honoure, but the LORDE hath kepte the backe from that worshippe.

Balaam answered him: Tolde not I thy messaungers (whom thou sendest vnto me)  $\tau$  sayde: <sup>d</sup> Yf Balac wolde geue me his house full of syluer and golde, yet coule I not go beyonde the worde of the LORDE, to do either euell or good after myne awne hert: but what  $\hat{y}$  LORDE speaketh, that must I speake also. And now beholde, for so moch as I go to my people, come therfore, I wyll shewe the what this people shall do vnto thy people after this tyme.

And he toke vp his parable, and sayde: <sup>e</sup> Thus sayeth Balaam the sonne of Beor: Thus sayeth  $\hat{y}$  man, whose eyes are opened: Thus sayeth he which heareth the wordes of God,  $\tau$   $\hat{y}$  hath the knowlege of  $\hat{y}$  hyst, euē he  $\hat{y}$  sawe  $\hat{y}$  visiō of  $\hat{y}$  Allmightie,  $\tau$  fell downe,  $\tau$  his eyes were opened: I shal se him, but not now: I shal beholde him, but not nie at hāde. <sup>f</sup> There shal a starre come out of Iacob,  $\tau$  a cepter shall come vp out of Israel,  $\tau$  and shal smyte  $\hat{y}$  rulers of the Moabites, and ouercome all the children of Seth.

And whā he sawe  $\hat{y}$  Amalechites, he toke vp his parable,  $\tau$  sayde: <sup>h</sup> Amalec the first amōge the Heithē,  $\tau$  but at  $\hat{y}$  last thou shalt perishe vtterly. And whan he sawe the Kenites, he toke vp his parable,  $\tau$  sayde: Strōge is thy dwellinge, and on a rocke hast thou put thy nest, neuertheles thou shalt be a burninge vnto Kain, tyll Assur take  $\hat{y}$  presoner.

And he toke vp his parable agayne,  $\tau$  sayde: Alas, who shal lyue, whā God doth this? And shippes out of Cītim shall subdue Assur and Eber. He him self also shal perishe vtterly. And Balaam gat him vp, and departed, and came agayne vnto his place, and Balac wente his waye also.

The xrv. Chapter.

AND Israel dwelt in Sittim, <sup>i</sup> and the people beganne to commytte whordome with the daughters of the Moabites, which called the people vnto the sacrifice of their goddes. And the people ate and worshipped their goddes, <sup>ii</sup> and Israel submytted him self vnto Baal Peor. Then the wrath of the LORDE waxed whote vpon Israel, and he sayde vnto Moses: Take all the rulers of the people, and hange them vp vnto the LORDE agaynst  $\hat{y}$  Sonne, that the terryble wrath of the LORDE maye be turned awaye from Israel. Oure father is deed in the wilderness, & was not in the company of them. ŷ rose vp agaynst ŷ LORDE<sup>d</sup> in the cōgregacion of Corah: but dyed in his awne synne, and had no sonnes. Wherefore shulde oure fathers name perishe then amonge his kynred, though he haue no sonne? Geue vs a possession also amonge oure fathers brethren.

Moses broughte their cause before ŷ Ⓢ LORDE. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: The daughters of Zelaphead haue spokē righte. Thou shalt geue thē a possession to inheret amonge their fathers brethren, & shalt turne their fathers enheritaunce vnto them. #### The xxxij. Chapter.

THE children of Ruben and the children of Gad had an exceedinge greate multitude of catell, and sawe the londe of Iaesar and Gilead ſ̃ it was a mete place for catell, and came & spake vnto Moses and to Eleasar the prest, and to the captaynes of the congregacion: The londe of Atroth, Dibon, Iaesar, Nimra, Heszbō, Eleale, Seban, Nebo, & Beon, which the LORDE smote before ſ̃ congregacion of Israel, is a mete londe for catell, and thy seruauentes haue many catell. And they sayde morouer: Yf we haue founde fauoure before the, thē geue thy seruauentes this londe in possession, and we wyl not go ouer Iordane.

Moses sayde vnto them: Your brethren shall go to the warre, and wyl ye tary here? Wherefore turne ye ſ̃ hertes of the children of Israel, that they shulde not go ouer in to the londe that the LORDE shall geue them?

the hertes of the children of Israel, so ſ̃ they wolde not in to the londe which ſ̃ LORDE wolde haue geuen them.

And the LORDE was wroth at the same tyme, & sware, & sayde: "These men ſ̃ are come out of Egipte, from twētye yere olde & aboue, shall not se the lande which I sware vnto Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, because they haue not wholly folowed me: saue Caleb ſ̃ sonne of Iephune ſ̃ Kenisite, & Iosua ſ̃ sonne of Nun: for they haue wholly folowed ſ̃ LORDE. And beholde, ye are rysen vp in youre fathers steade, to increase the nombre of synfull men, & to augmente yet the wrath & indignacion of the LORDE agaynst Israel. For yf ye turne ye backe from folowinge him, he shal yet leaue them more in the wildernes, & so shal ye destroye all this people.

Then stepte they to him, & sayde: we wyl but buyde shepfoldes here for oure shep & catell, & cities for oure children: As for oure selues, we will go ready armed before the children of Israel, tyll we haue broughte them vnto their place: Oure childrē shal remayne in the fenced cities, because of ſ̃ indwellers of the londe. We will not turne home agayne, tyll the children of Israel haue taken euery one his inheritaunce in possession: for we wyl not inheret with them beyonde Iordane: for oure inheritaunce shal fall vnto vs vpon this syde Iordane Eastwarde.

Moses sayde vnto them: † Yf ye wil do this, that ye wil harnesse youre selues to the warre before the LORDE, then go ouer Iordane before the LORDE, who so euer is harnessed amonge you, tyll he haue dryuen out his enemies before his face, and vntyll the londe be subdued before the LORDE, then shal ye returne, & be vngiltye before the LORDE, and before Israel, & so shal ye haue this londe in possession before the LORDE. But yf ye will not do so, beholde, ye shal offende agaynst the LORDE, and be sure, that youre synne shal fynde you out. The Moses comaunded Eleasar ⁊ prest ⁊ Iosua the sonne of Nun, ⁊ the chefe fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel, and saide vnto them: Yf the children of Gad ⁊ the children of Ruben go ouer Iordane with you, all prepared to fight before the LORDE, ⁊ whan the londe is subdued vnto you, the geue them the londe of Gilead in possessiō. But yf they go not ouer with you in harnes, then shal they inheret with you in ⁊ lōde of Canaā.

The children of Gad and the children of Rubē answered, ⁊ sayde: As ⁊ LORDE hath spoken vnto thy seruantes, so wyll we do: we wil go harnesssed before the LORDE in to ⁊ lāde of Canaan, and possesse oure enheritance on this syde Iordane.

So Moses gaue vnto ⁊ children of Gad and to the children of Ruben, and to the halfe trybe of Manasse the sonne of Ioseph, ⁊ kyngdome of Sihon kyng of the Amorites and the kyngdome of Ōg the kyng of Basan, the londe with the cities therof in all ⁊ coastes of ⁊ cōuntre rounde aboute. The ⁊ children of Gad buylded Dibon, Ataroth, Aroer, Atroth, Sophan, Iaesser, ⁊ Iegabeha, Bethnimra, ⁊ Betharan, stronge fenced cities, ⁊ shepe foldes. The children of Ruben buylded Heszbō, Eleale, Kiriathaim, Nebo, Baal Meon, ⁊ turned ⁊ names, ⁊ Sibamas ⁊ gaue names vnto ⁊ cities which they buylded. And ⁊ children of Machir the sonne of Manasse wente in to Gilead, ⁊ conquered it, and droue out the Amorites ⁊ were therin. Then Moses gaue Gilead vnto Machir ⁊ sonne of Manasse, ⁊ he dwelt therin. Iair ⁊ sonne of Manasse wente and conquered the vyllages therof, and called them Hauoth Iair. Nobah wente, and cōquered Kenath, with the townes belonginge therto, and called it Nobah, after his awne name.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, <sup>a</sup> and sayde: Commaunde the childrē of Israel, and saie vnto them: Whan ye come in to the londe of Canaan, the londe y falleth to youre inheritance, shall haue hir borders in the londe of Canaan. But the West quarter shal be this: namely the greate see, let y be youre border towarde the West.

The North quarter shalbe this: Ye shall <sup>b</sup> compass from the greate see vnto mount Hor. And fro mount Hor ye shall compass tyll a man come vnto Hemath, that the out goynge therof be the coast of Zedada, and that the border of the same go out vnto Siphron, and that the goynge out of it be at Hazor Enan. Let this be youre North quarter.

And youre East quarter shall ye cōpasse from Hazor Enan vnto Sephan, & let the coaste go downe from Sephan and Ribla on the East syde of Ain. C And Moses commaunded the children of Israel, and sayde: This is youre londe that ye shal deuyde out amonge you by lott, which the LORDE hath commaunded to geue vnto the nyne trybes, and to the halfe trybe. *For the trybe of the children of Ruben after their fathers house, and the trybe of the children of Gad accordinge to their fathers house, and the half trybe of Manasse haue receaued their porcion. Thus the two trybes and the halfe trybe haue their enheritaunce already, on this syde Iordane, ouer agaynst Iericho, Eastwarde.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: "These are ŷ names of the men, which shal deuyde the londe amonge you. Eleasar the prest, and Iosua the sonne of Nun. And the captayne of euery trybe shal ye take, to deuyde the londe.

D And these are the names of the men: Caleb the sonne of Iephune of the trybe of Iuda. Semuel the sonne of Ammihud of the trybe of Simeon. Elidad ŷ sonne of Cison of the trybe of Ben Iamin. Buki the sonne of Iagli of the trybe of the childrē of Dan. Hamuel the sonne of Ephod, of the trybe of the children of Manasse amonge the children of Ioseph. Kemuel the sonne of Siphthan, of the trybe of the children of Ephraim. Elizaphan the sonne of Parnach, of the trybe of the childrē of Zabulon. Palthiel the sonne of Asan, of the trybe of the childrē of Isachar. Abihud the sonne of Selomi, of ŷ trybe of the children of Asser. Pedahel the sonne of Ammihud, of the trybe of the children of Nephtali. These are they whom ŷ LORDE commaunded, that they shulde deuyde the inheritaunce vnto the children of Israel in the londe of Canaan.

The xrv. Chapter.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Moses in the felde of the Moabites by Iordane ouer agaynst Iericho, & sayde: Commaunde the childrē of Israel, *that they geue vnto ŷ Leuites of the inheritaunce of their possession, cities to dwell in. The suburbs also aboute the cities shal ye geue vnto the Leuites, that they maye dwell in the cities, and in the suburbs to haue their catell, and substaunce, and all their beestes.

The suburbs which ye geue vnto ŷ Leuites, shal reache frō the wall of ŷ cite outwarde, a

M. cubites rounde aboute. Thus ye shal measure without the cite on ŷ East syde, two thousande cubites: & on ŷ South syde, two thousande cubites: & on ŷ West syde, two thousande cubites: & on ŷ North syde, two thousande cubites, so ŷ the cite be in the myddes. This shal be their suburbs.

B And amōge the cities which ye shal geue vnto the Leuites, ye shall geue the sixe fre cities, that he which cōmitteth a slaughter, maie flye thither. Besydes the same ye shal geue the yet two & fourtie cities: so ŷ all ŷ cities which ye geue vnto ŷ Leuites, be eight & fourtye with their suburbs. And of ŷ same ye shal geue the more, from the ŷ haue moch in possession amonge the children of Israel: & the lesse from them, that hane litle in possession. Euery one (accordinge to his enheritaunce that is denyded vnto him) shall geue of his cities vnto the Leuites.

And the LORDE talked with Moses & saide: Speake to the childrē of Israel, & saye vnto the: "Whan ye come ouer Iordane in to ŷ londe of Canaan, ye shall chose out cities to be fre cities, ŷ who so cōmytteth slaughter vnawarres, maye flye thither. And soch fre cities shalbe amonge you because of the auenger of bloude, that he which hath cōmytted slaughter, dye not, tyll he stonde in iudgment before the congregacion. And of these cities which ye shal geue, there shalbe sixe fre cites. Thre shal ye geue on this side Iordane, and thre in the londe of Canaan.

These are the sixe fre cities, both for ŷ childrē of Israel & for the strangers, & for soch as dwell amōge you, ŷ who so euer hath slaine eny soule vnawarres, maye flye thither.

C He ŷ smytheth eny man with an yron weapō, ŷ he dye, the same is a murthurer, & shal dye the death. Yf he cast at him with a stone (wherwith eny man maye be slayne) ŷ he dye therof, then is he a murthurer, and shal dye the death. Yf he smyte him with an hand-weapon of wodd (wherwith eny man maie be slayne) that he dye, then is he a murthurer, and shal dye the death. The auenger of bloude shal bringe ŷ murthurer to death. Whan he syndeth him, he shal slaye him. Yf he thrust at him of hate, or cast ought at him with laienge of wayte, or smyte him of enyue with his hande, that he dye, then shal he that hath slayne him, dye the death: for he is a murthurer. The auenger of bloude shal brynge him to death, as soone as he fyndeth him.

But yf he thrust him by chaunce, ⁊ not of envye, or hurle ought at him without eny layenge of wayte, or cast at him with a stone (wherof a man maye dye, ⁊ sawe it not) so yf he dye, ⁊ is not his enemye, nether thought him eny euell, thē shal the cōgregacion iudge betwene him yf hath cōmytted yf slaughter, and the auenger of bloude, in such cases. And the cōgregacion shal delyuer the deed slayer from the hande of yf auenger of bloude, ⁊ shal let him come agayne to the fre cite, whither he was fled: ⁊ there shall he abyde vnto yf death of the hye prest, which was anoynted with yf holy oyle. But yf the deed sleyer go out of the borders of his fre cite, that he was fled vnto, and the auenger of bloude fynde him without yf borders of his fre cite, and kyll him, he shal not be gyltye of bloude. For he shulde haue bydden in his fre cite vntyll yf death of the hye prest, ⁊ after yf hye prestes death to come agayne vnto the londe of his enheritaunce. This shalbe a statute of the lawe vnto you amōge youre posterities in all youre dwellinges.

The deed slayer shal be slayne at yf mouth of witnesses. *One witnesse shal not answere ouer a soule to death. And ye shal receaue none attonement ouer the soule of the deed-slayer (for he is gyltye of death) but he shal dye the death. And ye shal receaue none attonement of him, which is fled to the fre cite, yf he shulde come agayne to dwell in the londe, tyll the hye prest dye. And defyle not ye yf londe wherin ye dwell. For who so is gyltye of bloude, defyleth the londe: and the londe can not be reconcyed from the bloude that is shed therin, but onely thorow the bloude of him that shed it. Defyle not ye the londe that ye dwell in, wherin I dwell also. For I am the LORDE, which dwell amōge yf children of Israel.

taynes amonge the chefe fathers of the children of Israel, and saide: Syr, the LORDE hath commaunded, that ye shulde geue the londe by lott vnto the childrē of Israel to inheret. And thou my lorde hast commaunded thorow the LORDE, <sup>a</sup> that the enheritaunce of oure brother Zelaphead shulde be geuē vnto his daughters. Now yf eny men out of the trybes of Israel take them to wyues, then shal oure fathers enheritaunce be lesse: and as moch as they haue, shal come to yf enheritaunce of the trybe that they come vnto. Thus shal the lott of oure inheritaunce be mynished. So whan the yeare of Iubilye commeth vnto the childrē of Israel, then shal their enheritaunce come to yf enheritaunce of the trybe, where they are. Thus shal oure fathers enheritaunce be mynished, as moch as they haue.

Moses charged the childrē of Israel (acordinge to the commaundement of the LORDE) and sayde: The trybe of the children of Ioseph hath sayde righte. This is it that yf LORDE commaundeth the daughters of Zelaphead, and sayeth: <sup>a</sup> Let them mary as they like best, onely that they mary in yf kynred of the trybe of their father, that the enheritaunce of the children of Israel fall not frō one trybe to another. For euery one amonge the children of Israel shall cleue to the enheritaunce of the trybe of his father: ⁊ euery doughter that possesseth eny enheritaunce amonge the trybes of the children of Israel, shal be maryed vnto one of the kynred of the trybe of hir father: <sup>c</sup> yf euery one amonge the children of Israel maye enioye his fathers enheritaunce, and that the enheritaunce fall not from one trybe to another: but that euery one maye cleue to his awne enheritaunce amonge the trybes of the children of Israel.

As the LORDE cōmaunded Moses, euē so dyd yf daughters of Zelaphead, Mahela, Thirza, Hagla, Milca ⁊ Noa ⁊ were married vnto their fathers brothers sonnes, of yf kynred of the children of Manasse the sonne of Ioseph. So their enheritaunce remainyd in the trybe of the kynred of their father.

These are the commaundemētes ⁊ lawes, which yf LORDE commaunded by Moses vnto the childrē of Israel, in the felde of the Moabites by Iordane ouer agaynst Iericho.

A THESE are the wordes that Moses spake vnto all Israel on the other syde Iordane in the wilderness, in the playne felde toward the reed see, betwene Paran, Thophel, Laban, Hazeroth, and Disahab, eleuen daies journey from Horeb, by the waye of mount Seir vnto Cades Bernea. And it fortuneth the first daye of the eleuenth moneth in the fortieth yere, that Moses spake vnto ¶ children of Israel accordinge vnto all as ¶ LORDE commaunded him, *after he had smytten Sihon ¶ kynge of the Amorites which dwelt at Heszbou: and Og the kynge of Basan, that dwelt at Asteroth, and at Edrei.

On the other syde Iordane in ¶ lande of the Moabites, beganne Moses to declare this lawe, and sayde: The LORDE oure God spake vnto vs vpon mount Horeb, ¶ sayde: Ye haue bene lōge ynough vpon this mountayne, turne you, ¶ departe hence, that ye maye come to the mountaynes of the Amorites, and to all their neighbours in ¶ felde, vpon mountaynes, and in the valleys toward the South and toward the see syde, of the lande of Canaan: and to mount Libanus, ¶ euen vnto the greate water Euphrates. Beholde, I haue deliuered you the londe, go in, and take it in possession, which the LORDE sware vnto youre fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob,† that he wolde geue it vnto thē, and their sede after them.

Then saide I vnto you at the same tyme: "I am not able to beare you my self alone, for the LORDE youre God hath increased you, so that this daye ye are as ¶ starres of heauen in multitude. (The LORDE God of youre fathers make you yet many thousande tymes mo, ¶ blesse you, as he hath promysed you.) How can I alone beare soche cōbraunce, ¶ charge, ¶ stryfe amōge you? Prouyde here men of wysdome ¶ vnderstandinge, such as are knowne amonge youre trybes, thē wil I set to be heades vnto you.

Then answered ye me, and sayde: It is a good thinge, that thou sayest thou wilt do. Then toke I ¶ heades of youre trybes, wyse and famous mē, and set them ouer you to be heades, ouer thousandes, ouer hundreds, ouer fiftye and ouer ten: and officers amonge youre trybes.

And I charged youre iudges at ¶ same tyme, ¶ sayde: Heare youre brethrē, ¶ iudge righteously betwene euery man and his brother, and the straunger. Ye shall knowe no personne in iudgment, but shall heare the small as well as the greate, and be afrayed of no man: for the Iudgment is Gods. But yf eny cause be to harde for you, ¶ let it be broughte vnto me, ¶ I maye heare it. Thus commaunded I you at the same tyme, all ¶ ye shulde doo.

Then departed we from Horeb, and walked thorow the whole wyldernes (which is greate and terryble as ye haue sene) by the waye to ¶ mountaynes of the Amorites, as the LORDE oure God commaūded vs, and came vnto Cades Bernea. Then sayde I vnto you: Ye are come to ¶ mountaynes of ¶ Amorites, which the LORDE oure God shal geue vs. Beholde, there the londe before the, which the LORDE thy God hath geuē vnto the: Go vp, ¶ conquer it, as ¶ LORDE God of thy fathers hath sayde vnto the: ¶ feare not, and be not discouraged.

Then came ye all vnto me, and sayde: Let vs sende men before vs, ¶ to spye vs out the londe, and to brynge vs worde agayne, by what waye we shal go vp, and to what cities we shal come. That pleased me well, and I toke twelue men from amonge you, of euery trybe one. Which whan they were departed, and wente vp to hye cōuntre, and came to the ryuer Escol, they spyed it out, and toke of the frute of ¶ londe with thē,¶ and broughte it downe vnto vs, and broughte vs worde agayne, and sayde: It is a good londe, that the LORDE oure God hath geuen vs.

But ye wolde not go vp, and were disobedient vnto the mouth of the LORDE youre God, and murmured in youre tentes, and sayde: Because the LORDE hateth vs, therefore hath he broughte vs out of the londe of Egypte, to deliuer vs in to the handes of the Amorites, to destroye vs. Whither shal we go vp? Oure brethren haue discouraged oure hertes, ¶ saide: 'The people is greater ¶ of hyer stature thē we, ¶ cities are greate, ¶ walled euen vp to heauen. Morouer we haue sene there the children of Enakim.

But I sayde vnto you: Feare not, and be not afrayed of them: for the LORDE youre

God goeth before you, and shall fighte for you, like as he dealeth with you in Egipte before youre eyes, and in the wyldernes: where thou sawest, that the LORDE thy God bare the (euen as a man beareth his sonne) thorow out all the waye that ye haue walked, tyll ye came to this place. And yet for all this ye haue not beleued on the LORDE youre God, which wente before you, to searche you out a place, where ye shulde pitch youre tentes: by night in the fyre (to shewe you the waye, wherein ye shulde go) <sup>a</sup> and on the daye tyme in the cloude.

Whan the LORDE herde <sup>b</sup> y voice of youre wordes, he was wroth, and swore, and saide: <sup>c</sup> There shall none of this euell generacion se that good londe, which I sware to geue vnto youre fathers, excepte Caleb the sonne of Iephune, he shal se it. And vnto him wyl I geue the londe that he hath troddē vpon, and to his children, because he hath perfectly folowed the LORDE.

<sup>h</sup> Then answered ye, and sayde vnto me: We haue synned agaynst <sup>i</sup> the LORDE, we wil go vp, and fighte, acordinge to all that the LORDE hath commaunded vs. Now whan ye had prepared youre selues, euery one in his harness, and were at the poynte to go vp to the mountaynes, <sup>j</sup> the LORDE sayde vnto me: Speake vnto them, <sup>k</sup> they go not vp, and that they fighte not (for I am not amōge you) that ye be not smytten before youre enemies. Whan I tolde you this, ye wolde not heare, and were disobedient vnto the worde of the LORDE, and were presumptuous, and wente vp to <sup>l</sup> the mountaines. Then the Amorites that dwelt vpon the moūtaines, came out against you, and chased you, as Bees do, and smote you at Seir, euen vnto Horma. Now whan ye came againe, and wepte before the LORDE, he wolde not heare youre voyce, and enclyned not his eares vnto you. <sup>m</sup> So ye abode in Cades a longe season.

The ij. Chapter.

THEN turned we vs, and toke oure iourney <sup>n</sup> to the wildernes, <sup>o</sup> euen the waye to the reed see (as the LORDE sayde vnto me) and compassed mount Seir a longe season. And <sup>p</sup> the LORDE saide vnto me: Ye haue compassed this mountayne now lōge ynough, turne you Northwarde, and commaūde the people, and saye: Ye shal go thorow <sup>q</sup> the coastes of youre brethren the children of Esau, which dwell at Seir: and they shal be afraied of you. But take diligēte hede to youre selues, that ye prouoke them not: for I wyl not geue you one fote bredth of their londe. <sup>r</sup> For mount Seir haue I geuen to the children of Esau to possesse. Ye shal bye meate of them for moneye, that ye maye eate. And water shal ye bye of them for moneye, that ye maye drynke. For the LORDE thy God hath blessed the in all the workes of thy hondes. He hath considered thy iourneyes thorow this greate wyldernes: and this fortye yeares hath the LORDE thy God bene with the, so that thou hast wanted nothinge.

Now whan we were departed from oure brethren the children of Esau, that dwelt vpon mount Seir, by the waye of the felde from Elath and Ezeon gaber, we turned vs, and wente by the waye of the wyldernes of <sup>s</sup> the Moabites. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: <sup>t</sup> Thou shalt not vex the Moabites, ner prouoke the vnto battayll, for I wil not geue the of their londe to possesse. For Ar haue I geuen vnto the children of Lot in possession. <sup>u</sup> The Emims dwelt there before tyme, which were a greate stronge people, and hie of stature, as the Enakims: and were taken for giauntes, like as <sup>v</sup> the Enakims. And <sup>w</sup> the Moabites called them Emims. <sup>x</sup> The Horites also dwelt in Seir afore tyme, and <sup>y</sup> the children of Esau droue them out, and destroyed them before them, and dwelt in their steade: like as Israel dyd in <sup>z</sup> the lōde of his possession, that the LORDE gaue them.

And we wente ouer. The tyme that we were goinge frō Cades Barnea, tyll we came ouer the ryuer Sared, was eight & thirtie yeares: tyll all the men of warre were waysted out of the hoost, *as the LORDE sware vnto them. The hande of the LORDE also was agaynst them, to destroye thē out of the hoost, tyll they were consumed.

And when all the men of warre were consumed, so ŷ they were deed amonge the people, the LORDE spake vnto me, and sayde: This daie shalt thou go thorow the coast of ŷ Moabites by Ar, & shalt come nye vnto ŷ children of Ammon,† whom thou shalt not vexe ner prouoke. For I wyll not geue the of the lōde of the childrē of Ammon to possesse, for I haue geuē it vnto the childrē of Lot in possession. It was takē for a lōde of giauntes also, & giauntes dwelt therein afore tyme. And ŷ Ammonites calle thē Samsumims, which was a people that was greате, many, and of hye stature, as the Enakims.

D And these ŷ LORDE destroyed before thē, and let them possesse the same, so that they dwelt in their steade. ‡ Like as he dyd with the childrē of Esau, which dwell vpō mount Seir, whan he destroyed the Horites before them: and let them possesse the same, so that they haue dwelt in their steade vnto this daye. And the Caphthorims came out of Caphther, and destroyed ŷ Auims (ŷ dwelt at Hazarim euen vnto Gaza) & there dwelt they in their steade.

Get you vp now, and departe, and go ouer the ryuer Arnon. Beholde, I haue geuē Sihon ŷ kynge of the Amorites at Heszbou in to thy hande: go to and conquere, and prouoke him vnto battayll. This daye wyll I begynne, so that all naciōs vnder all the heauen, shal feare & drede ŷ: In so moch ŷ whā they heare of the, they shal tremble and quake for thy commynge.

EE Then sent I messaungers from ŷ wylder- nesse of the East vnto *Sihon the kynge at Heszbou † with peaceble wordes, and caused to saye vnto him: I wil go but thorow thy lōde, I wil go a longe by the hye waye, I wil nether turne to the righte hāde ner to ŷ left. Thou shalt sell me meate for money, that I maye eatē: & water shalt thou sell me for money, that I maye drinke. Onely let me go thorow by fote, ‡as the children of Esau (which dwell at Seir) dyd vnto me: and the Moabites that dwell at Ar: vntyll I be come ouer Iordane, in to the londe which the LORDE oure God shal geue vnto vs.

But Sihon the kynge at Heszbou wolde not let vs go by him: for the LORDE thy God hardened his mynde, & made his hert tough that he mighte deluyuer him in to thy hādes, as it is come to passe this daye.

And ŷ LORDE sayde vnto me: Beholde, I haue begonne to deluyuer Sihon with his londe before the: go to and cōquere, and possesse his lōde. ¶ And Sihō came out with all his people to fight agaynst vs at Iahza. But the LORDE oure God deluyered him in to oure handes, so that we smote him with his children and all his people.

Then toke we all his cities at the same tyme, and destroyed vtterly all the cities, men, wemen, and children, and let none remayne: saue the catell, which we caught to oure selues, & the spoyle of the cities that we wanne from Aroer, which lyeth vpon the ryuer syde of Arnon, and from the cite on the ryuer vnto Gilead. There was no cite that coulde defende it selfe from vs: the LORDE oure God deluyered vs all before vs. ¶ But vnto the londe of the children of Ammon thou camest not, ner to all that was on the ryuer Iabok, ner to ŷ cities vpō ŷ mountaines, ner vnto what so euer the LORDE oure God forbad vs.

The iij. Chapter.

A ND we turned vs, & wente vp ŷ waie A vnto Basan. And Og ŷ kynge of Basan, came out<sup>d</sup> with all his people to fight agaynst vs at Edrei. But the LORDE sayde vnto me: Be not afrayed of him, for I haue deluyered him & all his people with his londe in to thy hande: & thou shalt do with him, as thou dydest with Sihon kynge of ŷ Amorites, which dwelt at Heszbou.<sup>e</sup> Thus ŷ LORDE oure God deluyered Og ŷ kynge of Basan in to oure handes also with all his people: so that we smote him, tyll there was nothinge left ouer vnto him.

whole region of Argob in the kyngdome of Og at Basan. All these cities were ströge, with hye walles, gates, and barres, besyde many other vnwalld townes.

33 And we vtterly destroyed them, as we dyd with Sihon the kyng of Heszbon.* All the cities destroyed we vtterly, and the men, wemen, and children. But all the catell and spoyle of the cities caughte we for oure selues.

Thus toke we at the same tyme the londe out of the honde of the two kynges of the Amorites beyonde Iordane, from the ryuer of Arnon vnto mount Hermon (which the Sidons call Sirion, but the Amorites call it Senir) all the cities vpon the playne, and all Gilead, and all Basan vnto Salcha and Edrei, the cities of the kyngdome of Og at Basan. For onely Og the kyng of Basan remayned ouer of the giantes. Beholde, his yron bed is here at Rabath amonge the children of Ammon, nyne cubites longe, and foure cubites brode, after the cubite of a man.

This londe conquered we at the same tyme, from Aroer that lyeth on ȝ ryuer of Arnon.

And vnto the Rubenites and Gaddites I gaue halfe mount Gilead with the cities therof: but ȝ remnaunt of Gilead, ȝ all Basan the kyngdome of Og, gaue I vnto the halfe trybe of Manasse. The whole region of Argob with all Basan was called the giantes londe.

41 C Iair the sonne of Manasse toke all the region of Argob vnto the coastes of Gessuri and Maachati, and Basan called he Hauoth Iair after his awne name, vnto this daye: But vnto Machir I gaue Gilead. And vnto the Rubenites and Gaddites I gaue one parte of Gilead vnto the ryuer of Arnon (at the myddes of the ryuer is ȝ border) and vnto the ryuer Iabok, which is the border of the children of Ammon: the felde also, and Iordane (which is the coaste) from Cinereth vnto the see in the felde, namely, ȝ Salt see vnder mount Pisga, Eastwarde.

42 And I commaunded you at the same tyme, and sayde: The LORDE youre God hath geuen you this londe to take possession of it, Go youre waye forth therefore harnesssed before youre brethren the children of Israel, all ye that be mete for the warre. As for youre wyues, and children and catell (for I knowe that ye haue moch catell) let them remayne in youre cities, which I haue geuen you, vntyl the LORDE youre God haue broughte youre brethren to rest also as well as you, that they also maye take possession of the londe, which ȝ LORDE youre God shal geue thē beyonde Iordane: and then shal ye turne agayne to youre awne possession, which I haue geuen you.

And I warned Iosua at the same tyme, and sayde: Thine eyes haue sene all that the LORDE youre God hath done vnto these two kynges: euē so shal the LORDE do also vnto all ȝ kyngdomes whither thou goest. Feare them not, for the LORDE youre God shal fighte for you.

And I besoughte the LORDE at the same tyme, ȝ sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast begonne to shewe thy seruauente thy greatnesse and thy mightie hāde. For where is there a God in heauen ȝ earth, that can do after thy workes and after thy power? O let me go ȝ se ȝ good londe beyonde Iordane, ȝ goodly hye cowntre, and Libanus.

But the LORDE was angrie with me for 43 youre sakes, and wolde not heare me,<sup>d</sup> but sayde vnto me: Be content, speake nomore to me of this matter. Get the vp to the toppe of mount Pisga, and lifte vp thine eyes towarde the west, and towarde the north, and towarde the south, and towarde ȝ east: and beholde it with thine eies, for thou shalt not go ouer this Iordane. And geue Iosua his charge, and corage him, and bolde him, for he shal go ouer Iordane before the people,<sup>f</sup> and shal deuyde vnto them the londe, that thou shalt se.† And so we abode in the valley ouer agaynst the house of Peor.

LORDE thy God destroyed from amonge you.<sup>a</sup> But ye that cleue vnto the LORDE youre God, are all aliuē this daye. Beholde I haue taughte you ordinaūces and lawes, such as the LORDE my God commaunded me, that ye shulde do euē so in the londe, in to ſ which ye shal come, to possesse it.

Kepe them now therefore and do them:* for that is youre wysdome and vnderstondinge in the sight of all nacions, which whā they haue herde all these ordinaūces, shall saye: O what a wyse and vnderstondinge folke is this? and how excellent a people? For where is there so excellent a nacion, that hath goddes so nye him, as the LORDE oure God is nye vnto vs,† as oft as we call vpon him? And where is there so excellent a nacion, that hath so righteous ordinaūces and lawes, as all this lawe which I laye before you this daye.

B Take hede to thy selfe now, and kepe well thy soule, that thou forget not the thinges which thine eyes haue sene, and that they departe not out of thy hert all the dayes of thy life. <sup>a</sup>And thou shalt teach them thy children and thy childers children, the daye whā thou stodest before the LORDE thy God by mount Horeb, whan the LORDE sayde vnto me: Gather me the people together, that I maye make them heare my wordes, which they shal lerne, that they maye feare me all the dayes of their life vpon earth,‡ & that they also maye teach their children.

And ye came nye, & stode vnder ſ mount. But the mount burnt euen vnto the myddes of heauen, and there was darknesse, cloudes, and myst. And ſ LORDE spake vnto you out of the myddes of the fyre. The voyce of his wordes ye herde, neuerthelesse ye sawe no ymage,¶ but herde the voyce onely. §And he declared vnto you his couenaut, which he cōmaunded you to do, namely, the ten verses, and wrote them vpon two tables of stone. And the LORDE commaūded me at the same time, to teach you ordinaūces & lawes that ye might do thereafter in the londe, in to the which ye go to possesse it.

C Kepe well youre soules therefore, for ye sawe no maner of ymage, in the daye whā the LORDE spake vnto you out of the fyre vpon mount Horeb,|| that ye destroye not youre

¶But you hath the LORDE taken, and broughte you out of the yron fornace, namely, out of Egipte, that ye shulde be the people of his enheritaunce, as it is come to passe this daye. And the LORDE was angrie with me for youre sakes,¶ so that he sware, ſ I shulde not go ouer Iordane, ner come in to that good londe, which the LORDE thy God shall geue the to enheritaunce. Take hede therefore vnto youre selues, that ye forget not the couenaut of the LORDE youre God, and that ye make no ymages of eny maner of faszhion†† as the LORDE thy God hath commaūded. For the LORDE thy God is a consuming fyre¶ and a gelous God.

Yf whan ye haue begotten children, and childers children, and haue dwelt in the londe, ye marre youre selues, ††& make you ymages of eny maner of faszhion, and do euell in the sighte of ſ LORDE youre God, to prouoke him: §§I call heauen and earth to recorde ouer you this daie, that ye shall shortly perishe frō the londe, in to ſ which ye go ouer Iordane to possesse it. For axe after the tymes past, which haue bene before the, sens the daie  $\text{f}$  God created man vpon earth, from one ende of the heauē vnto the other, whether there was euer eny soch greate thinge done, or eny soch like herde, that a people hath herde  $\text{f}$  voyce of God speake out of the fyre (as thou hast herde)  $\text{a}$  yet liued. Or whether God assaied to go  $\text{a}$  take vnto him a people out of  $\text{f}$  myddes of a nacion, thorow tentacions, thorow tokens, thorow wonders, thorow warre,  $\text{a}$  thorow a mightie hande,  $\text{a}$  thorow a stretched out arme, and thorow greate visiōs, acordinge vnto all as the LORDE youre God hath done with you in Egipte before thine eyes.

$\text{f}$  "Thou hast sene it,  $\text{f}$  thou mightest knowe that the LORDE is God, and that there is none other but he onely.  $\text{†}$  Out of heauen made he the to heare his voyce, that he might nurtoure the: and vpon earth he shewed the his greate feare,  $\text{a}$  out of  $\text{f}$  fyre thou herdest his wordes:  $\text{‡}$  because he loued thy fathers,  $\text{a}$  chose their sede after thē. And he brought  $\text{f}$  out with his presence thorow his mightie power out of Egipte, to dryue out (before the) nations greater and mightier then thou, and to bringe  $\text{f}$  in,  $\text{f}$  he might geue the their lōde to enheritaunce, as it is come to passe this daye.

Therefore shalt thou knowe this daye,  $\text{a}$  turne it in to thine herte,  $\text{§}$  that the LORDE is God aboue in heauen, and beneth vpon earth, and that there is no mo. Kepe his ordinaunces therfore and commaundementes, which I commaunde the this daie, thē shal it go well with the and thy children after the, so that thy life shal longe endure in  $\text{f}$  londe, which the LORDE the God geweth the thy life longe.

This is the lawe which Moses layed before the children of Israel: these are the testimonies, ordinaunces,  $\text{a}$  lawes,  $\text{f}$  Moses spake vnto the children of Israel (after they were departed out of Egipte) beyonde Iordane in the valley ouer agaynst the house of Peor, in  $\text{f}$  londe of Sion kynge of  $\text{f}$  Amorites which dwelt at Heszbon,  $\text{¶}$  whom Moses  $\text{a}$  the childrē of Israel smote after they were departed out of Egipte,  $\text{a}$  conquered his lāde,  $\text{a}$  the londe of Og kynge of Basan, two kynges of the Amorites which were beyonde Iordane towardes the Sonne rysinge frō Aroer (which lyeth vpon  $\text{f}$  ryuer syde of Arnon) vnto mount Sion, which is Hermon:  $\text{a}$  all  $\text{f}$  playne felde beyonde Iordane eastwarde vnto the see in  $\text{f}$  plaine felde vnder mount Pisga.

The v. Chapter.

AND Moses called all Israel,  $\text{a}$  sayde vnto  $\text{a}$  thē: Heare Israel the ordinaunces  $\text{a}$  lawes which I speake in youre eares this daye: lerne them,  $\text{a}$  kepe thē so, that ye do thereafter.  $\text{¶}$  The LORDE oure God made a couenaunt with vs at Horeb: he made not this couenaunt with oure fathers, but with vs, that are here this daie, and lyue euery one. He talked with vs face to face out of the fyre vpō the mount. I stode at the same tyme betwixte the LORDE and you, that I might shewe you the worde of the LORDE. For ye were afrayed of the fyre,  $\text{a}$  wente not vp to the mount, and he sayde:

$\text{¶}$  I am the LORDE thy God, which haue brought the out of the londe of Egipte, out of the house of bondage. Sixe daies shalt thou laboure, and do all thy worke, but vpon the seuenth daye it is the Sabbath of the LORDE thy God: No maner worke shalt thou do in it, thou, and thy sonne, and thy daughter, and thy seruaut, and thy mayde, and thine oxe, and thine Asse, and all thy catell, and the straunger which is within thy gates, that thy seruaut and thy mayde maye rest as well as thou. For thou shalt remembre, that thou thyself also wast a seruante in the londe of Egipte, and how that the LORDE thy God brought the out from thence with a mightye hande, and a stretched out arme. Therefore hath the LORDE thy God commaunded  $\hat{y}$  to kepe the Sabbath daye.

$\hat{y}$  Honoure thy father and thy mother, as the LORDE thy God hath commaunded the that thou mayest lyue longe vpō earth, and that it maye go well with the in the londe, which the LORDE thy God shall geue the.

Thou shalt not kyll.†

Thou shalt not breake wedlocke.

Thou shalt not steale.

Thou shalt beare no false witnes against thy neighbour.

Thou shalt not  $\dagger$  lust after thy neighbours wyfe.

Thou shalt not lust after thy neighbours house, londe, seruaut, mayde, oxe, Asse, or what so euer he hath.

These are the wordes that the LORDE spake to all youre congregacion, vpon the mount out of the fyre of the cloude and darkness with a greate voyce, and added nothinge therto.  $\S$  And he wrote them vpon two tables of stone, and deliuered the vnto me.

But whan ye herde the voyce out of the darknes, and sawe the mount burne with fyre, ye came vnto me all ye rulers amonge youre trybes, and youre Elders and sayde: Beholde, the LORDE oure God hath shewed vs his glory  $\dagger$  his greatnes, and we haue herde his voyce out of  $\hat{y}$  fyre. This daye haue we sene, that God maie talke with a man, and he yet

For what is all fleshe, that it shulde be able to heare  $\hat{y}$  voyce of the lyuyng God speakyng out of  $\hat{y}$  fyre, as we haue done, and yet lyue? Go thou and heare all  $\hat{y}$  the LORDE oure God sayeth, and tell us.  $\dagger$  All  $\hat{y}$  the LORDE sayeth vnto the, that will we heare and do. Whan the LORDE herde the voyce of youre wordes which ye spake vnto me, he sayde vnto me: I haue herde  $\hat{y}$  voyce of the wordes of this people, which they haue spoken vnto  $\hat{y}$ . It is all good that they haue spoken.  $\parallel$  But who shal geue them soch an herte,  $\hat{y}$  they maye feare me,  $\dagger$  kepe all my cōmaundementes as longe as they lyue,  $\hat{y}$  it maye go well with them, and with their childrē for euer? ### The vij. Chapter.

The ix. Chapter.

HEARE O Israel, This daie shalt thou A go ouer Iordane, that thou maiest come in to conquere the nacions, which are greater and mightier then thou, †greate cities, walled vp vnto heauen, a greate people and of an hye stature, namely the childrē of Enakim, whom thou hast knowne, and of whom thou hast herde saye: Who is able to stonde agaynst the children of Enakim? Therfore shalt thou knowe this daye, that the LORDE thy God goeth before the, †sa cōsumynge fyre. He shal destroye the, and shall subdue them before the, and shal driue them out, & shortly shall he brynge the to naught, as the LORDE hath promysed the.

<sup>a</sup>Now whan the LORDE thy God hath expelled them out before the, saye not thou the in thine hert: The LORDE hath brought me in to take possession of this lande for myne awne righteousnes sake, where as †LORDE yet dryueth out the Heithen before the, because of their vngodlynes.

For thou comest not in to take their londe in possession, for thine awne righteousnes sake, and because of thy right hert: but the LORDE dryueth out these Heythen, for their awne vngodlynes sake, and that he maye perfourme the worde, which the LORDE hath sworne vnto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob.

Vnderstande now therefore, that the LORDE B thy God geueth not the this londe to possesse it, for thine awne righteousnes sake. For thou art a styffnecked people.

Remembre and forget not, how thou displeasedest the LORDE thy God in the wyldernes. Sence †daye that thou departedst out of the londe of Egipte, tyll ye came vnto this place, haue ye bene dishobedient vnto the LORDE.

tables of stone, wrytten with the fygner of God, and in them was acordinge to all the wordes, which the LORDE sayde vnto you vpon the mount out of the fyre, "in the daye of the gatheringe together.

¶ And after the fortye dayes and fortye nightes, § LORDE gaue me § two tables of stone, namely § tables of the couenaut, and sayde vnto me: 'vp, ¶ get § downe quickly from hence, for thy people whom thou broughtest out of Egipte, haue marred the selues, they are soone gone out of the waye, which I commaunded them, and haue made them a molten ymage.

And the LORDE saide vnto me: I se this people, that it is a stiffnecked people: let me alone, that I maye destroye them, and put out their name from vnder heauē. I wyl make of the a people mightier and greater thẽ this is.

¶ And as I turned me, ¶ wente downe frō the mount which brent with fyre, ¶ had § two tables of the couenaut in both my hādes, I loked, ¶ beholde, ye had synned agaynst § LORDE youre God, so § ye had made you a molten calfe, ¶ were soone turned out of § waie which the LORDE had commaunded you. Then toke I the two tables, ¶ cast them out of both my handes, ¶ brake thẽ before youre eyes, ¶ I fell before the LORDE * (euen as at the first tyme) fortye dayes ¶ fortye nightes, ¶ nether ate bred, ner drāke water, because of all youre synnes which ye had synned, whan ye dyd soch euell in the sighte of the LORDE, to prouoke him vnto wrath. ¶ For I was afraied of the wrath and indignacion, wherwith the LORDE was angrie with you, euen to haue destroyed you. And the LORDE herde me at that tyme also.†

Morouer the LORDE was very angrie with Aaron, so that he wolde haue destroyed him, but I made intercession for Aaron also at § same tyme. As for youre synne (namely, the calfe that ye had made) ¶ I toke it, and burnt it with the fyre, and smote it a sunder, ¶ grynde it in peces, euen vnto dust, and cast the dust in to the broke that descended from the mount.

Ye displeased the LORDE also, † at Tabera, † and at Massa, § and at the lustgraues, ¶ and whā he sent you from Cades Barnea, and sayde: Go vp, and conquere the londe which I haue geuen you. And ye were disobedient vnto the mouth of the LORDE youre God, and beleued not on him, and herkened not vnto his voyce: ¶ for ye haue bene disobediēt vnto the LORDE, as longe as I haue knowne you.

The fell I before § LORDE fortye daies and fortye nightes, which I laye there. For § LORDE sayde, he wolde destroye you. But I made intercession vnto the LORDE, and sayde: ¶ O LORDE LORDE, destroye not thy people and thine enheritaunce, which thou thorow thy greate power hast deliuered, and broughte out of Egipte with a mightie hāde. Remembre thy seruantes Abraham, Isaac and Iacob. Loke not vpon the stubburnesse, and vngodlynesse and synne of this people (that the londe wherout thou hast broughte vs, saye not: The LORDE was not able to bringe them in to the lande, that he promysed them, and because he hated them, therefore hath he broughte them out, to destroye thẽ in the wyldernes:.) For they are thy people ¶ thine enheritaunce, which thou hast broughte out with thy greate power, and with thy stretched out arme.

The x. Chapter.

AT the same tyme sayde the LORDE ¶ vnto me: 'Hew § two tables of stone like vnto the first, and come vp vnto me in to the mount, and make § an Arke of wod, and in the tables I wyl wryte the wordes, that were in the first, ** which thou brakest, and thou shalt laye them in the Arke. From Gadgad to Iathbath, a londe of ryuers of water. "At the same season the LORDE separated out the trybe of Leui, to beare the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt, and to stonde before the LORDE, to mynister vnto him, and to prayse his name vnto this daye. <sup>b</sup>Therefore shal the Leuites haue no porcion ner enheritaunce with their brethren: for the LORDE is their enheritaunce, as the LORDE thy God hath promysed them.

"But I taried vpō the mount (like as afore) euen fortye dayes and fortye nightes, and the LORDE herde me at that tyme also, and wolde not destroye the. But he sayde vnto me: Vp, ⁊ get the forth, ⁊ thou mayest go before the people, ⁊ they maye come in, and cōquere the lōde, which I sware vnto their fathers to geue them.

Now Israel, what requyreth the LORDE thy God of the, <sup>a</sup>but ⁊ thou feare the LORDE thy God, and that thou walke in all his wayes, ⁊ loue him, ⁊ serue the LORDE thy God with all thy hert, ⁊ with all thy soule: and ⁊ thou kepe the cōmaundementes of ⁊ LORDE, ⁊ his ordinaunces, which I cōmaunde the this daye, ⁊ thou mayest prospere? "Beholde, the heauen ⁊ the heauen of all heauēs the earth, and all ⁊ is therein, is ⁊ LORDES thy God. +Yet hath he had a pleasure vnto thy fathers, to loue thē: and hath chosen their sede after thē, namely you, aboue all nacions, as it is come to passe this daye.

Circumcyse therfore ⁊ foreszkyne of youre hert, ⁊ be nomore styffnecked. / For the LORDE youre God is God of all goddes, ⁊ LORDE ouer all lodes, a greate God, mightie ⁊ terryble, which regardeth no personne, ⁊ taketh no giftes, and doeth righte vnto the fatherlesse and wedowe, and loueth the straunger, to geue him fode ⁊ rayment. <sup>c</sup>Therefore shal ye loue a straūger, for ye youre selues also were straungers in the londe of Egipte.

<sup>a</sup>Thou shalt feare the LORDE thy God, him onely shalt thou serue, vnto him shalt thou cleue ⁊ swære by his name. He is thy

The xi. Chapter.

THERFORE shalt thou loue the LORDE <sup>a</sup>thy God, ⁊ kepe his cōmaundemētes, his ordinaunces, his lawes, ⁊ his preceptes all thy life lōge. And vnderstōde this daye, that which youre childrē knowe not: Which haue not sene the nurtoure of the LORDE youre God, ⁊ his greatnesse, ⁊ his mightie hande, ⁊ his stretched out arme, ⁊ his tokens and actes which he dyd amonge the Egipciās, vnto Pharaο the kynge of Egipte, ⁊ to all his londe, ⁊ what he dyd to the power of ⁊ Egipcians, ⁊ vnto their horses ⁊ charettes, <sup>b</sup>whan he broughte the waters of the reed see vpō them, as they folowed after you, ⁊ how ⁊ LORDE hath broughte them to naught vnto this daye: ⁊ what he dyd vnto you in the wilderness, vntyll ye came vnto this place: ¶ what he dyd vnto Dathan and Abiram the children of Eliab the sonne of Ruben, how the earth opened hir mouth and swallowed them with their householdes ⁊ tētes all their good that they had in the myddes amonge all Israel.

For youre eyes haue sene the greate workes of ⁊ LORDE, which he hath done. Therefore shal ye kepe all the commaundementes which I commaunde you this daye, that ye maye be stronge to come in, and to conquere the londe, whither ye go to possesse it, ⁊ that ye maye lyue longe in the londe, <sup>c</sup>which the LORDE sware vnto youre fathers, to geue vnto them and to their sede, euē a londe that floweth with mylke and hony: For the londe whither thou comest in, to possesse it, is not as the londe of Egipte, whence ye came out, where thou sowedest thy sede, and waterdest it at thy fote as a garden of herbes: <sup>d</sup>but it hath hilles and valleys, which drynke water of the rayne of heauen, a londe that the LORDE thy God careth for. And the eyes of the LORDE thy God are allwaye therein from the begynnyng of the yeare vnto the ende.

A THE prestes, † the Lewites, all the trybe of Leui shal haue no parte ner enheritaunce with Israel. The offerynges of ‡ LORDE ¶ his enheritaunce shal they eate. Therefore shal they haue no inheritaunce amonge their brethren, because the LORDE is their enheritaunce, as he hath saide vnto thē. This shalbe ‡ prestes dutye of the people, ¶ of thē that offre, whether it be ox or shepe, so that they geue vnto the prest the shulder and both the chekes, and the brest. And the first frutes of thy corne, of thy wyne and of thy oyle, and the first of thy shepe shering. ‡ For the LORDE thy God hath chosen him out of all thy trybes, to stonde and mynyster in the name of the LORDE, he and his sonnes all the dayes of their life.

Yf a Leuite come out of eny of thy gates or out of eny place of all Israel, where he is a gest, and cōmeth with all the desyre of his soule (vnto the place which the LORDE hath chosen) to mynister in the name of the LORDE his God, like as all his brethren ‡ Lewites, which stonde there before the LORDE, thē shal he haue like porcion of meate with the other: besydes that which he hath of the solde good of his fathers.

For who so euer doth soch, is abhominacion vnto the LORDE: and because of soch abhominacions doth the LORDE thy God dryue thē out before the. But thou shalt be perfecte with the LORDE thy God. For these nacions whom thou shalt conquere, whom the LORDE thy God hath geuen the, herken to the chosers out of dayes, and to the soyth-sayers: but so shalt not thou do vnto the LORDE thy God.

¶ A prophet, like vnto me, shall the LORDE ¶ thy God raise the vp euen out of the, ¶ from amonge thy brethren, ¶ vnto him shal ye herke, accordinge as thou desyrest before the LORDE thy God in Horeb, (in the daye of ‡ gatheringe together) ¶ saydest: 'Let me heare the voyce of the LORDE my God nomore, and se nomore this greate fyre, that I dye not. out thre cities in the myddes of the lode, y the LORDE thy God shal geue y to possesse. Thou shalt prepare the waye, and parte the coastes of thy londe (which y LORDE thy God shal deuyde out vnto the) in to thre partes, that whosoever hath commytted a slaughter, maye flie thither. And this shalbe the cause, that whosoever hath committed a slaughter, maye flye thither, and lyue.

Yf eny man smyte his neighbour vnarwarres, and hath not hated him in tyme passed (as whan a man goeth vnto the wod with his neighbour to hew downe tyMBER, and he turneth his hande with the axe to hewe downe the wod, and the yron slippeth from the helue, and hytteth his neighbour, that he dyeth) the same shal flye in to one of these cities, that he maye lyue, lest the auenger of bloude folowe after the deedsleyer, whyle his hert is whote, and ouertake him, whyle the waye is so farre, and slaye him, where as yet no cause of death is in hi, for so moch as he hated him not in tyme passed. Therefore commaunde I the, that thou appoynte out thre cities.

And whan the LORDE thy God enlargeth thy borders, as he hath sworne vnto thy fathers, ⁊ geueth the all the lode which he promysed thy fathers to geue (so that thou kepe all these comaundementes, and do y I commaunde the this daye, y thou loue the LORDE thy God, and walke in his wayes all thy life longe) the shalt thou adde yet thre cities vnto these thre, that innocent bloude be not shed in thy londe (which the LORDE thy God geueth the to enheritaunce) and so bloude come vpon the.

* But yf eny man beare hate agaynst his neighbour, and layeth waite for him, and ryseth agaynst him, and smyteth him that he dye, and flyeth in to one of these cities, then shall the Elders of the same cite sende thither, and cause him to be fetched from thence, and deluyuer him in to the handes of the auenger of bloude, that he maye dye: thine eye shal not pitie him, and the giltie bloude shalt thou put awaye fro Israel, that thou mayest prospere.

Thou shalt not remoue thy neighbours marck, which they of olde tyme haue set in thine enheritaunce, that thou enheretest in the londe, which the LORDE thy God hath geuen the to possesse it.

One witness shal not stonde vp alone agaynst a man, ouer eny trespase or synne, what maner of synne so euer it be, y a man can do, but in the mouth of two or thre witnesses shal euery matter be established.

† But yf an vnrighteous wytnesse stonde vp agaynst eny man, to testifie eny trespase vpon him, then shall both the men that stryue together, stonde before the LORDE, before the prestes and Iudges, which shall be at the same tyme. † And the iudges shall make diligent inquisicion: ⁊ yf the witness be founde false, and hath geue false witness agaynst his brother, then shall ye do vnto him, euen as he thoughte to do vnto his brother: that thou mayest put awaye the euell from the y that other maye heare and feare, and take nomore vpon them to do soch wicked poyntes amonge you. Thine eye shal not pitie him. ¶ Soule for soule, eye for eye, tothe for tothe, hande for hande, fote for fote.

The xx. Chapter.

WHAN thou goest out to battayll agaynst thine enemies, and seyst horses and charettes of the people more then thou, be not afrayed of them: for the LORDE thy God which brought y out of the londe of Egipte, is with the. ¶ When thou commest nye vnto a cite to fight against it, thou shalt offre them peace. Yf they answer the peaceably, and open vnto thee, then shal all þy people þy is founde therein, be tributaries vnto thee, and serue þy. But yf they wyl not deale peaceably with thee, and wyl warre with thee, then besege it: and when the LORDE thy God deluyereþ it in to thy hande, thou shalt smyte all the males that are therein, with the edge of the swerde: saue the women and the children. † As for the catell, and all that is in the cite, and all the spoyle, thou shalt take them vnto thy selfe, and eate the spoyle of thine enemies, which the LORDE thy God hath geuen thee. For it is but wodd vpon the felde, and no man, and can not come ¶ be bullworkes agaynst thee. But the trees which thou knowest ¶ me eate not of, those shalt thou destroye, and rote out, and make bullworkes therof, agaynst the cite that warreth with thee, tyll thou haue ouercome it.

The LORDE shal smyte the with a myscheuous botch in fy knees & legges, so that thou canst not be healed, euen from the sole of thy fote vnto the crowne of thy heade.

* The LORDE shal brynge the and thy kynge (which thou hast set ouer the) vnto a nacion, whom thou knowest not, nether thy fathers: and there shalt thou serue other goddes, euen wodd and stone: and thou shalt go to waist, and become a byworde, & a laughing stocke amōge all nacions, whither fy LORDE hath caryed the.

† Thou shalt cary out moch sede in to fy felde, and shalt gather but litle in: for the greshoppers shal destroye it. Thou shalt plante vynyardes and dresse thē, but thou shalt nether drynke of the wyne, ner gather of fy grapes: for fy wormes shal consume it. Thou shalt haue Olyue trees in all thy coastes, but shalt not be anoynted with the oyle: for thyne Olyue trees shalbe roted out. Thou shalt get sounes and daughters, and yet not haue them: for they shal be caried awaye captiue. All thy trees and frutes of thy londe shall be marred with blastinge.

The straunger that is with fy, shal clymme vp ouer the, and be allwaye aboue the: but thou shalt come downe alowe, and lye euer beneth. He shal lende vnto the, but thou shalt not lende him. He shalbe before, but thou shalt be behynde.

And all these curses shall come vpon the, and folowe the, and onertake fy, tyll thou be destroyed, because thou herkenest not vnto fy voyce of the LORDE thy God, to kepe his commaundemētes and ordinaunces, which he hath commaunded the. Therefore shal there be tokens and wonders vpon the, & vpon thy sede for euer, because thou hast not serued fy LORDE thy God with a ioyfull and good hert, whan thou haddest abundaunce of all thinges. And therefore shalt thou serue thine enemye, which the LORDE shal sende vpon the, in hunger and thyrst, in nakednesse, and neade of all thinge: & he shal put a yocke of yron vpon thy necke, vntyll he haue broughte the to naughte.

\* The LORDE shal brynge a nacion vpon the from farre, euen from the ende of fy worlde, as a flyenge Aegle: a people, whose speache thou canst not vnderstonde, an harde fauoured people, which regarde not the personne of the olde, ner haue compassion on the yonge. And they shal eate vp  $\text{f}$  frute of thy catell,  $\text{t}$  the frute of thy londe, tyll they haue destroyed the, and shall leaue the nothings in corne, wyne, oyle, in the frute of thy oxen and shepe, vntyll they haue broughte the to naughte: and shal laye sege vnto the with in all thy gates, tyll they cast downe thy hye and stronge walles, wherein thou trustest thorow out all thy londe. And thou shalt be beseged within all thy portes, thorow out all thy londe which the LORDE thy God hath geuen the.

$\text{f}$  \*Thou shalt eate the frute of thine awne body, the flesh of thy sonnes and of thy daughters, which the LORDE thy God hath geue the, in that straytnesse and sege, wherwith thine enemye shall besege the: so that it shal greue the man  $\text{f}$  afore hath lyued tenderly and in voluptuousnes amonge you, to loke vpon his brother and vpon his wife  $\text{f}$  lyeth in his bosome, and on the sonne that is left ouer of his sonnes, lest he shulde geue eny of them of the flesh of his children that he eateth, in as moch as there is nothings left him in that straytnesse and sege, wherwith thine enemye shal besege  $\text{f}$  within all thy gates. $\text{b}$  Yf thou wilt not be diligent to do all the wordes of this lawe which are wrytten in this boke, that thou mayest feare this glorious and fearfull name, euen the LORDE thy God, then shal the LORDE entreate  $\text{f}$  wonderously, with plagues vpon  $\text{f}$  and thy sede, yee with greate and continuall plagues, with euell and contynuall sicknesses, and shal brynge vpō  $\text{f}$  all  $\text{f}$  sicknesses of Egipte (wherof thou wast affrayed) and they shal cleue vnto the. Therto all maner sicknesses and all maner plagues, which are not wrytten in the boke of this lawe, shal the LORDE thy God cause to come vpon the, vntyll he haue destroyed the. And there shal be left but a fewe people of you,  $\text{t}$  which afore were as the starres of heauen in multitude: because thou hast not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE thy God.

\* And as  $\text{f}$  LORDE reioysed ouer you afore, to do you good, and to multiplie you, euē so shall he reioyse ouer you, to destroye you, and to brynge you to naughte, and ye shalbe waysted from of the londe, whither thou goest now to possesse it. For the LORDE shal scatter the amonge all nacions, from the one ende of the worlde vnto another, and there shalt thou serue other goddes, whom thou knowest not, ner yet thy fathers, euen wodd and stone.

And amonge those same nacions shalt thou haue no quyetnesse, nether shal the sole of thy fote haue eny rest: for the LORDE shal geue the there a fearfull hert, and dasyng of eyes, and a troubled soule, so that thy life shal hāge before the: Night and daye shalt thou feare, and shalt haue no trust in thy life. In the mornynge thou shalt saye: Who shall geue me the euenynge? And at euen shalt thou saye: Who shal geue me the mornynge? For the very greate feare of thine hert, which shal make the affrayed: and for the sighte of thine eyes which thou shalt se.

And the LORDE shal brynge the agayne in to Egipte by shippe fulles, euen thorow the waye wherof I sayde vnto the:  $\text{t}$  Thou shalt se it nomore: and there shal ye be solde vnto youre enemies for bonde seruauantes and bonde maidens, and there shalbe no man to bye you.

The xxij. Chapter.

$\text{A}$  THESE are  $\text{f}$  wordes of the couenaunt, which the LORDE cōmaunded Moses to make with the children of Israel  $\text{t}$  in the londe of the Moabites,  $\text{f}$  besyde  $\text{f}$  couenaunt which he made with them in Horeb. And Moses called all Israel, and sayde vnto them: Ye haue sene all that the LORDE dyd before youre eyes in the londe of Egipte, vnto Pharaο with all his seruauites, and all his londe, the greate tentacions which thine eyes haue sene, that they were greate tokēs and wonders. And yet vnto this daye hath not the LORDE geuen you an hert that vnderstandeth, eyes that se,  $\text{t}$  eares that heare.

He hath caused you to walke fortye yeares in the wyldernesse. * Your clothes are not waxed olde vpon you, nether is thy shue waxed olde on thy fote. Ye haue eaten no bred, and drunken no wyne, ner stronge drynke, that ye mighte knowe, that he is y<sup>e</sup> LORDE youre God.

35 And whan ye came vnto this place, Sihon the kynge of Heszbou, and Og y<sup>e</sup> kynge of Basan, came out agaynst vs vnto battayll, and we smote them, and toke their londe, and gaue it to enheritaunce vnto y<sup>e</sup> Rubenites and Gaddites, and to the halfe trybe of the Manassites. * Kepe now therfore the wordes of this couenaunt, and do thereafter, that ye maye haue vnderstandinge in all that ye do.

Ye stonde this daye all before the LORDE youre God, the chiefe rulers of youre trybes, youre Elders, youre officers, euery man in Israel, youre children, youre wyues, y<sup>e</sup> straungers that are in thine hoost, † from the hewer of thy wodde vnto y<sup>e</sup> drawer of thy water: that thou shuldest enter in to the couenaunt of the LORDE thy God, and in to the ooth which the LORDE thy God maketh with the this daye, that he mighte set the vp this daye to be a people vnto himself, and that he mighte be thy God, as he hath sayde vnto the, ‡ and as he sware vnto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Iacob.

C For I make not this couenaunt and this ooth with you onely, but both with you y<sup>e</sup> are here this daye, and stonde with vs before the LORDE oure God, and also with them that are not here with vs this daye. For ye knowe how we haue dwelt in the londe of Egipte, and how we came thorow the myddes of the Heythen, whom ye passed by, and sawe their abhominacions and their Idols, wodde and stone, syluer and golde, which were with them: Lest there be amonge you man or woman, or an housholde, or a trybe, which turneth awaye his hert this daye from the LORDE oure God, to go and to serue y<sup>e</sup> goddesses of these nacions: and lest there be amonge you some rote, that beareth gall & wormwoodd: so that though he heare the wordes of this curse, he blesse him selfe yet in his hert, and saye: § Tush, it shal not be so euell. I wil walke after the ¶ meanyng of myne awne hert, that the drunken maye perishe with the thyrstie.

Then shall not the LORDE be mercifull vnto him, but his wrath and gelousy shall smoke ouer soch a man, and all the curses that are wrytten in this boke, shall lighte vpon him: and the LORDE shal put out his name from vnder heauen, and shall separate him vnto euell out of all the trybes of Israel, accordinge vnto all the curses of the couenaunt, that is wrytten in the boke of this lawe.

So the posterities of youre childre which shal ryse vp after you, and the straungers that come out of farre countrees, shall saye (whan they se the plagis of this londe, and the diseases wherewith the LORDE hath smytten it) that he hath brent vp all their londe with brymstone and salt, so y<sup>e</sup> it can not be sowne, ner is frutefull, nether groweth there eny grasse therein, ¶ Like as Sodome, Gomor, Adama and Zeboim are ouerthrowne, which the LORDE ouerthrowe in his wrath and anger.

Then shall all nacions saye: ** Wherefore hath the LORDE done thus vnto this londe? What greate wrothfull displeasure is this? Then shalt it be sayde: Euen because they haue forsaken the couenaunt of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God of their fathers (which he made with them whan he broughte them out of the londe of Egipte) and they wete, and serued other goddesses, and worshipped the, euen soch goddesses as they knewe not, and whom he had not deuyded vnto them. Therfore the wrath of the LORDE waxed whote ouer this londe, to brynge vpon it all the curses that are wrytten in this boke. And the LORDE thrust them out of their londe with greate wrath, indignacion & displeasure & hath cast them in to another londe, as it is come to passe this daye.

These are the †† secretes of the LORDE oure God, which are opened vnto vs and oure children for euer, y<sup>e</sup> we shulde do all the wordes of this lawe.

The xxx. Chapter.

A NOW whan all this commeth vpon the, whether it be the blessinge or y<sup>e</sup> curse which I haue layed before the, ‡ and thou goest in to thine hert, beyng amonge the Heithen, whither the LORDE thy God hath thrust the, and thou turnest vnto the LORDE thy God, so that thou herkenest vnto his voyce, thou and thy children with all thy hert and with all thy soule, in all that I commaunde the this daye, *then shal the LORDE thy God turne thy captiuyte, and haue compassion vpon the, and shal gather thy congregacion agayne from amonge all the nacions, whither the LORDE thy God hath scattered the.

And though thou werest thrust out vnto the vttemost partes of the heauen, yet shall the LORDE thy God gather the from thence, and from thence shal he fetch the, and shal brynge the in to the londe, which thy fathers haue possessed, and thou shalt enioye it, and he shal do the good, and multiplye the aboue thy fathers.

† And the LORDE thy God shall circumsyse thine hert, and the hert of thy sede, that thou mayest loue the LORDE thy God with all thy hert and with all thy soule, that thou mayest lyue. But all these curses shall the LORDE thy God laye vpon thine enemyes, and vpon them that hate the and persecute the. But thou shalt turne, and herken vnto the voyce of the LORDE, to do all his commaundementes, which I commaunde the this daye. And the LORDE thy God shal make the plenteous in all the workes of thine hādes, in the frute of thy body, in the frute of thy cattell, in the frute of thy londe to good.

‡ For the LORDE shall turne, to reioyce ouer the to good, as he reioysed ouer thy fathers, so that thou herken vnto the voyce of the LORDE thy God (to kepe his commaundementes and ordinaunces, which are wrytten in the boke of this lawe) and turne vnto the LORDE thy God with all thy hert and with all thy soule.

§ For the commaundement which I commaunde ŷ this daye, is not to wonderfull for the, ner to farre, ner yet in heauen, that thou needest to saye: Who wil go vp for vs in to beauen, and brynge it vnto vs, that we maie heare it and do it? Nether is it beyonde the see, that thou needest to saye: Who wyl go ouer the see for vs, and fetch it vs, that we maye heare it, and do it? For the worde is very nye vnto the, euē in thy mouth and in thine hert, that thou do it.

¶ Beholde, I haue layed before you this daye, life and good, death and euell. For I cōmaunde the this daye, to loue the LORDE thy God, and to walke in his wayes, and to kepe his commaundementes, ordinaunces, and lawes, that thou mayest lyue and multiplie, and that the LORDE thy God maye blesse the in the londe, whither thou goest to possesse it.

But yf thou turnest awaye thine hert, so that thou wilt not heare, but fall a waye, to worshipe other goddes and to serue them, I certifye you this daye, that ye shal perishe, and not lyue longe in the londe, whither thou goest ouer Iordane to possesse it.

¶ I take heauen and earth this daye to recorde ouer you: I haue layed before you life and death, blessinge and cursinge, that thou mayest chose life, and that thou and thy sede maye lyue, ŷ ye maye loue the LORDE youre God, and herken vnto his voyce, and cleue vnto him: (For he is thy life and thy lōge age) that thou mayest dwell in the londe, which the LORDE sware vnto thy fathers Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, to geue them.

The xxiij. Chapter.

AND Moses wente, and spake these wordes to all Israel, and saide vnto them: I am this daye an hundreth and twetye yeare olde, I can nomore go out and in: the LORDE also hath sayde vnto me: ¶ Thou shalt not go ouer this Iordane. The LORDE thy God himselfe shall go before the ouer Iordane: and HE himselfe shal destroye these nacions before the, that thou mayest conquere them: and Iosua he shall go ouer before the, ** as the LORDE hath sayde. And the LORDE shal do vnto them, as he dyd vnto Sihon and Og the kynges of the Ainorites and vnto their lōde, which he destroyed.

†† Nowe when the LORDE shal deliuer the before you, ye shal do vnto them acordynge vnto all the commaundementes which I haue commaunded you. Be manly and strōge, feare not, and be not afraied of them. For the LORDE thy God himselfe shal go with the, ‡ and shal not fayle the, ner forsake the.

And Moses called Iosua, and sayde vnto him before all Israel: Be stronge and bolde, for thou shalt brynge this people in to the londe, which ¶ the LORDE hath sworne vnto their fathers to geue them, and thou shalt parte it amonge them by lott. But the LORDE himselfe that goeth before you, euen HE shal be with the, and shal not fayle the, ner forsake the: Feare not, and be not afrayed.

And Moses wrote this lawe, and deluyered it vnto the prestes the children of Leni (*which bare the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE) and vnto all the Elders of Israel.

And he commaunded them, and sayde: † At the ende of seuen yeares, in the tyme of the Fre yeare, in the feast of Tabernacles whan all Israel come to appeare before the LORDE thy God, in the place that he shall chose, thou shalt cause this lawe to be proclaimed before all Israel in their eares, namely, before the congregation of the people, both of men, wemen, children, and thy straungers which are within thy gates: that they maye heare and lerne to feare the LORDE their God, and be diligent to do all the wordes of this lawe: and that their children also which kuowe nothinge, maye heare and lerne to feare the LORDE youre God, all youre lyue dayes which ye lyue in the londe, whither ye go ouer Iordane to possesse it.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, thy tyme is come that thou must die, call Iosua, and stonde in the Tabernacle of witnessse, that I maye geue him a charge. Moses wente with Iosua, and stode in the Tabernacle of witnessse. And the LORDE appeared in the Tabernacle in a cloudy pyler † and the same cloudy pyler stode in the dore of the Tabernacle.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, thou shalt slepe with thy fathers, and this people wyll ryse vp, and go a whoringe after straunge goddes of the londe in to the which they come, ‡ and wyll forsake me, and breake the couenaunt which I haue made with them. And then shall my wrath waxe whote agaynst them, at the same tyme, ¶ I shal forsake the, and hyde my face frō them, that they maye be consumed. ¶ And so whan moch aduersite ¶ trouble commeth vpō the, they shal saye: Is not all this euell come vpō me, because God is not with me? But I shal hyde my face at the same tyme because of all the euell that they haue done, in that they haue turned vnto other goddes.

Wryte now therfore this songe, ¶ teach it the children of Israel, and put it in their mouth, that this ¶ songe maye be a witnessse vnto me amonge the children of Israel. For I wil brynge them in to the londe which I sware vnto their fathers, that floweth with mylke and honny. ** And whan they eate, and are full and fatt, they shal turne vnto other goddes, and serue them, and blaspheme me, and breake my couenaunt.

And so whan moch myschefe and tribulacion is come vpon them, this songe shall answeare before them for a witnessse. It shall not be forgotten out of the mouth of their sede: for I knowe their ymaginacion, that they go aboute euen now, before I brynge them in to the londe, which I sware vnto them.

So Moses wrote this songe at the same tyme, and taughte it the children of Israel. And the LORDE gaue Iosua the sonne of Nun a charge, and sayde: †† Be stronge and bolde, for thou shalt brynge the children of Israel in to the londe, which I sware vnto them, and I wil be with the.

Now whan Moses had wrytten out all the wordes of this lawe in a boke, he commaunded the Leuites (which bare the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt) and sayde: Take the boke of this lawe, and laye it by the syde of the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE youre God, that it maye be there a wytnesse agaynst the: for I knowe thy stubburnesse and thy harde neck. ¶ Beholde, whyle I am yet alyue with you this daye, ye haue bene disobedient vnto the LORDE: how moch more after my death?

Gather now vnto me all the Elders of youre trybes, and youre officers, ¶ I maye speake these wordes in their eares, †† and take heauen and earth to recorde agaynst them. For I am sure that after my death ye shall marre youre selues, and turne asyde out of the waye, which I haue commaunded you: and so shall mysfortune happen vnto you hereafter, because ye haue done euell in the sighte of the LORDE, in prouokynge him thorow the workes of youre handes.

So Moses spake out the wordes of this songe euen to the ende, in the eares of all the congregation of Israel.

The xxxij. Chapter.

HERKEN (O ye heauens) I wyll speake: and let the earth heare the wordes of my mouth.

* My doctryne droppe as doth the raine,
and my speach flowe as doth the dew.

Euen as the rayne vpon the grasse, and as the droppes vpon the herbe.

For I wyl call vpon the name of the LORDE, geue ye the glory vnto oure God.

† Perfecte are the workes of the Stone, for all his wayes are righteous.

God is true, and no wickednes is there in him, righteous and iust is he.

The frowarde and ouerthwarte generacion hath marred them selues to himwarde and are not his children, because of their deformyte.

Thankest thou the LORDE thy God so, thou foolish and vnwyse people?

Is not he thy father<sup>a</sup> and thy LORDE?†
Hath he not made the, and prepared the?

Remembre the dayes that are past, conside re the yeaeres of the generacions afore tyme.

Axe thy father, he shall shewe the: thine elders, they shal tell the.

§ Whan the most Hyghest deuyded  $\hat{y}$  na-cions and scatred the children of men.

<sup>33</sup> Then set he the borders of the nacions acordinge to the nombre of the children of Israel.

¶ For the LORDES parte is his folke,
Iacob is the meetlyne of his enheritaunce.

He founde him in the wyldernes, euen in the drye deserte where he roared.

He led him aboute, and gaue him vnderstandinge: He kepte him as the aple of his eye.

As an Aegle stereth vp hir nest, and floter-eth ouer hir yonge: Euen so stretched he out his fethers, and toke him ¶ and bare him on his wynges.

The LORDE onely was his gyde, and there was no straunge God with him.

He caried him ouer  $\hat{y}$  heighth of the earth, and fed him with the increase of the felde.

¶ He caused him sucke hony out of the rocke, and oyle out of the harde stone.

Butter of the kyne, and mylke of the shepe, with the fat of the lambes, and rammes of the sonnes of Basan, and hegoates with the fat of the kydneyes, and wheate: And gaue him drynke of the very bloude of grapes.

** And whan he was fat and had ynough, he waxed wanton.

He is fat, and thicke, and smothe, and hath letten God go, that made him, and despyed the rocke of his saluacion.

He hath prouoked him to indignacion, ¶ thorow straunge goddes, and thorow abhominacion hath he angred him.

† They offred vnto felde deuels, and not vnto their God.

Vnto goddes whom they knewe not, euē vnto new goddes,  $\hat{y}$  came newly vp, whom their fathers honoured not.

Thy rocke that begat  $\hat{y}$ , hast thou despyed:
and hast forgotten God that made the.

And whan the LORDE sawe it, he was moued vnto wrath ouer his sonnes and his daughters.

And he sayde: I wyll hyde my face from them, I wyll se what their ende shal be: for it is a frowarde generacion, they are childrē in whom is no fayth.

They haue prouoked me in it that is not
God: with their vanities haue they angred me.

†† And I agayne wil prouoke them, by those that are no people: by a foolish nacion wil I anger them.

For the fyre is kyndled in my wrath, and shal burne vnto  $\hat{y}$  nethermost hell, and shal consume the londe with the increase therof, and set the foundations of  $\hat{y}$  mountaynes on fyre.

I wil heape myscheues vpō them, I wil spende all myne arrowes at them.

They shal pyne awaye thorow hunger, and be consumed of the feuers, and of bytter sicknesses.

¶ I wil sende amonge them  $\hat{y}$  tethe of beestes, and furious serpentes.

Without shall the swearde robbe them, and feare in the chambers, both the yonge man and yonge woman, the suckynge children with the gray headed man.

I wyll saye: Where are they? I shall make their remembraunce to ceasse from amonge men.

Yf the wrath of the enemies were not gathered, lest their enemies shulde be proude,

Their vyne is of the vyne of Sodom, and of the feldes of Gomorra: their grapes are the grapes of gall, they haue bytter clusters.

Their vyne is the poyson of Dragons, & the furious gall of Adders.

Is not this hid with me, and sealed vp in my treasures?

"Vengeance is myne, and I wyll rewarde in due season. Their fote shall slyde, for the tyme of their destrucciō is at honde, and the thinge that is to come vpon them, maketh haiste.

For the LORDE shall iudge his people, † and shal haue compassion on his seruantes. For he shal conside that their power is awaie, and that it is gone with them, which were shut vp and remayned ouer.

And he shal saie: ‡ Where are their goddes, their rocke wherin they trusted?

Of whose sacrifices they ate ¶ fatt, and dranke the vyne of their drynkofferings? Let them ryse vp and helpe you, and be youre proteccion.

¶ Se now that I I am, and that there is none other God but I.

I can kyll and make alyue: § what I haue smytyn, that can I heale: § and there is noman able to delyuer out of my hande.

For I wil lifte vp my hande to heauen, & wyl saie: I lyue euer.

Yf I whet ¶ edge of my swerde, and my hande take holde of iudgment, then wyll I auenge me on myne enemies, and rewarde them that hate me.

I wil make myne arowes dronken with bloude, and my swerde shal eate flesh ouer ¶ bloude of the slayne, and ouer the captyuite, and in that the enemies heade shall be discovered.

¶ Reioyse ye Heythen with his people: for he wil auenge the bloude of his seruantes, and wyl auenge him on his enemies, & wil be mercifull vnto the londe of his people.

And Moses came and spake all the wordes of this songe in the eares of the people, he and Iosua the sonne of Nun. Now whā Moses had made an ende of speakinge all these wordes vnto all Israel, he sayde vnto thē: ¶ Take to hert all ¶ wordes, which I testifie vnto you this daye, that ye commaunde youre children, to obserue and do all the wordes of this lawe. For it is no vaine worde vnto you, but it is youre life: & this worde shal prolonge youre life in ¶ londe, whither ye go ouer Iordane to conquire it.

And ¶ LORDE spake vnto Moses ¶ same daie, & sayde: Get the vp to this mount Abarim, vpon mount Nebo, which lyeth in ¶ londe of the Moabites ouer agaynst Iericho, & beholde the londe of Canaan, which I shall geue vnto the children of Israel in possessiō. And dye thou vpon the mount, whan thou art come vp, and be gathered vnto thy people, ¶ like as Aaron thy brother dyed vpon mount Hor, and was gathered vnto his people: Because ye trespased agaynst me amonge the children of Israel by the ** water of stryfe at Cades in the wilderness of Zin, and sanctified me not amonge the children of Israel. For thou shalt se the londe ouer against the, which I geue vnto ¶ children of Israel but thou shalt not come in to it.

And he shal dryue out thyne enemye before the, and saye: Be destroyed. ¶ And Israel shall dwell safe alone. The first Chapter.

AFTER the death of Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE, spake the LORDE vnto Iosua & sonne of Nun Moses mynister: My seruaunt Moses is deed, vp now, and go ouer this Iordane, thou and all this people in to the londe that I haue geuen the children of Israel. * All the places that the soles of youre fete shal treade vpon, haue I geuen vnto you, as I sayde vnto Moses: From the wyldernessee and this Libanus vnto the greate water Euphrates: all the londe of the Hethites vnto the greate see towarde the west, shal be youre border. There shall noman be able to withstonde & all thy life longe. * And like as I was with Moses, so wil I be with the also. † I will not fayle the nether forsake the. Be stronge and bolde: for vnto this people shalt thou deuyde & londe, which I sware vnto their fathers, to geue it them.

B * Be ströge therfore and very bolde, that thou mayest kepe and do euery thyng acordinge to the lawe, that Moses my seruaunt commaunded the. Turne not asyde from it, nether to the righte hande ner to the lefte, † & thou mayest deale wysely whither so euer thou goest. § And let not the boke of this lawe departe out of thy mouth, but exerceyse thy selfe therin daie and nighte, that thou mayest kepe and do euery thyng acordinge to it that is wryttē therein: Then shalt thou prospere in thy waies, and deale wysely. Lo, I haue commaunded the to be stronge and bolde. Feare not, and be not afrayed: for the LORDE thy God is with &, whither so euer thou goest.

Then commaunded Iosua the officers of the people, and sayde: Go thorow the hoost, and charge & people, and saye: Prepare you vytayles, for ouer thre dayes shal ye go ouer this Iordane, that ye maye come in and take possession of the londe, which the LORDE youre God shal geue you.

And to the Rubenites, Gaddites, and to the halfe trybe of Manasse, sayde Iosua: Thynke vpon the worde, † that Moses the seruaunt of & LORDE spake vnto you, and sayde: The LORDE youre God hath brought you to rest, and geuen you this londe. Let youre wyues and children and catell remayne in & londe, that Moses gaue you on this syde Iordane: But ye youre selues (as many as be fightinge men) shal go forth before youre brethren in harnessse, and helpe them, tyll the LORDE haue broughte youre brethren to rest also as well as you: that they also maye take possession of the londe, which the LORDE youre God shal geue them: Then shal ye turne agayne in to the londe of youre possession, that ye maye enioye it, which Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE hath geuen you on this syde Iordane towarde & East. And they answered Iosua and sayde: † All that thou hast commaunded vs, wyl we do: and whither so euer thou sendest vs, we wyl go thither. Like as we haue obeyed Moses, so wyl we be obedient also vnto the: Only that the LORDE thy God be with &, like as he was with Moses. Who so euer disobeyeth thy mouth, and herkeneth not vnto thy wordes in all that thou hast commaunded vs, shal dye: Only be thou stronge and bolde.

them : Go youre waye, loke vpon the londe and Iericho. They wente forth, *and came in to † house of an harlot, called Rahab, and laye there. Then was it tolde the kynge of Iericho: Lo, there are men come in this nighte from the childre of Israel, to spye the londe. Then sent the kynge of Iericho vnto Rahab, saynge: Delyuer the men forth that are come vnto the in to thy house, for they are come to spye out the whole londe. Now as for the two men, the woman had hyd them, and sayde: There came men in vnto me in dede, but I knewe not whence they were. And at the shutting in of the gate when it was darcke, they wente out, so ‡ I can not tell whither they be gone: folowe soone after them, for ye shal ouertake them. But she had caused them to clymme vp vnto the house toppe, and hyd them vnder the stalkes of flaxe, that she had prepared her vpo the toppe of the house. Howbeit the men folowed after them in † waye towarde Iordane, euen vnto the ferye: and when they that folowed vpon them were gone forth, the gate was shut.

B And or euer the men layed them downe to slepe, she wente vp to them vnto the house toppe, and sayde vnto the: I knowe that the LORDE shal delyuer you the londe, † for the feare of you is fallen vpon vs, and all the inhabitors of the londe are discouraged at youre commynge. For we haue herde, how the LORDE † dried vp the water in the reed see before you, whā ye departed out of Egipte: † and what ye dyd vnto the two kynges of the Amorites, Sihon and Og beyonde Iordane, how ye roted them out, and destroyed them. And sence we herde therof, oure hert hath failed vs, nether is there a good stomacke more in eny man, by the reason of youre commynge. For the LORDE youre God is both the God aboue in heauē and beneth vpon earth.

C Swear now then vnto me † euen by the LORDE (for so moch as I haue dealte mercifully with you) that ye wyl also shewe mercy vpon my fathers house: and geue me a true token, that ye wyl let my father lyue, and my mother, my brethren, and my sisters, and all that they haue, and delyuer oure soules from death. The men sayde vnto her: † Yf we shewe not mercy and faithfulness vpon the, whan the LORDE geueth vs the londe, then let oure soule dye for you, so farre as thou betrayest not oure deuyce. Then let she them downe thorow the wyndowe by a coarde: for hir house was in the wall of the cite, and in the wall was hir dwellynge. And she sayde vnto them: Go youre waye vp to the mountaynes, lest they mete you that folowe vpon you: and hyde youre selues there thre dayes, tyll they be come againe † folowe after you: and then get you youre waye.

D But the men sayde vnto her: As for this oath that thou hast taken of vs, we wyl be discharged of it whan we come in to † londe, excepte thou knyttest in the wyndowe † lyne of this rosecoloured rope (‡ thou hast lettē vs downe with all) † gatherest vnto † in to the house, thy father, thy mother, thy brethren † all thy fathers house. And loke who so euer goeth out at the dore of thy house, his bloude be vpon his owne heade, and we giltlesse. But of all those † are in thy house, yf a hande be layed vpon thē, their bloude shalbe vpo oure heade. And yf thou betrayest eny of this deuyce of ours, thē wil we be discharged of the oath † thou hast takē of vs. She sayde: Let it be so as ye saye, and she let thē go. And they wente their waye. And she knyt the rose coloured lyne in the wyndowe.

They wente on their waye, and came to the mountaynes, and remayned there thre dayes, tyll they that folowed vpon them were come agayne: for they soughte them thorow euery strete, † yet they founde them not. So the two men turned agayne, and departed from the mountaynes, and passed ouer (Iordane) and came to Iosua the sonne of Nun, and tolde him euery thinge, as they had founde it, † they sayde vnto Iosua: The LORDE hath geuē vs all the londe in to oure handes, and all they that dwell in the londe, are sore afraied of vs.

The iij. Chapter.

AND Iosua rose vp early, and they departed from Setim, † came vnto Iordane, he and all the children of Israel, and remayned there all night, afore they wete ouer. But after thre dayes wente the officers thorow † hoost, and commaunded the people, and sayde: Whan ye se the Arke of † couenaunt of the LORDE youre God, and the prestes from amōge the Leuites bearinge it, departe ye then out of youre place, and folowe after (but so, that there be rowme betwene you and it by two thousande cubites, & that ye come not nye it) & ye maye knowe what waye ye shulde go: for ye neuer wente that waye afore.

*And Iosua sayde vnto the people: Halowe youre selues, for tomorow shal thy LORDE bringe wonderous thinges to passe amōge you. And vnto the prestes he sayde: Beare ye the Arke of & couenaunt, and go before the people. Then *bare they the Arke, and wente before the people. And the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: This daye wyl I begynne to make the greates in the sighte of all Israel, that they maie knowe, how that like as I was with Moses, so am I with the also. And commaunde thou the prestes that beare the Arke, and saye: Whan ye come before in the water of Iordane, stonde styll.

And Iosua sayde vnto the children of Israel: Come hither, & heare the worde of the LORDE youre God. He sayde morouer: By this shal ye perceaue, that the luyng God is amonge you, and that he shall dryue out before you & Cananites, Hethites, Heuites, Pheresites, Girkosites, Amorites and Iebusites. Beholde, the Arke of the couenaunt of him & hath domynion ouer all londes, shall go before you in Iordane. Take now therfore twolue men out of & trybes of Israel, out of euery trybe one. And whan the soles of the fete of the prestes that beare & Arke of the LORDE the gouernoure of all londes, are set in the water of Iordane, then shal & water of Iordane withdrawe it selfe from the water that floweth from aboue, that it maye stonde on a heape.

Now whan the people departed out of their tentes, to go ouer Iordane, & the prestes bare the Arke of the couenaunt before the people, and came in to Iordane, & dypte their fete before in the water (as for Iordane on all his bankes it was full of all maner waters † of the londe) then the water that came downe frō aboue, stode straight vp vpon one heape, very farre from the cite of Adom, that lyeth on the syde of Zarthan: But the water that ranne downe to the see (euen to the salt see) fell awaye, and decreased.

†So & people wente thorow ouer agaynst Iericho. And the prestes that bare the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt, stode drye in & myddes of Iordane, readye prepared: & all Israel wete thorow drye shod, vntyll & whole people were all come ouer Iordane.

The iiii. Chapter.

AND & LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: Take you twolue men, out of euery trybe one, & comaunde them, & saye: †Take vp twolue stones out of Iordane, from the place where the fete of the prestes stode in their araye: & cary them with you, & ye maie leaue them in & lodgings, where ye shal lodge this night. The Iosua called twolue mē which were prepared of the children of Israel, out of euery trybe one, & sayde vnto thē: Go youre waye ouer before the Arke of the LORDE youre God in the myddes of Iordane, & take euery man a stone vpon his shulder, after the nombre of the trybes of & children of Israel, & they maye be a token amonge you. And whan youre children axe their fathers here after, and saye: What do these stones there? That ye maye then saye vnto them, how that the water of Iordane claue in sunder before the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt, whan it wente thorow Iordane, & that these stones are set for a perpetuall remembraunce vnto the children of Israel.

Then dyd the children of Israel as Iosua commaunded them, and bare twolue stones out of the myddes of Iordane (as the LORDE had sayde vnto Iosua) & accordinge to the nombre of the trybes of the children of Israel, and broughte the same with them in to the lodginge, and lefte them there. And Iosua set vp twolue stones in & myddes of Iordane, where & fete of the prestes stode, that bare & Arke of the couenaunt: and there they be yet vnto this daye. As for & prestes that bare & Arke, they stode in the myddes of Iordane, vntyll all was perfourmed that the LORDE charged Iosua to saye vnto & people ‖ accordinge as Moses gaue Iosua in commaudemēt. The people also made haist, and wente ouer. Now whan all the people was gone ouer, the Arke of the LORDE wente ouer also, and the prestes wente before the people.

†And the Rubenites, & Gaddites, and & halfe trybe of Manasse wente harnessed before the childrē of Israel, like as Moses had sayde vnto thē: Aboute a fortye thousande men ready harnessed to the warre, wente before the LORDE to the battayll, vpon ſ felde of Iericho. * In that daye the LORDE made Iosua greate in the sighte of all Israel: and like as they feared Moses, so stode they in awe of him, all his life longe.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: Commaunde the prestes which beare the Arke of witness, that they come vp out of Iordane. So Iosua commaunded the prestes, & sayde: Come vp out of Iordane. And whan the prestes ſ bare the Arke of the couenaunt of ſ LORDE were come out of Iordane, and trode with the soles of their fete vpon the drye londe, ſ water of Iordane came agayne in to his place, and flowed (like as afore tyme) vpon all his banckes.

D It was ſ tenth daye of the first moneth, whan the people came vp out of Iordane: & they pitched their tentes in Gilgall vpon ſ East syde of ſ cite of Iericho. And ſ twolue stones which they had taken out of Iordane, dyd Iosua set vp at Gilgall, & saide vnto the children of Israel: † Whan youre children axe their fathers hereafter, & saie: What meane these stones? Ye shall tell thē, & saye: Israel wēte drye thorow Iordane, what tyme as ſ LORDE youre God dried vp ſ water of Iordane before you, vntyll ye were ouer: like as the LORDE youre God dyd in the reed see, † which he dried vp before vs, ſ we mighte go thorow: that all the people vpon earth mighte knowe the hāde of the LORDE, how mightie it is, to the intent that ye shulde allwaye feare the LORDE youre God.

The v. Chapter.

a NOW whan all the kynges of ſ Amorites that dwelt beyonde Iordane westwarde, and all the kynges of ſ Cananites by the see syde herde, how ſ LORDE had dried vp the water of Iordane before the children of Israel, tyll they were come ouer ſ their hert fayled them, nether was there eny more corage in them at the presence of the children of Israel.

At the same tyme sayde ſ LORDE vnto Iosua: Make the knyues ¶ of stone, and circuncyse the children of Israel agayne the seconde tyme. Then Iosua made him knyues of stone, and circuncysed the childrē of Israel vpon the toppe of the foreszkynnes. And the cause why Iosua circuncysed all the males of the people ſ were come out of Egipte, is this: for all the men of warre dyed in ſ wilderness by the waye, after they were departed out of Egipte: for all the people that came forth, were circuncysed.

But all the people that were borne in ſ B wilderness by the waye (after they departed out of Egipte) were not circuncysed: for the children of Israel walked fortye yeares in the wilderness, vntyll all the people of the men of warre that came out of Egipte, were consumed, because they herkened not vnto the voyce of the LORDE, like as the LORDE sware vnto them, ¶ that they shulde not se the londe, which the LORDE sware vnto their fathers to geue vnto vs, euen a londe that floweth with mylke & honye: their children which were come vp in their steade, dyd Iosua circuncyse: for they had the foreszkynne, and were not circuncysed by the waye.

And whan all the people were circuncysed, they abode in their place, euē in ſ tētes, tyll they were whole. And ſ LORDE saide vnto Iosua: To daie haue I turned ſ shame of Egipte awaye from you, & the same place was called Gilgall vnto this daye. And whyle the children of Israel laye thus at Gilgall, they kepte Easter ** the fourteenth daye of the moneth at euē in the felde of Iericho. And they ate of the corne of the lōde the seconde daye of the Easter: namely, vnleuened bred, & fyrmentye of ſ yeare, euē the same daye. And vpon the morow, the † Manna fayled, whan they ate of the corne of ſ londe, so that the children of Israel had nomore Manna, but ate of the corne of the londe of Canaan the same yeare.

And it fortuneth that whā Iosua was by Iericho, he lifte vp his eyes, & was aware, that there stode a mā agaynst him, and had a naked swerde in his hande. And Iosua wēte to him, & sayde vnto him: Art thou one of vs, or of oure enemies? He sayde: No, but I am † the prynce of the LORDES hoost, and now am I come. Then fell Iosua downe to the earth vpon his face, & worshipped him, and sayde vnto him: What sayeth my LORDE vnto his seruaunt? And the prynce ouer the LORDES hoost sayde vnto him: §§ Put thy shues of thy fete, for the place whervpō thou stondest, is holy. And Iosua dyd so.

The vi. Chapter.

AS for Iericho, it was shut & kepte because of the childrē of Israel, so that no man mighte go out ner in. But the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: Beholde, I haue geuen Iericho with  $\hat{y}$  kynge and men of warre therof, in to thy hande. Let all the men of warre go once rounde aboute  $\hat{y}$  cite, and do so sixe dayes. But vpon the seuenth daye let the prestes take the seuen trompettes of the yere of Iubilye before the Arke, and go the same seuenth daye seuen tymes aboute the cite, and let the prestes blowe the trompettes. And whan the horne of the yere of Iubilye bloweth and maketh a sounde, so that ye heare the trompettes, all the people shal make a greate shoute, then shal the walles of the cite fall downe, and  $\hat{y}$  people shal fall in, euery one straight before him.

BThen Iosua the sonne of Nun called  $\hat{y}$  prestes, and sayde vnto them: Beare ye the Arke of the couenaunt, and let seuen prestes take the seuen trompettes of the yere of Iubilye before the Arke of the LORDE. But vnto the people he sayde: Get you hence, and go rōnde aboute the cite: and let him that is harnesssed, go before the Arke of the LORDE. Whan Iosua had spoken this vnto the people, the seuen prestes bare the seuen trompettes of the yere Iubilye before the Arke of the LORDE, and wente & blew the trompettes, and the Arke of the LORDES couenaūt folowed after them: and who so was harnesssed, wente before the prestes that blew the trompettes, and the multitude folowed the Arke. And all was full of  $\hat{y}$  noyse of the trompettes. But Iosua commaunded the people, and sayde: Ye shall make no shoute, ner let youre voyce be herde, nether shall ye geue one worde out of youre mouth, vntyll the daye  $\hat{y}$  I saye vnto you: Make a shoute, then make a shoute.

CSo the Arke of the LORDE wente once rounde aboute the cite, and came agayne in to  $\hat{y}$  hooste, & remayned therein: for Iosua vsed to ryse vp early in the mornynge. And the prestes bare the Arke of the LORDE: so dyd the seuen prestes beare the seuen trompettes of the yere of Iubilye before  $\hat{y}$  Arke of the LORDE, and wente and blew the trompettes: and who so was harnesssed, wente before thē, but  $\hat{y}$  multitude folowed  $\hat{y}$  Arke of the LORDE. And all was full of the noyse of the trompettes.

The seconde daye wente they once aboute the cite also, and came agayne in to the hoost. Thus dyd they sixe dayes. But vpon the seuēth daye whan the mornynge sprynge arose, they gat them vp early, and wente after the same maner seuen tymes aboute  $\hat{y}$  cite, so that vpon the same one seuenth daye they wente seuen tymes aboute the cite.

And at the seuēth tyme whan the prestes Dblewe the trompettes, Iosua sayde vnto the people: Make a shoute, for  $\hat{y}$  LORDE hath deluyered you the cite: Howbeit this cite, & all that is therein, shalbe damned vnto the LORDE: \* onely the harlot Rahab shal lyue, & all that are with her in  $\hat{y}$  house, for she hyd the messaungers, whom we sent forth. † Onely beware of it that is damned, lest ye damne youre selues (yf ye take ought of it which is damned) and make the hoost of Israel to be damned, and brynge it in to mysfortune. But all the syluer and golde, with the ornamētes of brasse & yron, shalbe sanctified vnto the LORDE, that it maye come to the LORDES treasure.

Then made the people a greate shoute, and the prestes blew the trompettes (for whan the people herde the noyse of the trompettes, they made a greate shoute) † and the walles fell, and the people clymmed vp in to the cite, euery one straight before him. Thus they wanne  $\hat{y}$  cite, and  $\hat{y}$  destroyed all that was in the cite with the edge of the swerde, both man and woman, yonge and olde, oxe, shepe, and Asse.

But Iosua sayde vnto  $\hat{y}$  two men which Ehad spied out the londe: Go in to the house of the harlot, and bringe out the woman frō thence with all that she hath, acordinge as ye haue sworne vnto her. Then  $\hat{y}$  yonge men (the spyes) wente in, and brought forth Rahab with hir father and mother, & brethren, and all that she had, and all hir kynred, and caused her to dwell without the hoost of Israel. As for the cite, they brent it with fyre, & all that was therein: onely the syluer and golde, and the ornamētes of brasse and yron put they vnto the treasure in the house of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE: but Iosua let ‖ the harlot Rahab lyue, with hir fathers house, and all that she had: & she dwelt in Israel vnto this daie, because she had hyd the messengers whō Iosua sent vnto Iericho to spye.

At the same tyme sware Iosua, and sayde: * Cursed be that man before the LORDE, which setteth vp this cite of Iericho & buyldeth it: Whan he laieth f̄ foundaciō therof, let it cost him his first sonne: And whā he setteth vp the gates of it, let it cost him his yōgest sonne. Thus the LORDE was with Iosua, so that he was spoken of in all londes.

The vij. Chapter.

BUT the children of Israel had cōmytted a sinne in the thinge f̄ was damned: for Achan the sonne of Charmi the sonne of Sabdi the sonne of Serah, of f̄ trybe of Iuda, toke some of it f̄ was dāned. Then was the wrath of the LORDE fearece ouer the children of Israel.

Now whan Iosua sent out men from Iericho vnto Hai, which lyeth besyde Bethauē on f̄ east syde of Bethel, he sayde vnto thē: Go vp, and spye the londe. And whan they had gone vp, and spied out Hai, they came agayne to Iosua, and sayde vnto him: Let not all the people go vp, but vpon a two or thre thousande, that they maye go vp and smyte Hai, lest all the people weerye them selues there, for they are but fewe.

So there wente vp, of the people vpon a thre thousande men, and they fled before the men of Hai, and they of Hai smote vpon a syxe and thyrtye men of them, and chaced them from the porte vnto Sebarim, and smote them downe the waye. Then was the hert of the people discouraged, † and became like water. As for Iosua he rente his clothes, and fell vpon his face vnto the earth before the Arke of the LORDE, vntill the eueninge, with the Elders of Israel, and cast dust vpon their heades.

B And Iosua sayde: Oh LORDE LORDE, wherefore hast thou broughte this people ouer Iordane, to delyuer vs in to the handes of the Amorites to destroye vs? O that we had taried beionde Iordane, as we begane. Oh my LORDE, what shal I saye, whyle Israel turneth his backe vpon his enemies? Whā the Cananites heare of this, they shal compass vs rounde aboute, yee and rote out oure names from of the earth. What wilt thou do then vnto thy greate name?

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Iosua: Stōde vp, why lystest thou so vpon thy face? Israel hath offended, and trāsgressed ouer my couenaunt, which I commaunded thē. They haue taken also of the thinge that was damned, and haue stollen, and dyssembled, and layed it amonge their ornamente. The children of Israel are not able to stonde before their aduersaries, but must turne their backs vpon their enemies: for they are acursed. I wyll no more be with you from hēce forth yf ye put not out the damned from amonge you.

Stonde vp, and sanctifie the people, and saye: † Sanctifie youre selues agaynst tomorow for thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: ‡ There is a damned thinge in the O Israel, therefore canst thou not stonde before thine enemies, tyll ye put awaye the damned from amonge you. And ye shall ryse vp early, one trybe after another: and loke which trybe so euer the LORDE taketh, the same shall come forth, one kynred after another: and loke which kynred the LORDE taketh, the same shall come forth, one house after another. And loke what house the LORDE taketh, the same shal come forth, one housholder after another. And who so euer is founde in f̄ curse, the same shalbe burnt in the fyre with all that he hath: because he hath gone beyonde the couenaunt of the LORDE, and committed folye in Israel.

Then Iosua gat him vp by tymes in the mornynge, and brought forth Israel, one trybe after another, and f̄ trybe of Iuda was taken. And whan he had brought forth the kynreds in Iuda, f̄ kinred of the Serahites was taken. And whan he had brought forth the kynred of the Serahites, one housholde after another, Sabdi was taken. And whā he had brought forth his house, one housholder after another, Achan the sonne of Charmi f̄ sonne of Sabdi the sonne of Serah of the trybe of Iuda, was taken.

And Iosua sayde vnto Achan: My sonne, geue the glory vnto the LORDE the God of Israel, and geue him the prayse, and tell me, what thou hast done, and hide nothinge fro me.

Then answered Achan vnto Iosua, and sayde: Verely I haue synned agaynst f̄ LORDE God of Israel, thus & thus haue I done: I sawe amōge f̄ spoiles a costly Babilonish garment, and two hūdreth Sycles of sylyer and a tunge of golde, worth fiftye Sycles in weight, vnto the which I had a lust, and toke it: and beholde, it is hyd in the grounde in my tente, and the syluer vnder it.

Then Iosua sent messauagers thither, which ranne to the tente, and beholde, it was hyd in his tente, and the syluer vnder it. And they toke it out of the tente, and broughte it vnto Iosua, and to all the children of Israel and poured it before the LORDE. Then Iosua and all Israel with him, toke Achan the sonne of Serah with the syluer, the garment and goldē tunge, his sonnes and daughters, his oxen and asses, and shepe, and all that he had broughte they in to † valley of Achor.

And Iosua sayde: For so moch as thou hast troubled vs, the LORDE trouble the this daye. And all Israel stoned him, and burned him with fyre with all that he had. And whan they had stoned him, they made ouer him a greate heape of stones, which remayneth vnto this daye. (So the LORDE turned from the rigorousnes of his wrath.) Therefore is the same place called † valley of Achor vnto this daye.

The viij. Chapter.

AND † LORDE saide vnto Iosua: Feare not, and be not afraied. "Take all the men of warre with the, and ryse, and get the vp vnto Hai. Beholde, I haue geuen in to thy hande, the kynge of Hai with his people in his cite & countre. And thou shalt do with Hai and the kynge of it, *as thou dydest with Iericho and the kynge therof, sauynge that ye shal deale amōge yowr spoyle & catell: but set thou a † preuy watch behynde the cite.

Then Iosua arose, and all † men of warre, to go vp vnto Hai: and Iosua chose thirtie thousande fightinge men, and sent them out by night, and commaunded them, and sayde: Take hede, ye shal be † preuy watch behynde the cite, but go not to farre from the cite, and se that ye be redye altogether. As for me and all the people that is with me, we wyll make vs to the cite. And whan they come forth agaynst vs (†as afore) we wyll flye before them, that they maye folowe out after vs, tyll we haue prouoked them forth of the cite: for they shal thinke that we flye before them, like as at † first. And whyle we flye before them, ye shal get you vp out of the preuy watch, and wyne the cite. For † LORDE youre God shal delyuer it in to youre handes. But whan ye haue wonne the cite, set fyre vpon it, doinge †acordinge vnto the worde of the LORDE. Beholde, I haue commaunded you.

So Iosua sent them awaye, & they wente vnto the place of the preuy watch, and laye betwixte Bethel and Hai, on the west syde of Hai. But Iosua abode that night amōge the people. And in the mornynge he arose early, and set the people in order, and wente vp with the Elders of Israel before the people towarde Hai: and all the men of warre that were with him, wente vp, & gat them forth, and came ouer agaynst the cite, and pitched their tentes on the north syde of Hai, so † there was but a valley betwene him and Hai.

He had taken aboute a fyue thousande men, and set them in the hynder watch betwene Bethel and Hai, on the west syde of the cite, and they ordered the people of the whole hoost that was on the north syde of the cite, so that the vttemost of the people reached vnto the west ende of the cite. So Iosua wente the same nighte in to the myddes of the valley.

But whan the kynge of Hai sawe that, he made haist, and gat him vp early, and the men out of the cite, to mete Israel to † bat-tayll, with all his people, euen righte before the felde: for he wyst not that there was a preuy watch behynde him on the backe syde of the cite. But Iosua and all Israel were feble before them, and fled by the waye to † wyldernesse. Then cried all the people in the cite, that they shulde folowe vpon them, and they folowed after Iosua and ruszshed out of the cite, so that there remayned not one man in Hai and Bethel, which wente not out to folowe vpon Israel, and they lefte the cite standinge open, that they mighte persecute Israel.

Thē sayde † LORDE vnto Iosua: Reach out the speare that thou hast in thine hande, towarde Hai: for I wyll delyuer it in to thy hande. And whan Iosua reached out the speare that was in his hande, towarde † cite, † hinder watch brake vp out of their place, and ranne (whan he had stretched out his hande) and came in to the cite, and wanne it, and made haist, & set fyre vpon it. And the men of Hai turned them, and loked behynde them, and the smoke of the cite wente vp toward heauen, and they had no place to flie vnto, nether hither ner thither: and the people that fled toward the wyldernes turned aboute, to folowe vpon them.

¶ And whan Iosua and all Israel sawe, ¶ the hynder watch had wonne the cite (for ¶ smoke of the cite ascended) they turned againe, and smote the men of Hai. And they in the cite came forth also agaynst them, so ¶ they came in the myddes amonge Israel on both the sydes, and they slewe them, so that there was not one man of them left ouer or escaped: and they toke the kynge of Hai alyue, and broughte him vnto Iosua. And whā Israel had slayne all the inhabitors of Hai, which had folowed vpon them in the felde and in the wilderness: and whan they were all fallen thorow the edge of the swerde, tyll they were destroyed, thē turned all Israel vnto Hai, and smote it with the edge of ¶ swerde. And of all them which fell that daye fro man vnto womā, there were twolue thousande, all men of Hai.

¶ But Iosua withdrew not his hande (wherwith he reached out the speare) tyll all the inhabitors of Hai were vtterly destroyed, * sauynge the cattell and the spoyle of ¶ cite, dyd Israel parte amonge them selues, accordynge vnto the worde of the LORDE, which he cōmaunded Iosua. And Iosua burned vp Hai and made an heape therof for euer, which is there yet vnto this daye. And the kynge of Hai caused he to be hanged on a tre vntyll the euen.

* But whā the Sonne was gone downe, he commaunded to take his body from the tre, and to cast it vnder the gate of the cite, and made vpon him a greate heape of stones, which is there yet vnto this daye.

¶ ¶ Then buylded Iosua an altare vnto the LORDE God of Israel vpon mount Ebal accordynge as Moses the seruauit of ¶ LORDE commaunded the children of Israel, as it is wrytten in the boke of the lawe of Moses euen an altare of whole stone, wherypon there was no yron lifted: and he offred burntofferings and healthofferings, and there vpon the stones he wrote the seconde lawe of Moses, which he wrote before the childrē of Israel.

And all Israel with their Elders and officers and iudges, stode on both the sydes of the Arke, right ouer agaynst the prestes ¶ bare the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE, the straunger as well as one of them selues, the one halfe besyde mount Grysīm, and the other halfe beside mount Ebal, † as Moses the seruauit of the LORDE commaunded afore, to blesse the people of Israel. Afterwarde caused he to proclame all the wordes of the lawe of the blessinge and cursynge, as it is wrytten in the boke of the lawe. There was not one worde that Moses commaunded, but Iosua caused it to be proclaimed before all the congregacion of Israel, and before the wemō, and children, and straungers which walked amonge them.

The ix. Chapter.

NOW whan all the kynges that were beyond Iordane vpon the mountaynes, and in the lowe countrees, ¶ in all the hauens of the greate see, and besyde mount Libanus, herde this (namely, ¶ Hethites, Amorites, Cananites, Pheresites, Heuites, and Iebusytes) they gathered thē selues together with one acorde, to fighte agaynst Iosua, and agaynst Israel.

But whan the inhabitors of Gibeon herde, what Iosua had done with Iericho and Hai, they dealte craftely, wēte on their waie, and made a message, and toke olde sakes vpon their asses, and olde rente wyne botels, and olde mended shues vpon their fete, and put on olde and peced garmentes, and all ¶ bred of their vytayles was harde and moulede, and they wente vnto Iosua in to ¶ hoost at Gilgall, and sayde vnto him, and to euery man in Israel: We are come out of a farre countre, therefore make now a couenaunt with vs. Then sayde euery man in Israel vnto ¶ Heuyte: Peraduenture thou dwellest amonge vs, how can I then make a couenaunt with the?

They sayde vnto Iosua: We are thy seruauētes. Iosua sayde vnto them: What are ye, ¶ whence come ye? They sayde: Thy seruauētes are come out of a very farre countre, because of the name of the LORDE thy God: for we haue herde the reporte of him, and all that he dyd in Egipte, and all that he dyd vnto the two kynges of the Amorites beyōde Iordane, Sihon the kynge at Heszbō, and Og the kynge of Basan, which dwelt at Astaroth. Therefore sayde oure

Elders and all the inhabitors of oure countre : Take sode with you for youre iourney, and go mete them, and saye vnto them : We are youre seruantes, therfore make now a bonde with vs : This oure bred that we toke out of oure houses for oure foode, was new whan we toke oure iourney towardes you : but now lo, it is harde & moulded. And these bottels fylled we new, and lo, they are rête. And these oure clothes and shues are waxed olde, by ð reason of the sore longe iourney.

C Then the captaynes toke their vytayles, and axed not the mouth of the LORDE. *And Iosua made peace with them, and set vp a couenaunt with them, that they shulde be saued alyue, and the rulers of the congregacion sware vnto them. But thre dayes after that they had made a couenaunt with them, they herde, that they were their neighbours, and dwelte amonge them : For as the children of Israel wente forth on their iourney, they came on the thirde daye vnto their cities, which are called Gibeon, Caphira, Beeroth, and Cirath Iearim, and smote thê not, because that the rulers of the congregacion had sworne vnto them by the name of the LORDE the God of Israel.

But whan all the congregacion murmured agaynst the rulers, all the rulers sayde vnto the whole congregacion : We haue sworne vnto them by the LORDE the God of Israel, therfore maye we not touch them. But this wil we do vnto them : Let them lyue, that there come no wrath vpon vs, because of the ooth that we haue made vnto them.

D And the rulers sayde vnto them : Let them lyue, that they maye be ðewers of wodd and bearers of water for the whole congregacion, as the rulers haue sayde vnto them. Then Iosua called them, and commened with them, and sayde : Wherefore haue ye disceaueu vs, and sayde, that ye were farre from vs, where as ye dwell amonge vs ? Therfore shall ye be cursed, so that of you there shall not cease seruantes to hew wodd and to beare water for the house of my God.

They answered Iosua, & sayde : It was tolde thy seruantes, that the LORDE thy God commaunded Moses his seruaut, that he shulde geue you the whole lôde, and that he wolde destroye all the inhabitors of the londe before you : therfore were we sore afraied of oure lyues before you, and thus haue we done. But now lo, we are in thy handes : loke what thou thinkest good and righte to do vnto vs, that do.

And he dyd euen so vnto them, and delyuered them from the children of Israels hâde, that they shulde not slaye them. So vpô the same daye Iosua made them hewers of wodd and water bearers for the congregacion, and for the altare of the LORDE vnto this daye, in the place that he shall chose.

The r. Chapter.

WHAN Adonisedech the kynge of Ierusalem herde, that Iosua had wonne Hai, and dammed it, and done vnto Hai and ð kynge of it, like as he dyd vnto Iericho and to the kynge therof, †and that they of Gibeon had made peace with Israel, and were come vnder them, they were sore afraied. For Gibeon was a greate cite, like as one of the kynges cities, and greater then Hai, and all the citesyns therof were men of armes. Therfore sent he vnto Hoham the kynge of Hebron, and to Pirea the kynge of Iarmuth, and to Iaphia the kynge of Lachis, and to Debir the kynge of Eglon, and caused to saie vnto them : Come vp vnto me, and helpe me, that we maie smyte Gibeon, for they haue made peace with Iosua and the children of Israel. Then came the fyue kynges of the Amorites together, and wente vp, the kynge of Ierusalem, the kynge of Hebron, ð kynge of Iarmuth, the kynge of Lachis, the kynge of Eglon, with all their armies, & layed sege vnto Gibeon, and foughte agaynst it.

B Howbeit they of Gibeon sent vnto Iosua to Gilgall, and caused to saye vnto him : Withdrawe not thine hande from thy seruantes, come vp soone vnto vs : delyuer and helpe vs, for all the kynges of the Amorites that dwell vpon the mountaynes, are gathered together agaynst vs. Iosua wente vp from Gilgall, and all the warryers and all the men armes with him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua : ‡Feare them not, for I haue genê them in to thy hande. There shall not one of them be able to stonde before the. So Iosua came sodenly vpon them, for all that night wente he vp from Gilgall. ¶And the LORDE discomfyted thê before Israel, and smote them with a greate slaughter at Gibeon :

¶ they chased them the waie downe to Beth Horon, and smote them vnto Aseka and Makeda.

¶ And whan they fled before Israel, the waye downe to Bethoron, the LORDE caused a greate hayle from heauen to fall vpon them, vnto Aseka, so that they dyed: ¶ many mo of them dyed of the hayle, then the children of Israel slewe with the swerde.

Then spake Iosua vnto the LORDE (the same daye that the LORDE gaue ouer the Amorites before the children of Israel) and sayde in the presence of Israel: * Sonne, holde styll at Gibeon, and thou Moone in the valley of Aialon.

Then the Sonne helde styll, and ¶ Moone stode, vntyll the people had auenged thē selues on their enemies. Is not this wrytten in the boke of the righteous? Thus the Sonne stode styll in the myddes of heauen, and dyfferred to go downe for the space of a whole daye after. And there was no daye like vnto this (nether before ner after) whan the LORDE herkened vnto the voyce of one man: for the LORDE fought for Israel. And Iosua wente agayne to Gilgall in to the tētes, and all Israel with him. As for the fyue kynges, they were fled, and had hyd thē selues in the caue at Makeda.

¶ Then was it tolde Iosua: We haue fōūde the fyue kynges hyd in the caue at Makeda. Iosua sayde: Rolle greate stones then before the hole of the caue, and set men there to kepe them.

As for you, stonde not ye styll, but folowe after youre enemies, and smyte them behynde, and let them not come in their cities, for the LORDE youre God hath deliuered thē in to youre hande. And whan Iosua and ¶ children of Israel had ended the sore greate slaughter vpō them, so ¶ they were brought to naught, the remnaunt of them came in to the stronge cities.

So all the people came agayne to the hoost vnto Iosua to Makeda in peace, and no man durst moue his tūge agaynst the children of Israel. Iosua sayde: Open the mouth of the caue, and brynge the fyue kynges forth vnto me. They dyd so, and broughte the kynges vnto him out of the caue: the kinge of Ierusalem, the kinge of Hebrō, the kinge of Iar-muth, the kinge of Lachis, the kinge of Eglon.

Whan these fyue kynges were broughte forth vnto him, Iosua called euery man of Israel, and sayde vnto the rulers of the men of warre that wente with him: Come forth and treade vpon the neckes of these kynges with youre fete. And they came forth, and trode vpon their neckes with their fete. And Iosua saide vnto them: Be not afrayed, and feare not: be stronge and bolde, for thus shal the LORDE do vnto all youre enemies, agaynst whom ye fighte.

And Iosua smote them afterwarde, and put them to death, and hanged them vpon fyue trees. And they hanged styll vpon the trees vntyll the euenynge. † But whan the Sonne was gone downe, he commaunded to take them of from the trees: and they cast them in the caue, wherin they had hyd them selues, ¶ before the hole of the caue they layed greate stones, which are there yet vnto this daye. The same daye wanne Iosua Makeda also, and smote it with the edge of the swerde, and the kynges therof, and † damned it, and all the soules that were therein, and let none remayne escaped: and dyd vnto the kynges of Makeda § as he dyd vnto the kynges of Iericho.

Then Iosua and all Israel with him departed fro Makeda vnto Lybna, ¶ foughte agaynst it. (And the LORDE gaue it with ¶ kynges therof in to the hande of Israel) and smote it and all the soules that were therein, with the edge of the swerde, and let not one remayne in it: and dyd vnto the kinge therof as he had done vnto the kynges of Iericho.

Afterwarde wente Iosua and all Israel with him from Lybna vnto Lachis, and layed sege vnto it, and fought agaynst it. And the LORDE deliuered Lachis also in to the hande of Israel, so that they wanne it vpon the seconde daye, and smote it with ¶ edge of the swerde, and all the soules that were therein, acordinge to all as he had done vnto Lybna. At the same tyme Horam ¶ kynges of Gazer wente vp, to helpe Lachis. But Iosua smote him with all his people, tyll there remayned not one.

And Iosua wente with all Israel from Lachis, vnto Eglon, and layed sege vnto it, and fought agaynst it, and wanne it the same daye, and smote it with the edge of the swerde, and damned all the soules that were therein the same daye, acordynge vnto all as he had done vnto Lachis.

After that wente Iosua with all Israel from Eglon vnto Hebron, and foughte agaynst it, and wanne it, and smote it with  $\text{f}$  edge of the swerde, and the kyng of it, and all the cities therof, and all the soules that were therein, and let not one remayne, acordynge vnto all as he had done vnto Eglon: and damned it, and all the soules that were therein.

Then turned Iosua agayne with all Israel towarde Debir, and fought agaynst it, and wanne it, with the kyng of it, and all  $\text{f}$  cities therof, and smote them with the edge of the swerde, and damned all  $\text{f}$  soules that were therein, and let not one remayne ouer. Euen as he had done vnto Hebrō and Lybua with their kynges, so dyd he also vnto Debir, and the kyng thereof.

Thus Iosua smote all the londe vpon the mountaynes, and towarde the south, and in the lowe countrees, and by the ryuers, with all their kynges, and let not one remaine ouer and damned all that had breth, *as the LORDE God of Israel had commaunded. And Iosua smote them from Cades Bernea vnto Gaza, and all the londe of Gosen vnto Gibeon, and toke all these kynges with their lōde at one tyme: for the LORDE God of Israel foughte for Israel. And Iosua wente agayne with all Israel to the tentes vnto Gilgal.

The xi. Chapter

WHAN Iabin the kyng of Asor herde this, he sent vnto Iabob the kyng of Madon and to the kyng of Samron, and to the kyng of Achsaph, and to the kynges that dwelt towarde the north vpon the mountaynes, and in the playne on the southsyde of Cineroth, and in the lowe countrees, and in the lordshippes of Dor by the see syde: and to the Cananites towarde  $\text{f}$  east and west, to  $\text{f}$  Amorites, Hethites, Pheresites, and Iebusites, vpon the mountaynes and to the Heuites, vnder mount Hermon in the londe of Mispā. These wēte out with all their armies, a greate people, as many as  $\text{f}$  sonde of the see, and exceedinge many horses and charettes. All these kynges gathered thē selues, and came, and pitched together by  $\text{f}$  water of Meram, to fighte with Israel.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: Feare them not, for tomorow aboute this tyme wil I delyuere them all slayne, before the children of Israel: thou shalt lame their horses, and burne their charettes with fire. †And Iosua came sodenly vpon them, and all the men of warre with him by the water of Merom, and fell vpon them. And the LORDE delyuered them in to  $\text{f}$  handes of Israel, and they smote them, and chased them vnto greate Sidō and to the warme water, and to the playne of Mispā towarde  $\text{f}$  east: and smote them, vntyll there remayned not one.

Then dealte Iosua with them as  $\text{f}$  LORDE had saide vnto him, and lamed their horses, and brent their charettes. And he turned backe at the same tyme, and wanne Hasor, and smote  $\text{f}$  kyng of it with the swerde (for Hasor was afore tyme  $\text{f}$  head cite of all these kyngdomes) and smote all the soules that were therein with the edge of the swerde, and damned it, and nothing remayne that had breth, and damned Hasor with fyre. All the cities of these kyngdomes wāne Iosua also, and smote thē with the edge of the swerde, and damned them, ‡acordinge as Moses the seruauant of the LORDE commaunded.

Howbeit the cities that stode vpon the hilles, dyd not the children of Israel burne with fyre: but Hasor onely dyd Iosua burne. §And all the spoyles of these cities and the cattell, dyd the children of Israel deale amonge them, but smote all the men with the edge of the swerde, tyll they had destroyed them, and let nothing remayne that had breth. As the LORDE commaunded his seruauant Moses, and as Moses commaunded Iosua, euen so dyd Iosua, so that there was nothinge vndone of all that the LORDE cōmaunded Moses.

So Iosua toke all this lōde vpon  $\text{f}$  moūntaynes, and all  $\text{f}$  lyeth towarde the south, and all the londe of Gosen, and the lowe countre, and the playne felde, and the mountayne of Israel with the valley therof, from the mountayne that parteth the londe vp towarde Seir, vnto Baalgad, in the playne of moūt Libanus beneth mount Hermon. All their kynges toke he, and smote them, and put thē to death. ||Howbeit he warred a longe season with these kynges.

Yet was there not one cite, that yelded it selfe peaceably vnto the children of Israel ¶(excepte the Heuites, which dwelt at Gibeon) but they wanne them all with battayll. And this was done so of the LORDE that their hert was so hardened, to come against the children of Israel with battayll, y they mighte be dāned, & no fauoure to be shewed vnto them, but to be destroyed, *as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

At the same tyme came Iosua, and rote out the Enakims from y mountayne, from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, from euery mountayne of Iuda, and from euery mountayne of Israel, and damned the with their cities, and let none of the Enakims remayne in the londe of the children of Israel, saue at Gasa, †at Gath, at Asdod, there remayned of them.

Thus Iosua conquered all the londe according vnto all as the LORDE sayde vnto Moses, & gaue it vnto Israel to enheritaunce, †vnto euery trybe his porcion, and y londe rested from warre.

THESE are y kynges of the londe, whō the childrē of Israel smote, & conquered their lōde, beyonde Iordane, eastwarde, frō the water of Arnon, vnto mount Hermon, and vnto all y playne felde towarde the east: y Sihon the kyng of the Amorites, which dwelt at Hesbon, and had domiuiou from Aroer that lieth by the water syde of Arnon, and vnto the myddes of y water: and ouer halfe Gilead, vnto the water of Iabok, which is the border of the childrē of Ammon: and ouer the playne felde, vnto the see of Cynneroth eastwarde, and vnto the see of the playne felde, namely the Salt see towarde the east, the waye vnto Beth Iesimoth: and from the south beneth by the ryuers of mount Pisga.

These are one and thirtie kynges.

This is the inheritaunce of the children of Gad in their kynreds, cities & villages.

¶ Vnto the halfe trybe of the children of Manasse after their kynreds, gaue Moses, so that their border was fro Mahanaim, all Basan, all the kyngdome of Og kyngde of Basan, and all the townes of Iair which lye in Basan, namely thre score cities. And halfe Gilead, Astaroth, Edrei, the cities of the kyngdome of Og at Basan, vnto the children of Machir the sonne of Manasse. The Border of the children of Ephraim amonge their kynreds of their enheritaunce from the east, was Ataroth Adar vnto the vpper Bethoron, ¶ goeth out westwarde by Michmethath that lyeth towarde the north, there fetcheth it a compassse towarde the east syde of the cite Thaenath Silo, and goeth there thorow from the east vnto Ianoah, and commeth downe from Ianoah vnto Ataroth and Naaratha, and bordreth on Iericho, and goeth out at Iordane. From Thapuah goeth it westwarde vnto Naalkama, and the out goinge of it is at the see.

This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of the children of Ephraim amonge their kynreds. And all the borders, cities with their vyllages of the childrē of Ephraim laye scatred amonge the enheritaunce of the children of Manasse. And they droue not out y Cananites, which dwelt at Gaser. So y Cananites remayned amöge Ephraim vnto this daye, and became tributaries.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND the lot fell vpö the trybe of Manasse (for * he is Iosephs first sonne) and it fell vpon Machir the first sonne of Manasse y father of Gilcad: for he was a mā of armes, therfore had he Gilead and Basan. It fell also vnto the other children of Manasse, namely vnto y childrē of Abieser, the children of Helek, y children of Asriel, the children of Sechem, the children of Hephher, and the children of Semida: These are the childrē of Manasse the sonne of Ioseph, males, amonge their kynreds.

But Zelaphead the sonne of Hephher the sonne of Gilead, the sonne of Machir, the sonne of Manasse, had no sonnes, but daughters, and their names are these: Mahala, Noa, Hagla, Milca, Tirza, and they came before Eleasar the prest, and before Iosua the sonne of Nun, and before the rulers, and sayde: The LORDE commaunded Moses, to geue vs enheritaunce amonge oure brethren. And so they had enheritaunce geuen them amonge their fathers brethren, accordinge to the commaundement of the LORDE.

B There fell vpon Manasse ten meetlynnes without the londe of Gilead and Basan, which lyeth beyöde Iordane. For y daughters of Manasse receaued enheritaunce amonge his sonnes: but the other children of Manasse had the londe of Gilead. And the border of Manasse was frö Asser forth vnto Michmethath, that lyeth before Sichem, and reacheth vnto the righte syde of them of En Tapuah: for the londe of Tapuah fell vnto Manasse, and the border of Manasse is vnto the childrē of Ephraim. Then commeth it downe to Nahelkana towarde the south syde of the ryuer cities, which are Ephraims amonge the cities of Manasse. But from the north is the border of Manasse by the ryuer, and goeth forth by the sec syde, south warde vnto Ephraim, and to Manasse northwarde, and the sec is his coaste. And it shal border on Asser from the north, and on Isachar from the easte.

So (amöge Isachar and Asser) Manasses had Beth Sean and the townes therof, and Ieblaam and the townes therof, and them of Dor and their townes, and them of En Dor and their townes, and them of Mageddo and their townes, and the thirde parte of (the cite) Nophet. And the children of Manasse coude not dryue awaye the inhabitors of these cities, but the Cananites beganne to dwell in the same londe. Howbeit whan the children of Israel were able, they made the Cananites tributaries, and droue them not out.

Then spake the children of Ioseph vnto Iosua, and sayde: Wherfore hast thou geuē me but one porcion and one meetlyne of enheritaunce, and I am yet a greate people, as the LORDE hath blessed me so largely? Then sayde Iosua vnto them: For so moch as thou art a greate people, go vp therfore in to y wodd, and make thy selfe rowme there in the londe of the Pheresites and Raphaim, seynge moüt Ephraim is to narowe for the.

D Then sayde the children of Ioseph: We shal not be able to attayne vnto the mountaynes, for there are yron charettes amonge all the Cananites, that dwell in the londe of Emek, by whom lyeth Beth Sean and the vyllages therof, and Iesrael in Emek. Iosua sayde vnto the house of Ioseph, euen to Ephraim and Manasses: Thou art a greate people, and for so moch as thou art so greate, thou must not haue one lot, but the mountayne where y wod is, shal be thine: rote y out for y, so shall it be the outgoinge of thy porcion, whan thou dryuest out the Cananites, which haue yron charettes, and are mightie.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND all the multitude of the children of Israel gathered them selues together vnto Silo, and they set vp y Tabernacle of wnesse, and the londe was subdued vnto them. But there were yet seuen trybes of the childrē of Israel, vnto whom they had not deuyded their enheritaunce. And Iosua sayde vnto the children of Israel: How longe are ye so slowe, to go and cōquere the londe, which the LORDE God of youre fathers hath geuen you? Chose you thre men out of euery trybe, y I maye sende them, and that they maye get them vp and go thorow the londe, and descrybe it acordinge to the enheritaunces therof, and come vnto me.

Deuyde the londe in seuen partes. Iudas shal remayne vpon his borders of the south syde, and the house of Ioseph shal remayne vpon his borders of the north parte: but descrybe ye the londe in seuen partes, and brynge them vnto me, then shal I cast y lot for you before the LORDE oure God. * For the Leuites haue no porcion amonge you, but the presthode of the LORDE is their enheritaunce. "As for Gad & Ruben and y halfe trybe of Manasse, they haue receaued their enheritaunce beyonde Iordane eastwarde, which Moses the seruauant of the LORDE gaue them.

33 Then the men gat vp, to go their waye. And whan they were aboute to go for to descrybe the londe, Iosua commaunded them, and sayde: Go youre waye, and walke thorow the londe, and descrybe it, and come agayne vnto me, that I maye cast y lot for you before the LORDE at Silo. So the men departed, and wente thorow the londe, and descrybed it in seuen partes vpon a letter acordinge to the cities, and came to Iosua in to the hoost at Silo. Then Iosua cast the lot ouer them at Silo before the LORDE, and there distributed the londe amonge the children of Israel, vnto euery one his parte.

And the lot of the trybe of the children of Ben Iamin fell acordinge to their kynreds, and the border of their lot wente out betwene the children of Iuda & the children of Ioseph. And their border was on y north quarter of Iordane, and goeth vp from the north syde of Iericho, and commeth vp to the mountayne westwarde, and goeth out by the wyldernesse of Bethauen, and goeth from thēce towarde Lus, euen by the south syde of Lus (that is Bethel) and commeth downe vnto Ataroth Adar by the mountayne which lyeth on y south syde of the lower Bethoron. Then boweth it downe, and fetcheth a compasse vnto the south west quarter from the mount that lyeth ouer agaynst Bethoron towarde the south, and goeth out vnto Kiriath Baal, y is Kiriath Iearim, a cite of the children of Iuda. This is the west border.

C But the south border is from Kiriath-Iearim forth, and goeth out towarde the west, and commeth forth vnto y water well of Nepthoah:

and goeth downe by the edge of the mount, that lyeth before the valley of the sonne of Hinnam: and goeth downe thorow the valley of Hinnam on y south syde of the Iebusites, and commeth downe to the well of Rogell, and stretcheth from the northwarde, and commeth out vnto En Semes, and commeth forth to the heapes that lye vp towarde Adumim, and cometh downe vnto the stone of Bohen the sonne of Ruben, and goeth a longe besyde y playne felde which lyeth north warde, and commeth downe vnto y playne felde, and goeth besyde Beth Hagla that lyeth towarde the north, and his ende is at the north border of the Salt see, vnto y edge of Iordane south warde. This is the south border.

But Iordane shal be the ende of the east quarter. This is the enheritaunce of y children of Ben Iamin in their borders rounde aboute, amonge their kynreds.

The cities of the trybe of the children of Ben Iamin amōge their kynreds are these: Iericho, Beth Hagla, Emek Kezitz, Betharaba, Zemaraim, Bethel, Aiuin, Haphar, Aphra, Caphar Amonai, Aphni, Gaba: these are twolue cities and their villages.

Gibeon, Rama, Beeroth, Mispa, Caphira, Moza, Rekem, Ieerpeel, Thareala, Zela, Eleph, and the Iebusites, that is Ierusalem, Gibeath, Kiriath: these are fourtene cities and their villages. This is the enheritaunce of the children of Ben Iamin in their kynreds.

The xij. Chapter.

THEN fell the seconde lot of the trybe of A the children of Simeon acordinge to their kynreds, and their enheritaunce was amonge the enheritaunce of y children of Iuda. † And to their enheritaunce they had Beer Seba, Molada, Hazar Sual, Baala, Azem, El Tholad, Bethul, Harma, Ziklag, Betha Markaboth, Hazar Sussa, Beth Lebaoth, and Saruhen: these are thirtene cities & their villages. Ain, Rimón, Ether, Asan: these are foure cities and their villages. And all y villages that lye aboute the cities vnto Balath Beer Ramath towarde the south. This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of the children of Simeon in their kynreds: for the enheritaunce of the children of Simeon is vnder the porcion of the children of Iuda. For so much as the enheritaunce of the children of Iuda was to greate for them, therfore inhereted the children of Simeon amonge their enheritaunce.

The thirde lot fell vpon the childrē of Zabulon after their kynreds. And the border of their enheritaunce was vnto Sarid, ⁊ goeth vp westwarde to Mareala, ⁊ bordreth vpon Dabaseh, and reacheth vnto the ryuer that floweth ouer agaynst lakneam: ⁊ turneth from Sarid eastwarde vnto the border of Cisloth Thabor, and cometh out vnto Dabrath, and reacheth vp to Iapia, and from thēce goeth it westwarde thorow Githa Hephher, and Itha Kazim, and commeth out towarde Rimom, Hamthoar Hanea, ⁊ fetcheth a compasse aboute from the north vnto Nathon, ⁊ the goynge out of it is in ⁊ valley Iephtha El, Katath, Nahalal, Simron, Iedeala, ⁊ Beth-lehem: These are twolue cities and their vyllages. This is the enheritaunce of the childrē of Zabulon in their kynreds: these are their cities and vyllages.

The fourth lot fell vpō the childrē of Isachar after their kynreds, ⁊ their border was Iesraela, Chessulloth, Sunem, Hapharaim, Sion, Anaharath, Raabith, Kislon, Abez, Kemeth, En Gānim, Enhada, Beth Pazez, ⁊ bordreth vpon Thabor, Sahazima, Beth Semes, and ⁊ outgoinge of it was at Iordane. These are sixtene cities and their vyllages. This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of the children of Isachar in their kynreds, cities and vyllages.

The fifti lot fell vpon the trybe of the children of Asser, after their kynreds. And their border was Helkath, Hali, Beten, Achsaph, Alamelech, Ameid, Miscal; and borderth on Carmel vnto the see, and on Sihor, and Libnath, and turneth towarde the east vnto Beth Dagon, and bordreth on Zabulon, and on the valley of Iephtael, and towarde the north syde of Beth Emek and Negiel: ⁊ commeth out vnto Cabul on the lefte syde of Ebron, Rehob, Hamon and Cana, vnto greate Sidon. And turneth towarde Rama, vnto the stronge cite of Zor, and turneth towarde Hossa, and goeth out vnto the see, after ⁊ meetlyne towarde Achsib, Vma, Apek, Rehob.

These are two and twenty cities and their vyllages. This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of the children of Asser in their kinreds cities and vyllages.

Nephtali in their kynreds. And their border was frō Heleph Elon thorow Zaanaim, Adai Nekeb, Iabne El vnto Lakum, and goeth out vnto Iordane, and turneth westwarde to Asnoth Thabor, and cometh out from thence vnto Hukok, and bordreth on Zabulon towarde the south, and on Asser towarde the west, and on Iuda by Iordane towarde the east: and hath stronge cities, Zidimzer, Hamath Rakath, Chinnaret, Adama, Rama, Hazor, Kedes, Edrei, En Hazor, Iereon, Migdal Elharē, Beth Anath, Beth Sames. These are nyentene cities and their vyllages. This is the enheritaunce of ⁊ trybe of the children of Nephtali in their kynreds, cities, and vyllages.

The seuenth lot fell vpon the trybe of the children of Dan after their kynreds. And the border of their enheritaunce was Zarea, Esthaol, Irsames, Saalabin, Aialon, Iethla, Elon, Thimnata, Ekron, Eltheke, Gibethō Baalath, Iehud, Buerarak, Gat Rimom, Me larkon, Rakon with the border by Iapho, and on the same goeth the border of the children of Dan out. And the children of Dā wente vp, and foughte agaynst Lesem, and wanne it, and smote it with the edge of the swerde, and toke it in possession, ⁊ dwelt therin, and *called it Dan, after ⁊ name of their father. This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of the children of Dan in their kynreds, cities, and vyllages.

And whā ⁊ lōde was all parted out with the borders therof, the children of Israel gaue Iosua the sonne of Nun, an enheritaunce amonge them, and (acordynge to the commaundement of the LORDE) they gaue him ⁊ cite that he requyred, namely, † Thimnath Serah, vpon mouēt Ephraim: there buylded he the cite, and dwelt therin.

These are the enheritaunces which Eleasar the prest and Iosua ⁊ sonne of Nun, and the chefest of the fathers amonge ⁊ tribes, deuided out by lot vnto the childrē of Israel at Silo before the LORDE, euen before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnes, and so they ended the deuydinge out of the londe.

The xx. Chaptr.

AND the LORDE spake vnto Iosua, and sayde: Speake to the children of Israel: Geue amonge you fre cities, ‡ wherof I spake vnto you by Moses, that a deedsleyer which sleyeth a soule vnawarres and vniwittingly, maye flye thither, y they maye be fre amoge you from the avenger of bloude. And he that flyeth to one of those cities, shal stonde without before the porte of the cite, and shewe his cause before the Elders of the cite, then shall they take him to them in to the cite, and geue him place to dwell with them.

And yf the auenger of bloude folowe vpon him, they shall not delouer the deed-slayer in to his handes, for so much as he hath slayne his neyghboure vnawarres, and was not his enemye afore: but he shall dwell in y cite, tyll he stonde before the congregacion in iudgment, vntyll the hie prest dye, which shall be at that tyme. Then shall the deed-slayer returne, and go vnto his awne cite, and vnto his house to the cite, from whence he was fled.

Then appoynted they Kedes in Galile vpon mount Nepthali, and Sechem vpon mount Ephraim, and Kiriatharba, that is Hebron vpon mount Iuda. And beyöde Iordane on the east syde of Iericho, they gaue Beser in the wildernes vpon the playne out of the trybe of Ruben, and Ramoth in Gilead out of the trybe of Gad, and Golan in Basan out of the trybe of Manasse.

These were the cities appoynted for all y children of Israel, and for the straungers which dwelt amonge them, that whosoever had slayne a soule vnawarres, might flye thither, that he shulde not be put to death by the auenger of bloude, tyll he had stonde before the congregacion.

The xxi. Chapter.

THEN the chefe fathers amonge the Leuites came forth vnto Eleasar the prest, and to Iosua the sonne of Nun, and to y auuncient fathers amoge the trybes of the children of Israel, and spake vnto them at Silo in the londe of Canaan, and sayde: *The LORDE commaunded by Moses, that we shulde haue cities geuen vs to dwell in, and the suburbes of the same for oure catell. Then the children of Israel gaue of their enheritaunce these cities and the suburbes therof, vnto the Leuites, acordynge to the commaundement of the LORDE.

And the lot fell vpon the kynred of the Kahathites, and the children of Aaron the prest amonge the Leuites, had by the lott thyrtyene cities of the trybe of Iuda, of the trybe of Simeon, and of the trybe of Ben Iamin. The other childrē of Kahath of the same kynred, had by the lot ten cities, of the trybe of Ephraim, of the trybe of Dan, and of the halfe trybe of Manasse.

But the children of Gerson of the same kynred had by the lot thyrtyene cities, of the trybe of Isachar, of the trybe of Asser, of y trybe of Nepthali, and of the halfe trybe of Manasse at Basan.

The children of Merari of their kynred had twolue cities, of the trybe of Ruben, of the trybe of Gad, and of the trybe of Zabulon. So the children of Israel gaue these cities and their suburbes vnto the Leuites by lott, as the LORDE commaunded by Moses.

Of the trybe of the children of Iuda, and of the trybe of the children of Simeon, they gaue these cities (which they named by name) vnto the children of Aaron of the kynred of the Kahathites amonge the children of Leui: for the first lot was theyrs.

So they gaue them Kiriatharba, which was the fathers of Enak, that is Hebron vpon the mount Iuda, and the suburbes therof rounde aboute. † But the felde of the cite and the vyllages therof, gaue they vnto Caleb the sonne of Iephune for his possession.

Thus gaue they vnto the children of Aaron the prest, the fre cite of the deed sleyers, Hebron and the suburbes therof, Libna and the suburbes therof, Iathir and the suburbes therof, Esthuma and the suburbes therof, Holon and the suburbes therof, Debir and the suburbes therof, Ain and the suburbes therof, Iuta and the suburbes therof, Beth Semes and the suburbes therof, euen nyne cities of these two trybes.

But of the trybe of Ben Iamin they gaue foure cities, Gibeon and y suburbes therof, Gaba, and the suburbes therof, Anathot and the suburbes therof, Almon and the suburbes therof: so that all the cities of the children of Aaron the prest were thirtene with their suburbes.

The kynreds of the other children of Kahath the Leuites, had by their lott foure cities, of the trybe of Ephraim, and they gaue the fre cite of the deedsleiers, Sechē and the suburbes therof vpon mount Ephraim Gaser and the suburbes therof, Kibzaim and the suburbes therof, Bethron and the suburbes therof.

D Of the trybe of Dan foure cities, Eltheke and y suburbes therof, Gibthon and the suburbes therof, Aialon and the suburbes therof, Gath Rimon and the suburbes therof. Of the halfe trybe of Manasses two cities, Thaeinach and the suburbes therof, Gath Rimon and the suburbes therof: so that all the cities of the other children of y kynred of Kahath, were ten with their suburbes.

But vnto the children of Gerson amonge the kynreds of the Leuites were geuen, Of the halfe trybe of Manasse two cities, the fre cite for the deedslayer, Gola in Basan and the suburbes therof, Beasthra, and the suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Isachar foure cities, Kision and the suburbes therof, Dabrach and the suburbes therof, Iarnuth and the suburbes therof, Engannim and the suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Asser foure cities, Miseal, Abdon, Helkath and Rehob with the suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Nephtali thre cities, the fre cite Kedes (for the deedsleyer) in Galile, Hamoth, Dor, and Karthan with the suburbes therof: so that all the cities of the kynred of the Gersonites were thirtene with their suburbes.

E Vnto the kynreds of Merari the other Leuites were geuen, Of the trybe of Zabulon foure cities, Iakneam, Kartha, Dimna and Nahalal with y suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Ruben foure cities, Bezer, Iahza, Kedemoth and Mephaat with their suburbes. Of the trybe of Gad foure cities, the fre cite for the deedsleyer, Ramoth in Gilead, Mahanaim, Heszbou and Iaeser with their suburbes: so that all the cities of the children of Merari amonge their kynreds of y other Leuites, were twolue. Thus all the cities of the Leuites amonge y possession of the children of Israel, were eight and fortye with their suburbes. And these cities were so dealte out, that euery one had their suburbes rounde aboute, the one as the other.

Thus the LORDE gaue the children of Israel all the londe, which he had sworne vnto their fathers to geue: ⁊ they toke possession of it, and dwelt therein. And the LORDE gaue the rest before all those y were aboute them *like as he sware vnto their fathers, ⁊ none of their enemies stode agaynst the, but all their enemies deliuered he in to their hande. And their myssed nothinge of all the good that the LORDE had promysed vnto the house of Israel, it came euery whyt.

The xxij. Chapter.

THEN Iosua called y Rubenites and Gaddites, and y halfe trybe of Manasse, and sayde vnto them: Ye haue kepte all, ⁊ that Moses the seruauit of the LORDE commaunded you, and haue herkened vnto my voyce in all y I haue commaunded you. Ye haue not forsaken youre brethre a longe season, vnto this daye, and haue wayted vpon the commaundement of the LORDE youre God. For so moch now as the LORDE youre God hath broughte youre brethre to rest, as he promysed them, turne you now, and go youre waye to youre tentes in to the londe of youre possession, which Moses the seruauit of the LORDE gaue you beyode Iordane.

But take diligent hede now, that ye do accordinge to the commaundement and lawe which Moses the seruauit of the LORDE hath commaunded: ⁊ That ye loue the LORDE youre God, and walke in all his wayes, and kepe his commaundementes, and cleue vnto him, and serue him with all youre hert and with all youre soule. So Iosua blessed them, and let them go. And they wente vnto their tentes.

Vnto the halfe trybe of Manasse had Moses geuen possession at Basan: vnto the other halfe gaue Iosua amonge their brethren on this syde Iordane westwarde. And whan he let them go to their tentes and blessed them, he sayde vnto them: Ye come home agayne with greate good vnto youre têtes, with excedyng moch catell, syluer, golde, brasse, yron and rayment, ⁊ distribute therfore the spoyle of youre enemyes amonge youre brethren.

So the Rubenites, Gaddites, and the halfe trybe of Manasse returned, and wente from the children of Israel out of Silo (which lyeth in the londe of Canaan) to go in to the countre of Gilead to the londe of their possession, that they mighte possesse it, accordinge to the commaundement of the LORDE by Moses.

And whan they came vnto the heapes by Iordane, which lye in the londe of Canaan, the same Rubenites, Gaddites, and the halfe trybe of Manasses buylded there besyde Iordane, a fayre greate altare. But whan the children of Israel herde saye: Beholde, the children of Ruben, the children of Gad, and the halfe trybe of Manasse haue buylded an altare ouer agaynst the londe of Canaan vpon the heapes by Iordane on this syde the children of Israel, they gathered them selues together with the whole congregacion at Silo, to go vp agaynst thē with an armye. And (in the meane season) they sent to them in the londe of Gilead, Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the prest, and with him ten chefe prynces amonge the houses of their fathers, out of euery tribe in Israel one. And they came to the children of Ruben, to the children of Gad, and to the halfe trybe of Manasse in the londe of Gilead, and sayde:

¶ Thus sayeth the whole congregacion of the LORDE vnto you: *What trespase is this, y<sup>e</sup> haue trespassed agaynst the God of Israel, that ye shulde turne backe from y<sup>e</sup> LORDE this daye, to builde you an altare, for to fall awaye from the LORDE?

† Haue we not ynough of the wickednesse of Peor? from the which we are not yet censed this daye, and there came a plage amonge the congregacion of the LORDE: and ye turne you backe this daye from the LORDE, and this daye are ye fallen awaye from the LORDE, that he maye be wroth to daye or tomorrow at the whole congregacion of the LORDE.

Yf the londe of youre possession be vncleane, then come ouer in to the londe that the LORDE possesseth, where the dwellynge of the LORDE is, and take possessions amonge vs, and fall not awaye from the LORDE and from vs, to builde you an altare without the altare of the LORDE oure God. †Did not Achan the sonne of Serah trespase in the thinge that was damned, and the wrath came ouer y<sup>e</sup> whole congregacion of Israel and he wente not downe alone for his myszdede?

¶ Then answered the children of Ruben, and the children of Gad, and the halfe trybe of Manasse, and sayde vnto the heades and prynces of Israel: Themightie God y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, the mightie God the LORDE knoweth, and Israel knoweth also, yf this be a trangressyng or trespacyng agaynst the LORDE, then let it not helpe vs this daye: Yf we haue buylded the altare, because we wolde turne awaye backe from the LORDE, to offre burnt-offerings or meatofferings theron, or to make any deedofferings vpon it, then let the LORDE requyre it: And yf we haue not done it rather for very feare of this thinge, and sayde: To daye or tomorrow mighte youre children saye vnto oure children:

What haue ye to do with the LORDE the God of Israel? The LORDE hath set Iordane for a border betwene vs and you ye children of Ruben and Gad, ye haue no porcion in the LORDE: By this shulde youre children make oure children to turne awaye from the feare of the LORDE.

¶ Therefore sayde we: Let vs make oure children an altare, not for sacrifice, ner for burnt offeringe, s<sup>b</sup>ut that it maye be a tokē betwene vs and you, and oure posterities, that we maye serue the LORDE in his sighte with oure burntofferings, deedofferings, and other offerings: and y<sup>e</sup> youre children to daye or tomorrow neade not to saye vnto oure children: Ye haue no parte in the LORDE.

And we sayde: But yf they shulde speake so vnto vs, or to oure posterities to daye or tomorrow, then maye we saye: Beholde the similitude of y<sup>e</sup> altare of the LORDE, which oure fathers made, not for sacrifice, ner for burnt-offerynge, but for a wytnesse betwene vs and you.

God forbydde, that we shulde fall awaye from the LORDE, to turne backe from him this daye, and to builde an altare for sacrifice, for burnt offeringe and for eny presente, without y<sup>e</sup> altare of the LORDE oure God, that stondeth before his Habitacion.

But whan Phineas the prest, and the chefe of the congregacion, the prynces of Israel which were with him, herde these wordes, that the children of Ruben, Gad, and Manasse had spoken, they pleased them well. And Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the prest sayde vnto the children of Rubē, Gad and Manasse: This daye we knowe, that y<sup>e</sup> LORDE is amonge vs, in that ye haue not trespassed agaynst the LORDE in this dede. Now haue ye deliuered the children of Israel out of the hande of the LORDE.

Then Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the prest, and the rulers returned out of the londe of Gilead, from the children of Ruben and Gad vnto y<sup>e</sup> londe of Canaā to the children of Israel, and brought them worde agayne of the matter.

Then were the children of Israel well

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND after a longe season, whan the LORDE had broughte Israel to rest from all their enemies rounde aboute: and Iosua was now olde and well stricken in age, he called all Israel and their Elders, heades, iudges, and officers, and sayde vnto them: I am olde and well aged, and ye haue sene all that the LORDE your God hath done vnto all these nacions in youre sighte. For the LORDE your God himself hath foughte for you. Beholde, I haue parted amonge you ſ renaunt of the nacions by lot, vnto euery trybe his enheritaunce from Iordane forth, and all the nacions whom I haue roted out vnto the greate see westwarde.

B And the LORDE your God shal thrust them out before you, and dryue them awaye from you, that ye maye haue their londe in possession, as the LORDE your God hath promysed you. Be strōge now therfore, that ye maye obserue and do all that is wrytten in the boke of the lawe of Moses: *so that ye turne not asyde from it, nether to the righte hande ner to the lefte: that ye come not amonge ſ remnaunt of these naciōs, which are with you: And se that ye make no mencion ner †swear by the names of their goddes, nether serue them, ner bowe youre selues vnto them: But cleue vnto the LORDE your God, as ye haue done vnto this daye: thē shal the LORDE dryue awaye greate and mightie nacions before you, like as there hath no man bene able to stonde before you vnto this daye. †One of you shall chace a thousande: for the LORDE your God fighteth for you, accordinge as he promysed you. Take diligent hede therfore vnto youre soules, that ye loue the LORDE your God.

*But yf ye turne backe, and cleue vnto these other nacions, and make mariages with them, so that ye come amōge them, and they amonge you, be ye sure then, that the LORDE your God shal nomore dryue out all these nacions before you, †but they shall be vnto you a snare and net, and prickes in youre sydes, and thornes in youre eyes, vntyll he haue destroyed you from the good lōde, which the LORDE your God hath geuen you.

Beholde, †this daye do I go the waye of all the worlde, and ye shal knowe euen from all your hert and from all youre soule, that there hath not fayled one worde of all the good that the LORDE your God promysed you. Now like as all the good is come that the LORDE your God promised you: †euen so shal the LORDE cause all euell to come vpon you, tyll he haue destroyed you from this good londe, which the LORDE your God hath geuen you: yf ye transgresse ſ couenaunt of the LORDE your God, which he hath commaunded you. And yf ye go youre waye and serue other goddes, and worships thē, then shall the wrath of the LORDE waxe whote ouer you, †and shall shortly destroye you out of the good londe, ſ he hath geuen you.

The xiiij. Chapter.

IOSUA gathered all the trybes of Israel together vnto Sichem, and called the Elders of Israel, the heades, iudges and officers. And whā they were come before God, he sayde vnto all the people: Thus sayeth the LORDE the God of Israel: **Your fathers dwelt afore time beyōde ſ water, Abrahā † Nahor with Tarah their father † serued other goddes. ††Then toke I your father Abraham beyonde the water, † caused him to walke in the londe of Canaan, † multiplied his sede, and gaue him Isaac, † and vnto Isaac I gaue Iacob and Esau, and gaue Esau moūt Seir to possesse. ††As for Iacob, † his childrē, they wente downe in to Egipte.

Then sent I Moses and Aaron, and plaged Egipte † as I haue done amonge thē. After ſ † brought I you and youre fathers out of Egipte. And whan ye came to ſ see, and the Egipcians folowed vpon youre fathers with charettes and horse men vnto the reed see, then cryed they vnto the LORDE, which put a darcknesse betwene you and the Egipcians, and broughte the see vpon them, and ouerwhelmed them. And youre eyes haue sene what I dyd to  $\hat{y}$  Egipcians, & ye dwelt in  $\hat{y}$  wildernes a lōge season. \* And I broughte you in to  $\hat{y}$  londe of the Amorites, which dwelt beionde Iordane: & whā they fought agaynst you, I delyuered them in to youre hande, that ye mighte haue their countre in possession, and I destroyed them before you. † Then Balac the sonne of Ziphor the kynge of the Moabites gat him vp, and foughte agaynst Israel: and he sente and bad call Balaam the sonne of Beor, to curse you, neuertheles I wolde not heare him, but I blessed you, and delyuered you out of his hande.

¶ And whan ye wente ouer Iordane, and came vnto Iericho, the citesyns of Iericho foughte agaynst you, the Amorites, Pheresites, Cananites, Hethites, Girgosites, Heuites, & Iebusites: howbeit I delyuered thē in to youre hande. ‡ And I sent hornettes before you, which droue them out before you, namely the two kynges of  $\hat{y}$  Amorites: not thorow thy swerde, ner thorow thy bowe. ¶ And I haue geuen you a londe wherupon ye bestowed no labour, and cities which ye haue not buylded, that ye might dwell therein, and that ye might eate of the vynyardes and olyue trees which ye haue not planted. Feare the LORDE now therefore, § and serue him perfectly and in the trueth, and let go the goddes, whom youre fathers serued beyonde the water and in Egipte, and serue ye  $\hat{y}$  LORDE.

¶ But yf ye like not to serue the LORDE, thē chose you this daye whom ye wyll serue: the God whom youre fathers serued beyonde  $\hat{y}$  water, or  $\hat{y}$  goddes of the Amorites, in whose lōde ye dwell. As for me and my house, we wyll serue the LORDE. Then answered the people, and saide: God forbidde, that we shulde forsake the LORDE, & serue other goddes. For the LORDE oure God brought vs and oure fathers out of the londe of Egipte frō the house of bondage, and did soch greate tokens before oure eyes, and preserued vs all  $\hat{y}$  waye that we wente, and amonge all the nacions, whom we trauayled by. And the LORDE thrust out before vs all the people of the Amorites that dwelt in the londe. Therefore wyll we also serue the LORDE, for he is oure God.

¶ Iosua sayde vnto the people: Ye can not

serue the LORDE: for he is an holy God, mightie, and gelous, which spareth not youre transgressions and synnes. But yf ye forsake the LORDE, and serue a straunge god, then shall the LORDE turne him, and do you euell, and consume you, after that he hath done you good. The people sayde vnto Iosua: Not so, but we will serue the LORDE. Then sayde Iosua vnto the people: Ye are witnessnes ouer youre selues, that ye haue chosen you the LORDE, to serue him. And they sayde: Yee. Then put away from you (sayde he) the straunge goddes  $\hat{y}$  are amonge you, and enclue youre hert vnto the LORDE the God of Israel. And the people sayde vnto Iosua: We wyll serue the LORDE oure God, and be obedient vnto his voyce. § So Iosua made a couenaunt with the people  $\hat{y}$  same daye, and laied statutes & lawes before them at Sichem.

¶ And Iosua wrote this acte in the boke of the lawe of God, ¶ and toke a greate stone, & set it vp there vnder an oke, which was in  $\hat{y}$  Sanctuary of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, and sayde vnto all the people: Beholde, this stone shall be witness ouer you: For it hath herde all the wordes of the LORDE, which he hath spoken vnto vs, and shall be a witness ouer you, that ye denye not youre God. So Iosua let the people go euery one to his enheritaunce.

¶ And it fortunated after these actes, ¶  $\hat{y}$  Iosua the sonne of Nun  $\hat{y}$  seruaūt of the LORDE dyed, whan he was an hundreth and ten yeare olde, and was buried in the border ¶ of his enheritaunce at Thimnath Serah, which lyeth on the mount Ephraim, on the north side of mount Gaas. And the children of Israel serued the LORDE as longe as Iosua lyued, and the Elders (that lyued longe after Iosua) which knewe all the workes of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, that he had done vnto Israel. ¶ The bones of Ioseph, which the children of Israel had broughte out of Egipte, buried they at Sichem, in the pece of the londe, ¶  $\hat{y}$  Iacob boughte of the children of Hemor  $\hat{y}$  father of Sichem for an hundreth pens, and was the enheritaunce of the children of Ioseph. The first Chapter.

AFTER the death of Iosua the children of Israel axed the LORDE, and sayde: Who shall go vp & be oure captayne of warre agaynst y<sup>e</sup> Cananites? The LORDE sayde: Iuda shall go vp. * Beholde, I haue deliuered the londe in to his hande. Then sayde Iuda vnto his brother Simeon: Go vp with me in to my lot, and let vs fighte against the Cananites, then wyl I go agayne with the in to thy lot: So Simeon wente with him.

Now whan Iuda wente vp the LORDE deliuered the Cananites and Pheresites in to their hādes, & they slewe tē thousande mē at Besek: & they foude Adoni Besek at Besek, & foughte agaynst him, and slewe the Cananites and Pheresites. But Adoni Besek fled, and they folowed after him: and whan they had ouertaken him, they cut of the thōbes of his handes and fete.

B Then sayde Adoni Besek: Thre score and ten kynges with the thombes of their hādes & fete cut of, gathered vp the meate y<sup>e</sup> was lefte vnder my table. † Now as I haue done, so hath God rewarded me agayne. And he was broughte vnto Ierusalē, where he dyed.

But y<sup>e</sup> childrē of Iuda foughte agaynst Ierusalem, and wāne it, † and smote it with the edge of the swerde, and set fyre vpon the cite. Then wente the children of Israel downe, to fighte agaynst y<sup>e</sup> Cananites, y<sup>e</sup> dwelt vpon the mount, and towarde the south, and in the valleys. § And Iuda wente agaynst the Cananites, which dwelt at Hebron. (As for Hebron, it was called Kiriatharba afore tyme) and they smote Sesai, & Achiman, and Thalmai.

C And from thence he wente agaynst y<sup>e</sup> inhabitants of Debir (but Debir was called Kiriath Sepher aforetyme.) And Caleb sayde: || He y<sup>e</sup> smyteth Kiriath Sepher, & wynneth it, I wyl geue him my daughter Achsa to wife. Then Athniel the sonne of Kenas, Calebs yongest brother wāne it. And he gaue him his daughter Achsa to wife. And it fortunēd y<sup>e</sup> whan they wēte in, she was counceled of hir housbande, to axe a pece of londe of hir father. And she fell from the asse. Thē sayde Caleb vnto her: What ayleth y<sup>e</sup>? She sayde: Geue me a blessinge, for thou hast geuen me a south & drye londe, geue me also a watery londe. Then gaue he her a londe that was watery a boue and beneth.

And the childrē of y<sup>e</sup> Kenyite Moses brother in lawe, wente vp out of the ¶ palme cite, with the children of Iuda in to the wylder-nesse of Iuda, that lyeth on y<sup>e</sup> south syde of the cite Arad: ** and wente their waye, & dwelt amonge the people. And Iuda wente with his brother Simeon, & they smote the Cananites at Zephath, & damned them, & called the name of the cite Horma. †† Iuda also wanne Gasa with the borders therof, & Ascalon with hir borders, & Accaron with the coastes therof. And the LORDE was with Iuda, so that he conquered the mountaynes: but them that dwelt in the valley coulde he not conquere, because they had yron charettes. And acordinge as Moses had sayde, they gaue Hebron vnto Caleb, which droue out the thre sonnes of Enak. †† Howbeit y<sup>e</sup> children of Ben Iamin droue not out y<sup>e</sup> Iebusites which dwelt at Ierusalem, but y<sup>e</sup> Iebusites dwelt amonge the children of Ben Iamin at Ierusalem vnto this daye.

Likewyse the children of Ioseph wēte vp also vnto Bethel, & the LORDE was with thē. And the house of Ioseph spyed out Bethel (which afore tyme was called Lus) and the watch men sawe a man goinge out of the cite, and saide vnto him: Shewe vs where we maye come in to the cite, §§ & we wyl shewe mercy vpon the. And whan he had shewed them where they mighte come in to the cite, they smote y<sup>e</sup> cite with the edge of the swerde: but they let the man go & all his frendes.

Then wēte the same man vp in to y<sup>e</sup> countre of the Hethites, & buylded a cite, and called it Lus, & so is the name of it yet vnto this daye. And Manasses ||| droue not out Beth Sean with the villages therof, ner Thaenah with the villages therof, ner the inhabitants of Dor with the villages therof: ner the inhabitants of Ieblean with the villages therof, ner the inhabitants of Mageddo with the villages therof, and y<sup>e</sup> Cananites beganne to dwell in the same londe. But whan Israel was mightie, he made the Cananites tributaries, and droue them not out.

The ij. Chapter.

BUT there came vp a messaūger of ſ LORDE from Gilgall vnto Bochim, and sayde: I haue caried you vp hither out of Egipte, and broughte you in to the londe that I sware vnto youre fathers, ⁊ saide: * I wyl neuer breake my couenaunt with you, that ye shulde make no couenaunt with the indwellers of this londe, but breake downe their altares: Neuertheles ye haue not herkened vnto my voyce. Wherefore haue ye done this? Then saide I morouer: I wil not dryue them out before you, that they maye be a fall vnto you, and their goddes a snare. And whan ſ messaūger of the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto all the children of Israel, the people lifte vp their voyce, ⁊ wepte, and called ſ name of the place Bochim, and offred there vnto the LORDE.

For whan Iosua had sente awaye ſ people, and the childrē of Israel were gone, euery one to his inheritaunce, for to take possession of the londe, tthe people serued the LORDE as longe as Iosua lyued and ſ Elders, which lyued longe after Iosua, and ſ sawe all the greate workes of the LORDE, which he dyd for Israel.

Now whan Iosua the sonne of Nun, the seruauant of the LORDE, <sup>a</sup>was deed (whan he was an hūdreth and ten yeare olde) they buried him in ſ border of his inheritaunce at Timnath Heres vpon mount Ephraim on the north syde of mount Gaas. And whan all the same generacion was gathered vnto their fathers, there came vp after them another generacion, which knew not the LORDE, ner the workes that he had done for Israel.

"Then wroughte the children of Israel euell before the LORDE, and serued Baalim, and forsoke ſ LORDE the God of their fathers (which broughte them out of the londe of Egipte) and folowed other goddes ⁊ the goddes of the nacions that dwelt rounde aboute them, ⁊ worshipped them, ⁊ displeased the LORDE: for they forsoke ſ LORDE euer more and more, and serued Baal and Astaroth.

Then ſ wrath of the LORDE waxed whote vpō Israel, ⁊ he deliuered thē in to ſ handes of those ſ spoyled thē, that they mighte spoyle them, ⁊ solde thē in to the handes of their enemies rōunde aboute, ⁊ they were not able to withstonde their enemies eny more, but what waye so euer they wolde out, ſ hāde of the LORDE was agaynst thē to their hurte (euen as the LORDE <sup>a</sup>sayde and sware vnto them) and they were sore oppressed.

Now whan the LORDE raysted them vp iudges, which helped them out of the hande of soch as spoyled thē, they folowed not the iudges nether, but wente a whoringe after other goddes, ⁊ worshipped them, and were soone gone out of ſ waye ſ their fathers walked in, to heare the cōmaundementes of the LORDE, ⁊ dyd not as they dyd.

But whan ſ LORDE raysted vp iudges vnto them, the LORDE was with ſ iudge, and helped them out of the hande of their enemies, as longe as the iudge lyued. † For the LORDE had pitie of their complaynte, which they made ouer those ſ subdued thē and oppressed them.

Therefore waxed the wrath of the LORDE allwaie so whote ouer Israel, that he sayde: For so moch as the people haue transgressed my couenaut, which I commaunded their fathers, & folowe not my voyce, I wil from hence forth dryue out none of the Heythen, whō Iosua lesfe behynde him, whā he dyed, * that by them I maye proue Israel, whether they wil kepe the waye of the LORDE, to walke therin, as their fathers dyd, or not. Thus the LORDE suffred all these nacions, so that in a shorte tyme he droue them not out, whom he had not geuen ouer in to Iosuas hande.

The iij. Chapter.

THESE are the nacions, whom the LORDE suffred to remayne, y by them he mighte proue Israel, which had no vnderstandinge in the warres of Canaan: onely because y the trybes of the childrē of Israel might knowe & lerne to warre, which afore had no knowlege therof, namely: The fyue lordes of y Philistynes, & all the Cananites, & Sidonians, & the Hethites y dwelt vpon mount Libanus, fro mount Baal Hermon, vntyll a man come vnto Hemath. The same remayned, that Israel mighte be proued by them, that it mighte be knowne whether they wolde herken to the commaundementes of the LORDE, which he commaunded their fathers by Moses.

Now whan the children of Israel dwelt thus amōge the Cananites, Hethites, Amorites, Pheresites, Heuites & Iebusites, † they toke their daughters to wyues, and gaue their daughters vnto their sonnes, & serued their goddes, and wrought wickednes before the LORDE, & forgat the LORDE their God, & serued Baalim & Astaroth. Then y wrath of y LORDE waxed whote ouer Israel, & he solde thē vnder the hāde of Cusan Risathaim kynge of Mesopotamia, & so y childrē of Israel serued Cusan Risathaim viij. yeare.

B Thē cried the childrē of Israel vnto the LORDE, & the LORDE raysted thē vp a sauioure which delyuered thē, namely, ‡ Athniel y sonne of Kenas, Calebs yongest brother. And the sprete of the LORDE came vpon him, & he was iudge in Israel, & wente out a warre fare. And y LORDE delyuered Cusan Risathaim the kynge of Syria in to his hāde, so y his hande was to strōge for him. § Then was the londe in rest fortye yeares. And Athniel the sonne of Kenas dyed.

But the children of Israel dyd yet more euell before the LORDE. Then the LORDE strenghted Eglon the kynge of y Moabites agaynst y childrē of Israel, because they wrought wickednesse before y LORDE. And he gathered vnto him y childrē of Ammon, & the Amalechites, & wete and smote Israel, and conquered the ll cite of the palme trees. And the children of Israel serued Eglon y kynge of y Moabites eightene yeare. Thē cried they vnto the LORDE. And the LORDE raysted thē vp a sauioure, namely Ehud the sonne of Gera y sonne of Iemini, which was a man that mighte do nothinge with his righte hande.

And whā the childrē of Israel sent a present by him vnto Eglon the kynge of the Moabites, Ehud made him a two edged dagger of a spanne longe, & gyrded it vnder his garment vpo his righte thye, & broughte y present vnto Eglon the kynge of y Moabites. As for Eglon, he was a very fat man.

And whan he had delyuered the presente, © he let the people go that had caried the present, and he himselfe turned backe from the Idols at Gilgall, & caused to saye thus (vnto the kynge:) I haue a secrete thinge to tell the O kynge. And he commaunded to kepe sylence, & all they that stode aboute him, wente out from him.

And Ehud came in vnto him. He sat in a syled Sommer perler, which was for him selfe alone. And Ehud saide: I haue somwhat to saye vnto the of God. Thē rose he vp fro his seate. But Ehud put forth his lesfe hande, & toke the dagger from his righte thye, & thrust it in to his bely, so y the hefte wente in also after the blade, & the fatt closed the hefte: for he drue not y dagger out of his bely, & y fylthines departed fro him. But Ehud gat him out at the backe dore, & put to y dore after him, and lockte it.

Now whan he was gone, his seruantes came in, and sawe that the dore of the Sommer perler was lockte, and they sayde: peradventure he is gone to the preuie in the syled Sommer perler.

As for Ehud, he was gotten awaye, whyle they made so longe tariège, & he wente ouer by the Idols, and ranne his waye vnto Seirath.

And whan he came in * he blewē f̃ trumpet vpō mount Ephraim, and the children of Israel wente with him from the mount, and he before them, and he saide vnto them: Folowe me, for the LORDE hath delyuered the Moabites youre enemies in to youre hande. And they folowed him, & wanne f̃ ferye of Iordane, f̃ goeth towarde Moab, & suffred no man to go ouer, and at f̃ same tyme they smote of the Moabites vpō a ten thousande men, all nobles and men of armes, so that there escaped not one. Thus were the Moabites broughte vnder the hande of the children of Israel at that tyme, and the londe was in rest foure score yeares.

Afterwarde was † Samgar f̃ sonne of Anath, which slewe sixe hundred Philistynes with an oxes gadd, and delyuered Israel also.

The iij. Chapter.

A BUT the children of Israel dyd yet more euell before f̃ LORDE, whan Ehud was dead. And the LORDE solde thē in to the hande of Iabin the kynge of the Cananites, which dwelt at Hazor, & the chefe captayne of his hooste was Sissera, and he dwelt at Haroseth of the Heythen. And the childrē of Israel cried vnto the LORDE: for he had nyne hūdreth yron charettes, and subdued the children of Israel by violence twentye yeare.

At f̃ same tyme was Iudgesse in Israel the prophetisse Debbora, the wyfe of Lapidoth, and she dwelt vnder f̃ palme of Debbora betwene Rama & Bethel, vpon mount Ephraim, and the children of Israel came vp vnto her to the lawe. She sent forth, & called for Barak the sonne of Abi Noam of Kedes Nephtali, and sayde vnto him: Hath not f̃ LORDE the God of Israel cōmaunded the: Go thy waye, and get the vp vnto mount Thabor, & take with the ten thousande men of the children of Nephtali & Zabulon? For I wil make Sissera the chefe captayne of Iabins hoost to come to the vnto f̃ f̃ water of Cyson, with his charettes and with his multitude, and I wyll delyuere him in to thy hande. Barak sayde vnto her: Yf thou wilt come with me, I wil go: but yf thou wilt not come with me, I wil not go.

She sayde: I wyll go with the: neuerthelesse the prayse shal not be thine in this iourney that thou goest, but f̃ LORDE shal delyuere Sissera in to a womāns hande. So Debbora gat hir vp, and wente with Barak vnto Kedes. Then Barak called Zabulon and Nephtali vnto Kedes, and wēte on fote with ten thousande men. And Debbora wente with him also. As for Heber the Kenyte he was departed from the Kenytes from the children of ‖ Hobab Moses brother in lawe, and had pitched his tent by f̃ Oke of Zaanaim besyde Kedes.

Then was it tolde Sissera, f̃ Barak the sonne of Abi Noā, was gone vp vnto moũt Thabor: & he gathered all his charettes together, nyne C. yron charettes, & all the people f̃ was with him from Haroseth of the Heythē, vnto the water Cyson. Debbora sayde vnto Barak: Vp, this is the daie wherin the LORDE hath delyuered Sissera in to thy hande: for f̃ LORDE shal go forth before f̃. So Barak wente for mount Thabor, and f̃ ten thousande men after him.

But the LORDE discomfited Sissera with all his charettes & hoost, & made thē afrayed of the edge of the swerde before Barak, so f̃ Sissera leapt of his charet, & fled on fote. Neuerthelesse Barak folowed vpon the charettes & the hoost vnto Haroseth of the Heythen, & all Sisseras hoost fell thorow f̃ edge of the swerde, so f̃ not one escaped. As for Sissera, he fled on fote vnto the tente of Iael, f̃ wife of Heber f̃ Kenite. For there was peace betwene kynge Iabin at Hasor, & the house of Heber the Kenite.

Iael wēte forth to mete Sissera, & sayde vnto him: Turne in my lorde, turne in to me, & be not afrayed. And he turned in vnto her in to the tente, & she couered him with a garment. He sayde vnto her: I praye f̃ geue me a litle water to drynke, for I am a thyrst. ¶ Thē opened she a mylke pot, & gaue him to drynke, and couered him. And he sayde vnto her: Stōde in the tente dore, & yf one come & axe, is there eny man here? saye Noman.

And when he came in vnto her, he sawe Sissera deed, & the nale stickinge in his temples. Thus God broughte downe Iabin the kyng of the Cananites before the children of Israel at that tyme, & the hande of the children of Israel wente & subdued Iabin  $\hat{y}$  kyng of the Cananites, tyll they had roted him out. #### The bi. Chapter.

AND whan the children of Israel dyd euell in the sighte of the LORDE, the LORDE delyuered them vnder the hande of the Madianites vij. yeares. And whā the hande of the Madianites was to mightie ouer the children of Israel, the children of Israel made them clyffes in y mountaynes, and caues and holdes, to defende them selues from y Madianites. And whan Israel sowed eny thinge, y Madianites and Amalechites, and the children towarde the south came vp vpon them, and pitched their tētes agaynst them, and destroyed the increase of the londe downe vnto Gasa, ⁊ let nothinge remayne ouer of the beestes in Israel, nether shepe, ner oxen, ner asses. For they came vp with their cattell and tentes, as it had bene a greate multitude of greshoppers (so that nether they ner their camels mighte be nombred) and fell in to the londe, that they mighte destroye it. Thus was Israel excedinge small before the Madianites. Then cried the children of Israel vnto the LORDE.

But whan they cried vnto the LORDE because of y Madianites, y LORDE sent the a prophet, which sayde vnto thē: Thus saieth the LORDE the God of Israel: I caried you out of Egipte, ⁊ broughte you out of y house of bondage, ⁊ delyuered you from the hande of the Egipcians, ⁊ from the hāde of all them that oppressed you, and I haue thrust them out before you, ⁊ geuen you their lōde and sayde vnto you: I am the LORDE youre God. * Feare not ye the goddesses of the Amorites, in whose londe ye dwell: neuertheles ye haue not herkened vnto my voyce.

And there came an angell of the LORDE, ⁊ sat him downe vnder an Oke at Aphra, which belonged vnto Ioas the father of y Esrites, and his sonne Gedeon was throsshinge wheate in the barne, that he mighte flye awaye before the Madianites.

Then appeared vnto him the angell of y LORDE, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE with y thou mightie giaunte. But Gedeon sayde vnto him: Syr, yf the LORDE be with vs, wherefore is all this then happened vnto vs? And where are all the wonders, which oure fathers tolde vs, ⁊ sayde: The LORDE brought vs out of Egipte? But now hath the LORDE forsaken vs, and delyuered vs in to the hande of the Madianites.

The LORDE turned him vnto him, ⁊ sayde: Go thy waye in this thy strength, thou shalt delyuer Israel out of the hande of y Madianites. I haue sent the. But he sayde: My LORDE, wherewithall shal I delyuer Israel? Beholde, my kynred is the smallest in Manasse, ⁊ I am the leest in my fathers house? The LORDE sayde vnto him: I will be with the, so y thou shalt smyte the Madianites, euen as though they were but one man.

He sayde vnto him: Yf I haue fōūde grace in thy sighte, then make me a token, that it is thou, which speakest with me: go not awaye, tyll I come to y, and brynge a meat-offerynge, to set before the. He sayde: I wyll tary, tyll thou cōmest agayne. And Gedeon wēte, and made ready a kydd, and an Ephā of vneuended floure, and layed the flesh in a maunde, and put the broth in a pot, and broughte it forth vnto him vnder the Oke, and came nye. But the angell of God sayde vnto him: † Take the flesh and the vneuended bred, ⁊ set it vpon the stonye rocke that is here, and poure the broth theron. And he dyd so. Then the angell of the LORDE stretched out the staffe that he had in his hande, and with the ende of it he touched the flesh and the vleuended floure: *and the fyre came out of the rocke, and consumed the flesh and the vleuended floure. And the angell of the LORDE vanyshe out of his sighte.

Now whā Gedeon sawe that it was an angell of † LORDE, he sayde: "O LORDE LORDE, haue I thus sene an angell of † LORDE face to face? The LORDE sayde vnto him: Peace be with the, feare not, thou shalt not dye. Thē Gedeon buylded an altare there vnto † LORDE, & called it: The LORDE of peace. The same stondesth yet vnto this daye at Apra, † belōgeth vnto the father of † Esrites.

And in † same night sayde † LORDE vnto him: Take a fedd bullocke frō amōge thy fathers oxen, & another bullocke of seuen yeare olde, and breake downe the altare of Baall which is thy fathers, and cut downe the groue that stondesth by it, and buylde thou an altare vnto the LORDE thy God aboue vpon the toppe of this rocke, and make it ready, and take the other bullocke, and offre a burnt-offerynge with the wodd of the groue that thou hast hewen downe. Then toke Gedeon ten men of his seruantes, and dyd as † LORDE sayde vnto him: but he was afraied to do this by daye tyme, for his fathers house and the people in † cite, and so he dyd it by nighte.

Now whan the people in the cite rose vp early in the mornyng, beholde, Baals altare was broken, and the groue hewen downe by it, and the other bullocke a burnt-offerynge vpon the altare that was buylded, & one sayde vnto another: Who hath done this? And whan they soughte & made searche, it was sayde: Gedeon the sonne of Ioas hath done it. Thē sayde the people of † cite vnto Ioas: Brynge forth thy sonne, He must dye, because he hath broken Baals altare, and hewen downe the groue therby. But Ioas sayde vnto all them that stode by him: Wyl ye stryue for Baal? Wil ye delyuer him? He † stryueth for him, shal dye this mornyng. Yf he be God, let him auēge him selfe, because his altare is broken downe. From † daye forth was he called Ierubaal, because it was sayde:

Whan † Madianites now & † Amalechites, & the childre toward the south had gathered thē selues together, & were passed thorow (Iordane) & had pitched their tentes in the valley of Iesrael, the sprete of the LORDE endued Gedeon, & he caused the trompet to be blowne, & called (the house of) † Abieser, that they shulde folowe him: & he sent messaungers vnto all Manasse, & called them, † they shulde folowe him also: and he sent messaungers likewise vnto Asser & Zabulon & Nephtali, which came vp to mete him.

And Gedeon sayde vnto God: Yf thou wilt delyuer Israel thorow my hande, as thou hast saide, thō wil I laye a flese of woll in the court: yf † dew be onely vpon † flese, & drye vpon all the grounde, then wyl I perceaue, that thou shalt delyuer Israel thorow my hande, as thou hast sayde. And it came so to passe. And whan he rose vp early on the morow, he wrāge † dew out of the flese, and fylled a dyszshe full of water. And Gedeon sayde vnto God: † Be not wroth at me, that I speake yet this one tyme, I wyl proue yet but once with the flese, let it be drye onely vpon the flese, and dew vpon all the grounde. And God dyd so the same night: so that it was drye onely vpon the flese, and dew vpon all the grounde.

The vij. Chapter.

THEN Ierubaal (that is Gedeon) gat him vp early, & all the people that was with him, and pitched their tentes besyde the well of Harod, so that he had the hoost of the Madianites on the north side behynde the hyll of More in the valley. But the LORDE sayde vnto Gedeon: The people that be with † are to many for me to delyuer Madian in to their hande, lest Israel boost them selues agaynst me, and saye: My hande hath delyuered me. Cause a proclamacion now to be made in the eares of the people, and saye: † He that feareth, and is afraied, let him turne backe, and get him soone fro mount Gilead. Then returned there of the people aboute a two and twenty thousande so that there was left but ten thousande.

And he broughte the people vnto y water. And the LORDE sayde vnto Gedeon: Whosoer licketh of the water with his tūge, as a dogg licketh, make him stonde asyde and lykewyse who soeuer falleth downe vpo his knees to drynke. Then was the nombre of them that had licked out of the hande to the mouth, thre hundreth men. And the LORDE sayde vnto Gedeon: Thorow the thre hūdreth which haue licked, wyl I delyuer you, and geue ouer the Madiānites in to thy hāde: As for the other people, let them go euery one vnto his place.

And they toke vytayles with them for y people, and their trompettes: but the other Israelites let he go, euery one vnto his tente. And he strengthened himselfe with the thre hundreth men, and the Madiānites hoost laye before him beneth in the valley. And the same night sayde the LORDE vnto him: Vp, and go downe in to the hoost, for I haue geuen them ouer in to thy hande. But yf thou be afrayed to go downe, then let thy seruauunt Pura go downe with the vnto the hoost, y thou maiest heare what they saie: after that shalt thou be bolde, and thy honde stronge, that thou mayest go downe in to the hoost.

Than wente Gedeon downe with his seruauunt vnto y vttemost parte of y watchmē of armes y were in y hoost. And y Madiānites and Amalechites, and all the children of the south, had layed them selues beneth in the valley, as a multitude of greshoppers, and their Camels were not to be nombred for multitude, euē as the sonde on y see shore. Now whan Gedeon came, beholde, one tolde another his dreame, ⁊ sayde: Beholde, I haue dreamed a dreame: Me thoughte a bakē barleye lofe came rollinge downe to y hoost of y Madiānites: and whan it came to the tente, it smote it, and ouerthrew it, and turned it vpsyde downe, so that the tente fell. Then answered the other: That is nothinge els then y swerde of Gedeon the sonne of Ioas y Israelite: God hath geuē ouer the Madiānites with all the hoost in to his hande.

Whan Gedcon herde this dreame tolde, ⁊

the interpretacion of it, he worshipped, and came agayne in to the hoost of Israel, and sayde: Vp, for the LORDE hath delyuered y hoost of the Madiānites in to youre hāde. And he deuyded the thre hundreth men in to thre partes, and gaue euery one a trompet in his hande, and emptye pytchers, and lampes therin, and sayde vnto them: "Loke vnto me, and do ye euē so, and beholde, whā I come to the vttemost parte of the hoost, euen as I do, so do ye also. Whan I blowe y trompet, and all that are with me, then shal ye blowe y trōpettes also rounde aboute all the hoost, and saye: Here the LORDE ⁊ Gedeon. Thus came Gedeon and the thre hundreth men with him vnto the vttemost parte of y hoost (aboute the tyme whan the mydwatch begyneth) and waked vp the watchmē, and blew with the trompettes, and smote asunder the pitchers in their handes.

So all the thre companies blew with y trompettes, and brake the pitchers. But the lampes helde they in their lefte hande, and the trompettes in their righte hāde, so that they blew, and cried: Here the swerde of the LORDE and Gedeon. And euery one stode in his place aboute the hoost. Then ranne all the hoost, and cried and fled. And whyle the thre hundreth men blew the trompettes, y LORDE broughte it so to passe, that *euery mans swerde in all y hoost was agaynst another, and the hoost fled vnto Bethsitha Zereratha, and vnto the border of the playne of Mehohab besyde Tabath. And y men of Israel of Nephtali, of Asser, ⁊ of Manasse cried, and folowed vpon the Madiānites.

And Gedeon sent messaungers vp vnto all mount Ephraim, sayenge: Come downe against the Madiānites, and stoppe the water from them vnto Beth Bara and Iordane. And then cryed all they that were of Ephraim, and stoppde the water from them vnto Bethbara and Iordane, and toke two prynces of the Madiānites Oreb and Zeb, and slewe Oreb vpon the rocke of Oreb, and Zeb in the wynepresse of Zeb, and folowed vpon the Madiānites, and broughte the heades of Oreb and Zeb, vnto Gideon ouer Iordane.

Whā he had sayde this, their blast was swaged from him.

Now whan Gedeon came vnto Iordane, he wente ouer with the thre hundred mē that were with him, and they were weery, and folowed vpon their chace. And he sayde vnto the men of Sucoth: I praye you geue the people that are with me, some loaues of bred (for they are weery) that I maye folowe vpon Zebea and Salmana the kinges of the Madianites.

But the rulers of Sucoth sayde: Are the handes of Zebea and Salmana in thy handes already, that we must geue bred vnto thy men of warre? Gedeon sayde: Well, whan the LORDE delynereth Zebea and Salmana in to my hāde, I wyll threshs he youre flesh with thornes of the wyldernes and with breares. And from thence he wente vp vnto Penuel, and spake euen so vnto them. And the mē of Penuel gaue him like answer as they of Sucoth. And he sayde also vnto the men of Penuel: Yf I come peaceably agayne, I wil breake downe this tower.

As for Zebea and Salmana, they were at Karkar, and their hoost with them vpon a fyftene thousande, which were all that were left of the whole hoost of the children of the Easte: for there were fallen an hundred and twente thousande, that coulde drawe the swerde.

And Gedeon wente vp by the waye, where they dwell in the tentes on the east side of Nobah and Iakbeha, and smote the hoost, for the hoost was careless, and mystrusted nothinge. And Zebea and Salmana fled, but he folowed after them, and toke ſ two kynges of the Madianites Zebea and Salmana, and put all the hoost in feare.

Now whan Gedeon ſ sonne of Ioas came agayne frō the battayll out of ſ east, he toke a lad of the men of Sucoth, and examyned him, which wrote him vp the names of the rulers of Sucoth, and their Elders, euē thre score and seuentene men.

And he came to the men of Sucoth, and sayde: Beholde, here is Zebea and Salmana, cōcernynge whō ye laughed me to scorne, and sayde: Are the handes of Zebea and Salmana in thy hādes all ready, that we must geue bred vnto thy men which are weery? And he toke the Elders of the cite, and thornes out of the wildernes, and breres, and caused ſ men of Sucoth to be torne therewith. * And the tower of Penuel brake he downe, and slewe the men of the cite.

And he saide vnto Zebea and Salmana: What maner of mē were they whō ye slewe at Thabor? They sayde: They were euen like the, and goodly men, as yf they had bene a kynges childrē. He sayde: They were my brethren, euen my mother sonnes: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, yf ye had lettē them lyue, I wolde not slaye you.

And he saide vnto his first borne sonne Iether: Stonde vp, and slaye them. Howbeit the lad drue not out his swerde, for he was afrayed, for so moch as he was yet but a lad. Zebea and Salmana sayde: Stonde thou vp, and slaye vs, for as the man is, soch is also his strēgth. So Gedeon arose, and slewe Zebea and Salmana, and toke the ornamentes that were aboute their Camels neckes.

Then sayde certayne in Israel vnto Gedeon: Be thou lorde ouer vs, thou and thy sonne, and thy sonnes sonne, for so moch as thou hast delyuered vs from ſ hande of ſ Madianites. Neuertheles Gedeon saide vnto them: I wil not be lorde ouer you, nether shal my sonne be lorde ouer you, but the LORDE shalbe lorde ouer you.

Gedeon sayde vnto them: One thinge I desyre of you, Euery man geue me the earinge that he hath spoyled. (For in so moch as ſ men were Ismaelites, they had earinges.) They sayde: Them wyll we geue the. And they spred out a cloth, and euery man cast the earinge theron that he had spoyled. And the golden earinges which he requyred, had in weight, a thousande and seuen hundred Sycles of Golde, besyde the spanges and cheynes, and scarlet rayment which the kynges of the Madianites dyd weere, and besyde the neckbandes of their Camels. cite at Aphra. And all Israel wente there a whoringe after it, and it turned to an occasion of fallinge vnto Gedeon and his house.

Thus were  $\text{f}$  Madianites brought downe before the children of Israel, and lifte vp their heade nomore: and the londe was in rest fortye yeares, as lōge as Gedeon lyued.

And Ierubaal the sonne of Ioas wētē  $\text{t}$  dwelt in his house. "And Gedeon Had thre score  $\text{t}$  ten sonnes, which were come out of his thye: for he had many wyues. And his concubyne which he had at Sichē, bare him a sonne also, whom he called Abimelech. And Gideon the sonne of Ioas dyed in a good age,  $\text{t}$  was buried at Aphra in  $\text{f}$  sepulchre of his father Ioas the father of the Esrites.

But when Gedeon was deed, the childrē of Israel turned backe, and wente awhoringe after Baalim, and made a couenaunt with Baal Berith,  $\text{f}$  he shulde be their God. And  $\text{f}$  childrē of Israel thoughte not on  $\text{f}$  LORDē their God, which had delyuered them frō the hande of their enemies rounde aboute: and they shewed not mercy vnto the house of Ierubaal Gedeon, accordinge to all the good that he had done vnto Israel.

The ix. Chapter

ABIMELECH the sonne of Ierubaal, wente vnto Sichē to his mothers brethren,  $\text{t}$  spake vnto them,  $\text{t}$  to all the kynred of his mothers fathers house, and sayde: I praye you speake in the eares of all the men at Sichem: What is better for you, that thre score and ten men all children of Ierubaal shulde be lordes ouer you, or that one man shulde be lorde ouer you? Remembre also that I am youre bone and youre flesh.

Then spake his mothers brethrē all these wordes for him, in  $\text{f}$  eares of all  $\text{f}$  men at Sichem. And their hert enclined to Abimelech, for they thoughte: He is oure brother: and gaue him thre score and ten syluerlinges out of  $\text{f}$  house of Baal Berith. And with them Abimelech hyred men that were vagabundes and of light condicions, which folowed him. And he came to his fathers house vnto Aphra, and slew his brethren the children of Ierubaal,<sup>a</sup> euen thre score men and tē vpon one stone. But Iotham the yongest sonne of Ierubaal remayned ouer, for he was hydd. And all the men of Sichem, and all the house of Millo gathered them selues together, and wente and made Abimelech kynge by the Oke that stondesth at Sichem.

When this was tolde Iotham, he wente, and stode vpon the toppe of mount Grism, and lifte vp his voyce, cried, and sayde: Heare me ye men of Sichem, that God maye heare you also. \*The trees wente to anointe a kinge ouer them, and sayde vnto the Olyue tre: Be thou oure kynge. But the Olyue tre answered them: Shall I go and leaue my fatnesse (which both God and men commende in me) and go to be puft vp aboute the trees? Then sayde the trees vnto the fygge tre: Come thou and be kynge ouer vs. But the fygge tre sayde vnto thē: Shal I leaue my swetnes and my good frute, and go to be puft vp aboute the trees? Then sayde the trees vnto the vyne: Come thou and be oure kinge. But the vyne sayde vnto them: Shal I leaue my swete wyne, which reioyseth God and men, and go to be puft vp aboute the trees? Thē sayde all the trees vnto the thorne buszshe: Come thou, and be kynge ouer vs. And the thorne buszshe sayde vnto the trees: Yf it be true,  $\text{f}$  ye anoynte me to be kynge ouer you, thē come, and put youre trust vnder my shadowe. Yf no, then go fyre out of the thorne buszshe,  $\text{t}$  cōsume  $\text{f}$  Ceder trees of Libanō.

Yf ye haue done right now and iustly,  $\text{f}$  ye haue made Abimelech to be kynge: and yf ye haue done well vnto Ierubaal and to his house, and haue done vnto him as he deserued vnto you. Which (euen his father) foughte for youre sakes, and ioperde his lyfe, to delyuer out of the Madianites hāde, euē you, which are rysen vp this daye agaynst my fathers house,  $\text{t}$  haue slaine his childrē, thre score personnes  $\text{t}$  ten vpon one stone, and haue made you a kynge (euen Abimelech the sonne of his handmaide) ouer the men at Sichem, for so moch as he is youre brother.

Yf ye haue done right now and iustly vnto Ierubaal and his house this daye, then reioyse ouer Abimelech, and let him reioyse ouer you. Yf no, then go fyre out from Abimelech, and cōsume the men of Sichem and the house of Millo: And fyre go out also frō the men of Sichem, from the house of Millo, and consume Abimelech. And Iothā (whan he had spoken this out) fled, and gat him out of the waye, and wente vnto Ber, and dwelt there because of his brother Abimelech.

Now whan Abimelech had reigned three yeaere ouer Israel, *God sent an euell mynde betwene Abimelech and the men of Sichem (for the men of Sichem despyed Abimelech), and rehearsed the wronge done to the sonnes of Ierubaal, and their bloude, and layed it vpon Abimelech their brother which slewe them, and vpon the men of Sichem that strengthed his hande therto, that he mighte slaye his brethren.

And the men of Sichem set an hynder watch vpon the toppes of the mountaynes, and spoyled all them that walked nye them by the waye, and it was tolde Abimelech. But there came Gaal the sonne of Ebed and his brethren, and entred in to Sichem, and the men of Sichem put their trust in him, and wete out in to the felde, and gathered their vnyardes, and pressed them, and made a daunce, and wente in to their gods house, and ate and dranke, and cursed Abimelech.

And Gaal & sonne of Ebed sayde: Who is Abimelech? and what is Sichem, that we shulde serue him? Is he not the sonne of Ierubaal, and hath set Sebul his seruaut ouer the men of †Hemor the father of Sichem? Wherefore shulde we serue him? Wolde God the people were vnder my hãde, & I mighte put downe Abimelech.

And it was tolde Abimelech: Increase thine hooste, and departe. For Sebul the chefe ruler of the cite, whan he herde the wordes of Gaal & sonne of Ebed, he was wroth fully displeased, and sente message secretly to Abimelech, and caused to saye vnto him: Beholde, Gaal the sonne of Ebed and his brethren are come to Sichem, and make the cite to be agaynst the.

Arise therefore by nyght, thou and thy people that is with the, and laye wayte for thẽ in the felde: and tomorow whan the Sonne aryseth, get the vp soone, and fall vpon the cite: and yf he and the people that is with him come out vnto the, thẽ deale with him, as thyne hande fyndeth.

Abimelech stode vp by nyght, and all the people that was with him, and layed wayte for Sichem with foure companies of men of warre. And Gaal the sonne of Ebed wete out and stode at the dore of the gate of the cite.

But Abimelech gat him vp out of the hinder watch, and the people that was with him. Now whan Gaal sawe the people, he sayde vnto Sebul: Beholde, there commeth a people downe from the toppe of & mount. Sebul saide vnto him: Thou seist & shadowe of the mountaines as though they were mē. Gaal spake yet more and sayde: Beholde, there commeth a people downe from & myddes of the londe, & one bonde of men cōmeth by the waye to & witch Oke. Thẽ sayde Sebul: Where is now thy mouth & sayde: Who is Abimelech, that we shulde serue him? Is not this & people, whom thou hast refused? Go forth now, and fighte with him.

Gaal wente forth before the citesyns of Sichem, and foughte with Abimelech. But Abimelech chased him, so that he fled, and there fell many slayne euen vnto the gate of the cite. And Abimelech abode at Aruma. But Sebul droue awaye Gaal and his brethren, so that they must not remayne at Sichem. Vpon the morowe wente the people forth in to & felde. Whā this was tolde Abimelech, he toke the people, and parted them in to thre bōdes of men, and wayted for thẽ in the felde. Now whan he sawe & the people wete out of the cite, he rose agaynst thẽ, and smote them.

Abimelech and & company of men that was with him, fell vpon them, and stepte vnto the dore of the porte: but the other two companies fell vpon all them that were in the felde, and slewe them. Thẽ foughte Abimelech agaynst the cite all & same daye, and wanne it, and slewe the people that was there in, and brake downe & cite, and sowed salt thereon.

Whan all the men of the tower of Sichem herde this, they wente in to a stronge holde of & house of their God Berith. But whan Abimelech herde, that all the men of the tower of Sichem had gathered thẽ selues together, he wente vp vnto mount Zelmon, and all the people that was with him, and toke an axe in his hãde, and hewed downe a braunch of a tre, and toke it vp, & layed it vpon his shulder, and sayde vnto all the people that was with him: † As ye haue sene me do, make ye haist, and do euen so as I. Then all the people hewed downe euery one a braunch, and folowed Abimelech: and they layed them to the holde, and set fyre vpon them agaynst them and the holde: and all the men of the tower of Sichem dyled thorow the smoke and fyre, vpon a thousande men and wemen.

As for Abimelech, he wete vnto Thebetz, and layed sege vnto it, and wanne it. But in the myddes of the cite, there was a stronge tower, vnto the which all the men and wemen, and all the citesyns of the cite fled, and shutt it after them, and clymmed vp to the toppes of the tower. Then came Abimelech vnto the tower, and foughte agaynst it, and came nye vnto the dore of the tower, that he might burne it with fyre. * But a woman cast a pece of a mylstone vpon Abimelechs heade, and brake his brane panne. Then Abimelech in all the haist, called the seruauant that bare his wapen, and sayde vnto him: Drawe out thy swerde, and kyll me, that it be not sayde of me: A woman hath slayne him. Then his seruauant thrust him thorow, and he dyled. When the Israelites which were with him, sawe, y Abimelech was deed, they gatt them awaye euery one vnto his awne place.

Thus God recompenced Abimelech the euell that he had done vnto his father, whā he slewe his thre score and ten brethren: like wyse all the euell of the men of Sichem, dyd God rewarde them vpon their heade: and so the t curse of Iotham y sonne of Ierubaal came vpon them.

The x. Chapter.

AFTER Abimelech there rose vp another sauoure in Israel, Thola a man of Isachar, and the sonne of Pua, the sonne of Dodo. And he dwelt at Samir vpō the mount Ephraim, and iudged Israel thre and twentye yere, and died, and was buried at Samir.

After him stode vp one Iair a Gileadite, and iudged Israel two and twentye yere, and had thirtie sonnes,† rydinge vpon thirtie asses foales: and had thirtie cities, whose names are Hauoth Iair (that is, the cities of Iair) vnto this daye, and lye in Gilead. And Iair dyled, and was buried at Camon.

But the children of Israel wrought wickednes in the sighte of the LORDE, and serued Baalim and Astaroth, and the goddesses of Siria, and the goddesses of Sidon, and the goddesses of Moab, and the goddesses of y children of Ammon, and the goddesses of the Philistines, and forsoke y LORDE, and serued him not. Then was y wrath of y LORDE fearce vpon Israel, and he gaue the ouer vnder the hāde of the Philistynes, and of the children of Ammō. And they vexed and oppressed y children of Israel eightene yere longe, all the children of Israel that were beyonde Iordane in the londe of the Moabites, which lyeth in Gilead. The children of Ammon also wente ouer Iordane, and fought agaynst Iuda, Ben Iamin, and agaynst the house of Ephraim, so that Israel was very sore troubled.

Then cryed the children of Israel vnto the LORDE, and sayde: We haue synned agaynst the, for we haue forsaken oure God, ⁊ serued Baalim. But the LORDE sayde vnto the childrē of Israel: Did not the Egipcias, the Amorites, the children of Ammon, y Philistines, the Sidonians, the Amalechites and Maonites oppresse you, and I helped you out of their hande, whan ye cryed vnto me? Yet haue ye forsaken me, and serued other goddesses? Therefore wyll I helpe you nomore. † Go youre waye, and crye vpon the goddesses whom ye haue chosen, let them helpe you in the tyme of youre trouble.

But the childrē of Israel sayde vnto the LORDE: We haue synned, do thou vnto vs what pleaseth the, onely delyuer vs at this tyme. And they put the straunge goddesses frō them, and serued the LORDE, And his soule had pytie on the mysery of Israel.

And the children of Ammon called them selues together, and pitched in Gilead: But the children of Israel gathered them selues together also, and pitched at Mispa. And y people of the chefest of Gilead sayde amōge them selues: Who so euer begynneth to fight agaynst the children of Ammon, shalbe heade ouer all them that dwell in Gilead.

The xi. Chapter.

I EPHTHAE a Gileadite was a valeaūt a man of armes, but an harlottes childe. Gilead begat Iephthae. But whan the wyfe had borne children vnto Gilead, and the same wyues childrē were waxē greate, they thrust out Iephthae, and sayde vnto him: Thou shalt not be heire in oure fathers house, for thou art another womāns sonne. Thē fled he from his brethrē, and dwelt in the londe of Tob. And there resorted vnto him vagabūdes, and wete out with him. And after a certayne tyrne foughte the children of Ammon with Israel.

Now whā the childrē of Ammon foughte thus with Israel, the Elders wente from Gilead to fetch Iephthae out of the londe of Tob, and sayde vnto him: Come, and be oure cap-
 33 tayne, and fight agaynst the children of Ammon. But Iephthae sayde vnto the Elders of Gilead: Are not ye they that hate me and haue thrust me out of my fathers house, and now come ye to me whan ye are in trouble?

The Elders of Gilead sayde: Therefore come we now againe vnto the, that thou mayest go with vs, and fighte agaynst the children of Ammon, and be oure capayne ouer all that dwell in Gilead. Iephthae sayde vnto the Elders of Gilead: Yf ye fetch me agayne to fighte agaynst the childrē of Ammon, and the LORDE deluyuer them before me shal I then be youre heade? The Elders of Gilead saide vnto Iephthae: The LORDE be hearer betwene vs, yf we do not as thou hast sayde. So Iephthae wēte with the Elders of Gilead. And the people made him heade and duke ouer them. And Iephthae spake all this before the LORDE at Misa.

Then sente Iephthae messaungers to the kyng of the children of Ammon, and caused to saye vnto him: What hast thou to do with me, that thou cōmest vnto me to fight agaynst my londe? The kyng of the childrē of Ammō answered Iephthae messaungers Because that Israel toke awaye my londe (whan they departed out of Egipte) from Arnon vnto Iabock, and vnto Iordane: geue it me agayne now therefore peaceably.

34 But Iephthae sent yet mo messaungers to ſ kyng of the children of Ammon, which sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth Iephthae: Israel hath taken no londe, nether from the Moabites ner from the children of Ammon: for when they departed out of Egipte, Israel walked thorow the wyldernes vnto the reed see, and came to Cades, and † sent messaungers to the kyng of the Edomites, and sayde: Let me go thorow thy londe. But the kyng of ſ Edomites wolde not heare thē. They sent lykewyse vnto the kyng of the Moabites, which wolde not also. Thus Israel abode in Cades, and compased the lōde of the Edomites and Moabites, and came on the eastsyde of the londe of the Moabites and pitched beyonde Arnon, and came not within the coaste of the Moabites. † For Arnon is the border of the Moabites.

And Israel sent messaungers vnto Sihon the kyng of the Amorites at Heszbón, and caused to saye vnto him: Let me go thorow thy londe vnto my place. Neuertheles Sihon wolde not trust Israel to go thorow the border of his londe, but gathered all his people, and pitched at Iahza, and foughte with Israel. Howbeit the LORDE God of Israel gaue Sihon with all his people in to Israels hāde, so that they slewe them. Thus Israel conquered all the londe of the Amorites that dwelt in ſ same countre. And they toke possessiō of all the borders of the Amorites, from Arnon vnto Iabok, and from ſ wyldernes vnto Iordane. So ſ LORDE God of Israel drone awaye the Amorites before his people of Israel, and wilt thou cōquere them? Is it not so, yf thy God Camos gaue the oughte to possesse, woldest thou not possesse it? What so euer the LORDE oure God hath geuē vs before vs to possesse, that shal we conquere and take in possession.

Hast thou better right (thinkest thou) thē 35 ſ Balac the sonne of Ziphor, the kyng of ſ Moabites? Dyd he euer go to lawe or fighte agaynst Israel? Though Israel haue dwelt now vpō a thre hūdreth yeaere in Hesbón, and in the vyllages therof, in Aroer and in the vyllages therof, and in all the cities that lye by Arnon. Why dyd not ye rescue it at the same tyne? I haue not offended the, and thou doest me euell to fighte agaynst me. The LORDE geue sentence this daie betwene Israel and the children of Ammon.

Neuertheles the kyng of the children of Ammon wolde not heare ſ wordes of Iephthae, which he sent vnto him. Then came ſ sprete of the LORDE vpon Iephthae, and he wente thorow Gilead and Manasse, and thorow Misa which lieth in Gilead, and fro Misa that lieth in Gilead, vnto ſ children of Ammon.

And Iephthae vowed a vowe vnto the LORDE, and sayde: ¶ Yf thou wilt deluyuer the childrē of Ammon in to my hande, what so euer commeth (first) out at the dore of my house in my waye, whan I returne agayne peaceably from the childrē of Ammon, that same shalbe the LORDES, and I wyl offre it for a burntofferynge.

So Iephthae wente vpon the children of Ammon, to fighte against them. And ȝ LORDE gaue them in to his hande, and he smote thẽ from Aroer tyll thou comest vnto Minnith, euen twenty cities, and vnto the playne of ȝ vynyardes a very greate slaughter, and thus were the children of Ammon subdued before the children of Israel.

And whan he sawe her, he rente his clothes, ȝ sayde: Alas my doughter, thou makest my hert sorowfull, and discomfortest me: for I haue opened my mouth vnto the LORDE, and can not call it agayne.

C She sayde: My father, yf thou hast opened thy mouth vnto the LORDE, then do vnto me as it is proceded out of thy mouth, accordinge as the LORDE hath auēged the of thyne enemies the children of Ammon. And she sayde vnto hir father: Do this for me, geue me leue to go downe vpō the mountaynes two monethes, that I maye bewepe my virginite with my playfeeres. He sayde: Go thy waye. And he let her go two monethes. Then wente she with her playfeeres, and bewayled hir mayden heade vpon the mountaynes. And after two monethes she came agayne vnto hir father. And he dyd vnto her accordinge as he had vowed. And she had neuer bene in daunger of eny man. And it was a custome in Israel, that the daughters of Israel shulde go euery yere, and mourne for the daughter of Iephthae the Gileadite, foure dayes in the yere.

The xij. Chapter.

A ND they of Ephraim made insurrection, ȝ wente northwarde, ȝ sayde vnto Iephthae: *Wherefore wētest thou to the battayll agaynst the children of Ammon, ȝ hast not called vs, that we mighte go with the? We wil burne thy house and the with fyre. Iephthae sayde vnto thẽ: I and my people had a greate matter with ȝ children of Ammon, and I cried vpon you, but ye helped me not out of their handes. Now whan I sawe ȝ there was no helper, I put ȝ my soule in my honde, and wente agaynst the children of Ammon, and the LORDE deliuered them in to my hande. Wherefore come ye vp to me, to fighte agaynst me?

B And Iephthae gathered all the men in Gilead, ȝ foughte agaynst Ephraim. And the men in Gilead smote Ephraim, because they sayde: Ye Gileadites are as they ȝ fle awaye before Ephraim, (and dwell) amōge Ephraim ȝ Manasse. And the Gileadites toke ȝ ferye of Iordane from Ephraim. Now whā one of ȝ fugityue Ephraites dyd saye: Let me go ouer, ȝ men of Gilead sayde: Art thou an Ephraite? yf he answered: No, they bad him saye: Schiboleth, ȝ he sayde: Siboleth, ȝ could not speake it righte: then they toke him, ȝ slew him at ȝ ferye of Iordane, so ȝ the same tyme there fell of Ephraim two ȝ fortye M. Iephthae iudged Israel sixe yeares. And Iephthae ȝ Gileadite dyed, ȝ was buried in one of the cities of Gilead.

C After him iudged Israel one Ebzan of Bethleem, which had thirtie sonnes and as many daughters: and his thirtie daughters gaue he forth to mariage, and thirtie daughters toke he from without for his sonnes, and iudged Israel seuen yeaere, and died, and was buried at Bethleem.

After him iudged Israel one Elon a Zabulonite, ȝ he iudged Israel ten yeaere, ȝ was buried at Aialon in the londe of Zabulon.

After him iudged Israel one Abdō a sonne of Hillel, a Pirgathonite, which had fortye sonnes, ȝ thirtie neuies (ȝ which rode vpō seuentye Asses foales) and he iudged Israel eighte yeaere, and dyed, ȝ was buried at Pirgathon in the londe of Ephraim vpon the mount of the Amalechites.

§ Gen. 32. e. Exo. 3. c.

¶ Psal. 71. c. and 135. a. ¶ Exo. 33. d. Iud. 6. e.

B And when they came to the vynyardes of Thimnath, beholde, there came a yonge roainge Lyon against him. And the sprete of the LORDE came vpon him, and he rente him in peces, euen as a kydd is parted a sunder, and yet had he nothinge at all in his hāde, and he tolde it not vnto his father & his mother.

Now whan he came downe, he spake with the woman, and she pleased Samsons eyes.
 And after certayne dayes he came agayne, to receaue her, & wente out of ſ waye, that he mighte se ſ deed carcas of the lyon: and be-holde, in ſ lyons carcas there was a swarme of beyes, and hony: and he toke of it in his hande, and ate therof by the waye: and wēte vnto his father and to his mother, and gaue them to eate also. But he tolde them not, that he had taken the hony out of the lyons carcas.

C And whan his father came downe to the woman, Samson made a feast there, as the yonge men vsed to do. And whan they sawe him, they gaue him thirtie companyons to be with him. Samson sayde vnto them: I wil expresse a darke sentence vnto you, yf ye expounde me the same with in these seuen dayes of the feast, I wyll geue you thirtie shertes, and thirtie chaunge of raymente.
 But yf ye can not expounde it, then shall ye geue me thirtie shertes, & thirtie chaunge of rayment. And they sayde vnto him: Shewe forth thy ryddle, let vs heare it. He sayde vnto them: Meate wente out from the deuourer, and swetenesse from the mightie.
 And in thre dayes they coule not expounde
 the ryddle.

Vpon the seuenth daye they sayde vnto Samsons wife: Persuade thy huszbāde, that he tell vs what the ryddle meaneth, or els we shal burne the and thy fathers house with fyre.
 Hauē ye called vs hither, to brynge vs to pouerte? Then wepte Samsons wife before him, and sayde: Thou art displeased at me, and louest me not: thou hast expressed a darke sentence vnto the children of my people, and hast not tolde it me.

D But he sayde vnto her: Beholde, * I haue not tolde it vnto my father and mother, and shulde I tell it the? And she wepte before him those seuen dayes, whyle they had ſ feast.
 But on the seuēth daye he tolde it her, for she was so importune vpon him. And she expounded the darke sentence vnto the children of her people. Then sayde the men of the cite vnto him vpon the seuenth daye or euer the Sonne wente downe: What is sweter then hony? What is stronger then the lyon? But he sayde vnto thē: Yf ye had not plowed with my calfe, ye shulde not haue founde out my ryddle. And the sprete of ſ LORDE came vpon him, and he wente downe vnto Ascalon, and slewe thirtie men of them, & toke their spoyles, and gaue chaunge of rayment vnto thē, ſ had expounded the ryddle. And he was wrothfully displeased, & wente vp vnto his fathers house. As for Samsons wife, she was geuen vnto one of his companyons, which belonged vnto him.

The rb. Chapter.

IT fortunēd after certayne daies aboute the wheate haruest tyme, ſ Samson visited his wife with a kydd. And whā he thoughte,
 I wyl go to my wife in to the chamber, hir father wolde not let him in, and sayde: I thoughte thou wast displeased at her, and I gaue her vnto thy frende. But she hath a yonger sister which is more beutyfull then she, let ſ same be thine for her. Thē sayde Samson vnto thē: I haue once gottē a righte occasion agaynst the Philistynes, I wyl do you displeasure.

And Samson wēte and caught thre hun-dreth foxes, and toke fyre brandes, and festened one tayle to another, and put euer a fyre brande betwene two tayles, and kynled the same with fyre, and let them go amonge the Philistynes corne, and thus he brent ſ stoukes and the stondinge corne, and ſ vyn-yardes, and the olyue trees.

Then sayde the Philistynes: Who hath done this? And they sayde: Samson the husbāde of the Thimnites daughter, because he toke awaye his wife from him, and gaue hir vnto his frende. Then wente the Philis-tynes vp, and brent her and hir father also with fyre.

But Samson sayde vnto them: I can suffre you to do this, neuertheles I wyl be auēged vpon you my selfe, and then wyl I leaue of.
 And he smote them sore both vpō the shulders & loynes: and wēte downe, & dwelt in the stone clyffe at Etam. Then wente the Philistynes vp, and layed sege vnto Iuda, & pitched at Lechi. But they of Iuda sayde: Wherfore are ye come vp against vs? They answered: we are come vp to bynde Samson, & we maye do vnto him, as he hath done vnto vs.

Then wete there thre M. men of Iuda downe to the stone clyffe of Etam, & sayde vnto Samson: Knowest thou not that the Philistynes raigene ouer vs? Wherefore hast thou done this then vnto vs? He sayde: As they dyd vnto me, so haue I done vnto the agayne. They sayde vnto him: We are come downe to bynde the, & to delyuer & in to the hãde of the Philistynes. Samson sayde vnto the: Then sweare & promyse me, & ye wyll not slaye me. They answered him: We wyll not kyll the, we wil but bynde the, & delyuer the in to their hande, & wyl not slaye &. And they bounde him with two new coardes & caried him from the stone. And whan he came vnto Lechi, the Philistynes shouted, and rãne vnto him. But & sprete of & LORDE came vpon him, & the coardes aboute his armes were like thredes burnt in the fyre, so & the bondes were lowsed from his hondes.

And he founde the cheke bone of a deed asse: then put he forth his hande, and toke it, & slewe a thousande men therwith: And Samson sayde: With an olde asses cheke bone, yee euẽ with the cheke bone of an asse haue I slayne a thousande men. And whan he had sayde &, he cast & cheke bone out of his hande, & called the place Ramath Lechi. But whã he was sore a thyrst, he called vpõ the LORDE, & saide: Soch greate health hast thou geuẽ by the hãde of thy seruauent, but now must I dye a thyrst, & fall in to & hande of & vncircũcised. Thẽ God opened a gome tothe in & chekebone, so & water wete out: & whan he dranke, his sprete came agayne, & he was refrezshed. Therefore vnto this daye it is yet called & well of & cheke bone of him & made intercession. And he iudged Israel in the tyme of the Philistynes twẽtye yeare.

The xvi. Chapter.

SAMSON wente vnto Gasa, & there he sawe an harlot, & laye with her. Thẽ was it saide vnto the Gasites: Samson is come hither. And they compased him aboute, & caused to laye wayte for him prenelly, & watched all the nigte in the gate of & cite, & all that nigte they helde them styll, & sayde: Abyde, tomorew whan it is lighte, we wyll slaye him. But Samson laye vnto mydnighte, then rose he at mydnighte, & toke holde on both & syde portes of & gate of the cite, with both the postes, & lifte them out with the barres, & layed them vpon his shulders, & bare them vp to & toppe of & mount ouer agaynst Hebron.

After this he fell in to the loue of a woman by & broke of Sorek, whose name was Dalila, vnto whom the prynces of the Philistynes came vp, and sayde vnto her: Persuade him, and loke wherin he hath soch greate strẽth, & how we maye ouercome him, & we mighte bynde him & subdue him, so wyll we geue the euery man a M. and an C. syluerlinges. And Dalila sayde vnto Samson: I praye the tell me, wherin thy greate strẽth is, & how thou mightest be bounde to be subdued. Samson sayde vnto her: Yf I were bounde with seũe roapes of fresh senowes, which are not yet dried vp, I shulde be weake, and as another man. Thẽ the prynces of the Philistynes broughte vp vnto her seuen new roapes, which were not yet dried vp. And she bounde him therwith. (But there was wayte layed for him besyde her in the chamber) and she sayde vnto him: The Philistynes vpon the Samson. Neuertheles he brake the roapes in sunder, euẽ as a twyned threde breaketh, whan it hath catched the heate of the fyre. And it was not knowne wherin his strength was.

Then sayde Dalila vnto Samson: beholde, thou hast begyled me & dyssembled with me: tell me yet, wherwithall mayest thou be bounde? He answered her: Yf they bounde me with new coardes, wherwith no laboure hath bene done, I shulde be feble, & as another man. Then toke Dalila new coardes, & bounde him withall, and sayde: The Philistynes vpõ the Samson (but there was wayte layed for him in the chamber.) And he brake them from his armes, euen as it had bene a threde.

Dalila sayde vnto him: Yet hast thou begyled me & dessembled with me: O tell me yet, wherwithall mightest thou be bounde? He answered her: Yf thou playtest seũe hayrie lockes of my heade together in a fyllet, and fastenest them in with a nayle (I shulde be weake.) And she saide vnto him: The Philistynes vpõ the Samson. But he awaked out of his slepe, & drue out & playted hayrie lockes with the nale and the fyllet.

D The sayde she vnto him: How cast thou saye  $\hat{y}$  thou louest me, where as thine hert is not yet with me? Thre tymes hast thou disceaused me, and not tolde me wherin thy greate strength is. So whan she was euery daye importune vpon him with her wordes,  $\tau$  wolde not let him haue rest, his soule was faynte euen vnto the death,  $\tau$  he shewed her his whole hert,  $\tau$  sayde vnto her: \* There came neuer rasoure vpon my heade, for I am a Nazaree of God fro my mothers wombe. Yf I were shauen, my strength shulde departe fro me, so that I shulde be weake, and as all other men. Now whan Dalila sawe that he had opened all his hert vnto her, she sent  $\tau$  called for the prynces of the Philistynes,  $\tau$  sayde: Come yet once vp, for he hath opened his whole hert vnto me.

E The came the prynces of the Philistynes vp vnto her,  $\tau$  broughte the money with them in their handes. And she made him to slepe vpon hir lappe,  $\tau$  called one which shoue of the seuē hayrie lockes of his heade. And she beganne to vex him. Thē was his strength departed frō him. And she sayde vnto him: The Philistynes vpon the Samson. Now whā he awoke out of his slepe, he thoughte: I wil go forth as I haue done afore tyme,  $\tau$  ease my selfe,  $\tau$  knewe not  $\hat{y}$  the LORDE was departed from him. But the Philistynes toke him,  $\tau$  put out his eyes, and broughte him downe to Gasa,  $\tau$  bounde him with fetters, and made him to grynde in the preson. But the heer of his heade beganne to growe agayne, where it was shauen of.

F Whan  $\hat{y}$  prynces of the Philistynes were gathered together, to make a greate sacrifice vnto Dagon their god, and to be ioyfull, they sayde: Oure god hath delyuered Samson oure enemye in to oure hande. Like wyse whan  $\hat{y}$  people sawe him, they prayed their god,  $\tau$  sayde: Oure god hath delyuered in to oure handes oure enemye,  $\hat{y}$  destroyed oure londe,  $\tau$  slewe many of vs. Now whan their hert was ioyfull, they sayde: Let vs fetch Samson, that he maye make some pastyme before vs. Then fetched they Samson out of the preson,  $\tau$  he made pastyme before them. And they set him betwene two pilers. But Samson sayde vnto the lad  $\hat{y}$  led him by the hande: Let me touche the pilers wher vpon the house stondeth,  $\hat{y}$  I maye leane there vnto. As for $\hat{y}$  house, it was full of men  $\tau$  wemen. All the prynces of the Philistynes were there also, and vpon the rofe were aboute a thre thousande men and wemen, which behelde what pastyme Samson made.

But Samson called vpon the LORDE,  $\tau$  G sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thinke vpon me,  $\tau$  strength me but this once O God I beseke the,  $\hat{y}$  for both myne eyes I maye auēge me on the Philistynes. And he toke holde of  $\hat{y}$  two mydpilers, that the house stode vpon  $\tau$  was holden by, the one in his righte hāde,  $\tau$   $\hat{y}$  other in his lefte,  $\tau$  saide: My soule dye with the Philistynes,  $\tau$  he bowed him selfe mightely. Then fell the house vpon the prynces  $\tau$  vpon all the people that were therin, so that there were mo of  $\hat{y}$  slayne which dyed in his death, thē he slewe whyle he lyued. Then came his brethren downe and all his fathers house, and toke him, and caried him vp, and buried him in the graue of his father Manoah betwene Zarga and Esthaol. He iudged Israel twentye years.

The xviij. Chapter.

THERE was a man vpō mount Ephraim, A named Micha, which sayde vnto his mother: The thousande and hundreth syluerlinges which thou hast taken vnto the,  $\tau$  sworne, and spoken of before myne eares: beholde,  $\hat{y}$  same money is by me, I haue taken it vnto me. Then sayde his mother: The blessinge of the LORDE haue thou my sonne. So he gaue his mother the thousande  $\tau$  hundreth syluerlinges agayne. And his mother saide: That money haue I sanctified vnto the LORDE with my hande for my sonne, to make a molten ymage: therefore I geue it the agayne. Neuertheles he delyuered  $\hat{y}$  money agayne vnto his mother.

Then toke his mother two hundreth syluerlinges,  $\tau$  put them forth to  $\hat{y}$  goldsmith, which made a molten ymage,  $\hat{y}$  was afterwarde in Michas house. And thus the man Micha had a gods house,  $\tau$  made an ouerbode cote,  $\tau$  Idols, and fylled  $\hat{y}$  handes of one of his sonnes,  $\hat{y}$  he mighte be his prest.  $\dagger$  At  $\hat{y}$  tyme was there no kynge in Israel,  $\tau$  euery man dyd the thinge  $\hat{y}$  was righte in his awne eyes. There was a yōge man of Bethleem Iuda, amōge the kynreds of Iuda, and he was a Leuite, and was a straunger there. The same wente out of the cite of Bethleem Iuda, to walke whither he coulede.

C And whā he came vp to mount Ephraim vnto the house of Micha, to go on his iourney, Micha axed him: Whence comest thou? He answered him: I am a Leuite of Bethleem Iuda, and am walkynge where I can. Micha sayde vnto him: Tary with me, thou shalt be my father and my prest, I will geue the euery yeaere ten syluerlinges and thy appoynted raymēt, and meate and drynke: and the Leuite wēte on. And the Leuite agreed to abyde with the man: and he helde the yonge mā, as one of his owne sonnes. And Micha fylled the Leuites hande, that he mighte be his prest, and so he was in Michas house. And Micha sayde: I am sure the LORDE wyll do me good now, that I haue a Leuite to my prest.

The xviij. Chapter.

AT that tyme was there no kynge in Israel. And ſ trybe of ſ Danites soughte them an enheritaunce to dwell in, * for vnto that daie there was no enheritaunce fallen vnto them amonge the trybes of Israel. And the childrē of Dan sent out of their kynreds fyue captaynes (which were men of armes) from Zarga and Esthaol, to spye and search out the londe. And they sayde vnto them: Go' youre waie, and search out the londe. And they came vp to mount Ephraim in to ſ house of Micha, and taried there all nighte. And whyle they were there with Michas huszsholde, they knewe ſ voyce of the yonge man the Leuite, and sayde vnto him: Who broughte ſ hither? What makest thou here? and why woldest thou come hither?

33 He answered thē: Thus & thus hath Micha done vnto me, & hath hyred me to be his prest. They sayde vnto him: Oaxe at God, ſ we maye perceaue, whether oure iourney which we go, shal prospere well or not. The prest answered them: Go youre waye in peace, youre iourney ſ ye go, is before the LORDE. Then the fyue men wente their waye, & came vnto Lais, and sawe that the people which was therin, dwelt sure, euen as ſ Sidonians, at rest, and carelesse, and that there was no lorde in the londe to vexe them, and were farre from the Sidoniās, and had nothinge to do with eny man.

And they came to their brethrē to Zarga and Esthaol. And their brethren saide vnto them: How is it with you? They sayde: Arise, let vs go vp vnto them, for we haue sene the londe, ſ it is a very good londe: make haist therefore, & be not slacke to go, that ye maye come to take possession of the londe. When ye come, ye shall come to a carelesse people, and the londe is wyde: for God hath delyuered this place in to youre hande, where nothinge wanteth of all ſ is vpon earth.

Then wente there thence out of the kynreds of Dan from Zarga and Esthaol, sixe hundreth men ready wapened to ſ battayll, and wente vp, and pitched at Kiriath Iearim in Iuda: therefore called they the same place, ſ hoost of Dan, vnto this daye, which is behinde Kiriath Iearim.

D And frō thence they wēte vp vnto mouēt Ephraim, and came to the house of Micha. Then answered the fyue men that wēte out to spye the londe of Lais, & sayde vnto their brethren: Knowe ye not that in these houses there is an ouerbody cote, Idols, & molten ymages? Now maye ye lōke what ye haue to do. They departed thence, and came to the house of the yonge man the Leuite in Michas house, and saluted him frēdly. But the sixe hundreth men, which were of ſ children of Dan, stode ready harnesssed before ſ gate. And the fyue men that were gone out to spye ſ londe, wēte vp, and came thither, and toke the ymage, the ouerbody cote, & the molten Idols. In the meane whyle stode ſ prest at the gate, with the sixe hundreth readye harnesssed.

35 Now whā these were come in to Michas house, and toke the ymage, the ouerbody cote, and the molten Idols, the prest sayde vnto them: What do ye? They answered him: Holde thy peace, and laye thine hande vpon thy mouth, and go with vs, ſ thou mayest be oure father & prest. Is it better for the to be prest in one mans house, then amonge a whole trybe & kynred in Israel? This pleased the prest well, & he toke both the ouerbody cote, and the Idols, and the ymage, and came in amonge the people. And when they turned them and wente thence, they sent their children, and catell, and soch precious thynges as they had, before them.

37 When they were come farre now from the house of Micha, the men ſ were in Michas houses gathered the together by Michas house, and folowed the childre of Dan, and cried vpon the childre of Dan. They turned their faces aboute, and sayde vnto Micha: What ayleth the, the thou makest soch a crienge? He answered: Ye haue taken awaye my goddes, and the prest, and are goinge youre waie, and what haue I behynde? What is here? And yet ye saye vnto me: What ayleth the? But the childre of Dan saide vnto him: Let not thy voyce be herde amonge vs, that some wrothfull man thrust not at the, and so thy soule and the soule of thy house be destroyed. So the childre of Dan wete on their waye. And Micha, whan he sawe they were to stronge for him, turned backe, and came agayne to his house.

But they toke that Micha had made, and the prest whom he had, and came vnto Laish, to a quyet carelesse people, and slewe them with the edge of the swerde, and burnt the cite with fyre, and there was no man to deliuer them: for they laye farre fro Sidon, and had to do with no man. And they laye in the valley, which is besyde Beth Rehob. Then buylded they the cite, and dwelt therin, and called it Dan, after the name of their father Dan, whom Israel begat. And the cite was called Laish afore tyme.

And the children of Dan set vp the ymage for them, and Ionathan the sonne of Gerson the sonne of Manasse, and his sonnes were prestes amonge the trybe of the Danites, vnto the tyme they were led awaye captiue out of the londe. And thus they set amonge the the ymage of Micha, which he had made, as longe as the house of God was at Silo.

The xix. Chapter.

At the same tyme was there no kynge in Israel, and there was a man of Levi, which was a straüger besyde mouthe Ephraim, and had taken him a concubine of Bethleem Iuda to wife. And whan she had played the harlot besyde him, she ranne fro him to hir fathers house vnto Bethleem Iuda, and was there foure monethes longe. And hir husband gat him vp, and wente after her, to speake freely with her, and to fetch her againe, and had a seruauit and a couple of asses with him. And she led him in to hir fathers house. But whan the damsels father sawe him, he was glad, and receaued him: and his father in lawe, the damsels father kepte him, so that he taried three dayes with him: thus they ate and dröke, and remayned there all nighte.

But on the fourth daye he gat him vp early, and wolde go his waye. Then sayde the damsels father vnto his sonne in lawe: Refresh thine hert first with a morsell of bred, and then shal ye go. And they sat them downe, and ate and drouke both together: Then sayde the damsels father vnto the man: Oh tarye all nighte, we maie refresh thine hert. But the man arose, and wolde nedes go. And his father in lawe constrayned him to tarye all nighte. On the fifth daye in the mornynge he gat him vp, and wolde be gone. Then sayde the damsels father: I praye the comforte thine hert, and let vs tarye till the daye be farther past, and so they ate both together.

And the man gat him vp, and wolde go with his concubine and with his seruauit. But his father in lawe the damsels father, saide vnto him agayne: Lo, the daye is spent, and it begynneth to be euen, tarye all night: beholde, here is lodginge yet this daye, abyde here this night, it shal refresh thine hert: to-morrow by times get you vp, and go youre waye vnto thy tent. Neuertheles the man wolde not tary, but gat him vp, and wete his waye, and came ouer agaynst Iebus (that is Ierusalem) and his couple of asses ladde, and his concubine with him.

Now whan they were come nye vnto Iebus, the daye fell fast awaye. And the seruauit saide vnto his master: I praie you go on, and let vs turne in to this cite of the Iebusites, and tarye therin allnight. Notwithstandinge his master sayde vnto him: I wil not turne in to the cite of the aleauntes, that are not of the children of Israel, but I wyl go ouer vnto Gibeon. And he sayde vnto his seruauit: Go thou before, that we maye come to some place, and tarye at Gibeon or at Ramah allnight. And they wente on and walked, and the Sonne weite downe vpon the harde by Gibeon, which lyeth in the trybe of Ben Iamin: and they turned in there, they mighte come in, and tarye at Gibeon all nighte. But whan he came in, he sat him downe in the strete of the cite: for there was woman that wolde lodge them in his house that night.

And beholde, then came there an olde man a straunger at Gibeā: but ſ mē of that place

 he ſayde vnto him: Whither wilt thou go? ʒ whence cōmeſt thou? He answered him: We are goinge on oure iourney from Bethleē Iuda, vntyll we come beſyde mount Ephraim, whēce I am, and wente vnto Bethleem Iuda, and now I go vnto ſ houſe of ſ LORDE ʒ
 no mā wil harbarow me. We haue ſtrawe

ſ The olde man ſayde: Peace be with the:

 And he broughte him in to his houſe, and and ſayde vnto ſ olde man, which was the

*But the good man of the houſe wente forth to them, and ſayde vnto them: Oh no my brethren, do not ſo wickedly, conſideringe

 Then toke ſ man his concubine and broughte

ſ Then came the woman early in the morn-vp in the mornynge, and opened the dore of the houſe, and wente forth to go on his journey, beholde, his concubine laye at the dore of the houſe, and hir handes vpon the tres-holde. He ſaide vnto her: ſtonde vp, let vs go. Neuertheles ſhe gaue him no anſwere.

 Thē toke he her vp vpon his aſſe, gat him vp,
 and wente vnto his place.

Now whan he came home, he toke a ſwerde, and helde his concubine, and cut her with the bones and all in to twolue peces, and ſent them in to all the coaſtes of Iſrael. Who ſo euer ſawe it, ſayde: Soch a thinge hath not bene done ner ſene, ſence the tyme that ſ
 children of Iſrael departed out of the londe of Egipte, vnto this daye. Now as concernynge this, take youre advyſement, and geue youre counceill, and ſhew it forth.

The xx. Chapter.

THEN wente the children of Iſrael out ʒ
 and gathered a congregacion together as one man, frō Dan vntill Bersaba, and from the londe of Gilead vnto the LORDE to Miſpa: and there came together of all the quarters of the people, and of all the trybes of Iſrael in to the congregacion of the people of God, foure hundreth thouſande fote men that drue out ſ ſwerde. But the children of Ben Iamin herde, how that ſ children of Iſrael were gone vp vnto Miſpa. And the children of Iſrael ſayde: Tell vs, how happened this euell?

Then answered the Leuite the huſzbande of the woman that was ſlayne, and ſayde: I came to Gibeā in Ben Iamin with my concu-byne, to tary there allnight, then the cytesius of Gibeā gat them vp agaynst me, and compaſed me aboute in the houſe by night, and thoughte to ſlaye me, and defyled my cōcubyne, ſo that ſhe dyed: then toke I my cōcubyne, and cut her in peces, and ſent the peces in to euery countre of the inheritaunce of Iſrael: for they haue done an abhominacion and folye in Iſrael. Beholde, here are ye children of Iſrael: aduſe you well, and take this matter in hande.

So all the people gat them vp as one mā, ʒ and ſayde: Nomā ſhal go in to his tente, ner departe to his houſe, but this wil we do now agaynst Gibeā: Let vs caſt lot, and take ten men of an hundreth, and an hundreth of a thouſande, and a thouſande of ten thouſande, out of all ſ trybes of Iſrael, ſ they maie take fode for ſ people, to come ʒ do with Gibeā Ben Iamin, acordynge to their folye which they haue done in Iſrael. Thus all the men of Israel beyng confederate, gathered them selues together as one man vnto the cite: and the trybes of Israel sent men vnto all the kindreds of Ben Iamin, and caused to saye vnto them: What maner of wickydues is this, that is done amonge you? Delyuer here therfore the men the children of Belial at Gibeā, that we maye put them to death, and do awaye the euell out of Israel. Neuertheles the children of Ben Iamin wolde not folowe the voyce of their brethren the children of Israel, but gathered them selues out of ʒ cities vnto Gibeā, to go forth in battayll agaynst the children of Israel.

C And the same daye were there nombred of the children of Ben Iamin out of the cities, sixe and twentye thousande men, that drue the swerde, beside the citesyns of Gibeā of whom there were tolde seuē hundreth chosen men. And amōge all this people there were chosen out seuē hundreth men, which vsed not the right hande but the lefte, and yet with the slyng coulde they touch an heer, and not mysse. But the men of Israel, beside them of Bē Iamin, were nōbred foure hūdreth thousande, which drue the swerde, ʒ were all men of armes. And the children of Israel arose, and wente vp to the house of God (in Silo) and axed at God, and sayde: Who shall go vp for vs to beginne the battayll with ʒ children of Ben Iamin? The LORDE saide: Iuda shall begynne.

So the children of Israel gat thē vp in ʒ mornige, ʒ pitched ouer agaist Gibeā, ʒ euery man of Israel wēte out to fighte with Ben Iamin, and set them selues in aray to fighte agaynst Gibeā. Then fell the children of Ben Iamin out of Gibeā, and slewe the same daye amonge Israel two ʒ twentye thousande to the grounde.

D But the people of the men of Israel comforted them selues, and made them ready to fighte yet more in the same place, after they had prepared them selues the daye afore. And the children of Israel wente vp, and wepte before the LORDE vntyll the euenyng, and axed at the LORDE, ʒ sayde: Shall we go eny more to fighte with oure brethren the children of Ben Iamin? The LORDE sayde: Go vp vnto them. And whan the children of Israel gat them vp to the childrē of Ben Iamin on ʒ next daye, the Ben Iamites fell out of Gibeā agaynst them the same daye, and slewe yet eightene thousande of ʒ children of Israel to the grounde, which all drue the swerde.

Then wente all the children of Israel vp, and all the people, and came to the house of God, and wepte, and taried there before the LORDE, ʒ fasted that daye vntyll the euen, and offred burntofferings and deedofferings before the LORDE. And the children of Israel axed at the LORDE (the Arke of the couenaunt of God was there at that tyme, and Phineas the sonne of Eleazar the sonne of Aaron stode before him at the same tyme) ʒ they sayde: Shal we go forth eny more to fighte with oure brethren the childrē of Ben Iamin, or shal we leaue of? The LORDE sayde: Go vp, tomorow wyll I delyuer them in to youre handes.

And the children of Israel set a preuy watch agaynst Gibeā rounde aboute, and so the children of Israel wente vp to the children of Ben Iamin on the thirde daye, and set them selues in aray agaynst Gibeā like as the other two tymes afore. Thē came the children of Ben Iamin out agaynst the people, ʒ brake out of the cite, ʒ beganne to slaye certayne wounded of the people (like as the other two times afore) in the felde vpon two stretes: wherof one goeth towarde Bethel, the other vnto Gilead vpon a thirtiye men in Israel. Then thought the childrē of Ben Iamin: They are smytten before vs like as afore. But the childrē of Israel sayde: Let vs flye, that we maie prouoke them out of the cite in to the hye stretes.

Then all the men of Israel gat them vp from their place, and prepared them selues vnto Baal Thamar. And the hinder watch of Israel brake out of their place, from ʒ caue of Gaba, and came vnto Gibeā, twentye thousande chosen men out of all Israel, so that it was a sore battayll: but they knewe not that the euell shulde happen vnto them. Thus the LORDE smote Ben Iamin before the children of Israel, so that the same daye the children of Israel destroyed syue ʒ twentye thousande and an hundreth men in Ben Iamin, which all drue the swerde.

F For whan the childrē of Ben Iamin sawe that they were smitten, the men of Israel gaue them rowne (to flye). For they trusted to the watch, which they had sett by Gibeā. And the watch made haist also, ʒ brake forth vnto Gibeā, and wente vpon it, and smote all the cite with the edge of ſwerde. They were appoynted betwene them selues the men of Israel and the hynder watch, to fall vpon them with the swerde, whan the smoke of the cite arose. Now whan the men of Israel turned them in the battayll, and Ben Iamin beganne to smyte the wounded in Israel vpon a thirtie men, and thoughte, they are smytten before vs, like as in the battayll afore, then beganne there a piler of smoke to arise vp from the cite. And Ben Iamin looked behinde them: and beholde, the flamme of ſ cite wente vp vnto heauen. And the men of Israel turned them, and were feare vpon ſ men of Ben Iamin: for they sawe that the euell wolde happen vnto them.

And they turned them before the men of Israel in the waye to the wyldernesse, but the battayll folowed vpon them. And them of the cite destroyed they amonge them. And they compased Ben Iamin rounde aboute, and folowed vpon them vnto Menuah, and trode them downe tyll afore Gibeā eastwarde. And there fell of Ben Iamin eightene thousande men, which were all men of armes.

Whan the remnaunt of Ben Iamin sawe that, they turned them and fled towarde the wyldernesse vnto the stonye rocke of Rimō. But in the same strete they slewe fyue thousande men, and folowed vpon them vnto Gideom, and slewe two thousande of thē: and so there fell the same daye of Ben Iamin fyue and twenty thousande men which drue ſ swerde, and were all mē of armes. Onely sixe hundreth men turned backe, and fled towarde the wyldernesse vnto the stonye rocke of Rimō, and abode in the rocke of Rimō foure monethes. And the men of Israel came agayne to the children of Ben Iamin, and smote them that were in the cite with ſ edge of the swerde, both mē and catell and all that was founde: and what soeuer was foude in the cite, they cast it in to the fyre.

The xxi. Chapter.

THE men of Israel had sworē at Mispā, and sayde: Noman shal geue his daughter to the Ben Iamites to wife. And the people came to the house of God (in Silo) and abode there before God vntill the euenynge, and lifte vp their voyce, and wepte sore, and sayde:

O LORDE God of Israel, wherefore is this come to passe in Israel this daye? But on the morow the people gat thē vp early, and builded there an altare, and offred burnt-offeringes and deedofferynges.

And the children of Israel sayde: Where is there eny mā of the trybes of Israel, that is not come vp with the congregacion vnto the LORDE? For there was a greates ooth made, that who so came not vp to Mispā vnto the LORDE, shulde dye the deeth. And the children of Israel were sory for Ben Iamin their brother, and sayde: This daye is there one trybe lesse in Israel. How wyll we do that the remnaunt maye haue wyues? For we haue sworne by the LORDE, that we wyl not geue thē wyues of oure daughters. And they sayde: Where is there eny mā of the trybes of Israel, that is not come vp to the LORDE vnto Mispā? And beholde, there was not one man of the citesyns of Iabes in Gilead.

Then sent the congregacion twolue thousande men of armes thither, and commaunded them, and sayde: Go youre waye, and smite the citesyns of Iabes in Gilead with the swerde, the women also and the children, but so that ye do after this maner: *Se that ye damne all them that are males, and all the women that haue lyen with men. And amonge the citesins of Iabes in Gilead they foude foure hundreth damself, which were virgins, and had lyen with noman: those they broughte in to the hoost vnto Silo, which lyeth in the londe of Canaan.

Then sent the whole congregacion, and caused to talke with the children of Ben Iamin, which were in the stonie rocke of Rimō and called vnto them frendly. So the children of Ben Iamin came agayne at the same tyme, and they gaue them women which they had of the women of Iabes in Gilead, and founde no mo after that maner. Then were the people sory for Ben Iamin, that ſ LORDE had made a gappe in the trybes of Israel. And the Elders of the congregaciō sayde: What wil we do, that the remnaunt maye haue wyues also? for the wemē in Ben Iamin are destroyed, and they sayde: The enheritaunce of them of Ben Iamin that are escaped, must nedes remayne, that there be not a trybe destroyed out of Israel: and we can not geue them oure doughters to wiues. For the children of Israel haue sworne and sayde: Cursed be he that geueth a wyfe to the Ben Iamites.

And they sayde: Beholde there is a yearly feast of the LORDE at Silo, which lieth on the northsyde of the Gods house, and on the eastside of the strete as a mā goeth from Bethel vnto Sicheim, and lieth on the south side of Libona. And they commaunded the children of Ben Iamin, & sayde: Go youre waye, and wayte in the vynyardes. And whan ye se that the daughters of Silo go forth by cōpanyes to daunse, get you out of the vynyardes, and euery man take him a wyfe of the daughters of Silo, and go youre waye in to the lōde of Ben Iamin. As for their fathers and brethren, whan they come to lawe with vs, we wyll saye vnto them: Be fauourable to them, for they haue not taken thē in battaill: but ye gaue thē not vnto them by time, and it is youre faute.

The children of Ben Iamin did so, and accordinge to their nombre toke them wyues from the daunse, whom they caught by violence, and wente their waye, & dwelt in their awne inheritaunce, and buylded cities and dwelt therein. The children of Israel also gat them vp from thence at the same time, euery one to his trybe and to his kinred, and departed thēce, euery man to his awne inheritaunce. *At ȳ time was there no kynge in Israel, and euery man dyd ȳ thinge ȳ was right in his awne eies.

The first Chapter.

IN ȳ tyme whan the Iudges ruled, there was a derth in the londe. And there wente a mā from Bethleē Iuda to take his journey in to the londe of the Moabites with his wife and two sonnes, which man was called Eli Melech, and his wife Naemi, & his two sonnes, the one Mahelon, and the other Chilion: these were Ephrates of Bethleem Iuda. And whan they came in to the londe of ȳ Moabites, they dwelt there. And Eli Melech Naemis huszbande dyed, & she was left behinde with hir two sonnes, which toke Moabitish wyues: the one was called Arpa, the other Ruth. And whan they had dwelt there ten yere, they dyed both, Mahelon and Chilion, so that the woman remainyd desolate of both hir sonnes and hir huszbande.

Then gat she her vp with both hir sonnes wyues, & wente agayne out of the lōde of ȳ Moabites (for she had herde in the londe of

B the Moabites, ⁊ the LORDE had visited his people ⁊ geuen them bred) ⁊ so she departed from ⁊ place where she was, ⁊ both hir sonnes wyues with her. And as they wēte by the waye to come agayne in to the londe of Iuda, she sayde vnto both hir sonnes wyues: Go youre waye, ⁊ turne backe ether of you to hir mothers house: the LORDE shewe mercy vpon you, as ye haue done on thē ⁊ are deed ⁊ on me. The LORDE graunte you, ⁊ ye maie fynde rest ether of you in hir huszbādes house (whom ye shal get) and she kyssed them.

Then lift they vp their voyce, and wepte, ⁊ sayde vnto her: We wil go with the vnto thy people. But Naemi sayde: Turne agayne my daughters, why wolde ye go with me? How can I haue children eny more in my body, to be youre huszbandes? Turne agayne my daughters, and go youre waye, for I am now to olde to take an huszbande.

C And though I shulde saye: I hope this night to take an huszbande ⁊ to brynge forth children, yet coulde ye not tary till they were growne vp: for ye shulde be to olde, so that ye coulde haue no huszbandes. No my daughters, therefore am I sory for you, for ⁊ hāde of the LORDE is gone forth ouer me.

Then lifte they vp their voyce, and wepte yet more, and Arpa kyssed hir mother in lawe (and turned backe agayne) but Ruth abode styll by her. Neuertheles she sayde: Beholde, thy syster in lawe is turned backe vnto hir people and to hir god, turne thou agayne also after thy sister in lawe. Ruth answered: Speake not to me therof, that I shulde forsake the, and turne backe from the: whither so euer thou goest, thither wil I go also: and loke where thou abydest, there wil I abide also: Thy people is my people, ⁊ thy God is my God. Loke where thou diest, there wil I dye, and euen there wil I also be buried. The LORDE do this and that vnto me, death onely shal departe vs.

D Now whan she sawe, that she was stedfastly mynded to go with her, she spake nomore to her therof. So they wente on both together, till they came vnto Bethleem. And whan they were come in to Bethleem, the whole cite was moued ouer them, and sayde: Is not this Naemi? Neuerthelesse she sayde vnto them: call me not Naemi, but Mara: for the Allmightie hath made me very sory. I departed full, but the LORDE hath brought me home agayne emptye. Why call ye me then Naemi? whā the LORDE hath brought me lowe, and the Allnightie hath made me sory?

It was aboute the tyme of the begynninge of the barlye haruest, whan Naemi and hir sonnes wife Ruth ⁊ Moabitysse, came agayne from the londe of the Moabites vnto Bethleem. There was a kinsman also of ⁊ kynred of Eli Melech Naemis huszbande, whose name was Boos, which was an honest man.

The ij. Chapter.

A ND Ruth the Moabitisse saide vnto A Naemi: Let me go in to ⁊ felde, ⁊ gather eares of corne, after him, in whose sight I shal finde fauoure. She sayde vnto her: Go thy waie my daughter. She wēte on, ⁊ came ⁊ gathered after ⁊ reapers in ⁊ feld. And it fortuned that the same felde was the enheritaunce of Boos, which was of the kynred of Elimelech, and beholde, Boos came from Bethleem, and sayde vnto the reapers: The LORDE be with you. They answered: The LORDE blesse the. And Boos sayde vnto his youngman which had the ouersight of ⁊ reapers: Whose damsell is this? The yonge man that was set ouer ⁊ reapers, answered and sayde: It is the damsell the Moabitisse, which came agayne with Naemi from the londe of the Moabites. B And she sayde: Let me plucke vp and gather (I prae the) betwene the sheues after the reapers: and thus is she come, and hath stonde here euer sence the mornynge, and within a litle whyle she wolde haue bene gone home agayne.

Then sayde Boos vnto Ruth: Hearest thou my daughter? Thou shalt not come vpon another mans londe to gather, and go not awaye from hence, but tary with my dāsels, and loke where they reape in ⁊ felde, go thou after them: for I haue cōmaunded my seruantes that no man touch the. And yf thou be a thyrst, go thy waye to the vessell ⁊ drynke, where my seruantes drawe. Then fell she downe vpon hir face, and bowed hir self downe to the earth, and sayde vnto him: How haue I founde this fauoure in thy sighte, that thou woldest knowe me, which am yet a stranger?

C Boos answered and sayde vnto her: It is tolde me alltogether, what thou hast done vnto thy mother in lawe after thy huszbādes death, how that thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and thy natie countre, and art come to a people, whom thou hast not knowne afore. The LORDE recompence the thy doinge, and thy rewarde be perfecte with the LORDE God of Israel, vnto whom thou art come to put thy trust vnder his wynges. She sayde: let me fynde fauoure (syr) before thyne eyes, for thou hast comforted me, and spoken frendly vnto thy handmayde, where as I am not yet like one of thy handmaydes.

Boos sayde vnto her: Whan it is eatinge tyme, come hither, and eate of the bred, and dyppe thy morsell in the vyneger. And she sat hir downe besyde the reapers. And he set parched corne before her, and she ate, & was satisfied, and lefte ouer. And whā she rose to gather, Boos commaunded his seruantes, and sayde: Let her gather betwene the sheues also, and do her no dishonestye: and cast of the sheues vnto her, and let it lye that she maye gather it vp, and se that noman reprove her for it.

So she gathered in the felde vntyll euen and she shaked out what she had gathered, and it was allmost an Ephā of barleye: and she toke it vp, and came in to the cite, and shewed hir mother in lawe what she had gathered. She toke forth also, and gaue her of that which was left, wherof she was satisfied. Thē sayde hir mother in lawe vnto her: Blessinge haue the man that hath knowne the, where thou hast gathered and laboured this daye.

She tolde hir mother in lawe by whom she had laboured, and sayde: The mans name, by whom I haue wroughte to daye, is Boos. Naemi sayde vnto hir daughter in lawe: The blessinge of the LORDE haue he, for he hath not lefte of to be mercifull vnto the lyuyng * and to the deed. And Naemi sayde vnto her: The same man belongeth vnto vs, and is oure nye kynsman. Ruth the Moabitisse saide: He saide morouer vnto me: Thou shalt resorte vnto my seruantes, tyll they haue made an ende of all my haruest. Naemi sayde vnto Ruth hir daughter in lawe: It is better my daughter, that thou go forth with his damself, lest eny man withstode the in another felde. Thus she kepte herselfe with Boos damself, so that she gathered vntill the barleye haruest and the wheate haruest was out, and came againe to hir mother in lawe.

The iij. Chapter.

AND Naemi hir mother in lawe sayde vnto her: My daughter, I wyll prouyde rest for the, that thou maiest prospere. Boos oure kynsman, by whose damself thou hast bene, casteth vp barleye now this night in his barne. Bathe thyselfe therfore, and †moffell the, and put on thy clothes, and go downe vnto the barne, so ȳ nomā knowe the, tyll they haue all eaten and drunken.

Whan he layeth him downe then to sleape, mark ȳ place where he lyeth downe, and come thou, and take vp the couerynge at his fete, and laye the downe, so shall he tell the what thou shalt do. She sayde vnto her: what so euer thou saiest vnto me, I wil do it.

She wente downe to the barne, & dyd all as hir mother in lawe had cōmaunded her. And whā Boos had eatē & dronke, his hert was mery, & he came and layed him downe behynde a heape of sheues. And she came secretly, and toke vp the coueringe at his fete, and layed hir downe. Now whā it was midnight, the man was afraied, and groped aboute him, and beholde, a woman laye at his fete. And he sayde: Who art thou? She answered: I am Ruth thy handmayden, sprede thy wynges ouer thy hādmayden: for thou art the nexte kynsman.

He sayde: The LORDES blessinge haue thou my daughter. Thou hast done a better mercy here after then before, ȳ thou art not gone after yonge men, nether riche ner poore. Feare not now my daughter: All ȳ thou hast sayde, will I do for the: for all the cite of my people knoweth, ȳ thou art a vertuous womā. Trueth it is now, ȳ I am a nye kynsmā, but there is one nyer then I. Tarye thou all-nighte. Tomorrow yf he take the, well: yf he like not to take ȳ, then wil I take ȳ my selfe, as truly as ȳ LORDE lyueth. Slepe thou tyll ȳ mornyng. And she slepte at his fete vntyll ȳ morow. And she rose vp or euer one coulde knowe another. And he thoughte thus: That no mā knowe now ȳ there hath come a woman in to the barne, and he sayde: Reach me the cloke ȳ thou hast on the, & holde it forth. And she helde it forth. And he meet her sixe measures of barleye, and layed it vpon her, & she wente in to the cite, & came to hir mother in lawe, which sayde:

How is it with the my doughter? And she tolde her all þ̃ the mā had done vnto her, & sayde: These sixe measures of barlye gaue he me, for he sayde: Thou shalt not come emptye vnto thy mother in lawe. She sayde: Abyde my doughter, tyll thou se what þ̃ matter wil growe to: for the man wilt not cease, tyll he brynge it to an ende this daye.

The iij. Chapter.

BOOES wente vp to þ̃ gate, and sat him downe there: & beholde, when þ̃ nye kynsman wente by, Boos spake vnto him, & sayde: Come & syt the downe here (and called him by his name.) And he came & sat him downe, & he toke ten men of the Elders of þ̃ cite, & sayde: Syt you downe here. And they sat thē downe. Thē sayde he to the nye kynsman: Naemi which is come againe frō the lōde of the Moabites * offreth to sell þ̃ pece of londe, þ̃ was oure brothers Eli Melech, therefore thoughte I to shewe it before thine eares, & to tell the: Yf thou wilt redeme it, then bye it before the citesyngs & before the Elders of my people: but yf thou wylt not redeme it, then tell me, þ̃ I maie knowe: for there is no nye kynsmā excepte thou, and I nexte after the.

He sayde: I wil redeme it. Boos saide: In the daye þ̃ thou byest the lōde out of þ̃ hande of Naemi, thou must take Ruth also the Moabitisse the wife of the deed, that thou mayest rayse vp a name to þ̃ deed in his inheritance. Thē sayde he: I can not redeme it, lest I happlye destroye myne awne enheritance. Redeme thou þ̃ I shulde redeme, for I can not redeme it. But this was an olde custome in Israel concernynge the redemyng & chaūginge, þ̃ all matters mighte be stable, the one put of his shue, & gaue it vnto þ̃ other: þ̃ was the testimony in Israel.

And the nye kynsman sayde vnto Boos: Bye thou it, & he put of his shue. And Boos sayde vnto the Elders and to all the people: Ye are witnesses this daie, þ̃ I haue boughte out of the hande of Naemi, all that belonged to Eli Melech, and all that was Chilions and Mahelons: And Ruth the Moabitisse Mahelons wife, take I to wife, + that I maye rayse vp a name vnto þ̃ deed in his inheritance, and that his name be not roted out from amonge his brethren, and out of the gate of his place: Of this are ye witnesses. And all the people that was in the gate with the Elders, saide: We are witnesses. The LORDE make the woman that commeth in to thy house, as Rachel and Lea (+ which both haue buylded vp the house of Israel) that she maye be an ensample of vertue in Ephrata, and haue an honorable name in Bethleem. And thy house be as þ̃ house of Phares (þ̃ whō Thamar bare vnto Iuda) thorow the sede, that the LORDE shall geue the of this damsell.

So Boos toke Ruth, and she became his wife. And whan he laye with her, the LORDE graunted her þ̃ she conceived, and bare a sonne. Thē sayde the wemen vnto Naemi: Praise by the LORDE, which hath not suffred a kynsman to cease from the at this tyme, that his name maye contynue in Israel: he shal restore thy life agayne, and prouyde for thine age. For thy sonnes wife which hath loued the, hath borne him that is better vnto the, then seuen sonnes.

And Naemi toke the childe, and layde it vpon hir lappe, and became the nurse of it, and hir neghbours gaue him a name & sayde: There is a childe borne vnto Naemi, and they called his name Obed. The same is the father of Isai, which is þ̃ father of Dauid.

This is þ̃ generacion of Phares. ¶ Phares begat Hesrom. Hesrom begat Aram. Aram begat Aminadab. Aminadab begatt Naasson. Naasson begat Salmon. Salmō begat Boos. Boos begat Obed. Obed begat Isai. Isai begat Dauid.

The first Chapter.

THERE was a man of Ramatham Sophim of mount Ephraim, *whose name was Elcana † sonne of Ieroham, ‡ sonne of Elihu, § sonne of Tohu, § sonne of Zuph, § was an Ephrate. And he had two wyues, § one was called Anna, § other Peninna. As for Peninna, she had children, but Anna had no childrē. And § same man wēte vp frō his cite †at his tyme, to worshippe and to offer vnto the LORDE Zebaoth at Silo. There were the prestes of the LORDE Ophni and Phineas, the two sonnes of Eli. Now whan it came vpon a daye that Elcana offred, he gaue partes vnto his wife Peninna, and to all his sonnes and daughters. But vnto Anna he gaue one deale heuely, for he loued Anna. Neuertheles †the LORDE had closed hir wombe, & hir aduersary cast her in the tethe with hir vnfrutefulnes, because the LORDE had closed hir wombe: thus dyd she euery yeaere, whan they wente vp to the house of the LORDE, and thus she prouoked her. So she wepte, and ate nothinge. But Elcana hir huszbande sayde vnto her: Wherfore wepest thou? and why eatest thou not? And wherfore is thine hert so greued? Am not I better vnto the then ten sonnes?

Then stode Anna vp, whan she had eaten and drunken at Silo. But Eli the prest sat vpon a stole by the poste of the temple of the LORDE. And she was full of heuynes in hir herte, and prayed vnto the LORDE, and wepte, and vowed a vowe, and sayde: O LORDE Zebaoth, yf thou wilt loke vpon the aduersite of thy handmayden, and thynke vpon me, and not forget thy handmayden, and wilt geue thy handmayden a sonne, I wil geue him vnto the LORDE all his life longe, *and there shal no rasoure come vpon his heade.

And whā she had prayed longe before † LORDE, Eli toke hede to hir mouth, for Anna spake in hir hert, hir lippes onely moued, but hir voyce was not herde. Then thoughte Eli she had bene dronken, and sayde vnto her: How longe wilt thou be dronken? Let come from the the wyne that thou hast by the. Neuertheles Anna answered and sayde: No my lorde, I am a soroufull woman, wyne and stronge drynke haue I not dronken † but haue poured out my hert before † LORDE. Counte not thy handmayden a daughter of Belial: for out of my heuy thoughte and sorow haue I spoken hitherto.

¶ Eli answered her, and sayde: Go thy waye in peace, the God of Israel shal graunte † thy peticion that thou hast desyred of him. She sayde: Let thy handmayden fynde fauoure in thy sighte. So the woman wente hir waye and ate, and loked nomore so soroufully: and on † morow they gat them vp by tymes. And whan they had worshipped before † LORDE, they returned, and came home vnto Ramatha.

And Elcana laye with Anna his wife, and the LORDE remembered her. And after certayne dayes, she cōceaued and bare a sonne, and called his name Samuel, for I haue desyred him (sayde she) of the LORDE. And whan the man Elcana wente vp with all his houszholde to offre sacrifice and his vowe vnto the LORDE at soch tyme as † custome was, Anna wente not vp, but sayde vnto hir huszbande: (I wil not go vp) tyll † childe be weened: then will I brynge him, that he maye appeare before the LORDE, and cōtynue there † for euer.

¶ Elcana hir huszbande sayde vnto her: Thē do as thou thynkest best, tary tyll thou haue weened him: but the LORDE perfourme that he hath spoken. So the woman abode, and gaue hir sonne sucke, tyll she weened him. And whan she had weened him, she broughte him vp with her, with thre bullockes, with an Ephī of fyne floure, and a bottell of wyne, and broughte him in to † house of the LORDE at Silo.

Neuertheles the childe was yet but yonge.

And they slewe a bullocke, and broughte the childe vnto Eli. And she sayde: O my lorde, as truly as thy soule lyueth my lorde, I am the woman that stode here by †, and made intercession vnto the LORDE, whan I prayed for this childe. Now hath † LORDE graunted me my peticion, which I desyred of him, therefore haue I geuen him ouer vnto the LORDE, as longe as he is lent vnto the LORDE. And they worshipped † LORDE there.

The ij. Chapter.

AND Anna prayed, and sayde: A My hert reioyseth in the LORDE, † my horne is exalted in the LORDE.

My mouth is opened wyde vpō myne enemies, for I am glad of thy saluacion.

There is no man holy as the LORDE, for without the is nothinge, and there is no cōforte like vnto oure God.

Let go youre greate boostinge of hye thynges, let go out of youre mouth that olde byworde: for the LORDE is a God † knoweth all thynges, † he hath set all workes in order.

The bowe of the mightie is broken, and the weake are gyrded aboute with strength.

They that were fylled afore, are solde for bred: and they that were hongrie, are satisfied: vntyll the baren bare seuen, and tyll she that had many childrē, was become weake.

† The LORDE slayeth, and geueth life: he ledeth vnto hell, and bryngeth out agayne.

The LORDE maketh poore and maketh riche: He bryngeth lowe and exalteth.

¶ He taketh vp the neady out of the dust, and lifteth vp † poore out of the myre, that he maye set them amonge the prynces, and to let them inheret the seate of honour: for the foundations and corners of the worlde are the LORDES, and he hath set the compase of the earth theron.

He shall preserue the fete of his sayntes, but † vngodly shal be put to sylēce in darrenesse. † For there is no mā that can do oughte of his owne power.

The LORDES enemies shal be put in feare before him, he shal thōder vpō thē in heauē.

The LORDE shall iudge the endes of the worlde, † shal geue strēghth vnto his kynge, † shall exalte the horne of his anoynted.

Elcana wente his waye to Ramath vnto his house. And the childe became the LORDES mynister before Eli the prest. But Elis sonnes were the childrē of Belial, and knewe not the LORDE, ner the dutye of the prestes vnto the people: but whan eny man wolde offre oughte, the prestes boye came, whyle the flesh was seethinge, and had a thre forked fleshoke in his hande, and thrust it in to the cauldron, or ketell, or panne, or pot: and loke what he drue forth with the fleshoke, that toke the prest therof. Thus dyd they vnto all Israel, which came thither vnto Silo.

Like wyse, or euer they burned the fatt, the prestes lad came, and sayde vnto him that broughte the offeringe: Geue me the flesh, that I maye roste it for the prest, for he wyl receaue no sodden flesh of ¶, but rawe. Yf eny man sayde then vnto him: Let the fat burne as it oughte to do this daye, and afterwarde take what thine hert desyreth, then sayde he vnto him: Thou shalt geue it me euen now: yf no, I wyl take it from the by violēce. Therfore was the synne of ¶ childrē very greate before the LORDE, for ¶ people spake euell of ¶ meatofferynge of ¶ LORDE. But Samuel was a mynister before the LORDE, and the childe was gyrded with an ouer body cote of linnen. His mother also made him a litle cote of sylke, and broughte it vp vnto him at cōuenient tymes, whā she wente vp with hir husbande to offer ¶ offeringe in due season.

And Eli blessed Elcana & his wife, and sayde: The LORDE geue the sede of this woman, for this good that thou hast lent vnto the LORDE. And they wēte vnto their place. And the LORDE vysited Anna, so that she cōceaued and bare thre sonnes and two daughters: but the childe Samuel grewe vp with the LORDE.

As for Eli, he was very olde, and herde of all that his sonnes dyd vnto all Israel, and how they laye with the wemen that serued God before the dore of the tabernacle of witnessse, and he sayde vnto them: wherfore do ye this? For I heare of youre euell conuersacion of all this people. Not so my childrē, this is no good reporte that I heare, ye cause the people of the LORDE to offende. *Yf eny mā synne agaynst a man, the iudge cā redresse it. But yf eny mā synne agaynst ¶ LORDE, who can redresse it? Neuertheles they herkened not vnto the voyce of their father, for the LORDES wyll was to slaye them. But the childe Samuel wente and grewe vp, & was accepted of the LORDE & of mā.

There came a man of God to Eli, and sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I shewed my selfe vnto thy fathers house, whan they were yet in Egipte vnder ¶ house of Pharaο, and chose him there vnto my selfe before all the trybes of Israel, for the prest-hode, that he shulde offer vpon myne altare, and burne incense, and weere the ouerbody cote before me, †and vnto thy fathers house I gaue all the offeringes of the children of Israel. Why layest thou thy selfe then agaynst my sacrifices and meatofferings, which I commaunded (to offer) in the habitacion: and thou honourest thy sonnes more then me, that ye mighte fede youre selues with the firstlinges of all the meatofferynges of my people of Israel?

Therfore sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: I haue spoken, that thy house and thy fathers house shulde walke before me for euer. But now sayeth the LORDE: That be farre fro me. But who so euer honoureth me, him wil I honoure also: as for those ¶ despyse me, they shal not be regarded. Beholde, †the tyme shal come, that I wyl breake thyne arme in two, and the arme of thy fathers house, so that there shal no oldman be in thy house. And thou shalt se thine aduersaries in the habitacion, in all the good of Israel, and there shal neuer be olde man in thy fathers house. Yet wyl I not rote out euery man of the fro myne altare, but ¶ thyne eyes maye be consumed, & that thy soule maye be sory: ¶ & a greate multitude of thy house shal dye, whan they are come to be men.

And this shalbe a token vnto the, that shal come vpon thy two sonnes Ophni and Phineas: "They shall both dye in one daye. ¶ But vnto my selfe I wyl rayse vp a faithfull prest, which shal do acordinge as it is in my hert & in my soule: vnto him wyl I buylde a sure house, that he maye allwaye walke before myne annoynted. And who so euer remayneth of thy house, shall come and worshipec him for a syluer peny and for a pece of bred, and shall saye: I praye the leaue me to one prestes parte, that I maye eate a morsell of bred.

AND whan the childe Samuel mynistred vnto the LORDE vnder Eli, the worde of  $\gamma$  LORDE was deare at the same tyme, nether was there eny sure  $\tau$  manifest vision. And it fortunēd at the same tyme, that Eli laye in his place, \*and his eyes beganne to be dymme, so that he coulede not se. And Samuel had layed him downe in  $\gamma$  temple of the LORDE (where the Arke of God was) before  $\gamma$  lampe of God was put out. And the LORDE called Samuel. He answered: Beholde, here am I. And he ranne vnto Eli,  $\tau$  sayde: Beholde, here am I, thou hast called me. But he saide: I haue not called the, go thy waye agayne, and laye the downe to slepe. And he wente his waye, and layed him downe to slepe.

The LORDE called againe: Samuel. And Samuel arose,  $\tau$  wente vnto Eli,  $\tau$  sayde: Beholde, here am I, thou hast called me. Neuertheles he sayde: My sonne, I haue not called the. Go thy waye agayne, and laye the downe to slepe. As for Samuel, he knewe not the LORDE as yet,  $\tau$  the worde of  $\gamma$  LORDE was not yet shewed vnto him. And  $\gamma$  LORDE called Samuel  $\gamma$  thirde tyme. And he arose,  $\tau$  wente vnto Eli,  $\tau$  sayde: Beholde, here am I, thou hast called me. Then perceaued Eli  $\gamma$  the LORDE called  $\gamma$  childe,  $\tau$  he sayde vnto him: Go thy waye agayne,  $\tau$  laye the downe to slepe: and yf the LORDE call the eny more, then saye: Speake LORDE, for thy seruauent heareth. Samuel wēte his waye, and layed him downe in his place. Thē came  $\gamma$  LORDE,  $\tau$  stode, and called like as afore: Samuel, Samuel. And Samuel sayde: Speake (LORDE) for thy seruauent heareth. And the LORDE saide vnto Samuel: Beholde, I do a thinge in Israel,  $\gamma$  who so euer shall heare it, both his eares shal glowe. In  $\gamma$  daie will I rayse vp vpon Eli  $\tau$  all  $\gamma$  I haue spokē cōcernynge his house. I will take it in hande,  $\tau$  perfourme it: for I haue tolde him,  $\gamma$  I wilbe Iudge ouer his house for euer, because of the wickednes,  $\gamma$  he knewe how shamefully his childrē behaued thē selues, and hath not once loked sowerly therto. Therefore haue I sworne vnto  $\gamma$  house of Eli,  $\gamma$  this wickednes of  $\gamma$  house of Eli shall not be recōcyled nether with sacrifice ner with meatoffringe for euer.

* 1 Re. 4. c. + 1 Re. 2. g.

And Samuel laye vnto  $\gamma$  morow,  $\tau$  opened the dores of the house of the LORDE.

But Samuel was afraied to tell the vysion vnto Eli. Then Eli called him  $\tau$  sayde: Samuel my sonne. He answered: Beholde, here am I. He sayde: What is  $\gamma$  worde  $\gamma$  the LORDE hath spokē vnto the? hyde it not fro me. God do this  $\tau$  that vnto  $\gamma$ , yf thou hyde oughte fro me, of all that he hath talked with the. Then Samuel tolde him all-together,  $\tau$  hyd nothinge from him. He sayde: It is the LORDE, let him do what pleaseth him.

Samuel grewe vp,  $\tau$  the LORDE was with him,  $\tau$  there fell none of all his wordes wpo the earth. And all Israel frō Dan vnto Bersaba, knewe  $\gamma$  Samuel was faithfull to be a prophet of the LORDE. And the LORDE appeared agayne at Silo: for the LORDE shewed him selfe vnto Samuel at Silo, thorow the worde of the LORDE.

The iiij. Chapter.

AND all Israel spake of Samuel. And Israel wente forth to the battayll against the Philistynes,  $\tau$  pitched besyde the  $\dagger$  Helpe stone: As for the Philistynes, they pitched at Aphek, and prepared them selues agaynst Israel. And whan the battayll beganne, the hoost was deuyded, so that Israel was smytē before the enemies,  $\tau$  in the edge in the felde they slewe aboute a foure thousande men. And whan the people came in to the hoost, the Elders of Israel sayde: Wherefore hath the LORDE caused vs to be smytten this daie before the Philistynes? Let vs take vnto vs the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt from Silo,  $\tau$  let it come amōge vs, that it maye helpe vs from the hande of oure enemies. And the people sent vnto Silo,  $\tau$  caused to fet thēce the Arke of  $\gamma$  couenaunt of the LORDE Zebaoth, that sytteth vpon the Cherubins. And with the Arke of the couenaunt of God there were the two sonnes of Eli, Ophni and Phineas.

And whan the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE came in to the hoost, all Israel shouted with a greateshout, so that the earth sounded withall. But whan the Philistynes herde  $\gamma$  noyse of  $\gamma$  shoute, they sayde: what noyse is this of such greateshoutinge in the tentes of the Hebrues? And whan they per-ceased y the Arke of the LORDE was come in to the hoost, they were a frayd & sayde: God is come in to the hoost. And they sayde morouer: Wo vnto vs, for it hath not bene thus afore tyme. Wo vnto vs. Who wil deliuer vs fro the hande of these hye goddes? These are the goddes that smote Egipte with all maner of plagis in the wyldernesse. Be stronge now and manly ye Philistynes, that ye serue not the Hebrues \*as they haue serued you. Be manly and fighte.

Then foughte the Philistynes, & Israel was smytten, & euery one fled vnto his tete, & there was a very greate slaughter, so that there fell of Israel thirtie thousande fotemē, & the Arke of God was takē, †& the two sonnes of Eli, Ophni and Phineas dyed.

Then rāne there one of Ben Iamin out of the fore fronte of the battayl, & came vnto Silo the same daye, & had his clothes rente, and had earth vpō his heade. And whan he came in, Heli sat vpon the seate, that he mighte loke toward the waye: for his herte was fearfull aboute y Arke of God. And whan the man came in to the cite, he tolde it forth: and all the cite cried. And whan Eli herde y noyse of the cryge, he axed: What noyse of busynes is this? The man came haistely, and tolde Eli. (As for Eli, he was fourescore and eightene yeare olde, †and his eyes were dymme, so that he coulde not se.) The man sayde vnto Eli: I come and am fled this daye out of the hoost. He sayde: How is it my sonne?

Then answered the tydinge bringer, & sayde: Israel is fled before the Philistynes, and a greate slaughter hath there bene amonge the people, & thy two sonnes Ophni & Phineas are deed, yee & the Arke of God is takē awaye. Whan he had made mencion of the Arke of God, he fell downe backwarde from the seate by the gate, and brake his neck, and dyed: for he was olde, & an heuy man. He iudged Israel fortie yeares. The wife of his sonne Phineas was with childe, & shulde shortly be deliuered, whan she herde the tydinges y the Arke of God was taken, and y hir brother in lawe and hir husbāde were deed, she bowed hir selfe and trauayled: for hir payne came vpon her. And whan she was now at the poynte of death, the women that stode by her, sayde: Feare not, thou hast a yōge sonne.

But she gaue no answer, nether regarded it, and she called the childe Icabod, and sayde: The glory is gone from Israel, because the Arke of God was taken awaye, and hir brother in lawe and hir huszbande. And she sayde morouer: The glory is gone from Israel, for the Arke of God is takē awaye.

The v. Chapter.

AS for the Arke of God, the Philistynes A toke it and broughte it from the stone of helpe vnto Aszdod in to the house of Dagon, and set it besyde Dagon. And whan they of Aszdod rose vp early on the morowe, they founde Dagon lyenge on his face vpon the earth, before the Arke of the LORDE. But they toke vp Dagon, and set him agayne in his place. Neuertheles whan they rose vp early on the nexte morowe, they founde Dagon lyenge on his face agayne vpon the earth before the Arke of the LORDE: but his heade and both his hādes hewen of vpon the threszholde, so that the block laie there onely. Therfore the prestes of Dagon, and all they that go in to his house, treade not vpō the threszholde of Dagon at Aszdod vnto this daye.

But the hande of the LORDE was heuy B vpon them of Aszdod, and destroyed them, and smote Aszdod and all the borders therof in secrete places. Whan the men of Aszdod sawe that they were so plaged, they sayde: †Let not the Arke of the God of Israel tary with vs, for his hande is to harde vpō vs & vpon oure god Dagon. And they sent forth and gathered all the prynces of the Philistynes vnto them, and sayde: What shal we do with the Arke of the God of Israel? Then answered they of Geth: Let the Arke of the God of Israel be borne aboute. And they caried the Arke of the God of Israel rounde aboute.

But whā they bare it aboute, there was C a very greate rumoure in the cite thorow the hande of the LORDE, and smote the people of the cite, from the smallest vnto the greatest, and destroyed them in the secrete places. Then sent they the Arke of the LORDE vnto Ekron. But whā the Arke of the LORDE came vnto Ekron, they of Ekron cried: They haue caried the Arke of God aboute vnto me, to slaye me and my people.

Then sente they forth, and gathered all y D prynces of the Philistynes together, and sayde:

* Iud. 13. a. † 1 Re. 2. g.

† 1 Reg. 3. a. § Deut. 32. e.

Sende awaye the Arke of the God of Israel agayne vnto hir place, that it slaye not me & my people: for there is a very greate rumoure with the deed in all the cite, and the hande of God is there. And the people that dyed not, were smytten in secrete places, so that the noyse of the cite wete vp vnto heauen.

The vi. Chapter.

THUS was the Arke of the LORDE in the londe of the Philistynes seuen monethes. And the Philistynes called their prestes and soysayers, and sayde: What shal we do with the Arke of the LORDE? Shewe vs, wher with shal we sende it vnto hir place? They sayde: Yf ye wyll sende awaye the Arke of the God of Israel, sende it not awaye emptye, but geue a trespass offeringe: so shal ye be made whole, and ye shal knowe, why his hande departeth not from you.

They sayde: What is the trespass offeringe that we shall geue him? They answered: Fyue hynder partes of golde, and fyue golden myce, acordinge to the nombre of the fyue prynces of y Philistynes. For there hath bene one maner of plage vpon you all, and vpon youre prynces. Therefore must ye make youre hynder partes of one faszshion and youre myce, which haue destroyed youre londe, that ye maye geue the God of Israel the honoure: peraduenture his hãde shal be the lighter vpon you and vpon youre God, and vpon youre londe. Why harden ye youre hert, as the Egipcians and Pharao hardened their hert? Whan he shewed him selfe vpon them* dyd not they let them departe to go their waye?

Go to now therefore, and make a new cart, and take two mylke kyne, vpon y which there neuer came yock, and yocke them to y cart, and let their calues tary behynde them at home: and take ye the Arke of the LORDE and laye it vpon the cart: and the Iewels of golde that ye geue him for a trespass offeringe put in a coffer beside it, & sende it awaye and let it go. And loke well: yf it go the waie of hir awne coaste Beth Semes, thẽ hath he done vs all this greate euell: Yf no, then shal ye knowe that his hande hath not touched vs, but y it is happened vnto vs by chaũce.

The men dyd so, and toke two yonge mylke kyne, and yocked them to a cart, and helde their calues at home, and layed the Arke of the LORDE vpon the cart, and the coffer with the golden myce, and with the ymages of their disease. And the kyne wente straight waye vnto Beth Semes vpon one hye strete, and wente on blearynge, and turned nether to the righte hande ner to the lefte. And the prynces of the Philistynes wente after them vnto y coast of Beth Semes.

The Beth Samites were euen reapyngne downe their wheate haruest in the valley, and lyfte vp their eyes, and sawe the Arke, and reioysed to se it. The cart came in to the felde of Iosua the Beth Semite, and there it stode styll. And there was a greate stone, and they claue the tymber of the cart, and offred the kyne vnto the LORDE for a burntofferynge.

But the Leuites toke downe the Arke of the LORDE, and the coffer that was by it, wherin the Iewels of golde were, and set thẽ vpon the greate stone. The men of Beth Semes offred burntofferynges, and other offeringes also vnto the LORDE the same daye. And whan the fyue prynces of the Philistynes had sene it, they departed agayne the same daye towarde Ekron.

These are the golden diseases, that the Philistynes offred for a trespass offeringe vnto the LORDE: Aszdod one, Gasa one: Ascalon one, Gath one, and Ekron one: and golden myce, acordynge to the nombre of all the cities of the Philistynes amonge the fyue prynces, from the walled cite vnto the vyllage, and vnto the greate playne felde, wher vpon they set the Arke of the LORDE (which was) vnto this daye vpon the felde of Iosua the Beth Semite.

And certaine of Beth Sames were slaine because they had sene y Arke of the LORDE, and he slewe fyfthe thousande and seuentye men of the people. Then mourned the people, because the LORDE had done so greate a slaughter in the people. And the men at Beth Semes sayde: Who maye stode before the LORDE so holy a God? And to whõ shal he go frõ vs? And they sent messaungers to y inhabiters of Kiriath learim, saiege: The Philistynes haue brought the Arke of God agayne, come downe, & fetch it vp vnto you.

But Samuel sayde vnto all the house of Israel: † Yf ye turne you withall youre hert vnto the LORDE, then put awaye from you the straunge goddes and Astaroth, and directe youre hert vnto the LORDE and †serue him onely, so shall he delyuer you out of the hande of the Philistynes. Then the childrē of Israel put awaye Baalim and Astaroth from them, and serued the LORDE onely.

33 Samuel saide: Gather all Israel together vnto Mispā, that I maye praye for you vnto the LORDE. And they came together vnto Mispā, and drue water, ⁊ poured it out before the LORDE, and fasted the same daye, and there they sayde: We haue synned vnto the LORDE. So Samuel iudged the children of Israel at Mispā.

But whan the Philistynes herde that ſ children of Israel were come together vnto Mispā, the prynces of the Philistynes wēte vp against Israel. 34 So Israel gat the cities agayne, that the Philistynes had conquered, frō Ekron vnto

Samuel iudged Israel as lōge as he liued, ⁊ wēte aboute euery yeare vnto Bethel ⁊ Gilgal ⁊ Mispā: ⁊ whā he had iudged Israel in all these places, he came agayne vnto Ramath for there was his house, ⁊ there he iudged Israel, ⁊ builded an altare there vnto ſ LORDE.

The viij. Chapter.

BUT whan Samuel waxed olde, he set his sonnes to be iudges ouer Israel. His firstborne sonne was called Ioel ⁊ the secōde Abia, ⁊ they were iudges at Bersaba. ## The ix. Chapter.

THERE was a man of Ben Iamin named *Cis, the sonne of Abiel, the sonne of Zeor, the sonne of Bethorah, & sonne of Apiah, the sonne of a man of Iemini, a valeaunt man, which had a sonne named Saul, which was so goodly a yonge man, that there was not a goodlier amonge the children of Israel, higher by the heade then all the people. Cis the father of Saul had lost his asses, and he sayde vnto Saul his sonne: Take one of the children with the, get the vp, go thy waye, and seke the asses. And he wente his waye thorow mount Ephraim, and thorow the lōde of Solisa, and founde them not. They wente thorow the lōde of Saalim, & there they were not. They passed thorow & lōde of Iemini, & fōude thē not. But whā they came in to the londe of Zuph, Saul sayde vnto the childe that was with him: Come, let vs go home agayne, lest my father let go the asses, and take care for vs. He sayde: Beholde, here is an honorable man of God in this cite, all that he sayeth, commeth to passe. Let vs go thither now, peraduenture he maye shewe vs oure waye which we go. But Saul saide vnto his childe: Though we shulde go, what brynge we the man? For the bred is gone out of oure walet, and els haue we no gifte to brynge the man of God, what haue we? The childe answered agayne, and sayde: Beholde, I haue the fourth parte of a syluer Sycle by me, & same wyll we geue the man of God, that he maye shewe vs oure waye.

(Afore tyme in Israel, whan a man wente to axe counsell at the LORDE, he sayde: Come, let vs go to the Seer: for they that now are called prophetes, were called Seers afore tyme.) Saul sayde vnto his childe: Thou hast well spoken, come let vs go. And whan they wente vnto the cite where the man of God was, and came vp to the cite, they founde damselfs which were gone forth to drawe water, vnto them they sayde: Is the Seer here? They answered them and sayde: Yee. Beholde, he is there, make haist, for he came in to the cite this daye, because the people haue a sacrifice to do to daye in the hye place. Whan ye come in the cite, ye shal fynde him, afore he go vp to the hye place for to eate: for the people wyll not eate tyll he come. For he shall blesse the offeringe, then shal they eate that are called. Therfore go youre waye vp, for euē now shal ye finde him.

And whan they came vp to the cite, and were euen in the myddes of the cite, beholde, Samuel came forth in their waye, and wolde go vp to the hye place. († But the LORDE had opened Samuels eare the daye afore, or euer Saul came, and sayde: Tomorrow aboute this tyme wyll I sende a man vnto the out of the lōde of Ben Iamin, him shalt thou anoynte to be prynce ouer my people of Israel, that he maye delyuer my people from the hande of the Philistynes: for I haue loked vpon my people, and their crye is come before me.) Now whan Samuel behelde Saul, the LORDE answered him: lo, & is the man of whom I tolde the, that he shulde raigne ouer my people.

Then came Saul vnto Samuel vnder & gate, and sayde: Tell me (I praye the) where is the Seers house? Samuel answered Saul, and sayde: I am the Seer. Go vp before me vnto the hye place: for ye shall eate with me to daye, tomorrow wyll I lett the go, and all that is in thyne hert, wyll I tell the: and as for the Asses which were lost thre dayes agoo, care not thou for them, for they are founde. Samuel toke Saul & his childe & brought them in to the perler where they shulde eate, and satt them aboue those that were called, of whom there were aboute a thirtie men. And Samuel sayde vnto the coke: Geue me the porcion that I gaue the, and bad the kepe it by the. Then the coke toke vp a shulder, and bare it forth, and set it before Saul. And (Samuel) sayde: Beholde, this is left, laye it before the, and eate: for it was kepte for the agaynst this tyme, whan I called the people. Thus Saul ate with Samuel the same daye.

And whan they were gone downe from the hye place vnto the cite, he talked with Saul in the chamber. And they rose vp early on the morow. And whan the mornyng sprynge arose, Samuel called Saul in the chamber, and sayde: Vp, ʒ I maye sende the thy waye. And Saul gat him vp: & they both wēte forth together, he and Samuel. And whan they came downe to the ende of the cite, Samuel sayde vnto Saul: Speake vnto ʒ childe, that he go on forth before vs, but stōde thou styll now, that I maie shewe the what God hath sayde:

A THEN toke Samuel a glasse of oyle, and poured it vpō his heade, and kissed him, and sayde: Seist thou that the LORDE hath anoynted the, to be the prince ouer †his enheritaūce? And the sprete of the LORDE shall come vpon the, and thou shalt prophecye with them, and shalt be chaunged in to another man.

Whan these tokens now come vnto the, || then do what so euer commeth vnder thyne hande: for God is with the. And whan he turned his shulder to go from Samuel, God chaunged him another hert, and all these tokēs came the same daye.

C And whan they came vnto the hill, beholde, there met him a company of prophetes ¶ and the sprete of God came vpon him, so that he prophced amonge them. But whā they which knewe him before, sawe him that he prophced with the prophetes, they sayde all amonge them selues: What is happened vnto the sonne of Cis? Is Saul also amonge the prophetes? And one ʒ was there, answered and sayde: Who is their father? ** Hereof came the prouerbe: Is Saul also amonge the prophetes? And whā he had left of prophecience, he came vp to the hyll.

Sauls vnclē sayde vnto him and to his childe: Whither wente ye? They answered: To seke the asses. And whan we sawe that they were awaye, we came vnto Samuel. Now whan Samuel had brought forth all the trybes of Israel, the trybe of Ben Iamin was taken. And whan he had broughte forth the trybe of Ben Iamin with his kynreds, the kynred of Matri was takē, ⁊ Saul the sonne of Cis was takē. And they sought him, but they founde him not.

Then axed they further at the LORDE, whether he was for to come thither. The LORDE answered: Beholde, he hath hyd him selfe amonge ꝑ vessels. Then ranne they thither, and fetched him. And whan he stode amonge the people, he was higher by the heade then all the people. And Samuel sayde vnto all the people: There se ye him whom the LORDE hath chosen, for in all the people there is none like him. Then gaue all the people a shout, and sayde: * God saue the new kynge.

Samuel tolde the people all the lawe of the kyngdome, and wrote it in a boke, and layed it before the LORDE. And Samuel let all the people go, euery one to his awne house. And Saul wente home also vnto Gibea, and there wente with him one parte of the hoost, whose hertes God had touched. But the childrē of Belial sayde: What shal this felowe helpe vs, ⁊ and despyded him, ⁊ broughte him no presente. But he made him as though he herde it not.

The xi. Chapter.

NAHAS ꝑ Ammonite wēte vp ⁊ layed sege vnto Iabes in Gilead. And all the men of Iabes sayde vnto Nahas: Be at one with vs, ⁊ we wyl serue the. But Nahas ꝑ Ammonite answered them: I wil make a couenant with you, of this condicion, that I maye thrust out all youre right eyes, and put you to shame amonge all Israel. Then sayde all the Elders of Iabes vnto him: Geue vs seuen dayes respyte, that we maye sende messaungers in to all ꝑ coastes of Israel: Yf there be then no sauoure, we wyl go forth vnto the.

So the messaungers came vnto Gibea of Saul, and spake this before the cares of the people. Then all ꝑ people lifte vp their voyce, and wepte. And beholde, Saul came after the oxen out of the felde, and sayde: What ayleth the people that they wepe? So they tolde him the earande of the men of Iabes. ¶ Then came the sprete of God vpon him, whan he had herde these wordes, and his wrath was sore moued, and he toke a couple of oxen, and hewed them in sunder, and sent them in to all the coastes of Israel by the messaungers, sayenge: Who so euer goeth not forth after Saul and Samuel, his oxen shalbe thus deale withall.

Then fell the feare of the LORDE vpon the people, so that they wente forth like as one man, ⁊ they were tolde at Basek, and of the childrē of Israel there were three hundred thousande men, and thirtie thousande of the children of Iuda. And they spake vnto the messaungers that were come: Saye thus to the men of Iabes in Gilead: Tomorrow shal ye haue helpe, whan ꝑ Sonne is at the whotest. Whan ꝑ messaungers came and tolde this to the men of Iabes, they were glad. And the men of Iabes sayde: Tomorrow wyl we come forth vnto you, that ye maye do vnto vs, what so euer it pleaseth you. And on ꝑ nexte morow Saul set the people in thre partes, and came in to the hoost aboute the mornynge watch, and smote the Ammonites tyll the daye was at the whotest. As for those ꝑ remayned, they were so scatred, that two of them abode not together.

Then sayde the people vnto Samuel: Where are they that sayde: ¶ Shulde Saul raigne ouer vs? Delyuer vs here the men, that we maye put them to death. But Saul sayde: There shal noman dye this daye, for to daye hath the LORDE geuen health in Israel. Samuel sayde vnto the people: Come, let vs go vnto Gilgall, and renue the kyngdome there. Then wente all the people vnto Gilgall, and there they made Saul kinge before the LORDE at Gilgal, and offred deed-offerings before the LORDE. And Saul with all the men of Israel reioysed there greatly.

They saide: Thou hast done vs nether violence ner wronge, nether oppressed, ner taken ought of eny mans hande. He sayde: The LORDE be witnesse agaynst you, and so be his anoynted this daye, that ye haue founde nothinge in my hāde. They saide: Yee they shalbe witnesses. And Samuel sayde vnto the people: The LORDE which made Moses and Aaron, and brougte youre fathers out of the londe of Egipte (is here present.) †Whan Iacob was come in to Egipte, youre fathers cryed vnto the LORDE. †And he sent Moses and Aaron to brynge youre fathers out of Egipte, and to cause them for to dwell in this place.

Yet wyll I call vpō the LORDE, so that he shal cause it thonder and rayne, that ye shall knowe and se the greate euell, which ye haue done in the sight of the LORDE, in that ye haue desyred to haue a kynge.

And whan Samuel called vpon the LORDE, the LORDE caused it to thoder and raine the same daye.

Then all the people feared the LORDE D greatly and Samuel, and they sayde all vnto Samuel: Praie thou vnto the LORDE thy God for thy seruantes, that we dye not: for beside oure sinnes we haue done this euell also, that we haue desyred vnto vs a kinge. Saul & his sonne Ionathas, and ſ people that was with them, taried at Gibeā Ben Iamin: but ſ Philistynes had pitched their tentes at Michmas. And out of the hoost of the Philistynes there wente thre bondes of men to destroye: one turned the waye towarde Ephraim in to the londe of Sual: another turned towarde the waye of Bethoron: the thirde turned towarde the waye, that reacheth to the valley of Zeboim vnto the wyldernes.

But there was not a smyth founde in all the lōde of Israel: for ſ Philistynes thoughte: The Hebrues mighte happily make swerdes and speares. And all Israel were fayne to go downe to the Philistynes, whan eny man had a plowshare, a mattock, an axe, or a sythe to sharpe: and the edges of the plowshares, and mattocks, & forckes, and axes, were laboured, and the poyntes blont. Now whan the daye of the battayll came, there was nether swerde ner speare founde in the hande of all the people, that was with Saul and Ionathas: but for Saul and Ionathas his sonne there was somwhat founde. And ſ Philistynes watch wēte out ouer by Michmas.

The xiiij. Chapter.

*I*T fortunēd at ſ same tyme, y Ionathas A sayde vnto his lad which was his wapen bearer: Come, let vs go ouer to the Philistynes watch ſ lyeth aboue, & he tolde not his father. Saul dwelt at ſ ende of Gibeā vnder a Pomgranate tre, which was in the suburbe. § And the people ſ were by him, were vpon a sixe hundred men. And Ahia the sonne of Achitob the brother of Icabod, the sonne of Phineas ſ sonne of Eli ſ prest of the LORDE at Silo, wayre the ouerbody cote. But the people knewe not that Ionathas was gone.

Betwene the passages where Ionathas soughte to go ouer vnto the Phylistynes watch, there were two hye rockes, the one on the one syde, the other on the other: the one was called Bozez, the other Senne. And ſ one laye on the north syde towarde Michmas, and the other on the south syde towarde Gaba. And Ionathas sayde vnto his wapen bearer:

* 1 Re. 10. b. † 1 Re. 10. b.

‡ 1 Re. 16. c. § 1 Re. 13. d.

Come, let vs go ouer to þy watch of these vn-circumcised, peradventure the LORDE shall worke with vs, * For it is no harde matter for the LORDE to helpe by many or by fewe. Then answered him his wapen bearer: Do all that is in thine hert, go on thy waie, beholde, I am with the, euen as thine hert wyll.

B Ionathas sayde: Well than, When we are gone ouer to the men, and come within the sighte of them, yf they saye: stonde styll, tyll we come to you, then wyll we stonde styll in oure place, and not go vp to them. But yf they saye: Come vp to vs, we wyll go vp to them, thē hath the LORDE delyuered them in to oure hande, and this shalbe a token for vs. Now when they came both in the sighte of the Philistynes watch, the Philistynes sayde: Se, † ‡ Hebrues are gone out of their holes, that they were crepte in to. And the men in the watch answered Ionathas and his wapen bearer, and sayde: Come vp to vs, and we wyll teach you what the matter is. Then sayde Ionathas to his wapen bearer. † Come vp after me, the LORDE hath delyuered them into Israels hande. And Ionathas clamme vp with handes and fete, and his wapen bearer after him. And Ionathas smote them downe before him, and his wapen bearer slewe behynde him, so that the first slaughter that Ionathas and his wapen bearer dyd, was vpō a twentye men, with in the length of halue an aker of londe, which a pare of oxen maye tyll in one daye.

C § And there came a fearfulnes and flight in the hoost vpon the felde, and amonge all the people of the watch: and vpon the † destroyers there came a fearfulnes also and flight, so that the londe was in a rumoure, and ¶ there came a flight thorow God. And Sauls watchmē at Gibeā Bē Iamin sawe, that § multitude gat them awaye, and ranne to and fro.

Saul sayde vnto the people that was with him: Tell and se which of vs is gone awaye. And when they nombred, beholde, Ionathas ¶ his wapen bearer was not there. Then saide Saul vnto Ahia: Brynge hither the Arke of God (for at that tyme was the Arke of God with the children of Israel.) And whyle Saul was yet speakynge to the prest, the multitude in the Philistynes hoost gat vp, ranne, and was greate. And Saul sayde vnto the prest:

Withdawe thine hande. And Saul cried, and all the people that was with him, and came to the battayll. And beholde, ** euery mans swerde was agaynst another, and there was a very greate rumoure.

The Hebrues also that were with § Philistynes afore, and had gone vp with them in the hoost on euery syde, ioyned them selues vnto Israel which were with Saul and Ionathas. And all the men of Israel which † had hyd thē selues vpon mount Ephraim, when they herde that the Philistynes fled, folowed after them in the battayll. Thus § LORDE helped Israel at that tyme, and § battayll lasted vnto Bethauen.

D And when the men of Israel came forth, Saul charged all the people the same daye, and sayde: Cursed be euery man, which eateth bred vntyll euen, that I maye auenge me on myne enemies. Then all the people taisted no bred. And all the people of the londe came in to the wodd. But there laye hony vpon the felde: and when the people came in to the wodd, beholde, the hony flowed, but no man put of it to his mouth with his hāde: for the people were afraied because of the ooth. As for Ionathas he had not herde, that his father had charged the people, and he put forth his staff that he had in his hande, and dypped the ende of it in § hony combe, and turned his hande to his mouth, and his eyes were lighted.

Then answered one of the people, and sayde: Thy father hath charged the people, and sayde: Cursed be euery mā that eateth oughte this daye. Neuertheles the people were faynte. Then sayde Ionathas: My father hath troubled the londe: Se how lighte myne eyes are become, because I haue taisted a litle of this hony. Yf the people this daie had eatē of the spoyle of their enemies that they founde, the slaughter shulde haue bene greater agaynst the Philistynes. Yet smote they the Philistynes the same daye fro Michmas vnto Aialon, and the people were very weery.

E And § people turned to the spoyles, and toke shepe and oxen, and calues, and slewe them vpon the earth, † and ate them with the bloude. Then was it tolde Saul: Beholde, the people synne agaynst the LORDE, in that they eate bloude. He sayde: Ye haue done euell: roll vnto me now a greate stone. And Saul sayde morouer: Go abrode amöge the people, and saye vnto them, that euery one brynge me his ox and his shepe, and slaye them here, that ye maye cate, and not to synne agaynst the LORDE with eatynge of bloude. Then brougte all the people euery one his ox with his häde the same nighte, and slewe them there. And Saul buylded an altare vnto ÿ LORDE. This is the first altare that he buylded vnto the LORDE.

And Saul sayde: Let vs go downe after the Philistynes, by nighte, and spoyle them tyll it be cleare mornynge, that we let none escape. They answered: Do what so euer pleaseth the. But the prest sayde: Let vs go nye here vnto God. And Saul axed at God. Shal I go downe here after ÿ Philistines? ¶ wilth thou delyuer thē in to Israels hande? Neuertheles he answered him not at that tyme.

¶ Then sayde Saul: Let all the armyes of the people come hither, and make search and se, in whom is this synne at this tyme. For as truly as God the Säuoure of Israel lyueth, ¶ though it be in my sonne Ionathas, he shal dye. And no man answered him of all the people. And he sayde vnto all Israel: Be ye on the one syde, I ¶ my sonne Ionathas wyl be on this syde. The people sayde vnto Saul: Do as it pleaseth the. And Saul sayde vnto the LORDE the God of Israel: Do thou that right is. Thē was Ionathas and Saul taken: but the people wente forth fre. Saul sayde: Cast the lot ouer me and my sonne Ionathas. So Ionathas was takē. And Saul sayde vnto Ionathas: Tell me, what hast thou done? Ionathas tolde him, ¶ sayde: I taisted a litle hony with the staff that I had in my hande, and beholde, must I dye therfore? Thē sayde Saul: God do this and that vnto me, Ionathas thou must dye the death.

¶ But the people sayde vnto Saul: Shulde Ionathas dye, that hath done so greate health in Israel this night? God forbyd. * As truly as the LORDE lyueth, there shal not one heer of his heade fall vpon ÿ earth: for with God hath he wroughte at this tyme. So the people delyuered Ionathas, that he dyed not. Then wente Saul vp from the Philistynes: and the Philistynes wente vnto their place.

But whan Saul had cōquered the kyngdome

ouer Israel, he foughte against all his enemyes rounde aboute, against the Moabites, agaynst the childrē of Ammon, agaynst the Edomites, agaynst the kynge of Zoba, agaynst ÿ Philistynes: and whither so euer he turned him, he gat ÿ victory. And he made an hoost, and smote ÿ † Amalechites, and delyuered Israel from the hande of all those that spoyled them.

Saul had these sonnes: Ionathas, Isui, and Malchisua. And these were ÿ names of his two daughters: the firstborne Merob, ¶ ÿ yōgest Michol. And Sauls wife was called Ahinoam, the daughter of Ahimaas. And his chefe captaynes name was Abner, the sonne of Ner, Sauls vnclē. † Cis was ÿ father of Saul. But Ner ÿ father of Abner was the sonne of Abiel.

There was a mightie sore warre against the Philistynes, as lōge as Saul lyued. And where Saul sawe a man that was stronge and mete for ÿ warre, he toke him to him.

The xv. Chapter.

SAMUEL sayde vnto Saul: ¶ The LORDE ¶ sent me to anoynte the for to be kynge ouer his people of Israel: heare now therfore the voyce of the wordes of the LORDE. Thus sayeth ÿ LORDE Zebaoth: I haue remembered what Amaleck dyd vnto Israel, ¶ how he layed wayte for him in ÿ waye, whan he wente out of Egipte: Go thy waye now therfore, and smyte the Amalechites, ¶ damne them with all that they haue, ¶ spare him not: but slaye both man and woman, children ¶ sucklynges, oxen ¶ shepe, Camels and asses. Saul commaunded the people the same, and nombred them at Talaim, two hūdreth thousande fote men, ¶ ten thousande men of luda.

And whan Saul came to the cite of the Amalechites, he set an hynder watch by the ryuer, and sayde vnto ÿ Kenites: Get you hence, departe, and go downe from ÿ Amalechites, ÿ I smyte you not with them, ¶ for ye shewed mercy vnto all the children of Israel, whā they departed out of Egipte. So the Kenites gat them awaye from amonge the Amalechites.

Then smote Saul the Amalechites from Heuila vnto Sur (which lyeth ouer against Egipte) ¶ toke Agag the kynge of ÿ Amalechites alyue, ¶ damned all ÿ people with the edge of the swerde. Neuertheles Saul and the people spared Agag, and the shepe and oxen y were good and fat, and the lambes, and all that was good, and wolde not damne the: but loke what was foule and nothinge worth, that they damned.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Samuel, and sayde: It repenteth me that I made Saul kyng, for he hath turned him selfe backe fro me, and not confirmed my wordes. Therfore was Samuel angrie, and cried vnto the LORDE all that nighte. And Samuel gat him vp early, that he might mete Saul in y mornyng. And it was tolde him, that Saul was come vnto Carmel, * and had set him vp a piler, and was gone aboute, and come downe to Gilgall.

Now whā Samuel came to Saul, Saul sayde vnto him: Blessed be thou vnto y LORDE, I haue performed the worde of y LORDE. Samuel answered: What crye is this then of shepe in myne eares, and the crye of oxen which I heare?

Saul sayde: They haue broughte them from the Amalechites: for the people spared the best shepe and oxen for the offerynge of y LORDE thy God, the other haue we damned. Neuertheles Samuel answered Saul: Let me tell the what y LORDE hath sayde vnto me this nighte. He sayde: Saye on. Samuel sayde: † When thou wast but small in thine awne eyes, wast thou not y heade amōge the trybes of Israel? and the LORDE anoynted the to be kyng ouer Israel? and y LORDE sent y in to the waye, and sayde: Go thy waie and damne the synners the Amalechites, and fighte agaynst them, tyll thou haue vtterly destroyed the? Wherefore hast thou not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE, but hast turned thy selfe to the spoyle, and done euell in the sighte of the LORDE?

Saul answered Samuel: Yee I haue herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE, and haue gone the waye that y LORDE sent me, and broughte Agag the kyng of the Amalechites, and damned the Amalechites: but y people haue takē of the spoyle, shepe and oxen, and y best amōge the damned, to offer vnto y LORDE thy God in Gilgall. Samuel saide: Hath the LORDE pleasure in sacrifices and burnt offerynges, as in obeynge the voyce of the LORDE? Beholde, † obedience is better then offerynge, and to herken is better then the fat of rammes. For disobedience is as y synne of y witchcrafte, and rebellion is as the blasphemie of Idolatrye. In so moch now as thou hast refused the worde of the LORDE, he hath refused the also, that thou shuldest not be kyng.

Then sayde Saul vnto Samuel: I haue synned, y I haue transgressed the commaundement of the LORDE and thy worde: for I was afraied of the people, and herkened vnto their voyce. And now forgeue me my synne, and returne with me, that I maye worshippe y LORDE. Samuel saide vnto Saul: I wil not turne backe with y, for thou hast refused the worde of the LORDE, and the LORDE hath refused the also, y thou shuldest not be kyng in Israel. And whan Samuel turned him backe to go his waye, he gat him by y edge of his garment, and rēte it. Then sayde Samuel vnto him: The LORDE hath rente the kyngdome of Israel from y this daye, and geuen it vnto thy neighbour, which is better then thou. The ouerwynner in Israel also shal not lye, nether shal he repente: for he is no man, that he shulde repente.

He sayde: I haue synned, yet honour me now before the Elders of my people and before Israel, and turne backe with me, that I maye worshippe the LORDE thy God. So Samuel turned agayne after Saul, that Saul mighte worshippe the LORDE. But Samuel sayde: Bring me hither Agag the kyng of the Amalechites. And Agag wente vnto him, tēderly. And Agag saide: Thus departeth the bytternesse of death. Samuel sayde: ¶ Like as thy swerde hath made wemen childlesse, so shal thy mother also be with out children amonge wemen. So Samuel hewed Agag in peces before y LORDE in Gilgall. ¶ And Samuel departed vnto Ramath. But Saul wente vp to his house at Gibeā Saul. And Samuel sawe Saul nomore vnto the daye of his death. Neuertheles Samuel mourned for Saul, because it repented the LORDE, that he had made Saul kyng ouer Israel.

whom I haue refused, that he shulde not be kynge ouer Israel? Fyll thine horne with oyle, go thy waye, I wyll sende the to Isai the Bethleemite: for amonge his sonnes haue I prouyded me a kynge. But Samuel sayde: How shal I go? Saul shal perceaue it, and shal slaye me. The LORDE sayde: Take the a calfe from the droue, & saye: I am come to do sacrifice vnto y LORDE. And thou shalt call Isai to y sacrifice, so shall I tell the what thou shalt do, that thou mayest anynte me him, whom I shall shewe the. Samuel dyd as the LORDE sayde, and came to Bethleem. Then were the Elders of the cite astonnyed, and wente forth to mete him, and sayde: *Is thy commynge peaceable? He sayde: Yee. I am come to do sacrifice vnto the LORDE. Sanctifye youre selues, & come with me to the sacrifice. And he sanctified Isai and his sonnes, and called them to the sacrifice.

Now whā they came in, he behelde Eliab, & thoughte, whether he shulde be his anynted before the LORDE. But y LORDE sayde vnto Samuel: loke not vpon his countenance, ner vpon the tallnesse of his person, For I iudge not after the sighte of man. A man hath respecte vnto the thinge that is before his eyes, but the LORDE loketh vpon the hert. Then Isai called Abinadab, & broughte him before Samuel. And he sayde: This hath not the LORDE chosen. Then Isai broughte Samma. But he sayde: This also hath not the LORDE chosen. Then broughte Isai his seuen sonnes before Samuel. Neuertheles Samuel saide vnto Isai: The LORDE hath chosen none of these.

And Samuel sayde vnto Isai: Are here all the childrē? He sayde: There is yet one y leest of all, and beholde, he kepeth the shepe. Thē sayde Samuel vnto Isai: Sende & cause him to be fetched, for we will not syt downe at the table, vntyll he come. Then sent he, & caused him be broughte. And he was well coloured with fayre eyes & of a beutyfull countenance. And the LORDE saide: Aryse, and anynte him, that is he.

Thē toke Samuel his oyle horne, & anynted him amonge his brethrē. And the sprete of the LORDE came vpō Dauid frō y daye forth. As for Samuel, he gat him vp, & wente vnto Ramath.

But the sprete of the LORDE departed from Saul, and an euell sprete from y LORDE vexed him. Then sayde Sauls seruantes vnto him: Beholde, an euell sprete from God vexeth the. Let oure lorde saie vnto his seruantes which stonde before him, y they seke a man which can playe vpon the harpe, and instrumente, that than the euell sprete of God cōmeth vpon the, he maye playe with his hande, to ease the withall. Then sayde Saul vnto his seruantes: Prouyde me a mā, that can playe well vpon the instrumente, & brynge him vnto me.

Then answered one of the children, & sayde: Beholde, I sawe a sonne of Isai y Bethleemite, which can playe vpon the instrumēte, an honest & valeaūt man, and one y hath vnderstōdinge in matters, & is wellfaoured. Thē Saul sent messangers vnto Isai, sayēge: Sende me Dauid thy sonne, which is with the shepe. Then toke Isai an asse with bred, & a bottell with wyne, and a kyd, and sent it vnto Saul by Dauid his sonne. So Dauid came to Saul, & stode before him, & he loued him well, and he became his wapen bearer. And Saul sente vnto Isai, sayēge: Let Dauid remayne before me, for he hath founde fauoure in my sighte. Now than the sprete of God came vpō Saul, Dauid toke y harpe, & played with his hande: so was Saul refreszshed, & eased, & the euell sprete departed from him.

The xviij. Chapter.

THE Philistynes gathered their hoost to y battayl, and came together to Socho in Iuda, & pitched their tentes betwene Socho & Aseka, at the ende of Damin. But Saul & the mē of Israel came together, & pitched in the Oke valley, & prepared them selues to the battayl agaynst the Philistynes. And the Philistynes stode vpon a hyll on the one syde, and the Israelites vpon a hyll on the other syde, so that there was a valley betwene them.

Then stepte there forth from amōge the Philistynes a stoute bolde man, named Goliath of †Gath, sixe cubites and an hande breth hie, and had an helmet of stele on his heade, and a fast habergion vpon him, and the weight of his habergion was fyue thousande Sicles of stele, and harnessse of stele had he vpon his legges, and a shyld of stele vpon his shulders: and the shaft of his speare was like a weuers lome, and the yron of his speare had sixe hundreth Sicles of yron, and his wapen bearer wente before him.

33 And he stode and called vnto the hoost of Israel, and sayde vnto them: Wherefore are ye come forth to prepare youre selues to the battayll? Am not I a Philistyne, and ye the seruantes of Saul? Chose one amonge you to come downe vnto me: yf he can fighte agaynst me and slaye me, then wil we be youre seruantes: but yf I can ouercome him and slaye him, then shal ye be oure seruantes, to do vs seruyce. And the Philistyne sayde: I haue spokē disdzanedly vnto the hoost of Israel this daye. Geue me one, and let vs fighte together. Whan Saul and all Israel herde these wordes of ʒ Philistyne, they were astonnyed, and sore afraied.

But Dauid was the sonne of a man of Ephrata of Bethleem Iuda, whose name was Isai, which had eight sonnes, and was an olde man in Sauls tyne, and was well strycken in age amonge men. And the three eldest sonnes of Isai were gone with Saul to the battayll. And there names were these: Eliab the first borne, Abinadab the seconde, and Samma the thirde. But Dauid was the yongest of all. So whan the three eldest were gone with Saul to the battayll, Dauid wente agayne from Saul, to kepe his fathers shepe at Bethleem. But the Philistyne stepte forth early in the mornynge and at euen, and stode there fortye dayes.

¶ Isai sayde vnto Dauid his sonne: Take this Ephra of firmentye for thy brethren, and these ten loaves of bred (and runne to the hoost vnto thy brethren) ¶ these ten new cheses, and brynge them to ʒ captayne, and loke how thy brethren do, whether it go well with them or no, and take what they byd the. But Saul and they, and all the men of Israel were in the Oke valley, and foughte agaynst the Philistynes.

Then Dauid gat him vp early in the mornynge, and commytted the shepe to ʒ keper, and toke his burthen, wente his waye, as Isai commaunded him, and came to the tēt. And the hoost was gone forth, and had prepared them selues, and cried in the battayll: For Israel had set them selues in aray, and the Philistynes were agaynst their hoost in their aray also.

Then lefte Dauid the vessell that he bare, with the keper of the stuffe, and ranne to the hoost, and wente in, and saluted his brethren. And whyle he was yet talkynge with them, beholde, then came vp the stoute bolde man, whose name was Goliath, the Philistine of Gath, out of the Philistynes hoost, and spake like as afore, and Dauid herde it. But euery man of Israel, whan he sawe the man, fled from him, and was sore afraied of him.

And euery man in Israel sayde: Haue ye sene the man commynge vp hither? For he is come vp hither, to speake disdzanedly vnto Israel. And who so euer smytheth him, him wyll the kyng make ryche, and geue him his daughter, and make his fathers house fre in Israel.

Then sayde Dauid vnto the men that stode by him: What shalbe done to the man, that smytheth this Philistyne, and turneth this shame awaye from Israel? For what is he this Philistyne this vncircūcysed, that defyeth the hoost of ʒ luyngge God? Then the people tolde him as afore: Thus shall it be done vnto ʒ man that smytheth him. And Eliab his greater brother herde him talke with the men, and was very wroth agaynst Dauid, and sayde: Wherefore art thou come downe? and why hast thou left a fewe shepe in the wyl-dernesse? I knowe thy presumptuousnesse well ynough, and the wickednesse of thine hert: for thou art come downe to se the battayll. Dauid answered: What haue I downe now? Is there not an occasion? And he turned him selfe from him vnto another, and spake accordinge as he had sayde before. Then the people answered him like as afore.

And whan they herde the wordes which Dauid sayde, they tolde them in the presence of Saul, and he caused him be fetched. And Dauid sayde vnto Saul: Let no mans hert be discouraged because of him. Thy seruauant shall go, and fighte with the Philistyne. Neuertheles Saul sayde vnto Dauid: Thou art not able to go agaynst this Philistyne to fighte with him, for thou art but a childe: but this is a man of warre from his youth vp.

Dauid sayde vnto Saul: Thy seruauant kepeth his fathers shepe, and there came a lyon and a Bere, and caried awaye a shepe from the flocke, then wente I forth after him, and smote him, and delyuered it out of his mouth. * And whan he wolde haue bene vpon me, I toke him by his beerde, and smote him, and slewe him. So thy seruauunt smote both the Lyon and y Bere. Therefore shall this Philistyne this vncircumcysed be euen as one of them: for he hath defyed the hoost of the lyuynge God. And Dauid sayde: The LORDE that delyuered me from y Lyon and Beer, shall delyuer me also from this Philistyne.

And Saul sayde vnto Dauid: Go thy waye, the LORDE be with the. And Saul clothed Dauid with his clothes, and set an helmet of stele vpon his heade, and put an habergion vpon him. And Dauid girded his swerde aboue his clothes, and begaune to go, for he had neuer bene vsed to it afore. Then sayde Dauid vnto Saul: I can not go thus, for I haue not bene vsed to it, and so he laied it from him, and toke his staff in his hande, and chose fyue slighte stones out of the ryuer, and put them in the shepardes bagge which he had by him, and toke a slynge in his hande, and made him to the Philistyne. And the Philistyne wente forth, and made him to Dauid, and his wapen bearer before him.

Now when the Philistyne loked & sawe Dauid, he thoughte scorne of him: for he was but a childe, well coloured, and beutyfull to loke vpon. And the Philistyne sayde vnto Dauid: Am I a dogg then, that thou comest vnto me with a staffe? And he cursed Dauid by his God, and sayde vnto Dauid: Come hither to me, I wil geue thy flesh to the foules vnder the heauen, and to the beastes in the felde. Neuertheles Dauid sayde vnto the Philistyne: Thou comest vnto me with swerde, speare and shyld. But I come vnto the in the name of the LORDE Zebaoth the God of the hoost of Israel, whom thou hast despysed. This daye shall the LORDE delyuer the in to my hãde, that I maye smyte the, and take thy heade from the, and geue the bodies of the hoost of the Philistynes this daye vnto the foules vnder the heauen, and to the wyld beestes vpon the earth, that all the londe maye knowe y Israel hath a God. And all this congregacion shal knowe, that the LORDE saueth nether thorow swerde ner speare: for the battayll is the LORDES, & he shal delyuer you in to oure handes.

Now when the Philistyne gat him vp, and wente forth and drue nye vnto Dauid, Dauid made haiste, and ranne from y hoost vnto the Philistyne. And Dauid put his hãde in his bagg, and toke out a stone, & thrue it with the slynge, * and hytt the Philistyne euen in the fore heade, so that the stone stacke in his fore heade, and he fell downe to the grounde vpon his face.

So Dauid ouercame y Philistyne with the slynge and with y stone, and smote him, and slewe him. And for so much as Dauid had no swerde in his hande, he ranne and stode ouer y Philistyne, † and toke his swerde, and drue it out of the sheeth, and slewe him, and smote of his heade withall. When the Philistynes sawe that the strongest of them was deed, † they fled. And the men of Israel and Iuda gat thẽ vp, and cryed and folowed vpon the Philistynes, tyll they came vnto the valley, and to the Portes of Ekron. And the Philistynes fell downe slayne vnto Gath and to Ekron. And the children of Israel turned agayne from chasyng of the Philistynes, and spoyled their tentes. But Dauid toke the heade of the Philistyne, and broughte it vnto Ierusalem, as for his armour, he layed it in his tente.

Whan Saul sawe Dauid go forth agaynst the Philistyne, he saide vnto y Abner his chefe captayne: Abner, whose sonne is this childe? Abner sayde: As truly as thy soule lyueth O kynge, I wote not. The kynge sayde: Axe thẽ whose sonne the yonge mã is. Now whan Dauid came agayne from the slaughter of the Philistyne, Abner toke him, and broughte him before Saul, and he had the Philistynes heade in his hande. And Saul sayde vnto him: Whose sonne art thou, thou yonge man? Dauid sayde: I am a sonne of thy seruauunt Isai the Bethleemite.

AND whan he had made an ende of talkynge with Saul, the soule of Ionathas was bounde with the soule of Dauid, and Ionathas loued him as his owne soule. And Saul toke him the same daye, and let him not go agayne to his fathers house. And Ionathas and Dauid made a couenaut together, for he loued him as his owne soule. And Ionathas put of his owne cote that he had vpon him, and gaue it vnto Dauid: yee and his cloke, his swerde, his bowe, and his girdell. And Dauid wente forth whither so euer Saul sent him, and behaued him selfe wysely. And Saul set him ouer the men of warre, and he pleased all the people well, and all the seruauntes of Saul.

B It fortuneth, that whan Dauid was come agayne from the slaughter of the Philistyne, the women wente out of all the cities of Israel with songes & daunces, to mete kyng Saul, with tymbrels, with myrth, and with fyddels. And the women sange one to another, and played & sayde: * Saul hath smytten his thousande: but Dauid his ten thousande.

Then was Saul very wroth, and y worde displeased him sore, and he sayde: They haue ascrybed ten thousande vnto Dauid, and but one thousande vnto me: what shal he haue more but the kyngdome? And from that daye forth, Saul loked sowerly vpō Dauid.

C The nexte daye after came the euell sprete of God vpon Saul, and prophecyed in y myddes of the house. But Dauid played on the instrumente with his hande, as he was wonte daylie. And Saul had a iauelynge in his hande, and cast it, and thoughte: I will stycke Dauid fast to the wall. Neuerthelesse Dauid turned himselfe twyse awaye from him. And Saul was afraied of Dauid: for the LORDE was with him, and was departed from Saul. Then Saul put him from him, and set him to be prynce ouer a thousande men, and he went out and in before the people. And Dauid behaued himselfe wysely in all his doynge, and the LORDE was with him.

D Now whan Saul sawe that he was so exceedynge wyse, he stode in feare of him. But all Israel and Iuda loued Dauid, for he wente out and in before them. And Saul sayde vnto Dauid: Beholde, my greatest daughter Merob † wyl I geue the to wyfe: be stronge now, & gouerne the warres of the LORDE. For Saul thought: my hāde shal not be vpon him, but the hande of y Philistynes. Neuertheles Dauid answered Saul: Who am I? & what is my life & the kyndred of my father in Israel, that I shulde mary the kynges daughter?

E But whan the tyme came, that Merob y daughter of Saul shulde haue bene geuē vnto Dauid, she was geuen vnto Adriel y Meholahite to wyfe. Neuerthelesse Michol Sauls daughter loued Dauid. Whan this was tolde Saul, y matter pleased him well, & he sayde: I wyl geue him her, y she maye be a snare vnto him, & that the handes of y Philistynes maye come vpon him. And he sayde vnto Dauid: This daye shalt thou be my daughters huszbāde y secōde time. And Saul spake vnto his seruātes: Talke with Dauid secretly & saye: Beholde, the kyng hath pleasure in the, and all his seruātes loue the, mary thou therfore the kynges daughter.

And Sauls seruāntes spake these wordes in the eares of Dauid. But Dauid saide: Thynke ye it but a small matter, to mary the kynges daughter? As for me, I am but a poore symple man. And Sauls seruāntes tolde him agayne, and sayde: Soch wordes hath Dauid spoken. Saul sayde: Then saye ye vnto Dauid: The kyng desyreth no dowry, but onely an hundreth foreszkyngnes of the Philistynes, that vengeance maye be taken of the kynges enemies. Howbeit Saul thought to cause Dauid be slayne by the hādes of the Philistynes. Then his seruāntes tolde Dauid these wordes, and Dauid was contente with the matter, to mary the kynges daughter.

And after a fewe dayes Dauid gatt him vp, and wente with his men, and smote two hundreth men amonge the Philistynes. And Dauid broughte their foreszkyngnes, and made their nombre sufficient vnto the kyng, y he mighte mary the kynges daughter. Thē Saul gaue him his daughter Michol to wyfe. And Saul sawe and perceaued, that the LORDE was with Dauid. And Michol Sauls daughter loued him. Then was Saul the more afraied, and became his enemye as lōge as he lyued. And whan the prynces of the Philistynes wēte forth, Dauid behaued him selfe more wysely then all the seruāntes of Saul in their outgoynge: so that his name was in greate reputacion.

SAUL spake to Ionathas his sonne, and to all his seruāntes, that they shulde kyll Dauid. † Neuerthelesse Ionathas the sonne of Saul loued Dauid exceedingly, and tolde him, and sayde: Saul my father goeth aboute to slaye the. But I wyl go forth, and stonde besyde my father in the felde where thou art, and wyl speake of the vnto my father: and what soener I se I shal brynge the worde.

And Ionathas reported  $\hat{y}$  best of Dauid vnto Saul his father, and sayde vnto him: Oh let not the kynge synne agaynst his seruauit, for he hath not synned agaynst the, and his doynge is very necessary for the, \* he put his lyfe in his hande also, and smote the Philistyne,  $\alpha$  the LORDE dyd a greate health vnto all Israel: this hast thou sene, and reioysed therof. Wherefore wylt thou then offende agaynst innocent bloude, that thou woldest kyll Dauid without a cause? Then herkened Saul vnto the voice of Ionathas and sware: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, he shal not dye. Then Ionathas called Dauid, and tolde him all these wordes, and brought him to Saul, so that he was in presence like as afore tyme.

But there arose a battayll agayne, and Dauid wente forth, and fought agaynst the Philistynes, and smote a greate slaughter, so that they fled before him. Neuertheles  $\hat{y}$  euell sprete of the LORDE came vpon Saul, and he sat in his house, and had a iauelynge in his hande. But Dauid plaied vpon the instrument with his hãde. And Saul thought with the iauelynge to sticke Dauid fast to the wall. Howbeit, he wente asyde frõ Saul and the iauelynge smote in the wall. And Dauid fled, and escaped that night.

Notwithstandinge Saul sent his messaungers to Dauids house, that they shulde laye wayte for him, and kyll him in the mornynge. Michol Dauids wyfe tolde him this, and sayde: Yf thou saue not thy soule this night, thou shalt dye tomorow. † Then Michol let him downe thorow the wyndow, so that he wente his waye, fled, and escaped. And Michol toke an ymage, and layed it in the bed, and laied a goates szkinne at the heade of it, and couered it with clothes. Then Saul sent messaungers, to fetch Dauid. But she sayde: He is sicke. Neuerthelesse Saul sent messaungers to se Dauid,  $\alpha$  sayde: Bring him vp to me with the bed, that he maye be slayne.

Now whan the messaungers came, beholde, the ymage laye in the bed, and a goates szkyne at the heade of it. Then sayde Saul vnto Michol: Why hast thou begyled me, and let myne enemye go, that he mighte escape? Michol sayde vnto Saul: He sayde vnto me: Let me go, or I wyl kyll the. As for Dauid, he fled, and escaped, and came to Samuel vnto Ramath, and tolde him all  $\hat{y}$  Saul had done vnto him. And he wente with Samuel, and they abode at Naioth.

And it was tolde Saul: Beholde, Dauid is at Naioth in Ramath. Then Saul sente messaungers to fetch Dauid. And they sawe a company of prophetes prophecience, and Samuel had the ouersight of them. Then came the sprete of God vpon the messaungers of Saul, so that they prophecied also.

Whan this was tolde Saul, he sent other messaungers, which prophecied likewyse. Then sente he messaungers the thyrd tyme, and they in like maner prophecied. Then wente he himselfe also vnto Ramath, and whan he came to the greate well which is at Secho, he axed and sayde: Where is Samuel and Dauid? Then was it tolde him: beholde, at Naioth in Ramath. And he wente thither, euen vnto Naioth in Ramath. And  $\hat{y}$  sprete of God came vpon him also, and he wete  $\alpha$  prophecied till he came vnto Naioth in Ramath. And he put of his clothes,  $\alpha$  prophecied likewise before Samuel,  $\alpha$  fell downe naked all that daye and all that night. † Here of came the prouerbe: Is Saul also amonge the prophetes?

DAUID fled frõ Naioth in Ramath, and came,  $\alpha$  spake before Ionathas: What haue I done? What trespase haue I made? What haue I synned in  $\hat{y}$  sighte of thy father,  $\hat{y}$  he seketh to kyll me? He sayde vnto him: God forbyd, thou shalt not dye. Beholde, my father doth nothinge, nether greate ner small, but he sheweth it before myne eares. Wherefore shulde my father thẽ hyde this fro me? It shal not be so. Thẽ sware Dauid agayne, and sayde: Thy father knoweth well,  $\hat{y}$  I haue founde fauoure in thy sighte, therefore shal he thynke: Ionathas shal not knowe of this, lest it greue him. Verely, as truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, there is but one steppe betwene me  $\alpha$  death. Ionathas sayde vnto Dauid: I wil do for the what so euer thy hert desyreth. Dauid sayde vnto him: Beholde, tomorow is the new Mone, that I shulde syt at the table with the kynge. Do mercy therefore vpon thy seruaut: \*for with me thy seruaut hast thou made a couenant in the LORDE. But yf there be eny trespass in me, then slaye me thy selfe, for why woldest thou brynge me vnto thy father?

Ionathas sayde: That be farre from the, that I shulde perceaue my father to intende eny euell agaynst the, and shulde not tell the. Dauid sayde: Who shal brynge me worde, yf thy father geue the an harde answer? Ionathas sayde vnto Dauid: Come, let vs go forth in to the felde. And they wente out both in to y<sup>e</sup> felde. And Ionathas sayde vnto Dauid:

LORDE God of Israel, yf I perceaue by my father tomorow or on the thirde daye, that it goeth well with Dauid, & sende not vnto the, and shewe the before thine eares, then let the LORDE do this and that vnto Ionathas. But yf my father delyte in euell agaynst the, I wil shewe it before thine eares also, and let y<sup>e</sup> go, that thou mayest departe in peace.

And the LORDE be with the, as he hath bene with my father. Yf I do it not, then do thou no mercy of the LORDE on me, while I lyue, no not when I dye, and plucke thy mercy fro my house for euer. And whan the LORDE roteth out y<sup>e</sup> enemies of Dauid, euery one out of the londe, then let Dauid rote out Ionathas also with his house, and the LORDE requyre it of the hande of Dauids enemies.

And Ionathas proceeded further, and sware vnto Dauid (he loued him so well: for he loued him euen as his owne soule) and Ionathas sayde vnto him: Tomorow is y<sup>e</sup> new Mone, and thou shalt be axed after: for thou shalt be wanted where thou wast wonte to sit. But on the thirde daye come downe soone, & go in to y<sup>e</sup> place where thou hydest the on the workdaye, & set the downe by the stone of Asel: then wyl I shute thre arrowes on y<sup>e</sup> side, as though I wolde shute at a marck: and beholde, I wil sende the boye, and saye vnto him, Go seke y<sup>e</sup> arrowes. Yf I saye now vnto the lad: Lo, the arrowes lye hitherwarde behynde y<sup>e</sup>, fetch them, then come thou, for it is peace, and there is no parell, as truly as the LORDE lyueth. But yf I saye vnto the lad: beholde, the arrowes lye yonderwarde before the, then go thou thy waye, for the LORDE hath let the go. †As for that which thou and I haue spokē together, the LORDE is betwene me and the for euer.

Dauid hid himself in the felde. And whā the new Mone came, the kyng sat him downe at the table to eate. Whan the kyng had set him downe in his place as he was wonte by the wall, Ionathas stode vp, but Abner sat him downe besyde Saul. And Dauid was myssed in his place. And Saul spake nothinge that daye, for he thoughte: There is somewhat happend vnto him, that he is not cleane. On the seconde daye of the new Mone, whan Dauid was myssed in his place, Saul saide vnto Ionathas his sonne: Wherefore is not the sonne of Isai come to the table nether yesterdaye ner to daye?

Ionathas answered Saul: He prayed me that he mighte go vnto Bethleem, and sayde: Let me go, for oure kynred hath a sacrifice to do in the cyte, and my brother hath sent for me himselfe: yf I haue founde fauoure now in thy syghte, I wyl go, and se my brethren: therefore is he not come to the kynges table. Then was the kyng wroth at Ionathas, and sayde vnto him: Thou wicked and vnthriste, I knowe how that thou hast chosen the sonne of Isai, to the shame of thy selfe and of thy shamefull mother. For as longe as y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Isai lyueth vpō earth nether thou ner thy kingdome shal prospere. Sende now therefore, and cause him to be fetched vnto me, ‡for he is a childe of death.

Ionathas answered his father Saul and sayde vnto him: Wherefore shal he dye? what hath he done? Then shot Saul the iauelynge at him, that he might smite him. The perceaued Ionathas, that his father was vtterly determed to kyll Dauid, and he rose vp from y<sup>e</sup> table in a wrothfull displeasure, and ate no bred y<sup>e</sup> same seconde daye of the new Mone: for he was vexed because of Dauid, that his father had done him soch dishonoure.

On the morow wente Ionathas forth in to the felde, at the tyme appoynted of Dauid, and a litle boy with him, and sayde vnto y<sup>e</sup> boy: Runne and seke me the arrowes which I shute. Whan the boy ranne, he shot an arrowe ouer him. And whan the boy came to the place whither Ionathas had shot & arowe, Ionathas cryed after him, and sayde: The arowe lyeth yonderwarde before the. And he cryed after him agayne: haist the, and stonde not styll. Then the boy gathered vp Ionathas arowes, and brought them to his lorde. And the boy knewe nothinge, onely Ionathas and Dauid knewe of & matter.

Then Ionathas gaue his boy his wapēs and sayde vnto him: Go thy waye, and cary them in to the cite. And whan the boy was gone, Dauid arose from the place towarde the south, and fell vpon his face to the grounde, and worshipped thre tymes, and they kissed one another, and wepte together. But Dauid most specially. And Ionathas saide vnto Dauid: Go thy waye in peace: *What soeuer we both haue sworne & spokē together in the name of the LORDE, the LORDE be witnesse betwene me and the, betwene my sede and thy sede for euer. And Ionathas gat him vp, and came in to the cite.

The xxi. Chapter.

A DAVID came to Nobe to & prest Ahimelech. And Ahimelech was astonnyed, whan he sawe Dauid comminge, and sayde vnto him: Why comest thou alone, and noman is with the? Dauid sayde vnto Ahimelech the prest: The kinge hath cōmytted a matter vnto me, and sayde: Let nomā knowe wherefore I haue sent the, and what I haue commaunded the: for I haue appoynted my seruātes to mete me here & there. †Yf thou haue now ought vnder thy hande, a loafe of bred or fyue, geue me the same in my hande, or what so euer thou findest.

B The prest answered Dauid, and sayde: I haue no comen bred vnder my hande, but the holy bred, yf the yonge men haue onely refrained them selues from women. Dauid answered the prest, and sayde vnto him: The women were kepte thre dayes from vs whan we departed forth, and the yonge mens vessels were holy. But this waye is vnholly, neuertheless it shalbe sanctified to daye in the instruments. § Then the prest gaue him of & holy, in so moch as there was none other bred but the shewbredes, which were taken vp before the LORDE, that there might be other freshbredes set therein the daye whā he toke them awaye.

But the same daye was there a man sparred C in before the LORDE, one of Sauls seruauantes, named Doeg an Edomite, & mightiest amonge Sauls hyrdmen. And Dauid sayde vnto Ahimelech: Is there not a speare or a swerde here vnder thine hande? I haue not taken my swerde and weapons with me: for the kynges matter requyred haist. The prest sayde: The swerde of Goliath the Philistyne ¶ whom thou smotest in the Oke valley, is here wrapped in a cloth behynde the ouerbody cote. Yf thou wylt haue it, take it, for here is els none but it. Dauid sayde: There is not soch another, geue me it.

And Dauid gat him vp, and fled from Saul, D and came to Achis & kynge of Gath. But Achis seruauantes sayde vnto him: This is Dauid the kynge of the londe, of whom they sunge in the daunse, and sayde: ¶ Saul hath smytten his thousande, but Dauid his ten thousande. And Dauid toke these wordes to hert, and was sore afrayed of Achis the kynge of Gath, and altered his countenance before them, and shewed himselfe as he had bene madd in their handes, and stackered towarde the dores of the gate, and his slauerynges ranne downe his beard. Then sayde Achis vnto his seruauantes: Beholde, ye se that the man is out of his wyt, why haue ye brought him vnto me? Haue I to fewe madd men, that ye haue brought this hither to be madd before me? Shulde he come in to my house?

And Dauid wente from thence towarde Mispā in the londe of the Moabites, and sayde vnto the kynge of the Moabites: Let my father and my mother go out and in amonge you, tyll I se what God wil do with me. And he left them before the kynge of & Moabites, so that they remayned by him, as longe as Dauid was in the castell. Neuertheles the prophet Gad sayde vnto Dauid: Abyde not in the castell, but go thy waye, and come in to the londe of Iuda. Then departed Dauid, and came in to the wodd of Hareth. And Saul herde that Dauid and the men which were with him, were come forth.

Now whyle Saul dwelt at Gibeon vnder a groue in Rama, he had a Iauelinge in his hande, and all his seruantes stode by him. Then sayde Saul vnto his seruantes that stode by him: Heare ye children of Iemini: Shal the sonne of Isai geue lodes and vnyardes vnto you all, & make you all captaynes ouer thousandes and ouer hundredes, that ye haue all conspyred agaynst me, and there is no mā that sheweth it before myne eares, *for so much as my sonne also hath made a couenant with the sonne of Isai? There is no man amonge you that letteth it for my sake, or y<sup>e</sup> openeth it vnto myne eares: for my sonne hath stered vp my seruantes against me, that he maye laye wayte for me, as it is manifest.

Then answered Doeg y<sup>e</sup> Edomite which stode besyde Sauls seruantes, and sayde: †I sawe the sonne of Isai, that he came vnto Nobe, to Ahimelech y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Achitob, which axed counsell at the LORDE for him, and gaue him fode, & the swerde of Goliath the Philistyne.

Then sent the kynge, and caused to call Ahimelech the prest the sonne of Achitob, and all his fathers house, the prestes that were at Nobe, and they came all to the kynge. And Saul sayde: Heare thou sonne of Achitob. He saide: Here am I my lorde. And Saul sayde vnto him: Wherefore haue ye conspyred agaynst me, thou & the sonne of Isai, that thou hast geuen him bred and a swerde, and axed counsell at God for him, to stere him vp, that he mighte laye awayte for me, as it is manifest?

Ahimelech answered the kynge and saide: And who is amonge all thy seruantes like Dauid, which is faithfull, and hath married the kynges daughter, and goeth in thine obedience, & is honorably taken in thine house? Haue I begonne then first this daye to axe counsell at God for him? That be farre fro me. Let not the kinge laie soch to his seruantes charge in all my fathers house: for thy seruant knewe not of all these thinges nether small ner greate. Neuertheles the kynge saide: Ahimelech thou must dye y<sup>e</sup> death, thou and all thy fathers house. And the kynge sayde to his fote men that stode by him: Turne you, and slaye the prestes of the LORDE, for their hande is with Dauid also.

Not withstandinge the kynges seruantes wolde not laye their handes vpon y<sup>e</sup> prestes of the LORDE, to slaye them. Then saide y<sup>e</sup> kynge vnto Doeg: Turne the, and slaye the prestes. †Doeg the Edomite turned him, and slewe the prestes, so that the same daye there dyed fyue and foure score men, which wayre ouerbody cotes of linnen. And Nob the cite of the prestes smote he with the edge of the swerde, both men and women, children and sucklynges, oxen and asses, and shepe.

Neuerthelesse there escaped a sonne of Ahimelech (the sonne of Achitob) whose name was Abiathar, and fled after Dauid, and tolde him, that Saul had slayne y<sup>e</sup> prestes of the LORDE. Dauid sayde vnto Abiathar: I knewe well the same daye that Doeg the Edomite was there, that he wolde tell Saul. I am giltye of the soules of thy fathers house. Abyde thou with me, and feare not. He that layeth wayte for my lyfe, shall laye wayte for thyne also, and thou shalt be preserued with me.

The xxij. Chapter.

AND it was tolde Dauid: Beholde, the Philistynes fight against Cegila, and spoyle the barnes. Then Dauid axed at the LORDE, and sayde: Shal I go, & smyte these Philistynes? And the LORDE sayde vnto Dauid: Go thy waye, thou shalt smyte the Philistynes, and delyuer Cegila. But y<sup>e</sup> men that were with Dauid, sayde vnto him: Beholde, we are here in feare in Iewry, and shall we go to Cegila vnto the hoost of the Philistynes? Thē Dauid axed at the LORDE agayne. And the LORDE answered him, and sayde: Vp, get the downe to Cegila, for I wil delyuer the Philistynes in to thy hande.

So Dauid wente with his men vnto Cegila, and foughte agaynst the Philistynes, & droue awaye their catell, and smote them with a greate slaughter. Thus Dauid delyuered them of Cegila. For when Abiathar the sonne of Ahimelech fled vnto Dauid at Cegila, he bare downe the ouerbody cote with him.

And Saul caused for to call all the people downe to ¶ battaill vnto Cegila, ¶ they might besege Dauid and his men. But whan Dauid perceaued ¶ Saul intēded euell against him, he saide vnto Abiathar ¶ prest: Brynge me hither the ouerbody cote. And Dauid sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, thy seruauent hath herde, that Saul goeth aboute to come for to destroye the cite of Cegila for my sake. Shal the citysens of Cegila deliuer me ouer in to his handes? And shal Saul come downe, as thy seruauent hath herde? Tell thy seruauent this, O LORDE God of Israel. And the LORDE saide: He shal come downe.

¶ Dauid sayde: Shall the citysens of Cegila deliuer me and my men in to Sauls handes? The LORDE sayde: Yee. Thē Dauid gat him vp with his mē, of whom there were vpon a sixe hundreth, ¶ walked whither they coulede. Now whan it was tolde Saul that Dauid was escaped from Cegila, he let his iourney stonde. As for Dauid, he remayned in the wildernes in the castell, and abode vpon the mount in the wildernes of Siph. But Saul soughte him as longe as he lyued. Neuertheles God gaue him not in to his handes. And Dauid sawe, that Saul was gone forth to seke after his life. But Dauid was in the wildernes of Siph, in the wodd.

Then Ionathas the sonne of Saul gat him vp, and wētē vnto Dauid in to the wod, and strengthened his hande in God, and sayde vnto him: Feare not, my father Sauls hande shal not finde ¶: and thou shalt be kyng ouer Israel, so will I be the nexte vnto the. And ¶ my father knoweth right well. *And they made a couenaunt both together before the LORDE. And Dauid remayned in the wodd. As for Ionathas, he wente home agayne.

But the †Siphites wente vp to Saul vnto Gibeath, and sayde: Is not Dauid hyd with vs in the castell in ¶ wodd, vpon mouit Hachila, which lyeth on the righte hande of the wilderness? Let the kyng come downe now therefore accordinge to all the desyre of his hert, and we wyll deliuer him in to the kynges hande. Then sayde Saul: Blessed be ye of the LORDE, that ye haue had pytie vpon me: Go youre waye now therefore, and be sure, that ye maye knowe and se in what place his fete haue bene, and who hath sene him there: for it is tolde me, that he is full of sotiltey. Loke well and spye out all the places, where he hydeth him, and come agayne to me, whan ye are sure, and I will go with you. Yf he be in the londe, I wyl enquire after him amonge all the thousandes in Iuda.

Then gat they them vp, and wente their waye vnto Siph before Saul. But Dauid and his men were in the wyldernes of Maō, euen in the felde on the righte hande of the wildernes. Now whan Saul wente thither with his men to seke him, it was tolde Dauid and he gat him downe to the rocke, and abode in the wilderness of Mahon. Whan Saul herde that, he folowed after Dauid in the wilderness of Mahon. And Saul with his men wente on the one syde of the hyll: Dauid with his men on ¶ other syde of ¶ hill. But whan Dauid made haist to escape from Saul, Saul with his men compased aboute Dauid and his men, that he might take thē. † Neuertheles there came a messaūger vnto Saul, and sayde: Make haist and come, for the Philistynes are fallē in to the londe. Thē Saul turned him from chacyngē of Dauid, and wente agaynst the Philistynes. Therefore is ¶ place called ¶ Sela Mahelkoth. And Dauid wente vp from thence, and abode in the castell at En Gaddi.

The cccij. Chapter.

NOW whan Saul came agayne from the Philistines, it was tolde him: Beholde, Dauid is in the wyldernes of Engaddi. And Saul toke thre thousande chosen men out of all Israel, and wente to seke Dauid with his men vpon the stony rockes of the wylde goates. And whan he came to the shepe foldes by ¶ waye, there was a caue, and Saul wente in to ¶ couer his fete. But Dauid and his men sat behinde within the caue.

Then sayde Dauids men vnto him: Lo, this is the daye, wherof the LORDE thy God hath sayde vnto the: Beholde, I wyll deliuer thyne enemye in to thy hande, that thou mayest do with him what it pleaseth the. And Dauid stode vp, ¶ cut of the tyype of Sauls garment quyetly. Neuertheles it smote him afterwarde in his hert, because he had cut of the tpype of Sauls garment, and sayde vnto his men: The LORDE let that be farre from me, that I shulde do it, & laye my hande vpon my lorde the LORDES anoynted: for he is y anoynted of the LORDE. And Dauid withelde his seruantes with wordes, & suffred thē not to ryse vp agaynst Saul.

But whan Saul gat him vp out of the caue, and was goinge his waye, Dauid rose vp also after him, and wente out of the caue, and cried behynde Saul, & sayde: My lorde the kyng. And Saul loked behynde him. And Dauid bowed downe his face to the earth, and worshipped, and sayde vnto Saul: Why herkenest thou vnto the wordes of men, that saye: Dauid seketh thy mysfortune? Beholde, thine eyes se this daye that the LORDE gaue the in to my hande in the caue, and I was counceled to slaye the: Neuertheles thou wast fauoured, for I sayde: I wil not laye my hande vpon my lorde, for he is the LORDES anoynted. Beholde, my father the tpype of thy garment in my hande, that I wolde not slaye the, whan I cut of the tpype of thy garment. Knowe and se, y there is no euell ner trespase in my hande: nether haue I offended the, and thou folowest after my soule, to take it awaye. The LORDE shal be iudge betwene me and the, and auenge me on the, but my hāde shal not be vpon the, acordinge as it is sayde after the olde prouerbe: Vngodlynnes commeth of the vngodly: but my hande shal not be vpon the. Whom persecutest thou O kyng of Israel, whom persecutest thou? a deed dogg? a flee? The LORDE be iudge, and geue sentence betwene me and the, and cōsidre it, and defende my cause, and delyuer me from thy hande.

Now whan Dauid had spoken out these wordes vnto Saul, Saul saide: *Is not this thy voyce my sonne Dauid? And Saul lifte vp his voyce, and wepte, and saide vnto Dauid: Thou art more righteous then I: for thou hast recompēsed me good, but I haue rewarded the euell. And this daye hast thou shewed me how thou hast done me good, for so moch as y LORDE hath delyuered me in to thy hande, and thou neuertheles hast not slaine me. What is he, which yf he fynde his enemye, wyl let him go in a good waye? The LORDE rewarde the good for y thou hast done vnto me this daye. Beholde now, I knowe that thou shalt be kyng, & the kyngdome of Israel stondeth in thy hande: sweare now therfore vnto me by the LORDE, y thou shalt not rote out my sede after me, nether destroie my name out of my fathers house. And Dauid sware vnto Saul. Then wente Saul home, but Dauid gat him vp with his men vnto the castell.

The xrb. Chapter.

AND Samuel dyed, and all Israel gathered them selues together, mourned for him, & buried him in his house at Ramath. As for Dauid, he rose, and wente downe in to the wyldernes of Paran. And there was a man at Maon, and his possession at Carmel, and the man was of greate power, and had three thousande shepe, and a thousande goates. And it fortuneth that he clypped his shepe at Carmel, and his name was Nabal, but his wyues name was Abigail, and she was a woman of good vnderstandinge, & bewtyfull of face. But the man was harde, and wicked in his doynge, and was one of Caleb.

Now whan Dauid herde in the wyldernes y Nabal clypped his shepe, he sent out ten yonge men, & saide vnto them: Go vp vnto Carmel, & whan ye come to Nabal, salute him frendly on my behalfe, & saye: Good lucke, peace be with the & thine house, & with all y thou hast. I haue herde saye that thou hast shepe clyppers. Now thy shepherdes whom thou hast, haue bene with vs, we haue done them no dishonoure, and they wāted nothinge of their nombre, as longe as they were at Carmel: Axe thy yonge men, they shal tell the, and let thy yonge men fynde fauoure in thy sighte: for we are come in a good daye, geue thy seruantes & thy sonne Dauid what thy hande fyndeth.

And whā Dauids yonge men came, and spake all these wordes on Dauids behalfe vnto Nabal, they lefte of. But Nabal answered Dauids seruantes, & sayde: What is he y Dauid? & who is the sonne of Isai? There are many seruantes now y runne awaye from their masters. Shulde I take my bred, water and flesh, that I haue slayne for my clyppers, & geue it vnto mē whom I knowe not whence they are?

Thē Dauids yonge mē turned their waye agayne. And whan they came agayne vnto him, they tolde him all these wordes. Thē sayde Dauid vnto his men: Euery man gyrd his swerde aboute him. And euery one gyrd his swerde aboute him. And Dauid gyrd his swerde aboute him also, and then wēte vp after him vpon a four hundred men, but two hundred remayned with the stuffe.

Neuertheles one of the yonge men tolde Abigail Nabals wife, and sayde: Beholde, Dauid sent messaungers out of the wyldernes to blesse oure lorde, Notwithstandinge he was fearede vpō them, and yet haue they bene very profitable men vnto vs, and haue done vs no dishonoure, and we wanted none of the nombre as lōge as we walked with them, when we were in the felde: but they haue bene oure wall daye and nighte, as longe as we kepte the shepe by them. Take hede now therefore, and lōke well what thou doest, for there is surely a mysfortune at hande agaynst oure lorde, & agaynst all his house. And he is a man of Belial, to whom no man darre saye eny thinge. Then Abigail made haist, and toke two hundred loaves of bred, and two botels of wyne, and fyue shepe ready dighte, and fyue measures of firmentye, and an hundred frayles of rasens, and two hundred frayles of fygges, & layed them vpō asses, and sayde to hir yonge men: Go ye youre waye before me, beholde, I wyl come after. And she tolde Nabal hir housbāde nothinge therof. And as she rode vpō the asse, and wente downe in the shadowe of f̄hill, beholde, Dauid & his mē met hir downe, so that she came vpon them.

But Dauid sayde: Wel, all that this man had in f̄wyldernes, haue I kepte for naughte, so that there wanted nothinge of all that he had, and he rewardeth me euell for good. God do this and yet more vnto the enemies of Dauid, yf vntyll tomorow in the mornynge I leaue this man (of all that he hath) so moch as one that maketh water agaynst f̄wall. Now whan Abigail sawe Dauid, she lighte downe from the asse in all the haist, and fell vpō hir face before Dauid, and worshiped him to the grounde, and fell at his fete, and sayde: Oh my lorde, let this trespass be myne, and let thy handmayde speake before thine eares, and heare the wordes of thy handmayden: Let not my lorde set his hert agaynst this Nabal the man of Belial, for he is a foole, acordinge as his name is called: his name is foole, and foolishnes is with him. As for me thy handmayde, I sawe not my lordes yonge men, whom thou dyddest sende.

But now my lorde, as truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, the LORDE hath kepte the backe, f̄thou shuldest not come agaynst bloude, and he hath deliuered thine hande.

Thine enemyes be now as Nabal, and so be they that wolde my lorde euell. Here is f̄blessynge, f̄thy handmayde hath brought my lorde, take it, and geue it vnto the yonge men, that walke vnder my lorde. For a sure house shal f̄LORDE make my lorde, which fighteth the fighte of the LORDE, and no euell shall be founde in the all thy life longe. And yf eny man ryse vp to persecute f̄, and to laye wayte for thy soule, then shal the soule of my lorde be bounde in the bundell of f̄lyuynge, euen with the LORDE thy God. But f̄soule of thine enemies shalbe turned backe with the slynge. Whan the LORDE therefore doth all this good for my lorde (which he hath promysed the) and commaundeth f̄to be his Duke ouer Israel, then shal it be no stomblinge blocke ner occasion of fallynge vnto my lordes hert, that thou hast not shed bloude without a cause, and auenged thy selfe, then shal f̄LORDE do good vnto my lorde, and thou shalt thynke vpon thy handmayden.

Then saide Dauid vnto Abigail: Blessed be the LORDE God of Israel, which hath sent the to mete me this daye: and blessed be thy speach, and blessed be thou, which hast kepte me backe this daye, that I am not come agaynst bloude, to auenge me with myne awne hande. Verely (as truly as the LORDE the God of Israel lyueth, which hath hyndred me that I shulde do the no euell.) Yf thou haddest not met me in all the haist, Nabal shulde not haue had lefte him vntyll f̄lighte mornynge, so moch as one that maketh water agaynst the wall. So Dauid toke of hir hāde what she had broughte him, and sayde vnto her: Go vp in peace vnto thy house: beholde, I haue herkened vnto thy voyce, and accepted thy personne.

But whan Abigail came to Nabal, beholde, he had prepared a feast in his house like a kynges feast, and his hert was mery, for he was very drunken. And she tolde him nothinge, nether small ner greate vntyll f̄cleare mornynge. But whan it was daye, & the wyne was come from Nabal, his wife tolde him these thinges.

§ Then was his hert deed in his body, so that he became euen as a stone: and ouer ten dayes the LORDE smote him, so y he dyed. Whan Dauid herde that Nabal was deed, he sayde: Blessed be y LORDE which hath auenged my rebuke on Nabal, and preserued his seruauant from euell. And the LORDE hath rewarded Nabal that euell vpon his heade.

And Dauid sent, and caused to talke with Abigail, y he mighte take her to wife. And whan Dauids seruauentes came to Abigail vnto Carmel, they spake vnto her, and saide: Dauid hath sent vs vnto the, that he maye take y to wife. She rose vp, and worshipped vpon hir face vnto the earth, and sayde: beholde, here is thy handmayde, that she maie do seruyce vnto the seruauentes of my lorde, and to waszshe their fete. And Abigail made haist, and gat her vp, and rode vpō an asse, and fyue maydens that were vnder her, and wente after Dauids messaungers, and became his wife. Dauid toke Ahinoam of Iesrael also, and they both became his wyues. But Saul gaue Michol his daughter the wife of Dauid vnto Phalti y sonne of Lais of Gallim.

The xxvi. Chapter.

¶ THEY of Siph came to Saul vnto Gibeath, and sayde: *Is not Dauid hyd vpō the hill of Hachila, which lyeth ouer agaynst the wyldernes? Then Saul gat him vp, and wente downe to the wildernes of Siph, and thre thousande chosen men of Israel with him, to seke Dauid in the wildernes of Siph, and pitched vpon the hill of Hachila, which lyeth by the waye before the wildernes. But Dauid remayned in the wyldernes, and whan he sawe that Saul came after him in to the wildernes, he sent out spyes, and knewe of a suertie, that he was come in dede.

And Dauid gat him vp, and came to the place where Saul had pitched his tēt, and sawe the place where Saul laye with his chefe captayne †Abner y sonne of Ner: for Saul laye in the tent, and the hoost aboute him. Then answered Dauid, and sayde vnto Ahimelech the Hethite, and to Abisai the sonne of Ieru Ia y brother of Ioab: Who wil go downe with me to Saul in to the hoost? Abisai sayde: I wil go downe with the.

§ So Dauid and Abisai came to the people in the night season, and beholde, Saul laye and slepte in the tent, and his speare stacke in y grounde at his heade. But Abner and the people laye rounde aboute him. Thē sayde Abisai vnto Dauid: God hath closed thine enemye in thynne hande this daye. Therefore will I now thrust him thorow once with the speare euen in to the grounde, y he shall haue ynough of it. Neuertheles Dauid sayde vnto Abisai: Destroye him not, for who wil laye hande vpon the anoynted of y LORDE, and remayne vngiltye? Dauid sayde morouer: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, yf y LORDE him selfe smyte him not, or excepte his tyme come that he dye, or that he go in to the battayll and perishe, the LORDE let it be farre fro me, that I shulde laye my hande on the LORDES anoynted. Take y speare now therfore at his heade, and the cuppe of water, and let vs go. So Dauid toke y speare and the cuppe of water at Sauls heade, and they wente their waye. And there was no man y sawe it, ner perceaued it, nether awaked, but they slepte euery one, for there was a depe slepe fallen vpon them from the LORDE.

Now whan Dauid was come ouer on y other syde, he stode vpon the toppe of the mount a farre of (so that there was a wyde space betwene them) and cried vpon y people, and vpō Abner the sonne of Ner, and sayde: Hearrest thou not Abner? And Abner answered and sayde: Who art thou that cryest so, and diseasest the kyng? And Dauid sayde vnto Abner: Art thou not a man? And where is there soch one as thou in Israel? Why hast thou not then kepte thy lorde y kyng? for there is one of y people come in to destroye thy lorde y kyng. It is not well that thou hast done. As truly as the LORDE lyueth †ye are the children of death, because ye haue not kepte youre lorde the LORDES anoynted. Beholde now, where is y kynges speare, and the cuppe of water that was at his heade.

Then knewe Saul the voyce of Dauid, and saide: †Is not that thy voyce my sonne Dauid? Dauid sayde: It is my voyce my lorde the kyng. And he sayde morouer: Why doth my lorde so persecute his seruauant? What haue I done? and what euell is there in my hande? Yet let my lorde the kyng heare but the wordes of his seruauant? Yf y LORDE prouoke the against me, let there be smelled a meatofferynge: but yf the childrē of men do it, cursed be they before the LORDE, because they haue thrust me out this daye (that I shulde not dwell in the LORDES inheritance) and saye: Go thy waye, and serue other goddes. So fall not now my bloude vpon the earth from the face of the LORDE. For the kyng of Israel is gone forth to seke a flee, as a partriche is folowed on vpō the mountaynes.

And Saul sayde: I haue synned: Come agayne Dauid my sonne, I wil do the nomore hurte, because my soule hath bene deare in thy sighte this daye. Beholde, I haue done foolishly and very vnwisely. Dauid answered and sayde: Beholde, here is the kynges speare, let one of the yongemen come ouer here and fetch it. But the LORDE shal rewarde euery one accordinge to his rightousnes and faith, for ꝑ LORDE deliuered ꝑ this daye in to my hande: neuertheles I wolde not laie my hande vpō the LORDES anoynted. And as thy soule hath bene greatly reputed in my sighte this daye, so let ꝑ LORDE repute my soule in his sighte, & deliuer me from all trouble. Saul saide vnto Dauid: Blessed be thou Dauid my sonne, thou shalt do it, & be able. But Dauid wente his waye, and Saul turned agayne vnto his place.

The xlvij. Chapter.

DAUID thoughte in his hert: One of these dayes shal I fall in to the handes of Saul: It is better that I get me my waye in to ꝑ londe of ꝑ Philistynes, that Saul maye leaue of from sekyng me in all the coastes of Israel, so shall I escape his handes. And he gat him vp, and wente ouer (with the sixe hundred men that were with him) vnto Achis the sonne of Maach kyng of Gath. So Dauid remayned by Achis at Gath, with his mē, euery one with his housholde, and Dauid with his two wyues, Ahinoan the Ieraelitisse, and Abigail Nabals wife of Carmel. And whan worde came to Saul that Dauid was fled vnto Gath, he soughte him nomore.

And Dauid sayde vnto Achis: Yf I haue founde grace in thy sighte, then let there be geuen me a place in one of the cities of the londe, that I maye dwell therein. Wherefore shulde thy seruauit dwell in the kynges cite with the? Then Achis gaue him Siclag the same daye. Therefore belongeth Siclag to the kynges of Iuda vnto this daye. The tyme that Dauid dwelt in the londe of the Philistynes, is foure monethes.

Dauid wente vp with his men, and fell in to the londe of the Gessurites and Girsites, and *Amalechites: for these were the inhabitants of this londe of olde, as thou comdest to Sur vnto the lōde of Egipte. But whā Dauid smote ꝑ londe, †he let nether man ner woman lyue, and toke the shepe, oxen, asses, Camels and rayment, and returned and came to Achis. So whan Achis spake: Whither fell ye in to daye? Dauid sayde: Towarde the south parte of Iuda, towarde ꝑ south parte of the Ierahmieleites, ‡toward the south parte of the Kenites. But Dauid let nether man ner woman come lyuynge vnto Geth, and thoughte: They mighte peraduenture speake & reporte agaynst vs: thus dyd Dauid, and this was his maner as longe as he dwelt in ꝑ londe of the Philistynes. Therefore Achis gaue credence vnto Dauid, and thoughte: he hath made him selfe stynte before his people of Israel therefore shal he be myseruauit for euer.

The xlvij. Chapter.

IT fortunat at ꝑ same tyme, that the Philistynes gathered their hoost together to the battayll, to go agaynst Israel. And Achis sayde vnto Dauid: Thou shalt knowe, that thou and thy men shal go forth with me in the hoost. Dauid sayde vnto Achis: Well, thou shalt se what thy seruauit shal do. Achis saide vnto Dauid: Therefore wyll I ordene the to be the keper of my heade as longe as I lyue. †As for Samuel, he was deed, and all ꝑ people had mourned for him, & buried him in his cite Ramath. ‡So Saul had dryuen the soithsayers and expounders of tokens out of ꝑ londe. Now whan the Philistynes gathered them selues together, and came and pitched their tentes at Sunem, Saul gathered all the people together, & they pitched at Gilboa. But whan Saul sawe the hoost of the Philistynes, he was afrayed, and his hert was discouraged, and he axed counsell at the LORDE. But ꝑ LORDE gaue him no answer, nether by dreames, ner by the †lighte, ner by prophetes.

The sayde Saul vnto his seruauantes: Seke me a womā which hath a sprete of soithsayēge, that I maye go vnto her, and axe at her. His seruantes sayde vnto him: Beholde, at Endor is there a woman, which hath a sprete of soythsayenge. And Saul chaunged his clothes, and put on other, and wente his waye and two men with him, and came by nighte vnto the woman, and sayde: Prophecie vnto me (I pray the) thorow the sprete of soythsayenge, and brynge me him vp whom I shal name vnto the. The womā saide vnto him: Beholde, thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath roted out the soythsayers & witches from the londe, wherfore wilt thou brynge my soule then in to ŷ nett, that I maye be slayne? But Saul sware vnto her by ŷ LORDE, and sayde: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, there shall no harme happen vnto the for this. Then sayde ŷ woman: Whom shal I brynge vp vnto the? He sayde: Brynge me vp Samuel.

Now whan ŷ woman sawe Samuel, she cryed loude, and sayde vnto Saul: Wherfore hast thou begyled me? Thou art Saul. And the kyng sayde vnto her: Feare not, what seist thou? The woman sayde vnto Saul: I se goddes cōmyngē vp out of ŷ earth? He sayde: How is he shapened? She sayde: There commeth vp an olde man, and is clothed with a longe garment. Then perceaued Saul that it was Samuel, & bowed him selfe downe with his face to the grounde, and worshiped him.

Samuel saide vnto Saul: Why hast thou disquyeted me, to cause me be broughte vp? Saul sayde: I am sore troubled, the Philistynes fighte against me, & God is departed fro me, & geueth me no answer, nether by prophetes ner by dreames: therefore haue I called the, ŷ thou mightest shewe me, what I shal do. Samuel sayde: What wilt thou axe at me, seynge the LORDE is departed from the, and is become thine enemye? The LORDE shal do vnto the euen as he spake by me, *and shall plucke the kyngdome out of thy hande, and geue it vnto Dauid thy neighbour, because thou hast not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE, ner performed the displeasure of his wrath agaynst Amalek. Therefore hath the LORDE done this now vnto the. Morouer the LORDE shal delyuer Israel with the also in to the handes of the Philistynes: †tomorow shalt thou and thy sonnes be with me. And the hoost of Israel shal the LORDE delyuer in to the handes of the Philistynes. Then fell Saul immediatly vnto the earth, for he coulde not stonde, and was sore afraied at these wordes of Samuel, so that there was nomore strength in him: for he had eaten no bred all that daye and all that night.

And the woman wente in to Saul, & sawe that he was sore vexed, and sayde vnto him: Beholde, thy handmayde hath herkened vnto thy voyce, and I haue put my soule in my hande, so that I haue herkened vnto thy wordes which thou spakest vnto me. Therefore folowe thou also the voyce of thy handmayde. I wil set a morsell of bred before the to eate, that thou mayest come to thy strength, & go thy waye. But he refused, and sayde, I wil not eate. Then his seruantes & the woman cōpelled him, so that he herkened vnto their voyce.

And he rose vp from ŷ grounde, and sat vpon the bed. The woman had a fat calfe at home, so she made haist, and kyled it, and toke meell and dyd kneet it, and baked swete cakes, & broughte them forth before Saul, & before his seruantes. And whan they had eaten, they stode vp, and wēte their waye ŷ nighte.

The xxii. Chapter.

THE Philistynes gathered all their armies together at Aphek. But Israel pitched at Ain in Iesrael. And the prynces of the Philistynes wēte forth with hundreds and with thousandes, but Dauid and his men wēte behynde with Achis. Thē sayde the prynces of the Philistynes: What shal these Hebrues do? Achis saide vnto thē: Is not this Dauid ŷ seruauent of Saul kyng of Israel, which hath bene with me now yeares and dayes, & I haue founde no euell in him sence the tyme that he fell to me vnto this daye? †Neuertheles the prynces of ŷ Philistynes were wroth at him, & sayde vnto him: Let the man turne backe agayne, & abyde in his place, ŷ which thou hast appoynted him, that he go not downe with vs to ŷ batayll, and become oure aduersary in ŷ felde. For wherin coulde he better do his lorde a pleasure, thē in the heades of these men? Is not this Dauid, of whom they sunge in the daunce: †Saul hath smyttē his thousande, but Dauid his ten thousande? Then Achis called Dauid, and sayde vnto him: As truly as the LORD lyueth, I take the for an honest man, and thy out goynge and ingoynge with me in ȝ hoost pleaseth me well, and no euell haue I marked in the, sence ȝ tyme that thou camest to me vnto this daye. But thou pleasest not the prynces. Returne now therfore, and go thy waye in peace, that thou do no euell in the sighte of the prynces of ȝ Philistynes.

Dauid sayde: What haue I done, ȝ what hast thou marked in thy seruauit, sence ȝ tyme that I haue bene in thy presence vnto this daye, that I shulde not come and fighte agaynst the enemies of my lorde the kyng? Achis answered and sayde vnto Dauid: I knowe well that thou pleasest myne eyes euē as an angell of God. But the prynces of ȝ Philistynes haue sayde: Let him not go vp with vs vnto the batayll. Get the vp therfore tomorrow by tymes, and thy lordes seruauentes which are come with the. And whan ye haue gotten you vp early in the mornynge, whan it is lighte, go youre waye. So Dauid ȝ his men gat them vp early, to go their waye in the mornynge, and to come agayne in to the londe of the Philistynes. But the Philistynes wente vp towarde Iesrael.

The xxx. Chapter.

NOW whan Dauid came to Siclag on the thirde daie with his men, the Amalechites had fallē in on ȝ south parte and at Siclag, and had smytten Siclag, and burned it with fyre, and had caried awaye the wemē out of it, both small ȝ greate. Neuertheles they had slayne no man, but dryuen thē thence, and were goynge on their waye. Now whan Dauid with his men came to the cite, and sawe that it was brent with fyre, and that their wyues, sonnes ȝ daughters were led awaye captyue, Dauid and the people that was with him lefte vp their voyce, and wepte so longe tyll they coulde wepe nomore. For Dauids two wyues also were caried awaye captyue, Ahinoam ȝ Iesraelitisse, and Abigail Nabals wife of Carmel. And Dauid was very soroufull, for the people wolde haue stoned him: for ȝ soule of all the people was in greате heynes, euery one ouer his sonnes and daughters.

Neuertheles Dauid strengthened him selfe in the LORD his God, ȝ sayde vnto Abiathar

ȝ prest the sonne of Ahimelech: *Bringe me hither the ouerbody cote. And whan Abiathar had broughte the ouerbody cote vnto Dauid, Dauid axed at the LORD, and sayde: Shal I folowe vpon the men of warre, and shal I ouertake them? He sayde: Yee, folowe vpō them, thou shalt ouertake them, and shalt rescue the pray. Then wente Dauid his waye, and the sixe hūdreth men that were with him. And whan they came to the ryuer of Besor, some stode styll. But Dauid and the foure hūdreth men folowed after: As for the two hūdreth men that stode styll, they had bene slowe to go ouer the ryuer of Besor.

And they founde a man of Egipte vpon the felde, him they broughte vnto Dauid, ȝ gaue him bred to eate, and water to drynke, and gaue him a quantite of fygges, ȝ two quantites of rasyns. And whan he had eaten, his sprete came to him againe: for in thre dayes and thre nightes he had eatē no bred, and dronke no water.

Dauid sayde vnto him: Whose art thou? ȝ whence art thou? He sayde: I am a childe of Egipte, an Amalechites seruauit, ȝ my master hath forsaken me, because I was sicke thre dayes a goo. We fell here in towarde ȝ south syde of Chrethus, and vpon Iuda, and towarde ȝ south parte of Caleb, ȝ haue burned Siclag with fyre.

Dauid sayde vnto him: Wilt thou bringe me downe to these men of warre? He sayde: Sweare vnto me by God, ȝ thou shalt not slaye me, ner delyuer me in to my masters hāde, and I wil brynge the downe to these mē of warre. And he broughte thē downe, and beholde, they were scatred vpon all ȝ grounde, eatinge and drynkyng, and kepyng holy daye, and were makinge mery chere, because of all the greате spoyles that they had taken out of the londe of the Philistynes and of Iuda.

And Dauid smote them from ȝ morow tyll the euen, agaynst the nexte daye, so that there escaped none, excepte foure hūdreth yonge men, which rode vpon camels, ȝ fled. So Dauid rescued all that the Amalechites had taken, and his two wyues, ȝ there myssed nothinge, nether small ner greate, nether sonnes ner daughters, ner spoyles: and what so euer they had taken, Dauid broughte all agayne. And Dauid toke the shepe and oxē, and droue  $\hat{y}$  catell before him. And they sayde: This is Dauids spoyle.

And whan Dauid came to the two hundreth men, which had bene slowe to folowe after Dauid, and abode at the ryuer of Besor, they wente forth to mete Dauid, and the people  $\hat{y}$  was with him. And Dauid came to the people, and saluted them frendly.

$\text{¶}$  Then answered soch men as were euell  $\text{¶}$  Belials men (amonge them that had gone with Dauid) and sayde: Seynge they wente not with vs, they shal haue none of the spoyles that we haue rescued: but let euery mā take his wife  $\text{¶}$  his children and be goynge.

Then sayde Dauid: Ye shall not do so (my brethren) with that which  $\hat{y}$  LORDE hath geuen vs, and hath preserued vs, and delyuered these men of warre (which were come agaynst vs) in to oure hādes. Who shulde cōsente vnto you herin? like as the porcion is of them that wente downe to the battayll, so shal  $\hat{y}$  porcion be of them also that a bode with the stuffe,  $\text{¶}$  shalbe deuyded a lyke.

$\text{¶}$  From that tyme forth hath this bene an ordinance  $\text{¶}$  lawe in Israel vnto this daye. And whan Dauid came to Siclag, he sent of the spoyle vnto the Elders in Iuda his neighbours, and sayde: Beholde, there haue ye the blessinge out of the spoyle of the enemies of the LORDE, namely vnto them of Bethel, vnto them at Ramath in the south, vnto them at Iathir, vnto them at Aroer, vnto them at Siphamoth, vnto them at Eschemoa, vnto them at Rachal, vnto them in the cities of the Ierahmielites, vnto them in the cities of the Kenites, vnto them at Horna, vnto thē at Borasan, vnto thē at Atach, vnto them at Hebron, and vnto all the places where Dauid had walked with his men.

The xxi. Chapter.

$\text{¶}$  BUT  $\hat{y}$  \*Philistynes foughte against Israel, and the men of Israel fled before the Philistynes, and fell downe smytten vpon the mount Gilboa. And the Philistynes preassed vpon Saul and his sonnes, and slewe Ionathas,  $\text{¶}$  Abinadab and Malchisua the sonnes of Saul. And the battayll was sore agaynst Saul,  $\text{¶}$  the archers fell vpon him with bowes, and he was sore wounded of the archers.

Then sayde Saul vnto his wapēbearer: Drawe out thy swerde, and thrust it thorow me, that these vncircumcised come not and slaie me, and make a laughinge stocke of me. Neuertheles his wapenbearer wolde not, for he was sore afrayed. Then toke Saul  $\hat{y}$  swerde, and fell therin. Now whan his wapenbearer sawe that Saul was deed, he fell also vpon his swerde, and dyed with him. Thus dyed Saul and his thre sonnes,  $\text{¶}$  his wapenbearer, and all his men together the same daye.

Whan  $\hat{y}$  men of Israel which were beyonde the valley, and beyonde Iordane, sawe,  $\hat{y}$  the men of Israel were fled, and that Saul and his sonnes were deed, they lefte  $\hat{y}$  cities, and fled also. Then came the Philistynes,  $\text{¶}$  dwelt therin.

$\text{¶}$  On the nexte daye came the Philistynes to spoyle  $\hat{y}$  slayne, and founde Saul and his thre sonnes lyenge vpon mount Gilboa, and smote of his heade, and toke of his harnesse, and sent it in to the lande of the Philistynes rounde aboute, to shewe it in the house of their Idols, and amonge the people,  $\text{¶}$  layed his harnesse in  $\hat{y}$  house of Astaroth: but his body hanged they vp vpō the wall of Bethsan.

Whan they of Iabes in Gilead herde, what the Philistynes had done vnto Saul, they gat them vp, as many as were men of armes, and wente all the nighte, and toke  $\hat{y}$  body of Saul, and the bodies of his sonnes from  $\hat{y}$  wall of Bethsan, broughte thē to Iabes,  $\text{¶}$  and brent them there, and toke their bones, and buried them vnder  $\hat{y}$  tre at Iabes,  $\text{¶}$  fasted seue dayes.

AFTER  $\text{ḡ}$  death of Saul whan Dauid was come agayne from the  $\text{ḡ}$  slaughter of  $\text{ḡ}$  Amalechites, and had remayned two dayes at Siclag, beholde, on the thirde daye there came a man out of Sauls hoost, with his clothes rente, and earth vpon his heade. And whan he came vnto Dauid, he fell downe to the grounde, and worshipped. Dauid sayde vnto him: Whence comest thou? He sayde vnto him: Out of the hoost of Israel am I fled. Dauid sayde vnto him: Tell me, what is the matter? He sayde: the people is fled from the battayll, and many of the people are fallen: Yee and Saul also is deed and his sonne Ionathas. Dauid sayde vnto the yonge mā that brought him this worde: How knowest thou that Saul and Ionathas his sonne are deed? The yonge man  $\text{ḡ}$  tolde him this, sayde: I came by chaunce vnto mount Gelboa, and beholde, Saul leaned vpon his speare,  $\text{ḡ}$  the charettes and horsmē folowed harde after him: and he turned him aboute, and sawe me, and called me. And I sayde: Here, am I. And he sayde vnto me: What art thou? I sayde vnto him: I am an Amalechite. And he saide vnto me: Come to me, and kyll me, for anguysh hath gotten holde of me: for my life is yet whole within me. Then stepte I to him and slewe him, for I knowe well that he coulede not lyue after his fall. And I toke the crowne from his heade, and the armelet frō his arme, and haue broughte it here vnto  $\text{ḡ}$  my lorde. Then toke Dauid holde of his clothes, \* and rente them, and so dyd all the mē that were with him,  $\text{ḡ}$  mourned, and wepte, and fasted vntyll the euen, ouer Saul  $\text{ḡ}$  Ionathas his sonne, and ouer the people of the LORDE, and ouer the house of Israel, because they were fallen thorow the swerde.

And Dauid sayde to the yonge man that broughte him worde: What art thou? He sayde: I am  $\text{ḡ}$  sonne of a straunger an Amalechite. Dauid sayde: How happeneth it that thou wast not afrayed to laye thine hāde vpon the LORDES anointed to destroye him? And Dauid sayde vnto one of his yonge men: Come hither, and slaye him. And he smote him that he dyed. Then sayde Dauid vnto him: Thy bloude be vpon thyne owne heade. † For thy mouth hath spoken against thyselfe and sayde: I haue slayne the anyoynted of the LORDE. And Dauid mourned this lamentacion ouer Saul and Ionathas his sonne, and commaunded to teach the childrē of Iuda the bowe. Beholde, it is writen in the boke of the righteous.

The ij. Chapter.

AFTER these actes Dauid †axed at the LORDE, and sayde: Shall I go vp in to one of the cities of Iuda? And the LORDE sayde vnto him: Go vp. Dauid sayde: Whither? He sayde: Vnto Hebron. So Dauid wente thither with his two wyues, Ahinoam the Iesraelitisse, and Abigail Nabals wyfe of Carmel. And Dauid broughte vp the men that were with him also, euery one with his housholde, and they dwelt in the cities of Hebron. And ſ men of Iuda came, and there they anointed him kynge ouer the house of Iuda.

And whā it was tolde Dauid, ſ that they of Iabes in Gilead had buried Saul, he sent messaungers vnto them, sayenge: Blessed be ye of the LORDE, that ye haue done soch mercy vpon youre lorde Saul, and haue buried him. The LORDE therefore shewe mercy now and faithfulness vpon you. And because ye haue done this, I also wyll do you good. Let youre hāde now therefore be comforted, and be ye stronge: for though Saul youre lorde be deed, yet hath the house of Iuda chosen me to be kynge ouer them.

But Abner the sonne of Ner, which was Sauls chefe captayne, toke Iszboseth the sonne of Saul, and broughte him thorow the hoost, and made him kynge ouer Gilead, Assuri, Iesrael, Ephraim, Ben Iamin and ouer all Israel. And Iszboseth the sonne of Saul was fourtye yeare olde, whan he was made kynge of Israel, † he reigned two yeares. But the house of Iuda helde with Dauid: ¶ The tyme ſ Dauid was kynge at Hebron oner the house of Iuda, was seuen yeare and sixe monethes longe.

And Abner the sonne of Ner wēte forth with the seruantes of Iszboseth the sonne of Saul, out of ſ hoost vnto Gibeon. And Ioab the sonne of Zeru Ia wēte forth with Dauids seruantes, and they met together by the pole at Gibeon, and these laye on the one syde of the pole, the other on the other syde. And Abner sayde vnto Ioab: Let the yonge mē get them vp, and playe before vs. Ioab sayde: Let them aryse. Then gat they them vp, † wente in nombre twolue of Ben Iamin on Iszboseth Sauls sonnes syde, and twolue of Dauids seruantes. And euery one gat another by the heade, and thrust his swerde in his syde, and fell together: therefore is the place called Helkath hazurim (that is, the felde of the Worthies) which is at Gibeon.

And there arose a sore harde battayll the same daye. But Abner and the men of Israel were put to flighte of Dauids seruantes. Three sonnes of Zeru Ia were there, Ioab, Abisai † Asahel. As for Asahel, he was lighte of fete as a Roo in ſ felde, † folowed after Abner, and turned not asyde nether to the righte hande ner to ſ lefte from Abner. Then Abner turned him aboute, and sayde: Art thou Asahel? He sayde: Yee. Abner sayde vnto him: Go thy waye ether to the righte hande or to the lefte, and get the one of ſ yonge men, and take his harness from him. Neuertheles he wolde not leaue of frō him. Then sayde Abner agayne to Asahel: Get the awaye from me, why wilt thou that I smyte the to the grounde? and how darre I lifte vp my face before thy brother Ioab? Howbeit he wolde not go his waye.

Then Abner thrust him in with a speare in to his bely, so that the speare wēte out behynde him. And there he fell and dyed before him: and who so came to the place where Asahel laye deed, stode styll there. But Ioab and Abisai folowed vpon Abner, till the sonne wente downe. And whan they came to þy hyll of Anna, which lieth before Giah, by þy waye to the wildernes of Gibeon, the children of Ben Iamin gathered them selues together behynde Abner, and grewe to a multitude, and stode vpon the toppe of an hyll.

And Abner called vnto Ioab, and sayde: Shal the swerde the deuoure without ende? Knowest thou not, that it wyll be bytter at the last? How longe wil it be or thou saie vnto the people, that they leaue of from their brethre? Ioab sayde: As truly as God lyueth yf thou haddest sayde thus daye in the morninge, the people had ceased euery one from his brother. And Ioab blew the trompet, & all the people stode still, and folowed nomore vpon Israel, nether foughte they eny more.

Abner and his men wente all that same night ouer the playne felde, and passed ouer Iordane, & walked thorow all Bithron, and came to the tentes. Ioab turned him from Abner, and gathered all þy people together. And of Dauids seruautes there myssed nyntene men, and Asahel. But Dauids seruautes had smytten so amonge Ben Iamin and the men of Abner, that thre hundreth and thre score men were deed. And they toke vp Asahel, and buried him in his fathers graue at Bethleem. And Ioab with his men wete all that night: and at the breake of the daie they came vnto Hebron.

The iij. Chapter.

AND there was a longe battayll betwene the house of Saul and the house of Dauid. But Dauid wente and increased, and the house of Saul wente and mynished. And vnto Dauid were children borne at Hebron. His firstborne sonne Ammon of Ahinoam the Iesraelitisse: the seconde Chileab of Abigail the wyfe of Nabal of Carmel: the thirde Absalon the sonne of Maacha the daughter of Thalmay kynge of Gessur: the fourth Adonia the sonne of Hagith: the fyfth Saphatia the sonne of Abital: þy sixte Iethream of Eglia Dauids wife. These were borne vnto Dauid at Hebron.

Now whan it was warre betwene the house of Saul & the house of Dauid, Abner strengthened Sauls house. And Saul had had a concubyne, whose name was Rispa the daughter of Aia. And Iszboseth sayde vnto Abner: Wherefore liest thou with my fathers concubyne? B

Then was Abner very wroth at these wordes of Iszboseth, and sayde: Am I a dogges heade then, that I agaynst Iuda do mercy vnto the house of Saul thy father, and vnto his brethren and kynsfolkes? and haue not deliuered the in to þy hande of Dauid, and thou layest a trespass to my charge this daye for a womans sake? God do Abner this and that, yf I do not * as the LORDE hath sworne vnto Dauid, that the kyngdome maye be taken fro the house of Saul, and þy seate of Dauid set vp ouer Israel and Iuda, from Dan vnto Berseba. Then coulde he not answer him one worde agayne, he feared him so.

And Abner sent messangers vnto Dauid, sayenge: Whose is the londe? And sayde: Make thy couenaunt with me. Beholde, my hande shall be with the, to turne all Israel vnto the.

He sayde: Wel, I wyll make a couenaunt with the, but one thyng I desyre of the, that thou se not my face, excepte thou brynge me first Michol Sauls daughter, whan thou comdest to se my face. Dauid sent messangers also vnto Iszboseth the sonne of Saul, sayenge: † Geue me my wyfe Michol, whom I married with an hundreth foreszkimmes of the Philistynes. Iszboseth sent, and caused for to take her from the man † Palthiel the sonne of Lais. And hir huszbande wente with her, and wepte behynde her vnto Bahurim. Then sayde Abner vnto him: Turne backe agayne, and go thy waye. And he turned backe agayne. C

And Abner talked with the Elders in Israel, and sayde: Your myndes haue bene set afore tyme and longe a goo vpon Dauid, that he mighte be kynge ouer you, do it now therefore, for þy LORDE hath sayde of Dauid: I wil deliuer my people of Israel by the hãde of Dauid my seruaunt, from the hande of the Philistynes, and from the hande of all their enemies.

Abner spake also before the eares of Ben Iamin, and wente to speake before the eares of Dauid at Hebron all that Israel and the whole house of Ben Iamin was contente withall. Now whan Abner came to Hebron vnto Dauid, and twety men with him, Dauid made them a D feast. And Abner sayde vnto Dauid: I wyll get me vp, and go gather all Israel together to my lorde the kyng, and that they maye make a couenaut with the, that thou mayest be kyng, at thy soules desyre.

So Dauid let Abner go from him in peace. And beholde, Dauid seruantes and Ioab came from the men of warre, and broughte a greate spoyle with them. And Abner was not now with Dauid at Hebron, for he had sent him from him, so that he was gone his waye in peace.

But whan Ioab and all the hoost with him was come, it was tolde him that Abner the sonne of Ner came to the kyng, and how he had sent him fro him, so that he was gone his waye in peace. Then wente Ioab in to the kyng, and sayde: What hast thou done? Beholde, Abner came to the, why hast thou sent him from the, that he is gone his waye? Knowest thou not Abner the sonne of Ner? For he came to the to disceau the, that he mighte knowe thy outgoynge, and ingoynge, and to spie out all that thou doest. And whan Ioab wente out from Dauid, he sent messaügers after Abner, to fetch him agayne from Boharsira, and Dauid knewe not therof. Now whan Abner came agayne vnto Hebron, Ioab brought him in to the middes vnder the gate, to talke with him secretly, and thrust him there in to the bely that he dyed, because of his brother Asahels bloude.

Whan Dauid knewe of it thereafter, he sayde: I am vngilty, and so is my kyngdome for euer before the LORDE concernyng the bloude of Abner the sonne of Ner: but vpon the heade of Ioab fall it, and vpon all his fathers house, and in the house of Ioab there ceasse not one to haue a rennyng yssue and a leprosy, and to go vpon a staffe, and fall thorow the swerde, and to haue scarresse of bred. Thus Ioab and his brother Abisai slewe Abner, because he had slayne their brother Asahel in the battaill at Gibeon.

Dauid sayde vnto Ioab and to all the people that was with him: Rente youre clothes, and gyrd sack cloth aboute you, and make lamentacion for Abner. And the kyng wente after the Bere. And whan they buryed Abner at Hebron, the kyng lifte vp his voyce, and wepte besyde Abners graue, and all the people wepte also.

And the kyng mourned for Abner, and sayde: Abner is not deed as a foole dyeth. Thy handes were not bounde, thy fete were not vexed with fetters, thou art fallen as a man falleth before wicked vnthriftes. Then all the people bewayled him yet more.

Now whan all the people came in to eate with Dauid, whyle it was yet hie daye, Dauid sware, and sayde: God do this and that vnto me, yf I taist ether bred or oughte els afore the Sonne go downe. And all the people knewe it, and it pleased them well all that the kyng dyd in the sighte of all the people. And all the people and all Israel perceaued the same daye, that it came not of the kyng, that Abner the sonne of Ner was slayne. And the kyng sayde vnto his seruantes: Knowe ye not that this daye a prync and a greate man is fallen in Israel? As for me, I am yet but tender and anoynted kyng. But the men the children of Zeru Ia are to harde for me. The LORDE recompence him that doth euell, accordinge to his wickednes.

The iiii. Chapter.

WHAN Sauls sonne herde that Abner was deed at Hebron, his handes were feble, and all Israel was sory. But there were two men captaynes ouer the soudyers vnder the sonne of Saul, the one was called Baena, the other Rehob, sonnes of Rimón the Berothite, of the childre of Ben Iamin: for Beroth was counted also in Ben Iamin. And the Berothites were fled vnto Gethaim, and were straügers there vnto this daye. Ionathas also the sonne of Saul had a sonne which was lame on his fete, and was fyue yeare olde whan the rumoure of Saul and Ionathas came from Israel. And his norse toke him, and fled. And whyle she made haist and fled, he fell, and was lame: And his name was Mephiboseth.

Then wente the sonnes of Rimón the Berothite, Rehob and Baena, and came to the house of Isboseth, in the heate of the daye, and he laye vpon his bed at the noone daie. And they came in to the house to fetch wheate, and thrust him in the bely, and gat them awaye. For whā they came in to the house, he laye vpon his bed in his chamber, and they stickte him to death, and smote of his heade, and toke his heade, and departed by the waye of the playne felde all that night, and broughte the heade of Isboseth to Dauid vnto Hebron, and sayde vnto the kyng: Beholde, there is the heade of Iszboseth the sonne of Saul thine enemye, which layed wayte for thy soule. This daye hath the LORDE auenged my lorde the kynge of Saul and his sede.

Then answered Dauid vnto Rehob and Baena his brother, ⁊ sonnes of Rimon ⁊ Berrothite, ⁊ sayde: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, which hath deliuered my soule out of all trouble, *I toke him ⁊ brought me worde and sayde: Saul is deed, and he thoughte he had bene a good messaunger, and at Siclag I put him to death, vnto whom I shulde haue geuen a rewarde for his message. And these vngodly personnes haue slayne a righteous man in his owne house vpon his bed. Yee shulde not I requyre his bloude of youre handes, and take you awaye from ⁊ earth? And Dauid commaunded his yonge men, which slewe them, and smote of their handes and fete, and hanged them vp by ⁊ pole at Hebron. But the heade of Iszboseth toke they, and buried it *in Abners graue at Hebron.

The b. Chapter.

AND all the trybes of Israel came to Dauid vnto Hebron, and sayde: †Beholde, we are thy bone and thy flesh. And afore tyme whā Saul was kynge ouer vs, thou leddest Israel out and in. So the LORDE hath sayde: Thou shalt kepe my people of Israel, and shalt be the duke ouer Israel. And all the Elders in Israel came to ⁊ kynge vnto Hebron. And kynge Dauid made a couenaunt with them at Hebron before ⁊ LORDE. And they anoynted Dauid to be kynge ouer Israel. Thyrtie yeare olde was Dauid whan he was made kynge, and reigned fortye yeares. §At Hebron raigned he seuc̄ yeares and sixe monethes ouer Iuda: but at Ierusalem he reigned thre and thirtie yeares ouer all Israel and Iuda.

And the kynge wente with his men to Ierusalem, agaynst the Iebusites, which dwelt in the loude. Neuertheles they sayde vnto Dauid: Thou shalt not come hither but the blynde and lame shal dryue ⁊ awaie. (They thoughte planely, that Dauid shulde not come in.) Howbeit Dauid wanne the castell of Sion, which is the cite of Dauid. Then sayde Dauid the same daye: ¶Who so euer smyteth the Iebusites, and optayneth the perquellies, the lame ⁊ the blynde, which (Iebusites) Dauids soule hateth. Herof cometh the prouerbe: *Let no blynde ner lame come in to the house. So Dauid dwelt in ⁊ castell, and called it the cite of Dauid. And Dauid builded roude aboute fro Millo and within. And Dauid grewe, ⁊ the LORDE the God Zebaoth was with him.

And Hiram the kynge of Tyre sent messaungers vnto Dauid, ⁊ cedar trees for walles, and Carpenters, and Masons, to builde Dauid an house. And Dauid knewe, that the LORDE had confyrmed him kynge ouer Israel, and exalted his kingdome for his people of Israels sake. And Dauid toke yet mo wyues and concubynes at Ierusalem, after he was come from Hebron, and there were yet mo sonnes ⁊ daughters borne vnto him. †And these are the names of them that were borne vnto him at Ierusalem: Samma, Sobab, Nathan, Salomon, Iebegar, Elisua, Nepheg, Iaphia, Elisama, Eliada, Eliphalet.

And whan the Philistines herde that Dauid was anoynted kinge ouer Israel, they wete vp all to seke Dauid. Whan Dauid perceaued that, he wete downe in to a castell. But the Philistynes came and scatered them selues beneth in the valley of Rephaim. **And Dauid axed at the LORDE, and sayde: Shal I go vp agaynst the Philistynes? and wylt thou delyuer them in to my hande? The LORDE sayde vnto Dauid: Go vp, I wyl delyuer the Philistynes in to thy hande.

And Dauid came vnto Baal Prazim, and smote thē there, and sayde: The LORDE hath deuyded myne enemies, euen as the waters parte asunder: therefore is the same place called Baal Prazim. And they lefte their ymagines there, but Dauid and his men caried thē awaye.

Neuerthelesse the Philistynes wente vp agayne, and scatered them selues beneth in the valley of Rephaim. And Dauid axed at the LORDE. The LORDE sayde: Thou shalt go vp, but compase them behinde, that thou mayest be vpon them ouer agaynst the Peer trees: and whan thou hearest vpon the toppe of the Peertrees, the sounde of the goinge be bolde, for then is the LORDE gone forth before the, to smyte the hoost of the Philistines. Dauid dyd as the LORDE commaunded him and smote the Philistynes from Geba, tyll thou comest vnto Gaser.

The bi. Chapter.

AND Dauid gathered agayne all the younge chosen men in Israel, "euen thre thousande, and gat him vp, and wente with all the people that was with him of the citiesins of Iuda, to fetch vp the Arke of God from thence: whose name is: The name of the LORDE Zebaoth dwelleth theron betwene the Cherubins. * And they caused the arke of God to be caried vpō a new cart, †and fetched it out of ‡ house of Abinadab, which dwelt at Gibeā. Vsa and Ahio the sonnes of Abinadab droue ‡ new cart. And when they broughte it with the Arke from the house of Abinadab which dwelt at Gibeā, Ahio wente before the Arke: and Dauid and all the house of Israel played before the LORDE, with all maner of instrumentes of Pine tre, with harpes, and Psalteries, and tabrettes, and belles, and Cymbals.

33 † And when they came to the barnefloore of Nahon, Vsa stretched out his hande, §and helde the Arke of God, for the oxen wēte out asyde. Then waxed the wrath of the LORDE fearce agaynst Vsa, and God smote him there because of his presumpcio, so that he dyed there besyde the Arke of God. Then was Dauid sory, because the LORDE had made soch a rente vpon Vsa, and he called the same place Perez Vsa vnto this daye. And Dauid feared the LORDE the same daie, and sayde: How shall the Arke of the LORDE come vnto me? And he wolde not let it be broughte to him in to the cite of Dauid, but caused it be brought in to ‡ house of Obed Edom the Gathite. And when the Arke of the LORDE had contynued thre monethes in the house of Obed Edom the Gathite, the LORDE blessed him and all his house.

C And it was tolde kyng Dauid, that the LORDE had blessed the house of Obed Edō and all that he had because of the Arke of God. ¶ Then wente he, and fetched vp the Arke of God out of ‡ house of Obed Edom in to the cite of Dauid with ioye. And whā they were gone sixe steppes in with the Arke of the LORDE, they offered an ox and a fat shepe. And Dauid daunced with all his mighte before the LORDE, and was girded with an ouerbody cote of lynnē. And Dauid with all Israel brought vp ‡ Arke of the LORDE with tabrettes and trompettes.

And when the Arke of the LORDE came in to the cite of Dauid, Michol the daughter of Saul lokd out at a window, and sawe kyng Dauid leapyng, sprynginge and daūsyng before the LORDE, and despyed him in hir hert. But when they brought in ‡ Arke of the LORDE, they set it in hir place in the myddes of the Tabernacle, which Dauid had pitched for it. And Dauid offred burnt offerynges and deed offerynges before ‡ LORDE. And whan Dauid had made an ende of offeryng the burntofferienges and deedofferienges, he blessed the people in the name of the LORDE Zebaoth, and dealte out vnto all the people, and to the multitude of Israel, both to man & womā, vnto euery one a cake of bred, and a pece of flesh, and a meece of potage. Then wente all the people their waye, euery one vnto his house.

Whan Dauid came agayne to blesse his house, Michol the daughter of Saul wente forth to mete him, and sayde: How glorious hath the kyng of Israel bene to daye, which hath vncouered himselfe before the maydēs of his seruantes, like as the rascall people discover them selues. But Dauid saide vnto Michol: I wil playe before ‡ LORDE, which hath chosen me afore thy father, and afore all his house, because he hath commaunded me to be the prynce ouer the people of the LORDE, euen ouer Israel, and yet wyl I be vyler then so, and wyl be lowe in myne owne sighte: and with the maydens wherof thou hast spoken, wyl I be honoured. As for Michol the daughter of Saul, she had no childe vnto the daye of hir death.

The biij. Chapter.

NOW when the kyng sat in his house, ¶ and the LORDE had geuen him rest from all his enemies on euery syde, he sayde vnto the prophet Nathan: Beholde, I dwell in a house of Cedre, and the Arke of God dwelleth amonge the curtaynes. Nathan sayde vnto the kyng: Go thy waye, what so euer thou hast in thine hert, ‡ do: for the LORDE is with the. But the same nighte came ‡ worde of the LORDE vnto Nathan, & sayde: Go & speake to my seruāit Dauid:

* 1 Par. 14. a.    † 1 Reg. 6. c.    ‡ 1 Reg. 7. a.    § 1 Pa. 14. b.

Thus sayeth  $\text{ȝ}$  LORDE: Shalt thou buylde me an house to dwell in? I haue dwelt in no house sence the daye that I broughte the children of Israel vnto this daye, but haue walked in the Tabernacle and Habitation, whither so euer I wente with the children of Israel. Dyd I euer speake to eny of the trybes of Israel (whom I commaunded to kepe my people of Israel)  $\text{ȝ}$  sayde: Wherefore do ye not buylde me an house of Cedar wodd?

$\text{ȝ}$  So shalt thou speake now vnto my seruauant Dauid: Thus sayeth the LORDE Zebaoth: \*I toke the from the pasture whan thou wentest behynde the shepe,  $\text{ȝ}$  thou shuldest be  $\text{ȝ}$  prynce ouer my people of Israel,  $\text{ȝ}$  haue bene with the whither so euer thou wentest,  $\text{ȝ}$  haue roted out all thine enemies before the,  $\text{ȝ}$  haue made the a greate name, accordinge to the name of the greate men vpon earth. And for my people of Israel I wyll appoynte a place, and wyll plante them, that they maye remaine there, nomore to be remoued, and  $\text{ȝ}$  the childrē of wickednes oppresse them nomore, like as afore, and sence the tyme that I ordeyned Iudges ouer my people of Israel. And I wyll geue the rest from all thine enemies. And the LORDE sheweth the, that the LORDE wyl make the a house.

$\text{ȝ}$  Now whan thy tyme is fulfilled  $\text{ȝ}$  thou shalt slepe with thy fathers, I wil after  $\text{ȝ}$  rayse vp thy sede, which shal come of thy body: his kyngdome wyl I stabilishe, he shal buylde an house for my name,  $\text{ȝ}$  and I wyll stablyshe  $\text{ȝ}$  seate of his kyngdome for euer.  $\text{ȝ}$  I wyll be his father, and he shall be my sonne. ¶ Whan he doth a trespase, I wyll reprove him with the rodd of men: But my mercy shal not be withdrawn frō him, as I haue withdrawē it frō Saul, whō I haue takē awaye before the. As for thy house  $\text{ȝ}$  thy kyngdome, it shal be established for euer before the,  $\text{ȝ}$  thy seate shal endure fast for euermore.

Whan Nathan had tolde all these wordes  $\text{ȝ}$  all this vision vnto Dauid, kyng Dauid came and sat him downe before the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE God, who am I? and what is my house,  $\text{ȝ}$  thou hast broughte me thus farre? This O LORDE God hast thou thoughte to litle also, but hast spoken of the house of thy seruauant yet lōge for to come. O LORDE God, is that the lawe of men?

And what shall Dauid speake vnto the?  $\text{ȝ}$  thou knowest thy seruauant O LORDE God, for thy wordes sake and accordinge to thy hert hast thou done all these greate thinges,  $\text{ȝ}$  thou mightest shewe thē vnto thy seruauant. Therefore art thou greatly magnified O LORDE God: ¶ For there is none like the,  $\text{ȝ}$  there is no God but thou, accordinge vnto all that we haue herde with oure eares. \*\* For where is there a people vpon earth as thy people of Israel? For whose sake God wente to delyuer him a people, and to make him selfe a name, and to do them soch greate and terrible thinges in thy lōde before thy people,  $\text{ȝ}$  whom thou hast delyuered vnto thy selfe frō Egipte, from the people, and from their goddes. And thy people of Israel hast thou prepared the to be a people vnto thyne owne selfe for euer, and thou O LORDE art become their God.

Stablishe now  $\text{ȝ}$  worde therefore for euer (O LORDE God) which thou hast spokē ouer thy seruauant  $\text{ȝ}$  ouer his house,  $\text{ȝ}$  do accordinge as thou hast sayde. So shall thy name be greate for euer, so that it shal be sayde: The LORDE Zebaoth is the God ouer Israel,  $\text{ȝ}$  the house of thy seruauant Dauid shal be made sure before the. For thou LORDE Zebaoth, thou God of Israel hast opened the eare of thy seruauant, and sayde: I wil buylde the an house. Therefore hath thy seruauant founde his hert, to praye this prayer vnto the. ¶ Now LORDE God thou thy selfe art God,  $\text{ȝ}$  thy wordes shal be the trueth. Thou hast spoken soch good ouer thy seruauant. Begynne now therefore, and blesse thy seruantes house, that it maye be before the for euer, for thou LORDE God thine awne selfe hast spoken it: and with thy blessinge shal thy seruantes house be blessed for euer.

The viij. Chapter.

AND it fortunēd after this,  $\text{ȝ}$  Dauid smote  $\text{ȝ}$  Philistynes, and discomfited them, and toke the byrdell of bondage out of the Philistynes hande. ¶ He smote the Moabites also to the grounde, so that he broughte two partes of them to death, and let one parte lyue. Thus the Moabites were subdued vnto Dauid, so  $\text{ȝ}$  they broughte him giftes.

Dauid smote Hadad Eser also the sonne of Rehob kyng of Zoba, whan he wēte to fetch his power agayne at y water Euphrates. And of them toke Dauid a thousande & seuē hundred horsmen, and twenty thousande fote men, and lamed all the charettes, saue an hundred which he kepte behynde. But the Siryans came from Damascon to helpe Hadad Eser kyng of Zoba. And Dauid smote two and twenty thousande men of the Syrians, and layed people vnto Damascus in Syria.

Thus was Syria subdued vnto Dauid, so that they broughte him giftes: for y LORDE helped Dauid whither so euer he wente. And Dauid toke y shyldes of golde, which Hadad Esers seruautes had, and broughte them to Ierusalem. But from Bethah & Berothai y cities of Hadad Eser toke Dauid very moch brasse.

B * Whan Thoi the kyng of Hemath herde, that Dauid had smytten all the power of Hadad Eser, he sent his sonne Ioram vnto Dauid to salute him frendly, & to blesse him, because he had foughten with Adad Eser and smytten him (for Thoi had warre with Hadad Eser) and had Iewels with him of syluer, of golde, and of brasse: which kyng Dauid halowed also vnto y LORDE, with the syluer and golde which he sanctified vnto the LORDE from all the Heythē, whom he subdued, from Siria, fro Moab, from the childrē of Ammon, from the Philistynes, frō Amalek, from the spoyle of Hadad Eser y sonne of Rehob kyng of Zoba.

C Dauid gat him selfe a name also whan he came, & smote eightene thousande of y Sirians in y Salt valley. And he layed people in all Edomea, & all Edom was subdued vnto Dauid: for the LORDE helped Dauid, whither so euer he wente. Thus was Dauid kyng ouer all Israel. And he executed iudgmente and righteousnes vnto all y people. y Ioab y sonne of Zeru Ia was captayne ouer the hoost. Iosaphat the sonne of Ahilud was Chaunceler. Zadok the sonne of Achitob, & Ahimelech the sonne of Abiathar were prestes. Seraia was Scribe. Benaia the sonne of Ioiada was ouer y Chrethians & Plethians. And the sonnes of Dauid were llprestes.

do mercy vpon him for Ionathas sake? There was a seruaunt of Sauls house, named y Siba, whom they called vnto Dauid, & the kyng sayde vnto him: Art thou Siba? He sayde: Yee thy seruaunt. The kyng sayde: Is there yet eny man of Sauls house, y I maye do the mercy of God vpon him? Siba sayde vnto the kyng: ** There is yet a sonne of Ionathas, lame on his fete. The kyng sayde vnto him: Where is he? Siba sayde vnto y kyng: Beholde, he is at Ladober in y house of y Machir y sonne of Ammuel. Thē sent kyng Dauid thither, & caused for to fetch him from Lodaber out of y house of Machir the sonne of Ammuel.

Now whan Mephiboseth the sonne of B Ionathas the sonne of Saul came vnto Dauid, he fell vpon his face, & worshiped him. Dauid sayde: Mephiboseth. He sayde: Here am I thy seruaunt. Dauid sayde vnto him: Feare not, for I wyll do mercy vpon the for thy fater Ionathas sake, and wil restore vnto the all the londe of thy fater Saul: but thou shalt eate bred daylie at my table. He worshiped and sayde: Who am I thy seruaunt, that thou turnest the to a deed dogg as I am?

Then the kyng called Siba y seruaunt of Saul, and sayde vnto him: All y hath belonged vnto Saul & to all his house, haue I C geuen to thy lordes sonne. Tyll his londe for him therefore, thou & thy children & seruautes, & brynge it in, y it maye be bred for thy lordes sonne, and y he maye enioye it: but Mephiboseth thy lordes sonne shal eate bred daylie at my table. Siba had fyfene sonnes & twentye seruautes. And Siba sayde vnto y kyng: Acordinge vnto all as my lorde the kyng hath commaunded his seruaunt, so shal his seruaunt do. And let Mephiboseth (sayde Dauid) eate at my table, as one of the kynges owne children. And Mephiboseth had a yōge sonne, whose name was Micha. But all y dwelt in the house of Siba, serued Mephiboseth. As for Mephiboseth him selfe, he dwelt at Ierusalem: for he ate daylie at the kynges table † and was lame on both his fete.

the sonne of Nahas, as his father dyd mercy vpon me. And so he sent, and comforted him by his seruantes ouer his fathers death. Now whan Dauids seruantes came in to the londe of the children of Ammon, the mightie men of the children of Ammon sayde vnto Hanun their lorde: Thynkest thou it is for the honoure of thy father in thy sighte, y David hath sent comforters vnto the? Hath he not sent his seruantes vnto y (thynkest thou) to spye and search out the cite and to ouerthrowe it?

Then toke Hanun the seruantes of David, and shoue of the one halue of their beerdes, and cut of the halfe of their garnētes euen by the girdell, and so let them go. Whā this was tolde Dauid, he sent to mete them: for the men were put to greate shame. And the kyng caused to saye vnto them: Abyde at Iericho, tyll youre beerdes be growne, & then come agayne.

Whan the childrē of Ammon sawe that they stynked in the sighte of Dauid, they sent and hyred the Sirians of the house of Rehob, and the Sirians at Zoba euen twentye thousande fote men, and from the kyng of Maecha a thousande men, and from Istob twelue thousande men. Whan Dauid herde that, he sent Ioab with all the hoost of y men of warre. And the children of Ammon wente forth, and prepared them selues to y battayll before the intraunce of the gate. But the Sirians of Soba, of Rehob, of Istob and of Maecha were alone in the felde.

Now whan Ioab sawe that the battayll was set vpō him before and behynde, he chose of all the best yonge men in Israel, & prepared him selfe agaynst the Syrians. And the resydue of the people put he vnder the hande of his brother Abisai, that he mighte prepare him agaynst the childrē of Ammon. And sayde: Yf y Syrians be to mightie for me, helpe thou me: but yf the children of Ammon be to mightie for the, I shal helpe the. Take a good corage vnto the, and let vs be stronge for oure people, and for y cite of oure God: neuertheles the LORDE do what pleaseth him.

And Ioab made him forth with the people that was with him, to fighte agaynst the Syrians: and they fled before him. And whan the children of Ammon sawe that the Syrians fled, they fled also before Abisai, & wente in to the cite. So Ioab turned agayne from the children of Ammon, & came to Ierusalem. And whan the Syrians sawe y they were smytten before Israel, they came together.

And Hadad Eser sent & broughte out y Syrians beyonde the water, and conueyed their power in, & Sobath the chefe captayne of Hadad Eser wente before thē. Whā this was tolde Dauid, he gathered all Israel together, & wente ouer Iordane, and came to Helam, & the Syrians prepared them selues against Dauid to fighte with him, howbeit the Syrians fled before Israel. And Dauid slewe of the Syrians seuē hundreth charettes, & fortye thousande horsmē, & Sobath the chefe captayne smote he also, so that he dyed there. Whan the kynges which were vnder Adad Eser, sawe, that they were smytten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and were subdued vnto them. And the Syrians were afraied to helpe the children of Ammon eny more.

The xi. Chapter.

AND whan y yeare came aboute what tyme as y kynges vse to go forth, Dauid sent Ioab & his seruantes with him, and all Israel, to destroye the children of Ammon, and to laye sege vnto Rabba: but Dauid abode at Ierusalem.

And aboute the euētyde it fortuneth that Dauid arose from his restinge place, & wente vp to y toppe of the kynges palace, and from y toppe he sawe a woman *waszshinge hir selfe, and the woman was of a very fayre bewtye. And Dauid sent, and caused to axe what woman it was, and sayde: Is not that Bethseba the daughter of Eliam the wife of Vrias the Hethite? And Dauid sent messāgers, and caused for to fetch her. And whā she was come in vnto him, he laye with her. Neuertheles she halowed hir selfe from hir vncleennes, and turned agayne vnto hir house. And the womā was with childe, and sent, and caused to tell Dauid and to saye: I am with childe. Dauid sent vnto Ioab (say-ēge:) Sende me Vrias y Hethite. And Ioab sent Vrias vnto Dauid. And whan Vrias came to him, Dauid axed him yf it stode well with Ioab, and with the people and with the battayll.

And Dauid sayde to Vrias: Go downe in to thy house, and wash thy fete. And whan Vrias wente out of the kynges palace, the kynges gifte folowed him. And Vrias layed him downe to slepe before the kynges palace gate, where all his lordes seruantes laye, & wente not downe in to his house. Whan worde came to Dauid: Vrias is not gone downe in to his house, Dauid sayde vnto him: Camest thou not ouer the felde? Why wentest thou not downe in to thy house? Vrias sayde vnto Dauid: The Arke and Israel & Iuda abyde in the tentes: And Ioab my lorde and my lordes seruantes lye in y<sup>e</sup> felde, and shal I go in to my house to eate and drynke, and to lye with my wife? As truly as thou lyuest, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wyll not do this thinge. Dauid sayde vnto Vria: Abyde here then to daye, tomorow wil I let the go. So Vrias abode at Ierusalem the same daye, and the nexte also. And Dauid called him to eate & drynke before him, & made him dronken. And at euen he wente to lye him downe for to slepe vpon his couche with his lordes seruantes, and wente not downe in to his house.

On the morow wrote Dauid a letter vnto Ioab, & sent it by Vrias. After this maner wrote he in the letter: Set Vrias in y<sup>e</sup> sorest parte of y<sup>e</sup> batayll, & turne vye behynde him, y<sup>e</sup> he maye be slayne. Now whā Ioab layed sege to the cite, he set Vrias in y<sup>e</sup> place, where he knewe y<sup>e</sup> the mightiest men of Armes were. And whan the men of the cite fell out and foughte agaynst Ioab, there fell certayne of y<sup>e</sup> people of Dauids seruantes. And Vrias the Hethite dyed also.

Then sent Ioab, and caused to tell y<sup>e</sup> kyng all the matter concernynge the battayll, and comaunded the messaunger, and sayde: Whan thou hast tolde y<sup>e</sup> kyng all the matter concernynge the batayll, and seist that he is wroth, and yf the kyng saye vnto the: Wherefore came ye so nye the cite with the batayll? Knowe ye not how they vse to shute from the wall? *Who smote Abimelech the sonne of Ierubaall? Dyd not a womā cast a pece of a mylstone vpō him from the wall, so that he dyed at Thebez? Why came ye so nye the wall? Then shalt thou saye: Thy seruaut Vrias the Hethite is deed also.

The messaunger wente his waye, and came and tolde Dauid all together, wherefore Ioab had sent him. And the messaunger sayde vnto Dauid: The men preuayled against vs, and fell out vnto vs in to y<sup>e</sup> felde: and we were vpon them harde at the dore of y<sup>e</sup> porte. And the archers shot from the wall vpon thy seruantes, and slewe certayne of the kynges seruantes: and thy seruaut Vrias the Hethite is deed also.

Dauid sayde vnto the messaunger: Thus shalt thou saye vnto Ioab: Let not y<sup>e</sup> vexethe, for the swerde consumeth now one now another. Go forth with the battayll against the cite, that thou mayest destroye it, and cōforte the men. And whan Vrias wife herde that Vrias was deed, she mourned for hir huszbande. But whā she had made an ende of mournynge, Dauid sent, and caused her be fetched vnto his palace, and she became his wyfe, and bare him a sonne. Neuertheles this dede y<sup>e</sup> Dauid dyd, displeased the LORDE.

The xij. Chapter.

AND the LORDE sent Nathan vnto Dauid. Whan he came to him, he tolde him: There were two men in one cite, the one riche, the other poore. The riche man had very many shepe and oxen: but the poore man had nothinge saue one litle shepe, which he had boughte, and norished it, so that it grewe vp with him and his children together. It ate of his bred, and dranke of his cuppe, and slepte in his lappe, and he helde it as a doughter. But whan there came a straunger vnto the riche man, he spared to take of his awne shepe & oxen (to prepare oughte for the straunger that was come vnto him) and toke the poore mans shepe, and prepared it for the man that was come vnto him.

Thē was Dauid wroth with greate displeasure agaynst that man, and sayde vnto Nathan: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, the man that hath done this, is the childe of death. †The shepe also shal he make good foure folde, because he hath done soch a thinge, and not spared it.

Then sayde Nathan vnto Dauid: Thou art euen the man. Thus sayeth the LORDE the God of Israel: †I haue anoynted the to be kyng ouer Israel, and delyuered the out of the hande of Saul, and haue geuen the thy lordes house, and his wyues in to thy lappe, and the house of Israel and Iuda haue I geuen the: and yf that be to litle, I wyl yet do this and that for the also. Wherefore hast thou then despyed the worde of the LORDE, to do soch euell in his sighte? Vrias the Hethite hast thou slayne with the swerde: His wife hast thou taken to be thy wyfe, but him hast thou slayne with y<sup>e</sup> swerde of the children of Ammon.

Now therfore shal not y<sup>e</sup> swerde departe from thy house for euer, because thou hast despyed me, and taken the wife of Vrias the Hithite, to be thy wife. Thus sayeth the LORDE: Beholde, * I wyll rayse vp euell of thyne awne house, and wyll take thy wyues before thyne eyes, and wyl geue them vnto thy neighbour, so that he shall lye with thy wyues by Sonne lighte. For thou hast done it secretly, but I wyl do this in the sighte of all Israel, and by Sonne lighte.

Then sayde Dauid vnto Nathan † I haue synned vnto the LORDE. Nathan sayde vnto Dauid: So hath the LORDE also taken awaye thy synne, thou shalt not dye. But for so moch as thou thorow this dede hast caused the enemies of the LORDE to blaspheme, y<sup>e</sup> sonne that is borne vnto the, shall dye the death. And Nathan wente home. As for the childe which Vrias wife bare vnto Dauid, the LORDE smote it, so that it was deidsicke.

And Dauid besoughte God for the childe, and fasted, and wente in, and laie all night vpon the earth. Then rose the Elders of his house, and wolde haue taken him vp frō the grounde: neuertheles he wolde not, nether ate he with them. Vpon the seventh daye y<sup>e</sup> childe dyed. And Dauids seruantes durst not tell him that the childe was deed. For they thoughte: Beholde, whan the childe was yet alyue, we spake vnto him, and he herkened not vnto oure voyce, How moch more shall it greue him, yf we saye: The childe is deed? And Dauid sawe that his seruantes made a whisperinge together, and perceaued that the childe was deed, and sayde vnto his seruantes: Is the childe deed? They sayde: Yee. Then rose Dauid vp from the earth, and waszshed him selfe, and anoynted him, and put on other garmentes, and wente in to the house of the LORDE, and worshipped.

And whan he came agayne, he commaunded to set bred before him, and ate. Then sayde his seruantes vnto him: What maner of thinge is this that thou doest? Whan the childe was alyue, thou fastest and wepest: but now that it is deed, thou stōdest vp and eatest? He sayde: I fasted and wepte for the childe whan it was yet a lyue, for I thoughte: Who knoweth, peraduenture the LORDE maye be gracious vnto me, that the childe maye lyue. ‡ But now that it is deed, wherfore shulde I fast? Can I fetch it agayne? I shal go vnto it, but it shall not come agayne vnto me. And whan Dauid had comforted Bethseba his wife, he wente in vnto her, and laye with her. § And she bare a sonne, whom he called Salomon. And the LORDE loued him. And he put him vnder the hāde of Nathan y<sup>e</sup> prophet, which called him Iedidia because of the LORDE.

So Ioab foughte agaynst Rabba of y<sup>e</sup> children of Ammon, and wanne the kynges cite, and sent messaungers vnto Dauid, and caused to saye vnto him: ¶ I haue foughte against Rabba, and haue wonne the water cite also. Gather thou therfore the residue of the people together, and laye sege to y<sup>e</sup> cite, and wyne it, that I wyne it not, and haue the name therof. So Dauid gathered all y<sup>e</sup> people together, and wente, and foughte agaynst Rabba, and wanne it, and toke their kynges crowne frō his heade (which in weight had a talente of golde, and precious stones) and was set vpon Dauids heade, and very moch spoyle caried he out of the cite. As for the people that was therein, he broughte thē forth, and layed them vnder yron sawes and hokes and wedges of yron, and burned thē in tyle ouens. Thus dyd he vnto all the cities of the children of Ammon. Then returned Dauid and all the people vnto Ierusalem agayne.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND it fortunēd after this, that Absalom y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Dauid had a fayre sister, whose name was Thamar, and Ammon the sonne of Dauid loued her. And Ammon was in greate combrance, in so moch that he was euen sicke, because of Thamar his sister. For she was a virgin, and Ammon thoughte it shulde be harde for him to do eny thinge vnto her. But Ammon had a frēde, whose name was Ionadab the sonne of Simea Dauids brother. And the same Ionadab was a very wyse man, which sayde vnto him: Why art thou so leane (thou kynges sonne) from daye to daye? Mayest thou not tell me? Then sayde Ammon vnto him: I loue Thamar my brother Absaloms sister exceedingly.

B Ionadab sayde vnto him: laye the downe vpon thy bedd, and make the sicke. And whan thy father commeth to loke how thou doest, saye vnto him: Oh let my sister Thamar come, that she maye fede me, and make a meece of meate before me, that I maye se it, & eate it of hir hande. So Ammon layed him downe, and made him sicke. Now whā the kyng came in to loke how he dyd, Ammon sayde vnto the kyng: Oh let my sister Thamar come, and make me a syppynge or two, and that I maye eate it of hir hande. Then sent Dauid for Thamar in to the house, and sayde vnto her: Go thy waye to thy brother Ammons house, & make him a meece of meate. Thamar wente vnto hir brother Amons house, but he laye in his bed. And she toke floure, and mixte it, and dighte it before his eyes, and made him a syppynge. And she toke the meece of meate, and poured it out before him: but he wolde not eate.

C And Ammon saide: Put forth euery man fro me. And euery man wēte forth from him. Then sayde Ammon vnto Thamar: Brynge me that meece of meate in to the chamber, that I maye eate it of thy hande. Then toke Thamar ſyppynge that she had made, and broughte it vnto Ammon hir brother in to the chamber.

And whan she broughte it vnto him ſhe mighte eate, he toke holde of her, & sayde vnto her: Come my sister, lye with me. Neuertheles she saide: Oh no my brother, force me not: for so do they not in Israel, do not thou soch foly. Whither shal I go with my shame? And thou shalt be as one of the vnwyse in Israel. But speake vnto the kyng, he shal not withholde me from the.

D Howbeit he wolde not herken vnto her, and ouercame her, * and forced her, and laye with her. And Ammon hated her exceedingly, so that the hate was greater then the loue was before. And Ammon sayde vnto her: Vp, and get the hence.

She saide vnto him: This euell that thou thrustest me out, is greater then the other, that thou hast done vnto me. Neuertheles he herkened not vnto her, but called his boye that serued him, and sayde: Put awaye this woman fro me, and locke the dore after her. And she had a partye garment on: for soch garmentes wayre ſ kynges doughters whyle they were virgins.

And whā his seruauant had put hir forth, & lockte the dore after her, Thamar strowed aszshes vpon hir heade, and rente the partye garment which she had vpon her, and layed hir hande vpon hir heade, and wente on, and cryed. And hir brother Absalom sayde vnto her: Hath thy brother Ammon bene with the? Now holde thy peace my sister, it is thy brother, and take not the matter so to hert.

So Thamar remainyd a wyddowe in her brother Absaloms house. And whan kyng David herde of all this, he was very sory. As for Absalom, he spake nether euell ner good to Ammon: but Absalom hated Ammon, because he had forced his sister Thamar.

After two yeaeres had Absalom shepe clyppers at Baal Hazor, which lyeth by Ephraim. And Absalom called all the kynges children, and came to the kyng, and sayde: Beholde, thy seruauant hath shepe clyppers, let it please ſ kyng with his seruauantes to go with his seruauante. But the kyng sayde vnto Absalom: No my sonne, let vs not all go, lest we be to chargeable vnto the.

And he wolde nedes haue had him to go, howbeit he wolde not, but blessed him. Absalom sayde: Shall my brother Ammon go with vs then? The kyng sayde vnto him: Wherefore shall he go with the? Then was Absalom so importune vpon him, that he let Ammon and all the kynges childrē go with him.

But Absalom commaunded his yonge men, & sayde: Take hede whan Ammon is mery with wyne (and I saye vnto you: Smyte Ammon, and slaye him) that ye be not afrayed: for I haue commaunded you, be stronge, and playe the men. So Absaloms yonge men dyd vnto Ammon, as Absalom had commaunded them. Then stode all the kynges children vp, and euery one gat him vp vpon his Mule, and fled. And whyle they were yet on their waye, the rumoure came to kyng David, that Absalom had slayne all the kynges children, so that not one of them was left.

Then stode the kyng vp, and rente his clothes, & layed him downe vpon the earth, and all his seruauantes that stode aboute him, rente their clothes. Then answered Ionadab  $\text{y}$  sonne of Simea Davids brother, and sayde: Let not my lorde thynke that all the yonge men the kyngeys children are deed, but  $\text{y}$  Ammon is deed onely: for Absalom hath kepte it in him selfe sence the daie that he forced his sister Thamar. Therfore let not my lorde the kynge take it so to hert, that all the kyngeys children shulde be deed, but that Ammon is deed onely.

As for Absalom, he fled. And the yonge man that kepte the watch, life vp his eyes, and loked, and beholde, A greate people came in the waye one after another by the hill syde. Then sayde Ionadab vnto the kynge: Beholde, the kyngeys children come. Euen as thy seruauant sayde, so is it happened. And whan he had ended his talkynge, the kyngeys children came, and life vp their voyce, and wepte.

The kynge and all his seruantes wepte also very sore. But Absalom fled, and wente vnto Thalmay the sonne of Ammihud kynge of Gesur. As for Dauid he mourned for his sonne euery daye. Whan Absalom was fled and gone vnto Gesur, he was there three yeare. And kynge Dauid ceased from goinge out agaynst Absalom, for he had comforted him selfe ouer Ammon that he was deed.

The xiiiij. Chapter.

IOAB the sonne of Ieru Ia perceaued  $\text{y}$  the kyngeys hert was agaynst Absalom, and sent vnto Thecoa, and caused to fetch from thence a prudent woman and saide vnto her: Make lamētacion, and weere mournynge garments,  $\text{q}$  anoynte the not with oyle: but fayne thy selfe as a woman which hath mourned longe ouer a deed, and thou shalt go in to the kynge, and speake so  $\text{q}$  vnto him. And Ioab tolde her what she shulde saye.

And whan the woman of Thecoa wolde speake with the kynge, she fell vpon hir face to the grounde, and worshipped, and sayde: Helpe me O kynge. The kynge sayde vnto her: What ayleth the? She sayde: I am a wedowe, a woman that mourneth, and my huszbāde is deed. And thy handmayde had two sonnes, which stroue together in the felde: and whyle there was noman to parte thē a sunder, the one smote the other, and slewe him.

And beholde, all the whole kynred ryseth vp agaynst thy handmayden, and saye: *Delyuer him which hath smytten his brother, that we maye kyll him, for the soule of his brother whom he hath slayne, and that we maye destroye the heyre also. And thus are they mynded to put out my sparke, which yet is lefte, that there shulde no name ner eny thinge els remaine ouer vnto my huszbāde vpon earth.

The kynge sayde vnto the woman: Go thy waye home, I wil geue a cōmaudemēt for  $\text{y}$ . And the woman of Thecoa saide vnto  $\text{y}$  kynge: The trespase be vpon me (my lorde  $\text{y}$  kynge) and vpon my fathers house: but the kynge and his seate be vngiltye. The kynge sayde: He that speaketh agaynst the, brynge him vnto me, so shall he touch the nomore. She sayde: Let the kynge thynke vpon the LORDE his God, that there be not to many auengers of bloude to destroye, and that they brynge not my sonne to naught. He sayde: † As truly as the LORDE lyueth, there shall not one heer of thy sonne fall vpon the earth. And the woman sayde: Let thy handmayde speake somewhat to my lorde the kynge. He sayde: speake on. The woman sayde: Wherefore hast thou deuised such a thinge agaynst the people of God? And how happeneth it that the kynge speaketh soch, to make himselfe giltye, and causeth not his out lawe to be broughte agayne? For we all dye the death, and as the water that sinketh in to the earth, which is not taken vp. † And God will not take awaye the lyfe, but vubethynketh himselfe,  $\text{y}$  euen the very outlawe be not cleane thrust out from him.

Thus am I come also to speake this to my lorde the kynge in the presence of the people, for thy handmayden thoughte: I wyll speake to the kynge, peradventure he shall do that his handmayden sayeth, for he shall heare his handmayden, to delyuer me from the hande of all them, that wolde destroye me with my sonne from the enheritaunce of God. And thy handmayden thoughte,  $\text{y}$  worde of my lorde the kynge shall be as a meatofferynge,  $\text{q}$  for my lorde the kinge is as an angell of God, so that he can heare good and euell, therfore shall the LORDE thy God be with the.

The kynge answered and sayde vnto the woman: Kepe nothyng fro me that I axe the. The woman sayde: Let my lorde the kinge speake on. The kynge sayde: Is not the hande of Ioab with the in all this? The woman answered and sayde: As truly as thy soule lyueth (my lorde O kynge,) there is els noman nether at the righte hande ner at y<sup>e</sup> lefte, but euen as my LORDE the kynge hath sayde, for thy seruauit Ioab hath commaunded me, and he himselfe hath taughte thy handmayden all these wordes, that I shulde turne this matter of this faszshio, this hath Ioab thy seruauit done. But my lorde is wyse, as the wysdome of an angell of God, so that he knoweth all thynges vpon earth.

Then sayde the kynge vnto Ioab: Beholde, I haue done this: go thy waye therfore and brynge the childe Absalom agayne.

Then fell Ioab vpon his face vnto the grounde, and worshipped, and thanked the kynge, and sayde: This daye doth thy seruauit perceaue, that I haue founde grace in thy syghte my lorde the kynge, in that the kynge doth as his seruauit hath sayde. So Ioab gat him vp, and wente vnto Gesur, and broughte Absalom to Ierusalem. But the kinge sayde: Let him go againe in to his house, and not se my face. Thus Absalom came agayne to his house, and sawe not y<sup>e</sup> kynges face.

But in all Israel there was not so fayre, and so maruelous goodly a man, as Absalom. From the sole of his fote vnto the toppe of his heade there was not one blemyshe in him. And whan his heade was rounded (that was comonly euery year, for it was to heuy for him, so that it must nedes haue bene rounded) the heer of his heade weyed two hūdreth Sicles after y<sup>e</sup> kynges weight. And vnto Absalom there were borne three sonnes and one daughter, whose name was Tamar, and she was a woman of a fayre bewtye: So Absalom abode two yearre at Ierusalem, and sawe not the kynges face.

And Absalom sent for Ioab, that he mighte sende him to the kynge. And he wolde not come to him. But he sent the seconde tyme, yet wolde he not come. Then sayde he vnto his seruantes: Ye knowe Ioabs pece of londe that lyeth by myne, and he hath barlye thereon: go youre waye therfore and set fyre vpon it. So Absaloms seruantes sett fyre vpon Ioabs pece of londe.

Then Ioab gat him vp, and came to Absalom in to the house, and sayde vnto him: Wherfore haue thy seruantes set fire vpon my pece of londe? Absalō sayde vnto Ioab: Beholde, I sent for the, and caused to saye vnto the: Come hither, that I maye sende the to the kynge, and to saye: Wherfore came I from Gesur? It were better for me that I were there yet. Let me therfore se the kynges face. But yf there be eny trespase in me, then put me to death. And Ioab wente in to the kynge, and tolde him. And he called Absalom, to come in to the kynge, and he worshipped vpon his face to the grounde before the kynge. And the kynge kyssed Absalom.

The xv. Chapter.

AND after this it fortuneth that Absalom caused to prepare himselfe chearettes and horses, and fyftee men, which were his fote mē. And Absalō gat him vp allwaye early in the mornynge, and stode in the waye by the porte: and whan eny man had a matter which shulde come to the kynge for iudgment, Absalom called vnto him and sayde: Of what cite art thou? Yf he sayde then: thy seruauit is of one of the trybes of Israel, then sayde Absalom vnto him: Beholde, thy matter is righte and plaine: but there is noman appoynted y<sup>e</sup> of the kynge to heare the.

And Absalom sayde: O who setteth me to be iudge in y<sup>e</sup> londe, that euery man which hath a plee or matter to do in y<sup>e</sup> lawe, might come to me, that I might helpe him to right. And whan eny man came to him to do worshippe & to do him obeisaunce, he put forth his hāde, and helde him & kyssed him. After this maner dyd Absalom vnto all Israel whan they came to the lawe vnto the kynge, and so dyd he steale awaye the hert of y<sup>e</sup> men of Israel.

After fortye yeares sayde Absalom vnto the kynge: I wil go and perfourme my vowe at Hebron, which I made vnto the LORDE. For thy seruauit made a vowe, * whan I dwelt at Gesur in Siria, and saide: Whan y<sup>e</sup> LORDE bryngeth me agayne to Ierusalem, I shal do a Gods seruyce vnto the LORDE. The kynge sayde vnto him: Go thy waye in peace. And he gat him vp, and wente vnto Hebron.

* 2 Re. 13. g.

But Absalom had sent out spyes in all the trybes of Israel, sayenge: Whan ye heare the noyse of the trompe, saye: Absalom is made kynge at Hebron. There wente with Absalom two hundreth men called from Ierusalem, but they wente on symply, and knewe not of the matter. Absalom sent also for Achitophel (the Gilonyte) Dauids counseller, out of his cite Gilo. Now whan he didd the sacrifice, the conspiracion was mightie and the people ranne together, and multiplyed with Absalom.

Then came one which tolde Dauid, and sayde, that the hert of euery man in Israel folowed Absalom. Dauid sayde vnto all his seruauntes that were with him at Ierusalem: Vp, let vs fle, for here shall be no escapyng for vs before Absalom.

Make haist that we maye be goyng, lest he ouertake vs and catch vs, and dryue some mysfortune vpon vs, and smyte the cyte with the edge of the swerde. Then sayde the kynges seruauntes vnto him: Loke what my lorde § kyng choseth, beholde, here are thy seruauntes. And the kyng wente forth on fote with all his housholde. * But ten concubynes left he to kepe the house.

And whan the kyng and all the people came forth on fote, they wete farre from home, and all his seruauntes wente by him, and all the Chrethians and Plethians, and all the Gethites (euen sixe hundreth men) which were come on fote from Gath, wente before the kyng.

And the kyng sayde vnto † Ithai § Gethite: Why goest thou also with vs? Turne backe, and byde with the kyng, for thou art a straunger: get the hence agayne vnto thy place. Thou camest yesterdaye, and to daye thou iuperdest to go with vs: As for me, I wyl go whither I can: turne thou backe agayne, and mercy and faithfulnes happen vnto thy brethren with the. Ithai answered, and sayde, ‡ As truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as my lorde the kyng lyueth, loke in what place my lorde the kyng shalbe, (whether it chaunce to life or death) there shal thy seruaunt be also.

Dauid sayde vnto Ithai: Then come, and go with vs. So wente Ithai the Gethite and all his men, and the whole multitude of the children that were with him. And all the land wepte with loude voyce, and all the people with them. And the kyng wete ouer the broke Cedron, and all the people wente ouer by the waye that goeth to the wyldernes.

And beholde, Sadoc was there also, and all the Leuites that were with them, & they bare § Arke of the couenaunt of God, and set it there. And Abiathar wente vp, tyll all the people came out of the cite. But the kyng sayde vnto Sadoc: Brynge the Arke of God in to the cite agayne. Yf I shal fynde grace before the LORDE, he shall fetch me agayne, and shall let me se it, and the house of it. But yf he saye thus: I haue no pleasure to §, beholde, here am I, let him do with me as it pleaseth him.

And the kyng sayde vnto Sadoc § prest: O thou § Seer, turne agayne to § cite with peace, and Ahimaas thy sonne with the and Ionathas the sonne of Abiathar: beholde, I wyl tary in the playne of the wyldernes, tyll the message come from you, and tell me. So Sadoc and Abiathar broughte the Arke of God agayne to Ierusalem, and remayned there.

But Dauid wente vp to mount Olynete and wepte, & his heade was couered. And all the people that was with him, had euery man his heade couered and wente on and wepte. And whan it was tolde Dauid, that Achitophel was in the cofederacy with Absalom, he sayde: LORDE turne thou Achitophels counsell to foolishnes.

And whan Dauid came vp to the toppe of the mount, where the vse was to worshippe God, Chusai the Arachite met him with his cote rent, and earth vpon his heade. And Dauid sayde vnto him: Yf thou go with me, thou shalt be chargeable vnto me: but yf thou goest agayne in to the cite, and sayest vnto Absalom: I am thy seruaunt O kyng euen as I was thy fathers seruaunt, so wyl I now be thy seruaunt, ¶ Then shalt thou brynge Achitophels counsell to naughte. So is Sadoc and Abiathar § prestes with the, and all that thou hearest out of the kynges house, tell it vnto Sadoc and Abiathar the prestes. Beholde, their two sonnes are with thē: Ahimaas the sonne of Sadoc, and Ionathas the sonne of Abiathar, by them mayest thou sende me worde what thou hearest. So Chusai Dauids frende came in to the cite. And Absalom came to Ierusalem.

The xvi. Chapter.

AND whan Dauid was gone a lytle by from the toppe of the mount, beholde, Siba the seruauit of Mephiboseth met him with a couple of asses saddled, wheron were two hundredth loaues of bred, and an hundredth quantities of rasyns and an hundredth quantities of fygges, and a bottell of wyne. Then sayde the kynge vnto Siba: What wilt thou do herewith? Siba sayde: The asses shalbe for the kynges housholde to ryde vpon, and the loaues and fygges for the yonge men to eate, and the wyne shallbe for them to drynke whan they are weery in the wyldernes. The kynge sayde: Where is thy lordes sonne? Siba sayde vnto the kynge: Beholde, he abyedeth at Ierusalē, for he saide: To daye shal y house of Israel restore my fathers kigdome vnto me. The kynge saide vnto Siba: Beholde, *all that Mephiboseth hath, shalbe thine. Siba sayde with reuerence, Let me finde grace in thy sight my lorde O kynge.

But whan kynge Dauid came to Bahurim, beholde, there wente out a man of the kynred of the house of Saul, †whose name was Semei the sonne of Gera, which wente forth and ‡cursed, and cast stones at Dauid, and at all kynge Dauids seruauantes and all the people and all the mightie men were at his righte hande and at his lefte. Thus sayde Semei whan he cursed: Get the forth, get the forth thou bloody hounde, thou man of Belial. The LORDE hath rewarded the for all the bloude of the house of Saul, y thou becamest kynge in his steade. Now hath the LORDE geuen the kyngdome in to y hande of Absalom thy sonne, and beholde, now stickest thou in thine owne myschefe, for thou art a bloody hounde.

But Abisai the sonne of Zeru Ia sayde vnto the kynge: Shall this deed dogg curse my lorde the kynge? I wyl go and take the heade awaye from him. The kynge saide: Ye children of Zeru Ia, what haue I to do with you? Let him curse on, for the LORDE hath commaunded him: Curse Dauid. Who can saye now: Why doest thou so?

CAnd Dauid sayde vnto Abisai and to all his seruauantes: Beholde, my sonne which came of my body, seketh after my lyfe, how moch more now the sonne of Iemini? Let him curse on, for the LORDE hath commaunded him: §peradventure the LORDE shall consyde my aduersyte, and recompence me good for his cursynge this daye. So Dauid wente on his waye with his men. But Semei wente on by the mount besyde him, and cursed, and cast stones at him, ¶ threwe clottes of earth.

And the kynge came in and all the people that was with him, weery, and refreshed himselfe there. But Absalom and all the people of the men of Israel came to Ierusalem and Achitophel with him. Whan Chusai the Arachite Dauids frende came in to Absalom, he sayde vnto Absalom: God saue the kynge God saue the kynge.

DAbsalom sayde vnto Chusai: Is this thy mercy vnto thy frende? Why art thou not gone with thy frende? Chusai sayde vnto Absalom: Not so, but loke whom the LORDE choseth, and this people, and all the men in Israel, his wyl I be, and byde with him. Secondly, whom shulde I serue? Shulde I not do seruyce before his sonne? Like as I haue serued in the presence of thy father, so wyl I do seruyce before the also.

And Absalom sayde vnto Achitophel: Geue vs youre counsell what we shal do? Achitophel sayde vnto Absalom: ¶ Go lye with thy fathers concubynes, whom he hath lefte to kepe the house, so shall all Israel heare that thou hast made thy father to stynke, and the hande of all them that are with y, shal be the bolder. Then made they a tente vnto Absalom ¶ vpon the house toppe. And Absalom laye with his fathers concubynes in the sighte of all Israel.

At that tyme whan Achitophel gaue a counsell, that was euen as yf a man axed counsell at God: So were all the counsels of Achitophel both with Dauid and with Absalom.

The xviij. Chapter.

AND Achitophel sayde vnto Absalom: I ¶ wil chose out twolue thousande mē, and wyl get me vp, and persue Dauid by nighte, and fall vpō him whan he is feble and weery: When I vex him thē, so that all the people which is by him, flieth, I wil smite the kynge onely, and brynge all the people vnto the agayne. So whan euery man is brought vnto the as thou desyrest, then shal all the people be in peace. Absalom thought that good, and so dyd all the Elders in Israel. But Absalom sayde: I praye you call Chusai the Arachite also, and let vs heare what he sayeth therto. And whā Chusai came in to Absalom, Absalom saide vnto him: Thus hath Achitophel spoken, Saye thou now, shal we do it or not?

Then sayde Chusai vnto Absalom: It is no good counsell y Achitophel hath geuen at this tyme. And Chusai sayde morouer: Thou knowest thy father well and his men, that they are stronge and of a wrothfull stomack, euen *as a Beer that is robbed of hir yonge ones in the felde. Thy father also is a man of warre, and wyl not be negligēt with the people. Beholde, he hath now peraduenture hyd hymselfe in some caue or in some place. Yf it came to passe then that it chaunced euell at the first, & there shulde come a rumoure and saye: There is a slaughter done in the people that folowed Absalō: thē shulde euery man be discouraged, which els is valeaunt, & hath a hert like a lyō: for all Israel knoweth that thy father is stronge, and that all they which be with him, are mightie men.

But this is my coūcell, that thou gather together all Israel from Dan vnto Berseba in nombre as the sonde of the See, and go thou thine owne person amonge them, then wil we fall vpon him in what place we finde him, and wyll ouerwhelme him euen as the dew falleth vpon the earth, so that we shal not leaue one of him and of all his men. But yf he resorte in to a cite, then shal all Israel cast roapes aboute the same cite, and drawe it in to the riuer, so that there shal not one stone of it be founde.

Then sayde Absalom and euery man in Israel: The counsell of Chusai the Arachite is better then Achitophels counsell.

† But the LORDE broughte it so to passe, that y good counsell of Achitophel was hyndred, that the LORDE mighte brynge euell vpon Absalom.

‡ And Chusai sayde vnto Sadoc & Abiathar the prestes: Thus and thus hath Achitophel counceled Absalom and the Elders in Israel: but so and so haue I counceled. Sende now therefore in all the haist, and tell Dauid, and saye: Abyde not all nighte in the playne felde of the wyldernes, but get the ouer, that the kyng be not swallowed vp, and all the people that is with him. As for Ionathas and Ahimaaz, they stode by the well of Rogel, and a damsell wente thither and tolde them. They wente on their waye, and tolde kyng Dauid, for they durst not be sene to come in to the cite.

But a lad sawe them, and tolde Absalom. Neuertheles they wente on their waye, and came to a mans house at Bahurim, which had a well in his courte, and they wēte downe in to it. And the woman toke and spred a couerynge ouer the welles mouth, & strowed firmentye corne thereon, that it was not perceaue. Now whan Absaloms seruantes came to the woman in to the house, they sayde: where is Ahimaaz and Ionathas? The womā sayde vnto them: They are gone ouer the litle water.

And whā they soughte and founde them not, they wente agayne to Ierusalem. And whan they were gone, they clymmed vp out of the well, and wente their waye, and tolde Dauid y kyng, and sayde vnto Dauid: Get you vp, and go soone ouer y water, for thus and thus hath Achitophel geuen counsell agaynst you.

Then Dauid gat him vp, and all the people that was with him, and passed ouer Iordane tyll it was cleare mornynge. And there was not one, but he wente ouer Iordane.

Whan Achitophel sawe that his coūcell wente not forth, he saddled his asse, gat him vp, and wēte home in to his cite and put his house to poynte, and hanged him selfe, and dyed, and was buried in his fathers graue.

And Dauid came to Mahanaim, and Absalom wente ouer Iordane, & all the men of Israel with him. And Absalom had set Amasa ouer the hoost in Iobas steade. Amasa was the sonne of a man, whose name was Iethra a Iesraelite, which laye with Abigail the daughter of Nahas the sister of Zeru Ia Iobas mother. But Israel and Absalom pitched in Gilead.

Whan Dauid was come to Mahanaim, § Nahas of Rabbath of the childrē of Ammon, and ¶ Machir the sonne of Ammiel of Lodebar, and ¶ Barsillai a Gileadite of Roglim broughte bedstufte, tapestrie worke, basens, earthen vessell, whete, barley, meel, parched corne, beenes, otemeell, ryse, hony, butter, shepe and fat oxen vnto Dauid, and to y<sup>e</sup> people that was with him, for to eate: for they thought, The people shall be hongrie, weerye and thirstye in the wyldernes.

The xviij. Chapter.

AND Dauid mustred the people y<sup>e</sup> was with him, and set captaynes ouer the, ouer thousandes and ouer hundreds. And sent out of the people one thirde parte vnder Abisai the sonne of Zeru Ia Iobabs brother, and one thirde parte vnder * Ithai the Gethite. And the kyng sayde vnto the people: I wyll go forth with you also. Neuertheles the people sayde: Thou shalt not go forth, for though we fle, or die halfe of vs they shal not regarde vs. For thou art as ten thousande of vs. Therefore is this better that thou mayest helpe vs out of the cite. The kyng sayde: Loke what ye are content withall, that wyl I do. And the kyng stode in the gate, and all the people wente forth by hundreds and by thousandes. And y<sup>e</sup> kyng comaunded Iobab and Abisai, and Ithai, and sayde: Intreate me the yonge man Absalom gently. And all the people herde it, whā the kyng comaunded all the captaynes concernynge Absalom. And whan the people were come forth in to the felde agaynst Israel, the battaill beganne in the wod of Ephraim. And the people of Israel were smitten there before Dauids seruantes, so that there was a greate slaughter the same daye, of twentye thousande men. And the battaill was scatred abrode there in the londe. And the wod consumed moch more people the same daye, then the swerde consumed.

And Absalom met Dauids seruantes, and rode vpon a Mule. And whan the Mule came vnder a greate thicke Oke tre, his heade toke holde on the Oke, and so hanged he betwene heauen and earth, but the Mule ranne awaye from vnder him. Whan a certayne man sawe that, he tolde Iobab, and saide: Beholde, I sawe Absalom hange vpō an Oke tre. And Iobab saide vnto the mā y<sup>e</sup> tolde it him: Beholde, sawest thou that, why smotest thou him not there to the groude? so wolde I haue geuen the of myne awne behalfe ten syluerlynges and a gyrdell.

The man sayde vnto Iobab: Yf thou haddest

weyed me a thousande syluerlynges in my handes, yet wolde I not haue layed my handes on the kynges sonne. For the kyng comaunded the and Abisai and Ithai before oure eares, and sayde: Kepe me the yonge man Absalom. Or yf I had dyssembled vpon the ioperdy of myne owne soule (for so moch as nothinge shulde be hyd from y<sup>e</sup> kyng) thou thy selfe shuldest haue stode against me. Iobab sayde: Not so, I wil vpon him before thy face.

Then toke Iobab thre speares in his hande, and thrust Absalom thorow y<sup>e</sup> hert, while he was yet alyue vpon the Oke. And ten yōge men Iobabs weaponbearers, came aboute him, and smote him to death. Then blewe Iobab the trompe, and broughte the people agayne, that they shulde folowe nomore vpon Israel. For Iobab wolde fauoure the people. And they toke Absalom, and cast him in the wod in to a greate pytt, and layed a greate heape of stones vpon him. And all Israel fled, euery one vnto his tente.

Absalom had set him vp a piler whyle he was yet alyue, which stode in the kynges valley, for he sayde: I haue no sonne, therefore shall this be a remembrance of my name: and he called the piler after his owne name. And vnto this daie it is yet called Absaloms place.

Ahimaas the sonne of Sadoc sayde: Let me runne now, and brynge the kyng wordes, that the LORDE hath gotten him righte frō the hande of his enemies. But Iobab sayde: Thou shalt bringe no good tidings to daie another daye shalt thou brynge him wordes, and not to daye, for the kynges sonne is deed. But vnto Chusi sayde Iobab: Go thou thy waye, and tell the kyng what thou hast sene. And Chusi did his obeysaunce vnto Iobab, and ranne. Ahimaas the sonne of Sadoc saide agayne vnto Iobab: What and I ranne also? Iobab sayde: What wilt thou runne my sonne? Come hither, thou shalt brynge no good tydings. (He answered:) What and I ranne yet. He saide vnto him: Renne on thy waye then. So Ahimaas ranne the straight waye, and came before Chusi.

As for Dauid, he sat betwene the two gates. And the watchman wente vp to y<sup>e</sup> toppe of the porte vpon the wall, and lifte vp his eyes, and sawe a man renninge alone, and cryed, and tolde the kyng. The kyng sayde: Yf he be alone, then is there good tydings in his mouth. And as the same wente and came forth, the watchman sawe another man rennyng, and cryed in the porte and sayde: Beholde, there runneth a man alone. The kynge sayde: The same is a good messaunger also. The watchman sayde: I se the rennyng of the first as it were the rennyng of Ahimaas the sonne of Sadoc. And the kynge sayde: He is a good man, and bryngeth good tidings. Ahimaas cryed, and sayde vnto f kynge: Peace, and worshipped before the kynge vpon his face to the grounde, and sayde: Praised be the LORDE thy God, which hath geuen ouer f men that lifte vp their handes agaynst my lorde the kynge.

f The kynge sayde: Goeth it well with the yonge man Absalom? Ahimaas sayde: I sawe a greute vproure, whan Ioab the kynges seruauent sent me thy seruauent, and I wote not what it was. The kynge sayde: Go aboute, and stonde here. And he wente aboute and stode there. Beholde, then came Chusi and sayde: I brynge good tydings my lorde the kynge: The LORDE hath executed righte for the this daye, from the hande of all them that rose vp agaynst the. But the kynge sayde vnto Chusi: Goeth it well with the yonge man Absalom? Chusi sayde: Euen so go it with all the enemies of my lorde the kynge, and with all them that ryse vp agaynst the to do euell, as it goeth with the yonge man. Then was the kynge soroufull, and wente vp in to the perler vpon the gate, and wepte, and as he wente, he sayde thus: O my sonne Absalom, my sonne, my sonne Absalom, wolde God f I shulde dye for the. O Absalom my sonne, my sonne.

The xix. Chapter.

A AND it was tolde Ioab: beholde, f kynge wepeth & mourneth for Absalom. And so out of f victory of f daye there came a mourninge amonge all the people. For the people had herde the same daye, f the kynge toke on heuely because of his sonne. And f people stale awaye the same daye, so that they came not in to the cite: as a people that is put to sharme, pycketh them selues awaye, whan they are fled in a battayll. As for the kynge, he had couered his face, and cryed loude, and sayde: Oh my sonne Absalom, Absalom my sonne, my sonne.

But Ioab came to the kynge in to the house, and sayde: This daye hast thou shamed all thy seruauentes (which haue deliuered thy soule this daye, and the soules of thy sonnes, of thy daughters, of thy wyues, and of thy cocubynes) in that thou louest them that hate the, and hatest those that loue f. For to daye thou shewest thyselfe, that thou carest not for the captaynes and seruauentes: For I perceaued this daye, that yf Absalom onely were aloue, and we all deed this daye, thou woldest thinke it were well.

Get the vp now therefore, and go forth, and speake loungly vnto thy seruauentes. For I sweare vnto the by f LORDE, yf thou go not forth, there shall not be left the one man this nighte: this shalbe worse vnto f, then all the euell that happened the sence thy youth vp hither to. The kynge gat him vp, and sat in the gate. And it was sayde vnto the people: beholde, the kynge syteth in the gate. Then came all the people before f kynge. But Israel was fled euery one vnto his tent.

And all the people stroue in all the trybes of Israel, and sayde: The kynge ryd vs from the hande of oure enemies, and deliuered vs from the hande of the Philistynes, and was fayne to fle out of the lode for Absalom. So Absalom whom we had aynoynted ouer vs, is deed in the battayll. Why are ye so styll now, that ye fetch not the kynge agayne?

The kynge sent vnto Sadoc & Abiathar the prestes, & caused to saye vnto the: Speake to the Elders of Iuda, & saye: Why wyl ye be the last to fetch the kynge agayne vnto his house? (for f sayenge of all Israel was come before the kynge in to his house) ye are my brethren, my bone, and my flesh. Wherefore wyl ye then be the last to brynge the kynge agayne? And saye vnto Amasa: Art not thou my bone and my flesh? God do this & that vnto me, yf thou shalt not be the chefe captayne before me in Ioabs steade, as longe as thou lyuest.

And he bowed the hert of all the men of Iuda as of one man. And they sent vnto f kynge: Come agayne, thou and all thy seruauentes: So the kynge came agayne. And whan he came vnto Iordane, f men of Iuda were come to Gilgal, for to go downe to mete the kynge, that they mighte brynge f kynge ouer Iordane. And Semei the sonne of Gera the sonne of Iemini, which dwelt at Bahurim, made haist, and wente downe with ȝ men of Iuda to mete kynge Dauid, and there were with him a thousande mē of Ben Iamin. *Siba also the seruaunt of the house of Saul with his fyftene sonnes and twenty seruauntes, ȝ gat them thorow Iordane and passed ouer ȝ fery, that they mighte brynge ouer the kynge's housholde, and to do him pleasure.

But Semei the sonne of Gera fell downe before the kynge, whan he passed ouer Iordane, and sayde vnto the kynge: O my lorde, laye not the trespace vnto my charge, ȝ thinke not vpon it that thy seruaunt vexed the, ȝ in the daye whan my lorde the kynge wente out of Ierusalem: and let not ȝ kynge take it to hert, for thy seruaunt knoweth that he hath synned. And beholde, this daye am I come the first amonge all the house of Ioseph, for to go downe to mete my lorde the kynge.

Neuertheles Abisai the sonne of Zeru Ia answered and sayde: And shulde not Semei dye therefore, seynge he hath cursed ȝ anoynted of ȝ LORDE? But Dauid sayde: †What haue I to do with you ye children of Zeru Ia, that ye wyll become Sathan vnto me this daye? Shulde eny man dye this daye in Israel? Thynkest thou that I knowe not, ȝ I am become kynge ouer Israel this daye? And ȝ kynge sayde vnto Simei: Thou shalt not dye. And the kynge sware vnto him.

¶ Mephiboseth the sonne of Saul came downe also to mete the kynge. And he had not made cleane his fete ner combed his beerde, nether had he waszshed his clothes from the daye that the kynge was gone awaye, vntyll the daye that he came agayne in peace. Now whā he came to Ierusalem for to mete the kynge, the kynge sayde vnto him: Mephiboseth, wherfore wentest thou not with me? And he sayde: My lorde O kynge, my seruaunt hath dealt vnrighteously with me: for thy seruaunt thoughte: I wil saddell an asse and ryde thereon, and go vnto the kynge: for thy seruaunt is lame, and he hath accused thy seruaunt before my lorde ȝ kynge. § But my lorde ȝ kynge is an angell of God, and thou mayest do what pleaseth the. For all my fathers house was nothinge, but people of death before my lorde ȝ kynge. ¶ And yet hast thou set thy seruaunt amonge them that eate at thy table. What other righteousnes haue I, that I shulde crye eny more vnto the kynge? The kynge sayde vnto him: What speakest thou yet more of thy matter? I haue sayde: Thou and Siba parte the londe betwene you. Mephiboseth sayde vnto the kynge: Let him take it all, in as moch as my lorde ȝ kynge is come home in peace.

And Barsillai the Gileadite came downe from Roglim, and broughte the kynge ouer Iordane, that he mighte cōuey him in Iordane. And Barsillai was very olde, so good as foure score yeare olde, ¶ the same had prouyded ȝ kynge of fode whyle he was at Mahanaim, for he was a very noble man. And the kynge sayde vnto Barsillai: Thou shalt go ouer with me, I wyll take care for the with myne awne selfe at Ierusalem. But Barsillai sayde vnto the kynge: What haue I yet to lyue, that I shulde go vp to Ierusalem with the kynge? This daye am I foure score yeare olde. How shulde I knowe what is good or euell, or taist what I eate or drynke, or heare what the Musicians do synge? Why shulde thy seruaunt be chargeable first vnto my lorde the kynge? thy seruaunt shall go a litle with the kynge ouer Iordane. Why wil the kynge recompence me after this maner? Let thy seruaunt turne backe agayne, that I maye dye in my cite besyde my father and my mothers graue. Beholde, there is thy seruaunt Chimeam, let him go ouer with my lorde the kynge, and do vnto him what pleaseth the.

The kynge sayde: Chimeam shal go ouer with me, and I wyll do for him what liketh the: and what so euer thou desyrest of me, that wyll I do for the also. And whan all ȝ people was gone ouer Iordane and the kynge likewise, the kynge kyssed Barsillai and blessed him, and he turned vnto his place. And ȝ kynge passed ouer vnto Gilgal, and Chimeam wente with him. And all the people of Iuda broughte the kynge ouer, howbeit there was but halfe of the people of Israel there.

And beholde, thē came all the men of Israel vnto the kynge, ȝ sayde vnto him: Why haue oure brethren the men of Iuda stollen the awaye, and haue conueyed ȝ kynge and his housholde ouer Iordane, and all Dauids men with him? Then answered they of Iuda vnto them of Israel: The kynge is of oure nye kynred, why are ye augrie therfore? Thynke ye that we haue receaued eny fode or giftes of the kynge? Then answered they of Israel vnto them of Iuda, & sayde: We haue ten tymes more with the kynge and with Dauid, the thou, why hast thou regarded me then so lightly, that oures were not the first to fetch oure kynge agayne? But they of Iuda spake harder then they of Israel.

THE xx. Chapter.

THERE was a famous man of Belial there, whose name was Seba & sonne of Bichri, a mā of Iemini, which blewē the trompe, and sayde: *We haue no porcion in Dauid, ner inheritaunce in & sonne of Isai: let euery one get him to his tent, O Israel. Then fell euery man in Israel from Dauid, and folowed Seba the sonne of Bichri. But the men of Iuda cleued vnto their kynge from Iordane vnto Ierusalē. Whan Dauid came home to Ierusalem, he toke the ten concubynes (t whom he had lefte to kepe the house) and put them in a holde to be kepte, and made prouysion for them: but he laye not with them, and so were they shut vp vnto their death, and lyued wedowes.

And & kynge sayde vnto Amasa: Call me all the men of Iuda together agaynst the thirde daye, & be thou here present also. And Amasa wēte to call Iuda together. And he was slacke to come at & tyme which he had appoynted him. And Dauid sayde vnto Abisai: Now shall Seba the sonne of Bichri do vs more harme then Absalom. Take thou thy lordes seruantes, and folowe vpon him, & he fynde not some strōge cities for him, and so escape out of oure sighte. Then wente Iobas mē forth after him, and the Chrethians and Plethians, and all the mightie mē: and they wēte out of Ierusalem to folowe vpon Seba the sonne of Bichri.

But whan they were by the greate stone at Gibeon, Amasa came before them. As for Iobas, he was gyrded aboue his garment which he had on, and vpon it he had a swerde gyrded, which hanged by his thye in the sheeth, and wente easely out and in, and fell frō him. And Iobas sayde vnto Amasa: Peace be with the my brother. And Iobas toke Amasa by the beerde with his righte hāde, to kysse him. And Amasa toke no hede vnto & swerde in Iobas hande, and he thrust him therwith in to the bely, & his bowels ranne out vpon the earth, and he thrust at him no more. And so he dyed.

Iobas & his brother Abisai folowed vpon Seba & sonne of Bichri. And one of Iobas seruantes stode by him, and sayde: What is he this & wolde be agaynst Iobas to please Dauid, and to be with Dauid in Iobas steade? As for Amasa, he laye rolled in the bloude in & myddes of the strete. But whā one sawe that all the people stode there still, he remoued Amasa from the strete vnto the felde, and cast a clothe vpon him, for so moch as he sawe, that who so euer came by him, stode styll. Now whan he was put out of the waye, euery man wēte after Iobas, to folowe vpon Seba the sonne of Bichri.

And he wente thorow all & trybes of Israel vnto Abel Beth Maacha, and all the best chosen men gathered them selues together, & folowed after him, and came and beseged him at Abel Beth Maacha, and made a banke aboute the cite harde on & wall. And all the people that was with Iobas, layed to their ordynaunce, and wolde haue cast downe the wall.

Then cried there a wyse womā out of & cite: Heare, heare, saye vnto Iobas that he come hither, I wyl speake with him. And whā he came to her, the woman sayde: Art thou Iobas? He sayde: Yee. She sayde vnto him: Heare the wordes of thy hand-mayden. He sayde: I heare. She sayde: The comon sayenge was somtyme: Who so wyll axe, let him axe at Abel, and so came it to a good ende. This is & noble and faithfull cite in Israel, and wilt thou destroye the cite and the mother in Israel? Why wilt thou swalowe vp the enheritaunce of the LORDE?

Iobas answered and sayde: That be farre, that be farre fro me, that I shulde swalowe vp and destroye. The matter is not so, but a certayne man of mount Ephraim named Seba the sonne of Bichri, hath lifte vp him selfe agaynst kynge Dauid, delyuer him onely, and I wyl departe from the cite. The woman sayde vnto Iobas: Beholde, his heade shal be cast vnto the ouer the wall. And the woman came in to all the people with hir wysdome. And they smote of the heade of Seba the sonne of Bichri, and cast it vnto Iobas. Then blewē he the trompe, and they departed from the cite, euery one vnto his tent. But Ioab came agayne to Ierusalem vnto the kyng.

\* Ioab was captayne ouer all the hoost of Israel: Benaia  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Ioiaa was ouer the Chrethians and Plethians: Adoram was rent gatherer: Iosaphat the sonne of Ahilud was Chaunceler: Seia was the scribe: Sadoc and Abiathar were the prestes: Ira also  $\hat{y}$  Iairite was Dauids prest.

The xxi. Chapter.

A THERE was a derth also in Dauids tyme thre yeares together. And Dauid soughte the face of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE. And the LORDE sayde: Because of Saul and because of that bloody housholde  $\dagger \hat{y}$  he slewe the Gibeonites. Then the kyng caused for to call the Gibeonites, and spake vnto them. (As for the Gibeonites, they were not of  $\hat{y}$  children of Israel, but a remnaunt of the Amorites: howbeit the children of Israel had sworne vnto the, and Saul soughte for to smyte them in his gelousy, for the childrē of Israel and Iuda.) Then sayde Dauid to the Gibeonites: What shal I do vnto you? And where withall shal I make the attonement, that ye maye blesse  $\hat{y}$  enheritaunce of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE? The Gibeonites sayde vnto him: It is not for golde and syluer that we haue to do with Saul and his house, nether haue we oughte to do for to slaye eny mā in Israel.

B He sayde: What saye ye then, that I shal do vnto you? They sayde vnto  $\hat{y}$  kyng: The man that hath destroyed vs and broughte vs to naughte, shulde we destroye, that nothinge be lefte him in all the coastes of Israel. Let there be geuen vs seuen men of his sonnes, that we maye hange them vp vnto the LORDE at Gibeā of Saul the chosen of the LORDE. The kyng sayde: I wyl geue them. Howbeit the kyng spared Mephiboseth  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Ionathas  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Saul, because of the ooth of the LORDE  $\hat{y}$  was betwene them:  $\S$  namely, betwene Dauid  $\tau$  Ionathas the sonne of Saul. But the two sonnes of Rispa  $\hat{y}$  daughter of Aia, whom she had borne vnto Saul, Armoni  $\tau$  Mephiboseth, And the fyue sonnes of Michol the daughter of Saul, whom she bare vnto Adriel the sonne of Barsillai the Mahalothite, dyd the kyng take, and gaue them in to the handes of  $\hat{y}$  Gibeonites, which hanged the vp vpō the mount before the LORDE.

C So these seuen fell at one tyme, and dyed in the tyme of the first haruest, whan  $\hat{y}$  barly haruest begynneth. Then toke Rispa the daughter of Aia a sack cloth,  $\tau$  spred it vpon the rock in the begynnyng of the haruest, tyll the water from the heauen dropped vpō them, and suffred not the foules of the heauen to rest on them on the daye tyme, nether the wylde beestes of the felde on the night season. And it was tolde Dauid what Rispa the daughter of Aia Sauls concubine had done.

And Dauid wente and toke the bones of Saul and the bones of Ionathas his sonne from  $\hat{y}$  citesens at Iabes in Gilead (which they had stollen from  $\hat{y}$  strete at Bethsan, where  $\hat{y}$  Philistynes had hanged the, what tyme as the Philistynes had smytten Saul vpon mount Gilboa) and broughte them vp from thence, and gathered them together with the bones of them that were hanged. And the bones of Saul and of his sonne Ionathas buried they in  $\hat{y}$  londe of Ben Iamin, besyde  $\hat{y}$  graue of his father Cis. So after this was God at one with the londe.

But there arose warre agayne of  $\hat{y}$  Philistynes agaynst Israel. And Dauid wente downe  $\tau$  his seruantes with him,  $\tau$  foughte agaynst the Philistynes. And Dauid was weery,  $\tau$  Iesbi of Nob (which was one of the children of Rapha, and the weight of his speare was thre C. weight of brasse, and had a new harnesse vpon him) thoughte to smyte Dauid. Neuertheles Abisai the sonne of Zeru Ia helped him,  $\tau$  smote the Philistyne to death. Then sware Dauids men vnto him,  $\tau$  sayde: ¶ Thou shalt nomore go forth with vs vnto the warre, that the lanterne in Israel be not put out.

E ** Afterwarde there arose yet warre at Nob with the Philistynes. Then Sibechai the Husathite smote Saph, which also was one of the childrē of Rapha.

And there arose yet warre at Gob with the Philistynes. Then Elhanan the sonne of Iaere Ōrgim a Bethleemite smote Goliath the Gethite, which had a speare, whose shaft was like a weeuers lome.

And there arose yet warre at Gath, where there was a cōtencious man, which had sixe fyngers on his handes, and sixe toes on his fete, that is foure and twety in the nombre, and he was borne also of Rapha. And whan he spake despitefully vnto Israel, Ionathas ꝑ sonne of Simea Dauids brother smote him. These foure were borne vnto Rapha at Gath, and fell thorow the hande of Dauid and of his seruantes

The xxiij. Chapter.

AND Dauid spake the wordes of this songe before the LORDE, what tyme as the LORDE had deluyered him frō the hande of all his enemies, and from the hande of Saul, and he sayde.

The LORDE is my stony rock, & my castell, and my deluyerer.

God is my strength, in him wyl I put my trust: my shyld & the horne of my saluacion, my defence & my refuge, my Sauoure, thou shalt helpe me from violent wronge.

* I wil call vpon the LORDE with prayse, so shal I be deluyered fro myne enemies.

For the sorowes of death cōpased me, and the brokes of Belial made me afrayed.

The paynes of hell came aboute me, and the snares of death had ouertaken me.

B Whā I was in trouble, I called vpon the LORDE, yee euen my God called I vpon, & so he herde my voyce frō his holy temple, & my cōplaynte (came) in to his eares.

The earth trembled and quaked, the foundacions of the heauen shoke and moued, because he was wroth.

Smoke wente vp from his nose, and consuminge fyre out of his mouth, coles were kyndled therof.

He bowed the heauens and came downe, and it was darke vnder his fete.

He sat vpon Cherub and dyd flye, and appeared vpon the fethers of the wynde.

He made darknes his paulyon rounde aboute him, thicke water in the cloudes of ꝑ ayre.

At the brightnesse of him were the fyre coles kyndled.

The LORDE thondered from heauē, and the Hyest put forth his voyce.

He shot his arrowes, and scattered them: he lightened, and discomfited them.

C The pourynges out of the See were sene,

* Psal. 17. a.

and the foundacions of the earth were discovered at the chydyinge of the LORDE, & at the breth of the sprete of his wrath.

He sent downe from aboue, and receaued me, and drue me out of many waters.

He deluyered me fro my stronge enemye, from them that hated me, for they were to mightie for me.

They ouertoke me in the tyme of my trouble, but the LORDE was my succoure.

He broughte me forth in to liberty: he deluyered me, because he had a fauoure vnto me.

The LORDE shal rewarde me after my righteousnes, and acordinge to the clenness of my handes shal he recompence me.

For I haue kepte ꝑ waye of the LORDE, & haue not bene vn godly agaynst my God.

For I haue an eye vnto all his lawes, and haue not put his ordinaunces fro me. D

Therefore wil I be perfecte vnto him, and wyl eshue myne awne wickednes.

So shal ꝑ LORDE rewarde me after my righteousnes, acordinge to the clenness of my handes in his eye sighte.

With the holy shalt thou be holy, and with the perfecte thou shalt be perfecte.

With the cleane thou shalt be cleane, and with the frowarde thou shalt be frowarde.

For thou shalt saue the poore oppressed people, and shalt set thine eyes agaynst the proude to brynge them downe.

For thou O LORDE art my lanterne. The LORDE shal lighte my darknesse.

For in ꝑ I shal discōfite an hoost of men, & in my God I shal leape ouer the wall.

The waye of God is perfecte: ꝑ wordes of the LORDE are tryed in the fyre: he is a shyld for all thē that put their trust in him. E

For where is there a God, excepte ꝑ LORDE? Or who hath eny strength without oure God?

God hath strēghthed me with power, and made playne a perfecte waye for me.

He hath made my fete like hartes fete, & hath set me vp an hye.

He teacheth my handes to fighte, and bendeth the stele bowe with myne armes.

And thou hast geuen me the shyld of thy health, and with thy lounge correccion shalt thou multiplye me.

Thou hast enlarged my goinge vnder me, and myne ankles haue not slyded.

I wyl folowe vpon myne enemies, and destroye thē: and wyl not turne backe agayne, tyll I haue broughte them to naught.

f I wil cōsume them and thrust them thorow, that they come not vp: they shal fall vnder my fete.

Thou hast girded me with strength to fy battayll, and hast subdued them vnder me fy rose vp agaynst me.

Thou hast made myne enemies to turne their backs vpō me, that I might destroye them that hate me.

They shal crye, but there shalbe no Sauoure: yee euen vnto the LORDE, but he answereth them not.

I wil beate them as small as the dust of the earth: euen as fy claye of the stretes wil I make them thynne, and sprede them out abrode.

But me shalt thou delyuer from the stryuynges of the people, and shalt kepe me to be fy heade of the Heythen: A people whom I haue not knowne, shal serue me.

G The straunge children haue denyed me: at the hearynge of the eare shal they herke vnto me.

The straunge children are waxen olde, and are shut vp in their presons.

The LORDE lyueth, and blessed be my God, and magnified be the strength of my health.

God seyth that I be auenged, and subdueth the people vnto me.

He bryngeth me out fro myne enemies: and from them fy ryse vp agaynst me, shalt thou exalte me, and from fy cruell man shalt thou delyuer me.

* For this cause wyl I geue thanks vnto the amonge the Heythen, and synge prayes vnto thy name.

Which doth greate health for his kynge, and sheweth mercy vnto Dauid his anyoynted, and to his sede for euermore.

The xxiij. Chapter.

A THESE are the last wordes of Dauid: Dauid the sonne of Isai sayde. The man, that was set vp to be fy anyoynted of the God of Iacob, and a pleasaunt dyter of songes of Israel, sayde: The sprete of the LORDE hath spoken by me, and the vtteraunce therof is done thorow my tunge. He sayde: The God of Israel hath spokē vnto me, the strength of Israel, the gouernoure amonge men, the righteous gouernoure in the feare of God. As the lighte is in fy mornyng when the Sonne aryseth, so that for the brightnesse therof no cloude remayneth: and as the grasse loketh vpon the earth thorow the rayne, euen so shal my house be with God. † For he hath made an euerlasting couenaunt with me, well appoynted on euery syde and sure. For this is all my health and pleasure, that it shal growe. But the Belial shal be vterly and cleane roted out as the thornes, which mō take not in their hādes. And they fy touch them, shal destroye them with yrons and speares: and in the fyre shal they be brent, that they maye be broughte to naught.

These are the names of Dauids Worthies: 33 Iasabeam fy sonne of Hachmoni, the chefest amonge thre, which life vp his speare, and slewe eight hundreth at one tyme.

After him was Eleasar the sonne of Dodi the sonne of Ahohi amonge the thre Worthies with Dauid, when they spake despytefully to the Philistynes, and were gathered together to the battayll, and the men of Israel wente vp. Then stode he vp and smote the Philistynes, tyll his hande was so weery that it crompted with the swerde. And the LORDE gaue a greate victory at the same tyme, so that the people turned after him to spoyle. After him was Samma the sonne of Age fy Hararite. Whā the Philistynes had gathered them selues in a company, and in the same place there was a pece of lōde full of small corne, and the people fled before the Philistynes, thē stode he in the myddes of fy pece of londe, and delyuered it, and smote fy Philistynes. And God gaue a greate victory.

And these thre pryncipall amonge thirtie, C came downe in the haruest vnto Dauid, in to the caue of Adullam, and the hoost of fy Philistynes laye in fy valley of Rephaim. But Dauid was at the same tyme in the castell, and fy Philistynes people laye at Bethleem. And Dauid was desyrous, and sayde: Wolde God fy some man wolde fetch me a drynke of water out of the well at Bethleem vnder the gate. Thē brake the thre Worthies in to the hoost of the Philistynes, and drue of the water out of the well at Bethleem vnder fy gate, and caried it and broughte it vnto Dauid: neuertheles he wolde not drynke it, but offred it vnto the

He liſte vp his ſpeare ⁊ ſmote thre hundreth, ⁊ was an awncient man amōge thre, ⁊ the nobleſt amonge thre, ⁊ was their ruler. But he came not vnto the thre. †And Benaia the ſonne of Ioiaa, the ſonne of Ishail (a man of greates actes of Cabzeell) ſmote two mightie giautes of ⁊ Moabites, ⁊ wēte downe, ⁊ ſlewe a lyon at a well in the ſnowe tyme. He ſmote also a fayre goodly man of Egipte, which had a ſpeare in his hande. But he wēte downe to him with a ſtaffe, and toke the ſpeare out of the Egipcians hande by violence, and ſlewe him with his owne ſpeare. This dyd Benaia the ſonne of Ioiaa, and was a famous man amōge thre Worthies, and more honorable then the thirtie, but he came not vnto the thre. And Dauid made him of his ſecrete coucell.

Asahel the brother of Ioab is amonge ⁊ thirtie: Elham his vnclen ſonne at Bethleem. Samma the Haradite, Elika the Haradite, Helez the Paltite, Ira the ſonne of Ikes the Tekoite, Abiser the Anthothite, Mebunai the Huſathite, Zalmon the Ahohite, Maherai the Netophatite, Ithai the ſonne of Ribai of Gibeā of the childrē of Ben Iamin, Benaia the Pargathonite, Hidai of the broke of Gaas, Abialbon the Arbathite, Asmaueh the Bahumite, Eliaheba the Baalbonite. The children of Iaſen and Ionathas: Samma the Hararite, Eliphelet the ſonne of Ahaſzbai ⁊ ſonne of Maechathi, Eliam the ſonne of Achitophel ⁊ Gilonite, Heſrai of Carmel, Paerai the Arbite, Iegael the ſonne of Nathan of Soba, Bani the Gadite, Zeleg the Ammonite, Naharai the Beerothite, the weapon bearer of Ioab the ſonne of Zeru Ia, Ira the Iethrite, Gareb the Iethrite, Vrias the Hethite. These are altogether ſeuē and thirtie.

The xxiij. Chapter.

⁊ A ND the LORDE was wrothfully displeased of ⁊ new agaynst Israel, ⁊ moued Dauid amonge them, because he ſaide: Go, nombre Israel and Iuda. And the kyng ſaide vnto Ioab ⁊ chiefe captayne of his hoost:

Go aboute in all the trybes of Israel, from Dan vnto Berseba, and nombre the people, that I maye knowe how many they be. Ioab ſaide vnto the kyng: The LORDE thy God adde vnto this people an hundreth tymes as moch as it is now, that my lorde the kyng maye ſe his eyes luſt theron. But why haſt my lorde the kyng a deſyre to this thinge? Neuertheles the kynges worde preuayled agaynst Ioab and the captaynes of the hoost.

So Ioab and ⁊ captaynes of the hoost wente forth from the kyng, to nombre the people of Israel, and passed ouer Iordane, and pitched at Aroer, at the righte hande of the cite which lyeth in ⁊ ryuer of Gad, and at Iaſeer, ⁊ came to Gilead, and in the lowe cōuntrie of Haddi, and came vnto Dan Iaan, and aboute Sidon, and came to the stronge cite of Tyrus, and all the cities of the Heuites and Cananites, and came forth to the south parte of Iuda vnto Berseba, and wēte rounde aboute that cōuntrie, and after nyne monethes and twenty daies they came to Ierusalem. And Ioab deliuered vnto ⁊ kyng the ſumme of the people that was nombred. And in Israel there were eight C. thouſande stronge men, that drue out the ſwerde: and in Iuda fyue hundreth thouſande men. And after that the people was nombred, Dauids hert ſmote him ſelfe. And Dauid ſaide vnto ⁊ LORDE: I haue ſynned ſore, that I haue done this. And now LORDE take awaie the treſpase of thy ſeruaunt. For I haue done vey vnwyſely.

And whan Dauid roſe vp in the mornynge, ⁊ the worde of the LORDE came vnto the prophet God, Dauids Seer, ⁊ ſaide: Go ⁊ ſpeake vnto Dauid. Thus ſayeth the LORDE: I brynge the thre thinges, choſe the one of them, that I maye do it vnto the. Gad came vnto Dauid, and tolde him, and ſaide vnto him: Wilt thou that ſeuē yere derth ſhall come in to thy londe? Or that thou be fayne to flye before thine aduerſaries thre monethes, and they to perſecute the? Or that there be peſtilence thre dayes in the londe? Take aduſement therfore and ſe, what anſwere I ſhal bringe agayne vnto him ⁊ ſent me.

Dauid ſaide vnto Gad: I am in extreme trouble. † Neuertheles (yf it maye be) let me rather fall in to ⁊ handes of the LORDE (for his mercy is greates) I wyll not fall in to the handes of men.

D So the LORDE sent pestilēce in to Israel from the morow vnto the tyme appoynted, so that there dyed of the people from Dan vnto Berseba, thre score and ten thousande men. And whan the angel stretched his hande ouer Ierusalem to destroye it, the LORDE repented ouer the euell, and sayde vnto the angell: It is ynough, holde now thy hande. The angell of the LORDE was besyde the barne of Arafna the Iebusite. But whan Dauid sawe the angell that smote the people, he sayde vnto the LORDE: beholde, It is I that haue synned, I haue done the trespase: As for these shepe, what haue they done? Oh let thy hāde be agaynst me and agaynst my fathers house.

And Gad came to Dauid at the same tyme, and saide vnto him: Go vp, and set vp an altare vnto the LORDE in ſ̄ barne of Arafna the Iebusite. So Dauid wēte vp as Gad sayde, and as the LORDE had commaunded. And whā Arafna loked aboute him, he sawe the and he worshipped vpon his face to the grounde, and sayde: Wherfore commeth my lorde ſ̄ kyng vnto his seruaut? Dauid sayde: To bye the barne of the, and to buylde an altare vnto the LORDE, that the plage maye cease from the people.

But Arafna sayde vnto Dauid: Let my lorde the kyng take it, and offre what pleaseth him. Beholde, there is an ox for a burnt offerynge, and sleddes, and vessels of oxen to the wodd. All this gaue Arafna vnto the kyng. And Arafna sayde vnto ſ̄ kyng: The LORDE thy God make the accepted vnto him. Neuertheles ſ̄ kyng sayde vnto Arafna: Not so, but I wyll bye it of the for as moch as it is worth. For I wyl not offre burnt offerynges vnto ſ̄ LORDE, of ſ̄ which I haue for naughte. So Dauid boughte the barne and the ox for fiftye Sicles of syluer, and buylde an altare there vnto the LORDE, and offred burnt offerynges & deed offerynges. And the LORDE was mercifull vnto ſ̄ lorde, and ſ̄ plage ceased from the people of Israel.

The first Chapter.

AND whā kinge Dauid was olde & well stryckē in age, he coulde not be warme, though he was couered with clothes. Then sayde his seruauantes vnto him: Let vs seke a yonge damsell a virgin for oure lorde the kyng, to stonde before the kyng, and to norish him, & to slepe in his armes, and to warme oure lorde the kyng. And they sought a fayre dāsell in all the coastes of Israel, and founde Abisag of Sunem, and brought her vnto f̄ kyng. And she was a very fayre damsell, and norished f̄ kyng, and serued him. Howbeit the kyng knewe her not.

Adonias f̄ sonne of Hagith lifte vp himselfe, and sayde: I wyl be kyng. And he prepared him charettes and horsmen, and fyftie men to be renners on fote before him. And his father reproveth h̄ not therefore, so much as to saye: Wherefore doest thou so? And he was a man of a very fayre bewtye *and he had begotten him nexte after Absalō. And his matter stode by Ioab f̄ sonne of Zeru Ia and by Abiathar the prest, which helped Adonias. But Sadoc the prest, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and Nathan the prest and Semei and Rei, and Dauids Worthies were not with Adonias.

B And whā Adonias offred shepe and oxē, and fat catell besyde the stone of Soheleth, which lyeth by the well of Rogel, he called all his brethrē the kynges sonnes, and all the men of Iuda the kynges seruātes. But the prophet Nathan and Benaia, and the Worthies, and his brother Salomon called he not. Then sayde Nathan vnto Bethseba Salomons mother: Hast thou not herd f̄ Adonias is kyng, and oure lorde Dauid knoweth not therof? Come now therefore, I wyl geue the counsell, that thou mayest delyuer thy soule and the soule of thy sonne Salomon. Come now and go in to kyng Dauid and saye vnto him: Hast not thou my lorde the kyng sworne and sayde vnto thy handmayden: Salomon thy sonne shall be kyng after me, and he shall sytt vpon my seate? Why is then Adonias made kyng? Beholde, while thou art yet there, and talkest with the kyng, I wyl come in after the, and tell forth thy tale. And Bethseba wente in to the kyng to f̄ chamber.

* 2 Reg. 3. a.

And the kyng was very olde. And Abisag of Sunem serued the kyng. And Bethseba bowed herselfe, and worshipped the kyng.

The kyng sayde: What wilt thou? She sayde vnto him: My lorde, Thou hast sworne vnto thy handmayde by the LORDE thy God: Thy sonne Salomon shall be kyng after me and syt vpon my seate. But now lo, Adonias is kyng, and my lorde the kyng knoweth it not. He hath offred oxen and fat catell, and many shepe, and hath called all the kynges sonnes, and Abiathar the prest, and Ioab the chefe captayne. But thy seruauant Salomon hath he not bydden. Neuertheles thou my lorde art kyng, the eyes of all Israel lōke vnto the, that thou shuldest shewe them who shall syt vpon the seate of my lorde the kyng after the. And whā my lorde the kyng slepeth with his fathers then shal I and my sonne Salomon be fayne to be synners.

But whye she yet spake to the kyng, the prophet Nathan came, and she tolde f̄ kyng: beholde, there is the prophet Nathan. And whan he came in before the kyng, he worshipped the kyng vpon his face to the grounde, and sayde My lorde O kyng, hast thou saide: Adonias shal be kyng after me, & syt vpon my seate? For he is gone downe this daye, and hath offred oxen, and fat catell, & hath called all the kynges sonnes, and the captaynes, and the prest Abiathar. And beholde, they eate and drynke before him, and saye: God saue the kyng Adonias. But me thy seruauant, and Sadoc the prest, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and thy seruauant Salomon hath he not called. Hath my lorde the kyng commaunded this, and not certified his seruauantes who shall sytt vpon the seate of my lorde the kyng after him?

The kyng answered and saide: Call Bethseba vnto me. And she came in before the kyng. And whan she stode before the kyng, the kyng sware and sayde: As truly as the LORDE lyueth (which hath delyuered my soule out of trouble,) I wyl do vnto the this daye, euen as I sware vnto the by the LORDE the God of Israel, so that Salomon thy sonne shalbe kyng after me, and he shal sit vpon my seate in my steade.

Then Bethseba bowed hir selfe with hir face to the grounde, and thanked the kyng and sayde: God saue my lorde kyng Dauid for euermore. And the kynge sayde: Call me the prest Sadoc & the prophet Nathan, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada.

¶ And whan they came in before the kynge, the kynge sayde vnto them: Take youre lordes seruantes with you, and set my sonne Salomon vpon my Mule, and cary him downe to Gihon: and let Sadoc & prest and the prophet Nathan, anoynte him there to be kynge ouer Israel, and blowe the trompe, and saye: God saue kynge Salomon, and go ye vp after him: and whan he commeth, he shal syt vpon my seate, and be kynge in my steade: for I haue ordeyned him to be prynce ouer Israel and Iuda. Then answered Benaia the sonne of Ioiada vnto the kynge, & sayde: Amen. The LORDE God of my lorde the kynge saye thus also. As the LORDE hath bene with my lorde the kynge, so be he with Salomon also, that his seate maye be greater then the seate of my lorde kynge Dauid.

Then wente they downe, the prest Sadoc and the prophet Nathan, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and the Chrethians, & Plethians, & set Salomon vpon kynge Dauids Mule, & broughte him to Gihon. And Sadoc the prest toke the oyle horn out of the Tabernacle, and anoynted Salomon. And they blew the trompe: And all & people sayde: God saue kynge Salomon.

¶ And all the people wente vp after him, and the people pypped with pypes, and was very ioyfull, so that the earth range at the noyse of them. And Adonias herde it, and all they whom he had called, which were with him, and they had new eaten. And whan Ioab herde the noyse of the trompe, he sayde: What meaneth this noyse of the cite and this busynes? But whyle he yet spake, beholde, Ionathas the sonne of Abiathar & prest came.

And Adonias sayde: Come in, for thou art a valeant man, and bryngest good tydings. Ionathas answered and sayde vnto Adonias: Alas, oure lorde kynge Dauid hath made Salomon kynge, and hath sent with him Sadoc the prest, and the prophet Nathan, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and the Chrethians and Plethians, and they haue set him vpon the kynges Mule: and Sadoc & prest with the prophet Nathan hath anoynted him kynge at Gihon, and from thence are they gone vp with ioye, that the cite range with all: that is the noyse that ye haue herde.

Salomon also sytteth vpon the kynges seate, and the kynges seruantes are gone in to wysch good lucke vnto oure lorde kynge Dauid, and haue sayde: Thy God make Salomon a better name then thy name is, and make his seate greater then thy seate. And they haue wyszshed the kynge good lucke vpon the bed. Morouer & kynge hath sayde thus: Prayed be & LORDE God of Israel, which this daye hath made one to syt vpon my seate, that myne eyes haue sene it.

Then were they afraied, and gatt them vp all that were called by Adonias, and so they departed euery man his waye. But Adonias was afraied of Salomon, and gat him vp, and wete his waye, & toke holde of & hornes of & altare. And it was tolde Salomon: beholde, Adonias feareth kynge Salomō, & beholde, he taketh holde of the hornes of & altare, & sayeth: Let kige Salomō swear vnto me this daye, that he shall not slaye his seruaut with the swerde. Salomon sayde: Yf he wil be an honest man, there shall not one heer fall from him vpon the earth: but yf there be euell founde in him, he shall dye. And kinge Salomō sent, and caused him to be fetched * from the altare. And whan he came, he fell downe before kynge Salomon. But Salomon sayde vnto him: Go thy waye in to thy house.

The ij. Chapter.

NOW whan the tyme came that Dauid shulde dye, he commaunded Salomon his sonne, and sayde: "I go the waye of all the worlde, Be thou strōge therfore, and shewe thyselfe a man, and kepe the watch of the LORDE thy God, that thou walke in his wayes, and holde his ordinaunces, his commaundementes, his lawes, and his testimonies, & as it is written in the lawe of Moses, that thou mayest be wyse in all that thou doest, and whither so euer thou turnest the: that the LORDE maye rayse vp his worde, which he hath spokē ouer me, and saide: Yf thy children kepe their waye and walke before me faithfully and truly and with all their hert and with all their soule, thē shal there neuer fayle the a man vpon the seate of Israel.

Thou knowest well also what Ioab the sonne of Zeru Ia hath done vnto me, what he dyd vnto the two chefe captaynes of Israel, *Abner the sonne of Ner, and †Amasa the sonne of Iether, whom he slewe and shed the bloude of warre whā it was peace, ⁊ put the bloude of warre vpon his girdel ⁊ was aboute his loynes, and in his shues that were vpon his fete: Do thou acordynge to thy wysdome, that thou brynge not his graye heer downe to the graue in peace.

And to the children of Barsyllai the Gileadite, thou shalt shewe mercy, that they maye eate at thy table. For so ioined they thē selues vnto me, whan I fled before thy brother Absalom. And beholde, thou hast with the † Semei the sonne of Gera the sonne of Iemini of Bahurin, which cursed me with very bytter and shamefull cursynges, what tyme as I wente to Mahanaim. Yet ‡ came he downe to mete me at Iordan, where I sware vnto him by the LORDE, and sayde: I wyll not slaye the with the swerde. But suffre not thou him to be vngiltye, for thou art a wyse man, and shalt wel knowe what thou oughtest to do vnto him, that thou mayest brynge his graye heer downe to the graue with bloude.

¶ So Dauid slepte with his fathers, and was buried in the cite of Dauid. The tyme that Dauid was kynge ouer Israel, is fortie yere. ¶ Seuen yereas was he kynge at Hebrō and thre and thirtie yere at Ierusalem. ¶ And Salomon sat vpon the seate of Dauid his father, and his kyngdome was made very sure.

But Adonias the sonne of Hagith came in to Bethseba Salomons mother. And she sayde: Is thy commynge peaceable? He spake: Yee, and sayde: I haue somewhat to saye to the. She sayde: Saye on. He sayde: ¶ Thou knowest that the kyngdome was myne, and that all Israel had sett them selues vpon me, that I shulde be kynge, but now is the kyngdome turned, and become my brothers: for he hath it of the LORDE.

Now desyre I one peticion of the, Make not my face ashamed. She sayde vnto him: Saye on. He sayde: Speake vnto kynge Salomon (for ¶ he shall not shame thy face) that he maye geue me Abisag to wyfe. Bethseba sayde: Wel, I wil speake to the kynge for the.

And Bethseba came in to kynge Salomon to speake with him. And the kynge stode vp, and wente to mete her, and worshipped her, and sat him downe vpon his seate. And there was a chayre set for the kynges mother, so that she sat at his righte hande. And she sayde: One peticion desyre I of the make not my face ashamed. The kynge sayde: Axe O my mother, I wyl not shame thy face. She saide: Let Abisag of Sunem be geuen thy brother Adonias to wyfe.

Then answered kynge Salomon, and saide vnto his mother: Why desyrest thou Abisag of Sunem for Adonias? Axe the kyngdome for him also, for he is my greater brother, ** and hath Abiathar the prest, and Ioab the sonne of Zeru Ia. And the kynge sware by the LORDE, and sayde: God do this and that vnto me, Adonias shall haue spoken this agaynst his lyfe. And now as truly as the LORDE lyueth which hath ordeyned me, and made me to syt vpon the seate of my father Dauid, and hath made me a house (†† accordynge as he sayde) this daye shal Adonias dye.

And kynge Salomon sent thither by Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, which smote him that he dyed. And to the prest Abiathar sayde ⁊ kynge: Go thy waye vnto Anathot to thy londe, for thou art a man of deeth. Neuerthelesse I wyl not slaye the this daye for thou hast borne the Arke of the LORDE God before my father Dauid, and hast suffred also where my father suffred.

Thus Salomō put forth Abiathar, that he must nomore be the prest of the LORDE, that the worde of the LORDE mighte be fulfilled, †† which he spake ouer the house of Eli at Silo.

And this rumoure came before Ioab: for Ioab cleued vnto Adonias, and not vnto Salomon. Then fled Ioab in to the Tabernacle of the LORDE, and toke holde of the hornes of the altare. And it was tolde kynge Salomon, that Ioab was fled in to the Tabernacle of the LORDE, and beholde, he stondesth at the altare.

Then sent Salomon Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and sayde: Go slaye him. And whan Benaia came to the Tabernacle of the LORDE, he sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth the kynge: Come forth. He sayde: No, I wyl dye here. And Benaia tolde this vnto the kynge agayne, and sayde: Thus hath Ioab spoken, and thus hath he answered me.

The kinge saide vnto him: Do as he hath spoken, and slaye him, and bury him, that thou mayest put for me and my fathers house the bloude which Ioab hath shed with out a cause, and that the LORDE maye recompence him his bloude vpon his beade, because he smote two men, which were more righteous and better then he, and slewe them with  $\text{f}$  swarder that my father Dauid knewe not of: namely, \* Abner  $\text{f}$  sonne of Ner the chefe captaine ouer Israel,  $\text{t}$  Amasa the sonne of Iether  $\text{f}$  chefe captaine ouer Iuda  $\text{f}$  their bloude maye be recompensed  $\text{vp}$   $\text{f}$  heade of Ioab and of his sede for euer: but Dauid and his sede, his house and his seate haue peace for euermore of the LORDE.

$\text{f}$  And Benaia the sonne of Ioiaida wente vp, and smote him, and slewe him:  $\text{t}$  he was buried in his house in the wyldernes. And  $\text{f}$  kyng set Benaia  $\text{f}$  sonne of Ioiaida in his steade ouer the hoost. And  $\text{t}$  Sadoc  $\text{f}$  prest dyd the kyng set in the steade of Abiathar.

And the kyng sent, and caused for to call Semei, and sayde vnto him: Buylde the an house at Ierusalem, and dwell there, and departe not from thence, nether hither ner thither. In what daye so euer thou departest forth, and goest ouer  $\text{f}$  broke Cedron, be thou sure, that thou shalt dye the deeth: thy bloude be vpon thy heade. Semei sayde vnto the kyng: This is a good meanynge, as my lorde the kyng hath sayde, so shal thy seruauant do. So Semei dwelt at Ierusalem a longe season. But after thre yere it fortuneth that two seruantes ranne away from Semei vnto Achis the sonne of Maecha kyng of Gath.

And it was tolde Semei: beholde, thy seruantes are at Gath. Then Semei gat him vp, and saddled his asse, and wete vnto Gath to Achis, for to seke his seruantes. And wha he came thither, he broughte his seruantes from Gath.

$\text{C}$  And it was tolde Salomon, that Semei wente from Ierusalem vnto Gath, and was come agayne. Then sent the kyng, and caused for to call Semei, and sayde vnto him: Sware not I to the by the LORDE, and assured the, and sayde: Loke what daye so euer thou departest out and goest hither or thither, be sure that thou shalt dye the deeth? And thou saydest vnto me: I haue herde a good meanynge. Why hast thou not kepte the then acordinge to the ooth of the LORDE, and commaundement that I commaunded the?

And the kyng sayde vnto Semei: Thou remembrest all  $\text{f}$  wickednes, which thy hert knoweth  $\text{t}$  that thou dydest vnto my father Dauid. The LORDE hath recompensed  $\text{f}$  thy wickednes vpon thy heade. And kyng Salomon is blessed, and the seate of Dauid shalbe stablished before  $\text{f}$  LORDE for euer. And the kyng commaunded Benaia  $\text{f}$  sonne of Ioiaida, which wente forth, and smote him that he dyed. And the kyngdome was stablished by Salomons hande.

The iij. Chapter.

$\text{A}$  ND Salomon made mariage with Pharaos the kyng of Egipte,  $\text{t}$  toke Pharaos doughter, and broughte her in to the cite of Dauid, tyll he had buylded his house, and the LORDES house, and the walles rounde aboute Ierusalem. But the people offred yet vpon the hye places: for as yet there was no house buylded vnto the name of the LORDE vnto that tyme. But Salomon loued the LORDE, and walked after the ordinaunces of Dauid his father: excepte onely that he offred and brent incense vpon the hye places.

$\text{f}$  And the kyng wente vnto Gibeon, to do sacrifice there: for that was a goodly hye place. And Salomon offred a thousande burntofferynge vpon the same altare.  $\text{t}$  And the LORDE appeared vnto Salomon at Gibeon in a dreame of the nighte, and God sayde: Axe what I shal geue  $\text{f}$ . Salomō saide: Thou hast done greate mercy vnto my father Dauid thy seruauant. Like as he walked before the in faithfulness and righteousness, and in a true hert with the,  $\text{t}$  this greate mercy hast thou layed vp for him, and geuen him a sonne to syt vpon his seate, as it is now come to passe.

$\text{f}$  Now LORDE my God, thou hast made thy seruauant kyng in my father Dauids steade: As for me, I am but a small yonge man, knowynge nether my outgoynge ner ingoynge. And thy seruauant is amonge the people whom thou hast chosen: which is so greate, that no man can nombre them ner descrybe them for multitudine. Geue thy seruauant therefore an obedient hert, that he maye iudge thy people,  $\text{t}$  vnderstonde what is good  $\text{t}$  bad: for who is able to iudge this thy mightie people?

This pleased the LORDE well, that Salomon axed soch a petition. And God sayde vnto him: For so much as thou axest this, and desyrest not longe lyfe, nether riches, nether  $\text{ȝ}$  soules of thine enemies, but vnderstōdinge to heare iudgment, beholde, therfore haue I done acordinge to thy wordes. \* Beholde, I haue geuen the an hert of wysdome and vnderstondyng, so that soch one as thou hath not bene before the, nether shall ryse vp after the.

Yee and that thou hast not prayed for, haue I geuen the also, namely, ryches, and honoure, so that amonge the kynges in thy tyme there is not soch one as thou. And yf thou wilt walke in my wayes, so that thou kepe myne ordinaunces and lawes,<sup>a</sup> as Dauid thy father hath walked, then wyl I geue the a longe lyfe.

And whan Salomon awaked, beholde, it was a dreame, †and he came to Ierusalē, and stode before the Arke of the LORDES couenant, and offred burntofferiinges, and made a greате feast vnto his seruantes.

At the same tyme came there two harlottes vnto  $\text{ȝ}$  kyng, and stode before him. And the one woman sayde: Oh my lorde, I and this woman dwelt in one house, and I was deluyered of a childe in the house with her:  $\text{¶}$  on the thirde daye after that I was deluyered, she was deluyered of a childe also. And we were together, so  $\text{ȝ}$  there was no straunger in  $\text{ȝ}$  house, but we two:  $\text{¶}$  this womans sonne died in the nighte (for she smooored him in the slepe) and she rose vp in the nighte, and toke my sonne fro my syde (where thy handmayde slepte,) and layed it in hir arme, and hir deed sonne layed she in myne arme. And whan I rose vp in the mornynge to geue my sonne sucke, beholde, he was deed. But in the mornynge I loked well, and beholde, it was not my sonne, whom I had borne.

The other woman sayde: Not so, my sonne lyueth, and thy sonne is deed. But she sayde: Not so, thy sonne is deed, and my sonne lyueth. And thus spake they before the kyng. And the kyng sayde: This womā saieyth: my sonne lyueth and thy sonne is deed: Yonder woman sayeth: Not so, thy sonne is deed,  $\text{¶}$  my sonne lyueth. And the kyng saide: Fetch me a swerde. And whan the swerde was brought before the kyng, the kyng sayde: Parte the lyuynge childe in two partes, and geue this woman the one halfe, and yonder woman the other halfe.

Then sayde the woman whose sonne lyued, vnto  $\text{ȝ}$  kyng: (for hir motherly hert was kyndled with pite ouer hir sonne) Oh my lorde, geue hir the childe alyue, and kyll it not. But the other sayde: Let it nether be myne ner thine, but let it be parted. Then answered the kyng, and sayde: Geue this woman the lyuynge childe, and slaye it not, for she is his mother. And all Israel herde of this iudgment that the kyng had geuen: and they feared the kyng, for they sawe that  $\text{ȝ}$  wysdome of God was in him to kepe iudgmēt.

The iiij. Chapter.

THUS was Salomon kyng ouer all Israel. <sup>a</sup> And these were his prynces: Asaria the sonne of Sadoc the prest: Elihoreph, and Ahi Ia the sonnes of Sisa, were prestes: Iosaphat the sonne of Ahilud was chaunceler: Benaia  $\text{ȝ}$  sonne of Ioiada was the chefe captayne: Sadoc and Abiathar were prestes: Asaria the sonne of Nathan was ouer the officers: Sabud the sonne of Nathan the prest was the kynges frende: Ahisar was stewarde: Adoniram the sonne of Abda was rent gatherer.

And Salomon had twolue offeers ouer all Israel, which made prouysion of fode for the kyng and his house: One had a moneth longe in  $\text{ȝ}$  yere to make prouysion: The sonne of Hur vpon mount Ephraim. The sonne of Deber at Macaz and at Saalbaim,  $\text{¶}$  at Bethsames, and at Elon, and Beth Hanā. The sonne of Hased at Aruboth, and had therto Socho and all the londe of Hephher. Geber the sonne of Vri in the londe of Gilead, in the londe of Sihon kyng of the Amorites, and of Og the kyng in Basan. One officer was in the same londe. As for Iuda and Israel, they were in nombre as the sonde of the see, and ate and dronke, and were mery. \* Thus was Salomō lorde ouer all the kyngdomes (from the water of the londe of the Philistynes, vnto the border of Egipte) which broughte him giftes, and serued him as longe as he lyued.

And Salomon had daylie to his vytayles thirtie quarters of fyne meel, thre score quarters of other meel, ten fat oxen, and twēty small catell, and an hundreth shepe, beside hartes and Roes, and wilde goates, and fat capons, and foules. For he had the lordshippe of all the londe on this syde the water, frō Tiphsa vnto Gasa, and ouer all ⁊ kynges on this syde ⁊ water: ⁊ had peace of all his subiectes rounde aboute, so that Iuda and Israel dwelt safe, euery one vnder his vyne, and vnder his figge tre, from Dan vnto Berseba, as longe as Salomon lyued.

¶ And Salomō had fortye thousande cart horses, and twolue thousande horsmen. And the officers prouyded the kyng Salomon with vytayles: and what soeuer belonged to the kynges table, that brought euery man in his moneth, and myssed not: Barlye also ⁊ strawe for the horses and coursers, ⁊ broughte them vnto the place where ⁊ kyng was, euery one after his charge.

† And God gaue Salomon maruelous greate wysdome and vnderstandinge, and a large hert, as the sonde that lyeth vpon ⁊ See shore: so that the wysdome of Salomon was greater then the wysdome of all the children towarde the south and of all ⁊ Egipcians. And he was wyser then all men, yee wyser then Ethan the Esrahite, Heman, Chalcal, and Darda, the sonnes of Mahol: and had a greate name amonge all the Heythē on euery syde. And he spake thre thousande ⁊ proverbes, ⁊ his ⁊ songs were a thousande ⁊ fyue. And he spake of trees, from ⁊ Cedar of Libanus vnto the Isope ⁊ groweth out of ⁊ wall: he talked also of catell, of foules, of wormes, of fiszshes. And there came of all nacions to heare ⁊ wysdome of Salomon, and there came of all the kynges of ⁊ earth, which had herde of his wysdome.

The v. Chapter.

AND Hiram ⁊ kyng of Tyre sent his seruantes vnto Salomon, for he had herde, ⁊ they had aynoynted him kyng in his fathers steade: for Hiram ⁊ loued Dauid as lōge as he lyued. ¶ And Salomon sent vnto Hiram, sayenge: ** Thou knowest that my father might not buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE his God, because of the warre that was aboute him, vntyll the LORDE delyuered them vnder the soles of his fete: But now hath the LORDE my God geuen me rest on euery syde, so that there is no aduersary ner euell hynderaunce: Beholde, I am therefore aduysed to buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE my God, accordinge as the LORDE spake vnto Dauid my father, and sayde: †† Thy sonne, whom I shal set vpon thy seate in thy steade, shal buylde an house vnto my name. Commaunde therfore that they hewe me downe Ceders out of Libanus, and that thy seruantes be with my seruantes, ⁊ the rewarde of thy seruantes wyl I geue the, what so euer thou shalt axe: for thou knowest, ⁊ with vs there is no mā which can hewe tymber as the Sidonians.

Whan Hiram herde the wordes of Salomon, he was very glad, and sayde: Praise be the LORDE this daye, which hath geuen Dauid a wyse sonne ouer this greate people. And Hiram sent vnto Salomon, sayenge: I haue herde what thou hast sent vnto me: I wyl do accordinge vnto all thy desyre with Ceders and Pyne trees. My seruantes shal brynge them downe from Libanus vnto ⁊ See, and I wyl make them to flote vpō the See, vnto the place which thou shalt shewe me, and there wyl I cause them to aryue, ⁊ thou shalt make thē to be fetched. But thou shalt fulfyll my desyre also, and geue fode vnto my housholde folkes. So Hirā gaue Salomon Ceders and Pyne trees accordinge to all his desyre. But Salomon gaue Hiram twentye thousande quarters of wheate to eate for his housholde, and twēty quarters of beaten oyle. This gaue Salomon yearly vnto Hiram.

C And the LORDE gaue Salomon wysdome, acordinge as he had sayde vnto him,  $\tau$  there was peace betwene Hiram and Salomon, and they made a couenaunt both together. And Salomon made an outchosinge (of workmen) thorow out all Israel. And  $\text{f}$  outchosinge was thirtie thousande mē, and he sent thē to mount Libanus euery two monethes ten thousande, so that they were one moneth vpon Libanus, and two monethes at home. And \* Adoniram was ouer the outchosinge.

And Salomon had thre score thousande  $\tau$  ten that bare burthens,  $\tau$  foure score thousande that hewed tymber vpon the mount, besyde Salomons chefe officers, which were ordeyned ouer the worke: namely thre thousande and thre hundreth, which ruled  $\text{f}$  people that laboured there in the worke. And  $\text{f}$  kynge commaunded, that they shulde breake out greate and costly stones, namely fre stone, for the foundation of the house. And Salomons masons, and Hirams, and they that were in those coastes, hewed out  $\tau$  prepared tymbre and stones to the buyldinge of the house.

The vi. Chapter.

A IN the foure hundreth and foure score yeare after the "departinge of the children of Israel out of the lond of Egipte, in the fourth yeare of the raigne of Salomon ouer Israel, in the moneth Sif ( $\text{f}$  is the seconde moneth) was the house buylded vnto the LORDE. This house that kynge Salomon buylded vnto  $\text{f}$  LORDE, was thre score cubytes lōge, twenty cubytes brode,  $\tau$  thirtie cubites hye. And he buylded a † Porche before the temple of twentye cubytes longe after the bredth of the house,  $\tau$  ten cubites brode before the house. And in  $\text{f}$  house he made wyndowes, which might be opened and shut with lyddes.

And rounde aboute by the wall of  $\text{f}$  house he buylded a compase, so  $\text{f}$  it wente both aboute the temple and the quere, and made his outwarde wall rōnde aboute. The nether most stacion was fyue cubytes wyde, and  $\text{f}$  myddest sixe cubites wyde, and the thirde seuē cubites wyde. For he layed balkes rounde aboute the house, that they touched not  $\text{f}$  wall of the house.

B And whan  $\text{f}$  house was buylded, it was buylded of whole and outbroken stones, so  $\text{f}$  there was herde nether hammer ner axe, ner eny other instrument of yron, whan the house was a buyldinge.

But on the righte syde of the myddes of the house there was a dore, so  $\text{f}$  they might go vp to the myddest stacion by a turne grese,  $\tau$  from the myddest stacion vnto  $\text{f}$  thirde. Thus buylded he the house,  $\tau$  fynished it,  $\tau$  syled  $\text{f}$  house both aboue  $\tau$  by the walles with Cedar wodd. He buylded a galery also aboue vpon the whole house fyue cubytes hye, and couered the house with Cedar tymber.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Salomon,  $\tau$  sayde: Let this be the house  $\text{f}$  thou buyldest. Yf thou shalt walke in myne ordinaunces,  $\tau$  do acordinge to my lawes,  $\tau$  kepe all my cōmaundementes, to walke therin, then wyl I stablyszshe my worde with  $\text{f}$ , (\* as I sayde vnto Dauid thy father)  $\tau$  wyl dwell amonge the childre of Israel, and wil not forsake my people of Israel.

Thus Salomon buylded the house,  $\tau$  fynished it,  $\tau$  buylded the walles on the insyde with Cedar tymber, from the grounde of  $\text{f}$  house vnto the rofe, and syled it with tymbre on the ynsyde, and ouerlayed the floore of  $\text{f}$  house with bordes of Pyne tre.

And behynde in the house he buylded a wall of Cedar tymber twentye cubytes longe, from the floore vnto the rofe. And there on the ynsyde buylded he the quere for the most holy. But the house of the temple before the quere was fortye cubites longe: on the ynsyde was the whole house of Cedar with throwne knoppes and floures, so that there was no stone sene. As for the quere, he prepared it on the ynsyde of the house, that the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE might be set therin. And before the quere (which was twentye cubites longe, twentye cubytes brode, and twentye cubytes hye, and ouerlayed with pure golde) he syled the altare with Cedar.

And Salomon ouerlayed the house on  $\text{f}$  ynsyde with pure golde,  $\tau$  shot barres of golde before the quere, which he had ouerlayed with golde, so that  $\text{f}$  whole house was layed ouer with golde. And all the altare also before  $\text{f}$  quere ouerlayed he with golde.

$\text{f}$  He made also in the quere two Cherubins

ten cubites hye of Olyue tre. One wyng of ether of the Cherubs had fyue cubytes, so that from the edge of his one wyng to the edge of his other wyng there were ten cubytes. Euen so had the other Cherub ten cubites also, and both the Cherubs were of one measure and of one quantitie so  $\bar{y}$  ether Cherub was ten cubites hye. And he put the Cherubins within in the house. And the Cherubins spread forth their wynges, so that the wyng of the one touched the one wall, and the other Cherubs wyng touched the other wall. But in the myddes of  $\bar{y}$  house the one wyng touched another. And he ouerlayed the Cherubins with golde.

E And on all the walles of the house rounde aboute, he caused to make carued worke, with carued Cherubins, palme trees, and floures. And the pauement of the house ouerlayed he also with goldē plates. And at the intrance of the quere he made two dores of olyue tre with fyue squared postes, and caused carued worke to be made therof with Cherubins, palme trees and floures,  $\tau$  ouerlayed them with plates of golde. So made he also at the intrance of the temple, foure squared postes of Olyue tre, and two dores of Pyne tre (so that ether dore had two syde dores one hāginge to another) and made carued worke therof, palme trees and floures, right as it was appoynted.

And he buylded a courte also within with thre rowes of fre stone, and with one rowe of playne Cedar tymber.

In the fourth yeare in the moneth Sif, was the foundation of the LORDES house layed: and in the eleuenth yeare in the moneth Bul (that is the eight moneth) was the house fynished as it shulde be, so that they were seuen yeare a buyldinge of it.

The vij. Chapter.

BUT Salomon was a buylding his awne house thirtene yeare,  $\tau$  fynished it, namely, he buylded an house of the wodd of Libanus, an hundredth cubites longe, fifty cubites wyde,  $\tau$  thirtie cubites hye, foure-squared with rowes of pilers, and with carued Ceders. And the rose aboue syled he also with Cedar wodd vpon the fyue  $\tau$  fortie pilers, for one rowe had fyftene pilers, so  $\bar{y}$  there stode euer thre pilers one right ouer agaynst another: so that euery space betwixte the pilers was one ouer agaynst another foure squared with the pilers.

And he made a porche with pilers which was fifty cubites longe, and thirtie cubites brode,  $\tau$  yet a porche before it with pilers  $\tau$  with a greate poste. He made a porche also vnto  $\bar{y}$  kynges seate (wherin  $\bar{y}$  iudgment was kepte) and made it to be the porche of iudgment, and syled it with Cedar from the pauement vnto the pauement agayne, and his owne house wherin he dwelt, in  $\bar{y}$  back courte made betwene  $\bar{y}$  house and the porche like the other. And like vnto the porche made he a house for Pharaos doughter, \*whom Salomon had taken to wife.

All these were costly stone hewen after  $\bar{y}$  measure, cut with sawes on euery syde, from the grounde vnto the rose: and without the greate courte also. As for the foundations, they were costly and greate stones, ten and eighte cubites greate: and costly fre stones theron accordinge to  $\bar{y}$  measure, and Ceders. But the greate courte rounde aboute had thre rowes of fre stone,  $\tau$  one rowe of playne Ceders: Euen so also the courte by  $\bar{y}$  house of the LORDE within, and the porch by the house.

And kynge Salomon sent to fetch one  $\dagger$  Hiram of Tyre a wedowes sonne, of the trybe of Nephtali, and his father had bene a man of Tyre,  $\dagger$  which was a conynge mā in metall, full of wysdome, vnderstondinge and knowlege to worke all maner of metall worke. Whan he came to kynge Salomon, he made all his worke,  $\dagger$  and made two brasen pilers, ether of them eightene cubites hye: and a threde of xij. cubites was the measure aboute both  $\bar{y}$  pilers: and he made two knoppes of brasse molten, to set aboue vpon the pilers: and euery knoppe was fyue cubytes hye: and on euery knoppe aboue vpon  $\bar{y}$  pilers seuē wrythen ropes like cheynes. And vpon euery knoppe he made two rowes of pomgranates rounde aboute on one rope, wherwith  $\bar{y}$  knoppe was couered. And the knoppes were like roses before  $\bar{y}$  porche foure cubites greate. And the pomgranates in the rowes rounde aboute were two hūdreth aboue and beneth vpon the rope, which wēte rounde aboute the thicknes of the knoppe, on euery knoppe vpon both the pilers. And set vp the pilers before the porche of the temple. And that which he set on the right hande, called he Iachin: and that which he set on the lefte hande, called he Boos. And so stode it aboue vpon the pilers euen like roses. Thus was the worke of  $\text{f}$  pilers fynished.

D And he made a molten lauer ten cubytes wyde from the one syde to the other rounde aboute, and fyue cubites hye, and a threde of thirtie cubites lōge was  $\text{f}$  measure rounde aboute: and aboute the same lauer that was ten cubites wyde, there wente knoppes on the edge therof rounde aboute the lauer. Two rowes were there of the knoppes molten with the lauer.

And it stode vpon twolue bullockes, wherof thre were turned towarde the north, thre towarde the west, thre towarde the south, and thre towarde the east, and the lauer aboue theron, so that all their hynder partes were within vnder the lauer: wherof the thiknesse was an haubdreth: and the edge of it was like the edge of a cuppe, and as a floured rose, and it conteyned two thousande *Battes.

And he made ten brasen seates, euery one foure cubites longe and brode, and thre cubites hye. The seate was made so, that it had sydes betwene the ledges. And on the sydes betwene the ledges there were lyons, bullockes and Cherubins. And on  $\text{f}$  ledges which were aboue and beneth the lyons and bullockes, were the sydes made so, that they were set downwarde. And euery stole had foure brasen wheles with brasen axeltrees. And vpon the foure corners there were proppes molten, euery one ouer agaynst another, vnder set vnto the kettell.

E And the soket vpon the stole was a cubyte hye and rounde, a cubyte and an halfe wyde: and on the soket there were knoppes in folde, which were foure squared  $\text{t}$  not rounde. The foure wheles stode beneth by the sydes,  $\text{t}$  the axeltrees of the wheles were harde on  $\text{f}$  seate. Euery whele was a cubite and a halfe hye, and they were wheles like cart wheles. And their axeltrees, spokes, nales,  $\text{t}$  shaftes were all molten. And the foure proppes vpō the foure corners of euery seate were harde on the seate.

And on the soket aboue vpon the seate a cubyte and an halfe rounde aboute, there were ledges and sydes harde on the seate. And on the plat of the same sydes and ledges, he caused to carue Cherubins, lyons and palme trees, one by another rounde aboute theron. After this maner made he ten moltē seates, one maner of measure  $\text{t}$  widenes was in all.

And he made ten copper kettels, so that F one kettell cōteyned fortye Battes, and was foure cubites greate, and vpon euery seate was a kettell. And fyue seates set he on the righte syde of the house, and the other fyue on the lefte syde. But the lauer set he before on the righte hande towarde the south.

And Hiram made pottes also and shouels and basens,  $\text{t}$  so fynished he all the worke, that kynge Salomon caused to be made in the house of the LORDE: namely  $\text{f}$  two pilers, and the rounde knoppes aboue vpon the two pilers, and the two wrythen ropes to couer the two rounde knoppes vpon the pilers. And the foure hūdreth pomgranates on the two wrythen ropes, euer two rowes of pomgranates vnto euery rope, to couer the two rounde knoppes vpon the pilers. And the ten seates, and ten kettels theron, and the lauer, and twolue bullockes vnder  $\text{f}$  lauer. And the pottes, shouels and basens. And all the ornamentes which Hiram made vnto kynge Salomon for the house of the LORDE, were of pure metall. In the countre by Iordane, G caused the kynge them to be molten in thicke earth, betwene Sucoth and Zarthan. And Salomon let all the apparell be vnuweyed, because the metall was so moch.

Morouer Salomon made all the apperell that belonged vnto the house of the LORDE: namely a golden altare, a golden table that the shewbred laye on, fyue candelstickes on the righte hande, and fyue candelstickes on the lefte (before the quere) of pure golde, with floures, lampes and snoffers of golde therto, flat peces, charges, basens, spones and censours of pure golde. And the hokes of  $\text{f}$  dores on the insyde of the house in the most holy, and in the dores of the house of the tēple of the LORDE were of golde.

Thus all the worke that kynge Salomon made in  $\text{f}$  house of the LORDE, was fynished.  $\text{†}$  And Salomon brought in that his father Dauid had sanctified, of syluer and golde and ornamentes, and layed it amonge the treasures of the house of the LORDE.

* A Bat, was a certayne measure of liqoure.

The viij. Chapter.

A THEN gathered kynge Salomon all & Elders in Israel together, all the rulers of the trybes and prynces of the fathers amonge the children of Israel, vnto Ierusalem, to brynge vp the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE, *out of the cite of Dauid, that is Sion. And there resorted vnto kynge Salomon all the men in Israel, at the feast in the moneth Ethanim, that is & seuenth moneth. And whan all & Elders of Israel came, the prestes toke the Arke of the LORDE, and broughte it vp, and the Tabernacle of witnesse, and all the ornāmentes of the Sanctuary that were in the Tabernacle. This dyd the prestes and the Leuites. And kynge Salomon and all the congregacion of Israel & were gathered vnto him, wente with him before the Arke, and offred shepe and bullockes, so many, that they coulde not be nombred ner tolde.

So the prestes broughte the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt vnto hir place, euen in to & Quere of the house in the most holy vnder & wynges of the Cherubins. For & Cherubins spred out their wynges in the place where the Arke stode, and couered the Arke and the staues therof from aboue. And the staues were so lōge, that & knoppes of them were sene from the Sanctuary before & quere, but on the out syde were they not sene, and they were there vnto this daye.

B And in the Arke there was nothinge, but onely the two tables of stone, † which Moses had layed therin at Horeb, whan & LORDE made a couenaunt with the children of Israel, what tyme as they were departed out of the londe of Egipte.

But whan the prestes wente out of the Sanctuary, a cloude fylled the house of the LORDE, so & the prestes coulde not stonde & execute the office for the cloude: for the glory of the LORDE fylled the LORDES house. Then sayde Salomon: † The LORDE sayde, that he wolde dwell in a darke cloude. I haue buylded an house, to be an habitacon vnto the: a seate, & thou mayest dwell there for euer. And & kynge turned his face, & blessed all the congregacion of Israel. And all the cōgregacion of Israel stode, & he sayde:

Prayed be the LORDE God of Israel, which promised by his mouth vnto my father Dauid, and by his hāde hath fulfilled it, and sayde: † Sence the daye & I broughte my people of Israel out of Egipte, haue I chosen no cite amōge all the trybes of Israel, to buylde me an house, that my name might be there. † But Dauid haue I chosen, to be ouer my people of Israel.

C And in dede my father Dauid was mynded to buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE God of Israel: neuertheles the LORDE sayde vnto my father Dauid: Where as thou wast mynded to buylde an house vnto my name, thou hast done well, that thou art so aduysed. Howbeit thou shalt not buylde the house, but thy sonne which shal come out of thy loynes, he shal buylde an house vnto my name. And the LORDE hath performed his worde that he spake: For I am come vp in my father Dauids steade, and syt vpon the seate of Israel, as the LORDE sayde: and haue buylded an house vnto the name of the LORDE God of Israel: and there haue I ordeyned a place for the Arke, wherin is the LORDES couenaunt, which he made with oure fathers, whan he broughte them out of & londe of Egipte.

And Salomon stode before the altare of the LORDE in the presence of the whole congregacion of Israel, and helde out his handes towardes heauen, and sayde: † O LORDE God of Israel, there is no god like the, nether aboue in heauen, ner beneath vpon earth, thou that kepest couenaunt and mercy for all thy seruantes that walke before & with all their hert, thou that hast kepte promes with my father Dauid thy seruauant: With thy mouth thou saydest it, and with thy hande hast thou fulfilled it, as it is come to passe this daye. Now LORDE God of Israel make good vnto my father Dauid thy seruauant, that which thou hast promysed him, and sayde: ** Thou shalt not wante a man before me to syt vpon the seate of Israel, yf thy childrē kepe their waye, so & they walke before me like as thou hast walked before me. Now thou God of Israel, let thy worde be verified, which thou hast promysed vnto my father Dauid thy seruauant.

¶ And when eny straunger, that is not of thy people of Israel, commeth out of a farre countre for thy names sake (for they shall heare of thy greete name, and of thy mightie hāde, and of thy outstretched arme) and commeth to make his prayer in this house, heare thou him then in heauen, euen in the seate of thy dwellynge, and do all for the which that straunger calleth vpon the, that all the nacions vpon earth maye knowe thy name, and that they maye feare the, as thy people of Israel do: and that they maye knowe, how that this house which I haue buylded, is named after thy name.

¶ And whā Salomon had ended all this prayer and petition before the LORDE, he rose vp from the altare of the LORDE, and lefte of from knelynge and holdyng out of handes toward heauen, and stode and blessed all the congregation of Israel with loude voyce, and sayde: Praiseyd be the LORDE which hath geuen rest vnto his people, accordinge as he sayde. There hath not one fayled of all his good wordes, which he spake by his seruauant Moses. The LORDE oure God be with vs, as he hath bene with oure fathers, and forsake vs not, nether withdrawe his hande from vs, but bowe oure hertes vnto him, that we maye walke in all his wayes, and kepe his commaundementes, ordinaunces and lawes, which he commaunded oure fathers. And these wordes wherwith I haue made my petition before the LORDE, come nye vnto the LORDE oure God daye and nighte, that he maye execute iudgment for his seruauant and for his people of Israel, euery one at his tyme: that all nations vpon earth maye knowe, that the LORDE is God, † that there is none other. And let youre hert be perfecte with the LORDE oure God, to walke in his statutes, and to kepe his commaundementes, as it is this daye.

And the kyng with all Israel his people offered sacrifice before the LORDE. And Salomon offered deed offerynges (which he offred vnto the LORDE) two and twenty thousande oxen, and an hundreth † twenty thousande shepe. So the kyng and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of the LORDE. The same daye dyd the kyng dedicate the myddelmost court, which was before the house of the LORDE: that he mighte there perfourme the burnt offerynges, meat offerynges, and the fat of the deed offerynges: for the brasen altare that stode before ‡ LORDE, was to litle for the burnt offerynges, meat offerynges, and for the fat of the deed offerynges.

And at the same tyme made Salomon a solempne feast, and all Israel a greate congregation with him, from the border of Hemath vnto the ryuer of Egipte, before the LORDE oure God, seuen dayes, and yet seuen dayes, that were fourtene daies. And on the eight daye he let the people go. And they blessed the kyng, and wente vnto their tentes reioysinge and with a mery hert, because of all the good that the LORDE had done vnto Dauid his seruauant, † to his people of Israel.

The ii. Chapter.

AND whan Salomon had fynished † ¶ A buyldinge of the house of the LORDE, and the kynges house, and all that his desyre and pleasure was to make, ‡ LORDE appeared vnto him the seconde tyme, ¶ euen as he appeared vnto him at Gibeon. And yf thou walke before me (as thy father Dauid walked) with a perfecte and a true hert, so that thou do all that I haue commaunded the, and kepe myne ordinaunces and lawes, then wyll I stablish the seate of thy kyngdome ouer Israel for euer, accordinge as I promysed thy father Dauid, and sayde: ¶ Thou shalt not wante a man from the seate of Israel.

And Israel shall be come a byworde and fabell amōge all nacions, and so shal this hye house: so that euery one ſ̄ goeth by, shall be astonyed, and make an hyssynge, and saye: *Wherfore hath the LORDE done thus vnto this londe and to this house? Therefore hath ſ̄ LORDE brought all this euell vpon them.

C Now whan the twentie yeares were ended, wherein Salomon buylded the two houses, the LORDES house and the kynges house, † where vnto Hiram the kyng of Tyre brought Salomō Cedar trees & Pyne trees, and golde after all his desyre, then gaue kyng Salomon vnto Hiram twentie cities in the countre of Galile. And Hiram departed from Tyre to vyset the cities which Salomon had geuen him, & they pleased him not, and he sayde: What maner of cities are these (my brother) that thou hast geuē me? And he called them the londe of Cabul vnto this daye. And Hiram sent vnto the kyng, sixe score hundreth weight of Golde. And the same is the summe of the taxe, that kyng Salomon raysted to the buyldinge of the house of the LORDE, and his awne house, & Millo, and the walles of Ierusalem, and Hasor, and Megiddo, and Gaser.

D For Pharaō ſ̄ kyng of Egipte came vp, and wāne Gaser, & brent it with fyre, & slewe the Cananites ſ̄ dwelt in the cite, & gaue it for a gifte vnto his daughter Salomōs wife. So Salomon buylded Gaser, & the lower Bethoron, and Baelath and Tamar, in ſ̄ wyldernes, in the londe, & all the cities of the corne houses that Salomon had, and all the cities of the charettes, & all the cities of the horsmen, and what it pleased him to buylde at Ierusalem, in Libanus, & in euery countre of his domynion.

And all the remnaunt of the people of the Amorites, Hethites, Pheresites, Heuites and Iebusites, which were not of the children of Israel, their children which they lefte behynde them in the londe (whom the children of Israel coulde not vtterly destroye) those dyd Salomon make tributaries vnto this daye.

‡ But of the children of Israel he made no bondmen, but let them be men of warre, and his seruauantes, and prynces, and knights, and ouer his charettes and horsmē. And the officers which were ouer Salomons busynesse, were fyue hundreth and fyfye, which ruled the people, and performed the worke.

And Pharaos daughter wente vp from the cite of Dauid, in to hir house † which he had buylded for her. ¶ Then buylded he Millo likewyse. And thre tymes in the yeare dyd Salomon offre burntofferynge and deed offerynge vpon the altare † that he had buylded vnto the LORDE, and burnt incense vpon it before the LORDE, and so was the house ended and fynished.

** And Salomon made shippes also at Ezeon Geber, which lyeth by Eloth besyde the Reed See shore in ſ̄ londe of the Edomites. And Hiram sent his seruauantes by shippe, which were shipmen, and had experience of the See, with Salomons seruauantes; and they came vnto † Ophir, and fetched from thence one & twenty score hundreth weight of golde, and brought it vnto Salomon.

The x. Chapter.

A ND whan kyng Salomons fame of the name of the LORDE came to the eares of the † Quene of riche Arabia, she came to proue him with darke sentences. And she came to Ierusalem with a maruelous greate trayne, with camels which bare spyes, and moch golde, and precious stones. And whan she came in to kyng Salomon, she spake vnto him all that was in hir hert. And Salomon tolde her euerythinge, and the kyng had nothings in secrete, but he tolde it her. But whan the Quene of riche Arabia sawe all the wysdome of Salomon, and the house that he had buylded, and the meates of his table, and the dwellinges of his seruauantes, & the offces of his ministers, and their garments, and his butlers and the burntofferynge which he offred in the house of the LORDE, she wondred exceedingly, and coulde no longer refrayne, but sayde vnto the kyng: It is true that I haue herde in my londe of thy behaouore and of thy wysdome.

And she gaue the kyng syxe score hundredrethe weighte of golde, and very moch spyce, and precious stones. There came neuer so moch spyce thither, as the Quene of riche Arabia gaue vnto kyng Salomon. And Hiram shippes, *which caried golde out of Ophir, broughte maruelous moch costly tymber and precious stones from Ophir. And of that costly tymber the kyng caused to make pilers in the house of the LORDE, and in y<sup>e</sup> kynges house, and harpes and Psalteries for the Musicians. There came nomore soch costly tymber, nether was it sene ynto this daye. And kyng Salomon gaue the quene of riche Arabia, all that she desyred and axed, besydes that which he gaue her of a frye hande. And she returned, and departed in to hir lande with hir seruantes.

The golde that came to Salomon in one yere, was nyne and thyrtye score hundredrethe weighte, besydes that which came of chapmen, marchauntes and Apotecaries, and of the nexte kynges, and of the mightie men in the londe. And kyng Salomon caused to make two hundredrethe speares of beaten golde, sixe hundredrethe peces of golde put he to euery speare: and thre hundredrethe shyldes of y<sup>e</sup> best golde, euen thre pounce of golde vpon euery shyld. And the kyng put them in the †house of the wod of Libanus.

B And the kyng made a greate seate of Yuery, and ouerlayed it with y<sup>e</sup> most precious golde. And the seate had sixe steppes, and y<sup>e</sup> heade of the seate was rōude behynde. And there were two postes to leane vpō on both the sydes of the seate, and two lyons stode vpon the leanyng postes, and twolue lyons stode vpon the sixe steppes on both the sydes. Soch one hath not bene made in eny kyngdome. All kyng Salomōs drynkyng vessels were of golde, and all the vessels in the house of y<sup>e</sup> wod of Libanus were of pure golde also: for syluer was not regarded in Salomons tyme. For the kynges Seeshippe y<sup>e</sup> sayled vpon the See with y<sup>e</sup> shippe of Hiram, came once in thre yere, and broughte golde, syluer, Yuery, Apes, and Pecockes.

† Thus was kyng Salomon greater in riches and wyszdome, then all the kynges vpō earth: And all the worlde desyred to se Salomon, that they mighte heare the wyszdome which God gaue him in his hert. And they broughte him yearly euery man his present, vessels of syluer and golde, rayment and harness, spyes, horses and Mules. And Salomon broughte charettes and horsmen together, so that he had a thousande and foure hundredrethe charettes, and twolue thousande horsmen: and those he put in y<sup>e</sup> charet cities, and with the kyng at Ierusalem.

And the kyng broughte it to passe, that there was as moch syluer at Ierusalē as stones: and as many Ceders as there were wylde figge trees in the valleys. And Salomōs horses were broughte out of Egipte, and frō Keua: for the kynges marchauntes fetched them from Keua for money. And a charet came vp out of Egipte for sixe hūdrethe Sycles of Syluer, and an horse for an hūdrethe and fyfitye. Thus were they brought also vnto all the kynges of the Hethites and to the kynges of Siria by their handes.

The xi. Chapter.

BUT kyng Salomon loued many outlandish wemen, † Pharaos daughter, and wemen of Moab, of Ammō, of Edom, of Sidon, and of Heth, euen of those nacions, that the LORDE spake of vnto the children of Israel: "Go not ye vnto them, and let not them come vnto you: they shal surely bowe youre hertes after their goddes: Vnto these dyd Salomon encline with affeccion. And he had seuen hundredrethe wemen to wyues, and thre hundredrethe concubynes, and his wyues turned his hert asyde. And whan he was now olde, his wyues bowed his hert after straunge goddes, so that his hert was not whole with the LORDE his God, as was the hert of Dauid his father.

So Salomon walked after Astaroth the god of the Sidonians, and after Malcom the abomination of the Ammonites. And Salomon dyd y which displeased the LORDE, and folowed not y LORDE to y vttemost as dyd his father Daud. The buylded Salomō an hie place vnto Chamos the abhominaciō of y Moabites (vpon the mount that lyeth before Ierusalē) and vnto Moloch the abhominacion of the Ammonites.

B Thus dyd Salomon for all his outlādish wyues, which brent incense, and offred vnto their goddes. But the LORDE was wroth at Salomon, because his hert was turned asyde from y LORDE God of Israel, * which had two tymes appeared vnto him, and cōmaunded him, that he shulde not walke after other goddes: and yet kepte he not that the LORDE commaunded him. Therefore sayde the LORDE vnto Salomon: For so much as this is done with the, and hast not kepte my couenaunt and myne ordinaunces, which I commaunded the, therefore wyll I also plucke thy kyngdome from the, and geue it vnto thy seruauunt: Neuertheles in thy tyme will I not do it, for thy father Dauids sake, but from the hande of thy sonne wyl I plucke it. Howbeit I wyl not plucke y kyngdome cleane awaye. One trybe wyll I geue vnto thy sonne, for Daud my seruauentes sake, and for Ierusalem sake which I haue chosen.

C And the LORDE rayseed vp an aduersary vnto Salomon, euen Hadad the Edomite of the kynges sede, which was in Edom. For whan Daud was in Edom, and Ioab the chefe captayne wente vp to bury the slayne, he smote all the males in Edom. (For Ioab remayned there sixe monethes and all Israel, tyll he had roted out all y males that were in Edom.) Then fled Hadad, and certayne men of y Moabites with him, of his fathers seruauentes. As for Hadad, he was a yonge man.

And they gat them vp fro Madian, and came vnto Paran, and toke men with them out of Paran, and came in to Egipte vnto Pharaos the kynge of Egipte: which gaue him an house and certayne vytales appoynted, ⁊ gaue him a countre. And Adad founde greate fauoure in the sighte of Pharaos, so that he gaue him to wife euen the sister of his owne wife Thaphenes the Quene. And Thaphenes sister bare him Genubath his sonne, and Thaphenes norished him vp in Pharaos house, in so much that Genubath was in Pharaos house amonge Pharaos children.

D Now whā Hadad herde in Egipte, that Daud was fallē on slepe with his fathers, and y Ioab the chefe captayne was deed, he sayde vnto Pharaos: Let me go in to my countre. Pharaos sayde vnto him: What lackest thou with me, that thou wilt go in to thy countre? He sayde: Nothyng, but yet let me go.

God rayseed him vp another aduersary also, one Reson the sonne of El Iada, which fled from his lorde Hadad Eser kynge of Zeba, and gathered men agaynst him, and was a captayne of the men of warre whan Daud slewe them: and they wente vnto Damascus and dwelt there, and reigned at Damascus, and he was Israels aduersary as lōge as Salomon lyued. This is the harme y Hadad suffred: therefore had he euell will at Israel, and was kynge ouer Siria.

E Morouer Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat an Ephraite Salomons seruauunt (and his mothers name was Zeruga, a wedowe) lifte vp his hande also agaynst the kynge. And this is the cause wherfore he lifte vp his hande agaynst the kynge: Whan Salomon buylded Millo, he shut vp a gappe in the cite of Daud his father. And Ieroboam was a mā of armes. And whan Salomon sawe that it was a mete yonge man, he set him ouer all the burthens of the house of Ioseph.

But at the same tyme it fortunēd, that Ieroboam wente out from Ierusalem, and the prophet Abias of Silo founde him by the waye, and he had a new cloke vpon him, and they two were alone in the felde. And Abia toke holde of the new cloke y he had on, and rente the same in to twolue peces, and sayde vnto Ieroboam: Take thou ten peces vnto the.

F For thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: Beholde, euen thus wyll I rente the kyngdome from the hande of Salomō, and wyll geue the ten trybes. One trybe shall he haue for my seruauunt Dauids sake, and because of the cyte of Ierusalem, ⁊ which I haue chosen out of all the trybes of Israel: for they haue forsaken me, and worshipped Astaroth the god of the Sidonians, Chamos the god of the Moabites, and Malcō the god of the children of Ammon, and haue not walked in my wayes, to fulfill my pleasure, myne ordinaunces, and lawes, as dyd Daud his father.

Notwithstandynge I wyl not take the whole kyngdome from out of his hande, but will make him a prynce as longe as he lyueth for my seruau<sup>t</sup> Dauids sake, whom I dyd chose, which kepte my commaundementes & ordinaunces. * From out of the hande of his sonne wyl I take the kyngdome, and wyl geue ten trybes vnto the, and one vnto his sonne,† that Dauid my seruau<sup>t</sup> maye alwaye haue a lanterne before me in the cite of Ierusalem, which I haue chosen, that I maye set my name there. Therefore wyl I take the now, to raygne ouer all that thine hert desy<sup>r</sup>eth, and thou shalt be kyng<sup>e</sup> ouer Israel. Yf thou folowe now all that I shall commaunde the, and walke in my wayes, and fulfill my pleasure to kepe myne ordinaunces and commaundementes, as dyd my seruau<sup>t</sup> Dauid, then wyl I be with the, and buylde the a sure house, as I buylde vnto Dauid, and wyl geue Israel vnto the and therewith wyl I subdue the sede of Dauid, but not for euermore. But Salomon soughte to kyll Ieroboam. Then Ieroboam gat him vp, and fled in to Egipte to Sisak the kyng<sup>e</sup> of Egipte, and remayned in Egipte, tyll Salomon dyed.

What more there is to saye of Salomon, and all that he dyd, and his wysdome, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of Salomon. The tyme that Salomon was kyng<sup>e</sup> at Ierusalem ouer all Israel, is fortye yere. And Salomon fell on slepe with his fathers, and was buried in the cite of Dauid his father, and Roboam his sonne was kyng<sup>e</sup> in his steade.

The xij. Chapter.

AND Roboam wēte vnto Sichem, for all Israel <sup>a</sup>was come to Sichem to make him kyng<sup>e</sup>. And whan Ieroboam †sonne of Nebat herde that, while he was yet in Egipte († whither he was fled for Salomon) he came agayne out of Egipte. And they sent for him, and called him. And Ieroboam with all the congregacion of Israel came and spake to Roboam, and sayde: Thy father made oure yock to harde: therefore make thou now the harde bondage and the sore yock lighter, and we wyl submytte oure selues vnto the. He sayde vnto them: Go youre waye vnto the thirde daye, and then come to me agayne. And the people wēte their waye.

And Roboam the kyng<sup>e</sup> helde a counsell

with the Elders that stode before Salomō his father whyle he lyued, & he sayde: What is youre counsell, that we maye geue this people an answer? They sayde vnto him: Yf thou do this people a pleasure to daye, and folowe their mynde, and heare them, and geue them good wordes, then shal they be obedient vnto the as longe as thou liuest. Neuertheles he forsoke the counsell that §Elders had geuen him, and axed counsell at the yonge men which were growne vp with him, and stode before him.

And he sayde vnto them: What is youre counsell that we maye answer this people which haue sayde vnto me: Make the yock lighter, that thy father hath layed vpō vs. And the yonge men that were growne vp with him, sayde vnto him: Where as the people haue sayde vnto the: Thy father hath made oure yock to sore, make thou it easer for vs, Thus shalt thou saye vnto them: My litle fynger shall be thicker then my fathers loynes. Now, my father layed a sore yock vpon you, but I wyl yet laye more thereon: My father correcte you with scourges, but I wyl nourture you with scorpions.

So vpon the thyrd<sup>e</sup> daye came Ieroboam with all the people vnto Roboam, as §kyng<sup>e</sup> had appoynted and saide, come to me agayne on the thyrd<sup>e</sup> daye. And the kyng<sup>e</sup> gaue the people an harde rough answer, and forsoke the counsell that the Elders had geuen him, and talked with them after the counsell of the yonge men, and sayde: My father made youre yock sore, but I wyl make it yet sorer vpon you. My father correcte you with scourges, but I wil nourture you with scorpions. Thus the kyng<sup>e</sup> folowed not the peoples mynde, for he was turned so frō the LORDE, that he mighte stablish his worde §which he spake by Ahias of Silo vnto Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat.

But whan all Israel sawe that the kyng<sup>e</sup> wolde not heare them, the people gaue §kyng<sup>e</sup> an answer and sayde: ¶ What porcion haue we then in Dauid or inheritance in the sonne of Isai? Get the to thy tentes O Israel. Loke thou now to thy house thou Dauid. So Israel wente vnto their tentes. As for Roboam, he raygned but ouer §children of Israel, which dwelt in the cities of Iuda. And whan kyng<sup>e</sup> Roboam sent thither Adoram the rentgatherer, all Israel stoned him to death. But kynge Roboam strengthened himselfe, and gat him vp in to a charet, to fle vnto Ierusalem. Thus departed Israel from the house of Dauid vnto this daye.

Now whan all Israel herde, that Ieroboam was come againe, they sent for to call him to the whole congregacion, and made him kynge ouer all Israel. And no man folowed the house of Dauid, saue onely the tribe of Iuda.

* And whan Roboam came to Ierusalem, all the house of Iuda and the trybe of Ben Iamin (euen an hundreth and foure score thousande chosen men of armes) gathered themselues together to fight against y house of Israel, ⁊ to brynge the kyngdome agayne vnto Roboam y sonne of Salomō.

¶ But the worde of God came to Semeia the man of God, and sayde: Speake thou to Roboam the sonne of Salomon kynge of Iuda, and to all y house of Iuda and Ben Iamin, and to the other people, and saye: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Ye shall not go vp and fighte agaynst youre brethren the children of Israel. Let euery man go home agayne, for this is my dede. And they herkened vnto the worde of the LORDE, and turned back, to go their waye, as the LORDE sayde. But Roboam buylded Sichem vpon mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein, and departed thence, and buylded † Penuel.

Ieroboā thoughte in his hert: The kyngdome shall fall agayne now vnto the house of Dauid, yf this people go vp to offre in the LORDES house at Ierusalem, and so shall the hert of this people turne to their lorde Roboam kynge of Iuda, and thē shal they slaye me, and fall agayne to Roboam kynge of Iuda. And the kynge helde a counsell ‡ and made two golden calues, and sayde vnto them: It is to moch for you to go to Ierusalē: beholde, § there is thy God (O Israel) which broughte y out of Egipte. And the one set he at Bethel, ⁊ the other in Dan. And this dede turned to synne, for the people wente before the one vnto Dan.

¶ He made an house also in the hye places, ¶ and made prestes of the smallest in the people, which were not of the childrē of Leui. And vpon the fiftene daye of the eighte moneth he made an holy daye, like as the solemne feast in Iuda, and offered vpon the altare. Thus dyd he at Bethel, in doynge sacrifice vnto the calues which he had made, and at Bethel he ordeyned the prestes of the hye places that he had made: and offred vpon the altar (which he had made) at Bethel, the fiftene daye of the eight moneth, which he inuented of his owne hert. And he made the children of Israel an holy daye, ⁊ wente vp to the altare to burne incense.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND beholde, there came a mā of God ¶ from Iuda (thorow the worde of the LORDE) vnto Bethel, and Ieroboam stode by the altar to burne incense. And he cried agaynst the altare thorow the worde of the LORDE, and sayde: O altar, altar, thus sayeth the LORDE: Beholde, there shal be borne vnto y house of Dauid a sonne, Iosias by name ¶ which on the shal offer the prestes of the hye places, that burne incense vpon the, and mens bones shal he burne on the. And he gaue a wonder token the same daye, and sayde: This is the token, that the LORDE hath spoken it, beholde, the altar shall ryue, and the aszshes, that are thereon, shall be poured out.

But whan the kynge herde the worde of the man of God, that cried agaynst the altare at Bethel, he stretched out his hande by y altare, and sayde: Laye hondes on him. And his hande that he stretched out, wythered, and he coulde not drawe it vnto him agayne. And y altare roue, and the aszshes were poured out from the altare, accordinge to the wonder token that the man of God had geuen by the worde of the LORDE.

And the kynge answered, and sayde vnto the man of God: ** O praye the face of the LORDE thy God, and make intercession for me, that my hande maie be restored vnto me agayne. Then prayed the man of God vnto the face of the LORDE. And the kynges hande was restored him agayne, and became as it was afore. And the kynge sayde vnto the man of God: Come home with me, and dyne, and I wil geue the a rewarde.

But the man of God sayde vnto the kynge: Yf thou geuest me halfe thy house, I wil not come with the: for in this place wyll I nether eate bred, ner drynke water. For thus am I commaunded, and thus is it sayde vnto me by the worde of the LORDE: Thou shalt eate no bred, and drynke no water, nether returne the waye that thou wentest.

And he departed another waye, and returned not agayne the waye that he came to Bethel. But at Bethel there dwelt an olde prophet vnto whō his sonnes came, & tolde him all the workes y<sup>e</sup> the mā of God had done that daye at Bethel, & the wordes that he had spoken vnto the kynge. And their father sayde vnto them: Which waye is he gone? And his sonnes shewed him the waye that the man of God was gone: which came from Iuda. He sayde vnto his sonnes: Saddell me the asse. And whā they had saddled him the asse, he rode theron, and wente after the man of God, and founde him syttinge vnder an Oke tre, and sayde vnto him: Art thou the man of God that came from Iuda? He sayde: Yee.

He sayde vnto him: Come home with me, and eate bred. He sayde: I maye not turne backe with the, and come with the. Nether wyll I eate bred, ner drynke water with the in this place: for it is spoken vnto me by the worde of the LORDE: Thou shalt nether eate bred there, ner yet drynke water, nether shalt thou go agayne by the waye which thou wentest. He sayde vnto him: I myselfe am a prophet as well as thou, and an angel hath spoken with me by y<sup>e</sup> worde of the LORDE, and saide: Bringe him againe with the, that he maye eate bred, and drynke water. But he lyed vnto him, and broughte him agayne, so that he ate bred, and dranke water in his house.

And whan they sat at the table, the worde of the LORDE came to the prophet that had broughte him agayne, and cryed vnto the man which was come frō Iuda, and sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Because thou hast bene disobedient vnto the mouth of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, and hast not kepte the commaundement that the LORDE thy God commaunded the, but hast turned backe, and hast eaten bred, and dronke water in y<sup>e</sup> place, wherof he saide vnto the: Thou shalt nether eate bred ner drynke water, therefore shall not thy body come in to thy fathers graue.

And whan he had eaten bred and dronkē the asse was saddled vnto the prophet whom he had brought agayne. * And whā he was gone, a lyon founde him by the waye, & slewe him, and his body was cast in y<sup>e</sup> waye. And the asse stode by him, and the lyon stode by the body. And whā men wente by, they sawe the body cast in the waye, and the lyon stondynge besyde the body, and came and tolde it in the cite, where the olde prophet dwelt.

Whan the prophet which had broughte him agayne, herde that, he sayde: It is the man of God, that hath bene dishobediēt vnto the mouth of the LORDE, therefore hath y<sup>e</sup> LORDE delyuered him vnto the Lyon, which hath rente him, and slayne him, acordynge to the worde that the LORDE spake vnto him. And he sayde vnto his sonnes: Saddell me the asse. And whan they had saddled it, he wente, and founde his body cast in the waie and the asse and the lyon stondynge beside y<sup>e</sup> body. The lyon had eatē nothings of the body, nether had he torne the asse. Then toke the prophet the deed coarce of the man of God, and layed it vpō the asse, and broughte it agayne in to the cite of the olde prophet, to mourne, and to burye him.

And he layed the coarce in his awne graue, and they mourned for him: Alas my brother. And whan they had buried him, he saide vnto his sonnes: Whan I dye, burye me in the graue where the mā of God is buried, and laye my bones besyde his bones. † For it shal come to passe, that he cried (thorow the worde of the LORDE) against Bethel, and agaynst all y<sup>e</sup> houses of the hye places, which are in the cities of Samaria.

Howbeit after this acte dyd not Ieroboā turne from his euell waye, but was peruerted, and made prestes of the hye places, euē of the smallest of the people: Loke whom it pleased him, his handes he fylled, & he was prest of the hye places. And this turned to synne vnto the house of Ieroboā, to destroye him and to brynge him to naughte.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AT the same tyme was Abia the sonne of Ieroboam sicke, and Ieroboam saide vnto his wyfe: Get the vp, and disguise the, so that no man perceaue that thou art Ieroboams wyfe, and go vnto Silo: beholde, there is the prophet Ahias, † which promysed me y<sup>e</sup> I shulde be kynge ouer this people: and take with the ten loaves of bred and cakes, and a cuppe with hony, ⁊ go to him, that he maye tell the how it shal go with the childe. And Ieroboams wyfe did so, and gat hir vp, and wente vnto Silo, and came in to the house of Ahias. But Ahias coule not se, for his eyes were dymme for age. Neuerthelesse the LORDE sayde vnto Ahias: Beholde, Ieroboams wyfe commeth, to axe a matter at the for hir sonne, for he is sycke. Speake thou therefore vnto her thus ⁊ thus. Now when she came in, she shewed herselfe strange. But whan Ahias herde the noyse of hir fete goynge in at the dore, he saide: Come in thou wyfe of Ieroboā. Why shewest thou thy selfe so strange? I am sent vnto ŷ an harde messaunger.

B Go thy waye and tell Ieroboam: Thus sayeth ŷ LORDE God of Israel: "I haue exalted the from amonge the people, and set the to be prynce ouer my people of Israel, and haue rente the kyngdome from the house of Dauid, and geuen it the. But thou hast not bene as my seruauant Dauid, which kepte my commaundemētes, and walked after me with all his hert, so that he did onely ŷ thinge that was righte in my sighte: and thou hast done worse then all they that haue bene before the: thou hast gone thy waye and made the other goddes, and molten ymagēs, to prouoke me vnto wrath, and hast cast me behynde thy backe.

Beholde therefore, I wil brynge mysfortune vpon the house of Ieroboam, and wyl rote out from Ieroboam euē him that maketh water agaynst the wall, the presoner and forsaken in Israel: and the posterite of ŷ house of Ieroboam wyll I swepe out, as donge is swepte out, tyll he be cleane broughte to naught. *He that dieth (of Ieroboam) in the cite, the dogges shal eate him vp. But him ŷ dyeth in the felde, shall the foules of the aire eat vp, for the LORDE hath spoken it.

C Get the vp therefore, and go home, ⁊ whan thy fete enter in to ŷ cite, the childe shal dye. And all Israel shal bewayle him, and burye him. For he onely of Ieroboam shal come to the graue, because there is some good founde in him before the LORDE God of Israel, in Ieroboams house. †But the LORDE shall rayse him vp a kynge, which shal rote out ŷ house of Ieroboam in that daie. And what is it, ŷ is now in hande all ready? And the LORDE shal smyte Israel, like as a rede is moued in the water: ⁊ shal rote out Israel from this good londe, that he gaue vnto their fathers, ⁊ shal scatter them beyonde the water, because they haue made their groues to prouoke the LORDE vnto wrath. And Israel shall be geuen ouer because of the synne of Ieroboam, which hath synned him selfe, ⁊ made Israel to synne.

And Ieroboams wife gat her vp, wente hir waye, ⁊ came vnto Thirza. And whan she came vpō the thresholde of the house, ŷ childe dyed, ⁊ they buried him, ⁊ all Israel made lamentacion for him, †acordinge to ŷ worde of the LORDE, which he spake by his seruauant Ahia ŷ prophet. §What more there is to saye of Ieroboam, how he foughte ⁊ raigned, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. The tyme that Ieroboam raigned, was two ⁊ twentye yeare. And he slepte with his fathers. And Nadab his sonne was kyng in his steade.

Roboam ŷ sonne of Salomon was kyng in Iuda. ¶One and fortye yeare olde was Roboam whā he was made kyng, ⁊ seuentene yeare raigned he at Ierusalem, in the cite ŷ the LORDE had chosen out of all ŷ trybes of Israel, to set his name there. His mothers name was Naema an Ammonitisse. And Iuda dyd ŷ which displeased the LORDE, ⁊ prouoked him to indignacion more thē all ŷ their fathers had done with their synnes which they dyd: for they likewise buylded them hye places, pilers, and groues vpō euery hye hill, and amonge all grene trees. There were whoremōgers also, ⁊ they dyd all ŷ abhominaciōs of ŷ Heythē, whom ŷ LORDE droue out before the children of Israel.

E But in ŷ fifth yeare of kyng Roboam wētē Sisack ŷ kyng of Egipte vp agaynst Ierusalem, ⁊ toke the treasure out of ŷ house of the LORDE, ⁊ out of the kynges house, ⁊ all that mighte be gotten, ⁊ toke all the shyldes of golde, **which Salomon caused to be made. The xv. Chapter.

IN the eighteenth yere of kyng Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, *was Abia kyng in Iuda, and reigned thre yere at Ierusalem. His mothers name was †Maecha, the daughter of Abisalom, and he walked in all the synnes of his father, which he had done before him, and his hert was not perfecte with the LORDE his God, as was the hert of Dauid his father. ‡For because of Dauids sake dyd the LORDE his God geue him a lanterne at Ierusalem, so †he raysed his sonne after him, & manteyned him at Ierusalem, because Dauid dyd the thinge †y was righte in †y sighte of the LORDE, and departed not from all that he commaunded him as longe as he lyued (sauynge in the matter with †Vrias †y Hethite). But there was warre betwene Roboam and Ieroboam, as longe as he lyued.

What more there is to saye of Abia, and all that he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. There was warre also betwene Abia and Ieroboam. And Abia slepte with his fathers, and they buried him in the cite of Dauid. And Asa his sonne

His graundmothers name was Maecha the daughter of Abisalom. And Asa dyd that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE, as dyd his father Dauid. And he remoued †y †whoremongers out of the londe, and put downe all the Idols that his fathers had made. **He put his mother from the mynistracion, that she had made vnto Miplezeth in †y groue. And Asa roted out hir Miplezeth, and brent it in the broke Cedron:

but the hye places put he not downe. Yet was the hert of Asa perfecte with the LORDE as longe as he lyued. And the syluer and golde, and vessels that his father had halowed, & soch as was sanctified vnto †y house of the LORDE, that broughte he in. And there was warre betwene Asa & Baesa the kyng of Israel, as longe as they lyued.

Baesa the kyng of Israel wente vp agaynst Iuda, and buylded Rama, †that no man shulde go out and in of Asas syde the kyng of Iuda. Then toke Asa all the syluer and golde that was lefte in the treasure of the house of the LORDE, and in the treasure of the kynges house, and delyuered it in to his seruantes handes, †sent it vnto †Benadab the sonne of Tabrimon the sonne of Hesion kyng of Siria, which dwelt at Damascon, and let saye vnto him: There is a couenaunt betwene me and the, and betwene my father and thy father: therfore sende I the a present of syluer and golde, that thou shuldest breake the couenaunt which thou hast with Baesa the kyng of Israel, that he maye departe fro me.

Benadab agreed vnto kyng Asa, and sent his captaynes agaynst the cities of Israel, and smote Iion and Dau, & Abel Beth Maecha, and all Cineroth with the whole londe of Nephtali. Whā Baesa herde that, he left off from buyldinge Rama, and wente agayne vnto Thirza.

Kyng Asa caused it be proclaimed in all Iuda: Here be no man excepte. And they toke awaye the stones and tymber from Rama, wherwith Baesa had buylded. And kyng Asa buylded Geba Ben Iamin & Mispa therewith.

What more there is to saye of Asa, and of all his power, and all that he dyd, and of †y cities which he buylded, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda: sauynge that in his olde age he was diseased in his fete. And Asa slepte with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the cite of Dauid his father. ††And Iosaphat his sonne was kyng in his steade.

But Nadab the sonne of Ieroboam was In kyng ouer Israel in the secōde yere of Asa kyng of Iuda, & raigned ouer Israel two yere, and dyd euell in the sighte of the LORDE, and walked in the waye of his father, and in Howbeit Baesa the sonne of Ahia of the house of Isachar conspired agaynst him, & smote him at Gibbethon, which was the Philistynes: for Nadab and all Israel layed sege to Gibbethon. So Baesa slewe him in the thirde yere of Asa kynge of Iuda, & was kynge in his steade. * Now whan he was kynge, he smote all the house of Ieroboam, and let nothinge of Ieroboam remayne that had breth, tyll he had destroyed it, acordinge to þe worde of the LORDE, which he spake by his seruauit Ahia of Silo, because of Ieroboams synnes which he dyd, & made Israel synne withall: euen with þe prouokynge wherwith he displeased the LORDE God of Israel.

f What more there is to saye of Nadab, & all that he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel, and there was warre betwene Asa & Baesa the kynge of Israel, as longe as they lyued.

In the thirde yere of Asa kynge of Iuda was Baesa þe sonne of Ahia kynge ouer all Israel at Thirza foure and twentye yere, and dyd that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE, and walked in the waye of Ieroboam, and in his synnes, wherwith he made Israel to synne.

Neuertheles the worde of the LORDE came vnto Iehu the sonne of Hanani agaynst Baesa, and sayde: For so moch as I lifted the out of the dust, and made the prynce ouer my people of Israel, and thou walkest in the waye of Ieroboam, and makest my people ouer Israel for to synne, to prouoke me vnto wrath thorow their synnes, beholde, therefore wyll I take awaye the posterite of Baesa, and the posterite of his house, and wyll set thine house euen as the house of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat. † He that of Baesa dyeth in the cite, the dogges shal deuoure him: and who so beyng of him dyeth in the felde, the foules of the ayre shall eate him vp.

g What more there is to saye of Baesa, & what he dyd, & of his power, beholde, it is wrytten in þe Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Baesa slepte with his fathers, & was buried at Thirza: & his sonne Ella was kynge in his steade. And the worde of þe LORDE came by the prophet Iehu the sonne of Hanani, ouer Baesa, and ouer his house, and agaynst all the euell that he dyd in the sighte of þe LORDE, to prouoke him vnto wrath thorow the workes of his handes: so that he became as the house of Ieroboam, and because he slewe þis man.

The xvi. Chapter.

I N the sixe & twentieth yere of Asa kynge of Iuda, was Ella the sonne of Baesa kynge ouer Israel at Thirza two yere. Neuertheles his seruauit Simri, þe principall man ouer the halfe of þe charettes cōspyrēd against him. As for Ella, he was at Thirza, dranke & was dronke in þe house of Arza the ruler of Thirza. And Simri came in, and slewe him in the seuen & twentieth yere of Asa kynge of Iuda, and was kynge in his steade. § And whan he was kynge, and sat vpon his seate, he smote all the house of Baesa, & lefte not so moch as one to make water agaynst þe wall: his bloud auengers also & his frendes. ¶ Thus dyd Simri destroye all the house of Baesa, acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, which he spake ouer Baesa by the prophet Iehu, because of all the synnes of Baesa and of Ella his sonne, which they dyd, and made Israel for to synne, to prouoke the LORDE God of Israel vnto wrath thorow their vanities. What more there is to saye of Ella, and all that he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel.

In the seuen and twentieth yere of Asa kynge of Iuda, was Simri kynge vij. dayes at Thirza, and the people laye before Gibbethon of the Philistynes. But whan the people in the hoost herde saye þe Simri had conspired and slayne the kynge, then all Israel the same daye made Amri the chefe captayne kynge ouer all in the hoost. And Amri wente vp and all Israel with him from Gibbethon, and layed sege vnto Thirza. † But whan Simri sawe þe cite shulde be wonne, he wente in to the palace in the kynges house, & brent it with þe kynges house, & dyed because of his synnes which he had committed, in that he dyd euell in the sighte of the LORDE, and walked in the waye of Ieroboam, and in his synnes which he dyd, wherwith he made Israel to synne.

What more there is to saye of Simri, and how he conspired, beholde, it is wrytten in þe Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. At the same tyme were þe people deuyded in two partes:

In  $\hat{y}$  one and thirtieth yeare of Asa kynge of Iuda, was Amri kynge ouer Israel twolue yeares,  $\tau$  reigned at Thirza sixe yeares. He boughte the mount of Samaria of Semer for two hundreth weight of syluer,  $\tau$  buylded vpon the mount, and called the cite which he buylded, after  $\hat{y}$  name of Semer  $\hat{y}$  owner of  $\hat{y}$  mount of Samaria. And Amri dyd that which was euell in  $\hat{y}$  sighte of the LORDE, and was worse then all they that were before him, and walked in all  $\hat{y}$  wayes of Ieroboam  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Nebat, and in his synnes, wherwith he made Israel to synne, so that they prouoked the LORDE God of Israel vnto wrath in their vanities. What more there is to saye of Amri,  $\tau$  all that he dyd, and his power that he exercysed, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the knynges of Israel. And Amri slepte with his fathers,  $\tau$  was buried in Samaria, and Achab his sonne was kynge in his steade.

D In the eight  $\tau$  thirtieth yeare of Asa kynge of Iuda, was Achab the sonne of Amri kynge ouer Israel,  $\tau$  reigned ouer Israel at Samaria two  $\tau$  twentie yeare,  $\tau$  dyd euell in the sighte of the LORDE, more th $\hat{e}$  all they  $\hat{y}$  were before him. And he thoughte it but a small matter to walke in the synnes of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat: \*and toke Iesabel the daughter of Eth Baal kynge of Sidon to wife, and wente and serued Baal, and worshiped him. And vnto Baal he set vp an altare in Baals house, which he buylded him in Samaria, and made a groue: so that Achab dyd more to prouoke the God of Israel vnto wrath, then all the knynges  $\hat{y}$  were before him in Israel.

At  $\hat{y}$  same tyme dyd Hiel of Bethel buylde Iericho:  $\dagger$  It cost him his first sonne Abiram,  $\hat{y}$  he layed  $\hat{y}$  foundation:  $\tau$  his yongest sonne Segub,  $\hat{y}$  he set vp the portes: Acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, which he spake by Iosua the sonne of Nun.

A AND Elias  $\hat{y}$  Theszbite one of the inhabitors of Gilead, saide vnto Achab:  $\dagger$ As truly as the LORDE God of Israel lyueth, whose seruauent I am, there shal nether rayne ner dew come this yeare, excepte I speake it.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto him, and sayde: Get the hence, and turne the towarde the east, and hyde the by the ryuer Crith, which is ouer agaynst Iordane, and thou shalt drynke of the ryuer: and I haue commaunded the rauens, that they shal fede the there. He departed, and dyd acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, and wente his waye, and sat him downe by the ryuer Crith, which is ouer agaynst Iordane. And the rauens broughte him bred and flesh in the mornynge and in the euenynge, and he dranke of the ryuer.

And it fortunied after certayne dayes, that the riuier was dried vp: for there was no rayne in the lode. Then came  $\hat{y}$  worde of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE vnto him, and sayde:  $\hat{y}$  Get  $\hat{y}$  vp, and go vnto Sarepta, which lieth by Sid $\hat{o}$ : for there haue I commaunded a wedowe to make prouysion for the.

And he gat him vp, and wente vnto Sarepta. B And whan he came to the gate of  $\hat{y}$  cite, beholde, the wedowe was there, and gathered stickes. And he called her, and sayde: Fetch me a litle water in a vessell,  $\hat{y}$  I maye drinke. And as she was goinge to fetch it, he cried vnto her,  $\tau$  sayde: Brynge me a morsell of bred also in thine hande. She sayde: As truly as the LORDE thy God lyueth, I haue no bred, but an handfull of floure in a pitcher,  $\tau$  a curtesy oyle in a cruse: and beholde, I haue gathered vp one or two stickes,  $\tau$  wyll go and prepare it for me and my sonne, that we maye eate and dye.

Elias sayde vnto her: Feare not, go thy waye,  $\tau$  do as thou hast sayde: yet make me first a morsell of bred therof,  $\tau$  brynge it me forth:  $\tau$  afterwarde shalt thou make it for  $\hat{y}$   $\tau$  thy sonne. She wente  $\tau$  dyd as Elias sayde. And he ate,  $\tau$  she also, and hir house a certayne season. The meel in the pitcher was not mynished, and the oyle in the cruse fayled not, acordinge to the worde of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE which he spake by Elias.

And *he stretched out him selfe ouer the childe thre tymes, ⁊ called vpon the LORDE, and saide: O LORDE my God, let the soule of this childe come agayne in to him. And Elias toke the childe, and broughte him downe from the chamber in to the house and deluyered him vnto his mother, and sayde: Beholde, thy sonne lyueth. And the woman sayde vnto Elias: Now knowe I, that thou art a man of God, ⁊ that the worde of the LORDE is in thy mouth of a trueth.

The xliij. Chapter.

AND after a longe season came y worde of the LORDE vnto Elias in the thirde yere, ⁊ sayde: † Go thy waye, ⁊ shewe thy selfe vnto Achab, y I maye cause it for to rayne vpon earth. And Elias wente to shewe him selfe vnto Achab. But there was a greate derth ī Samaria. And Achab called Abdia his chefe officer: (As for Abdia, he feared y LORDE greatly: for whā Iesabel roted out y prophetes of y LORDE, Abdia toke an C. prophetes, and hyd them in caues, here fiftye, ⁊ there fiftye, ⁊ prouyded for them with bred and water.) Achab now sayde vnto Abdia: Go thorow the londe vnto all the welles of water ⁊ ryuers, yf happlye we maye finde hay, ⁊ to saue y horses ⁊ mules, y all the catell perishe not. And they parted thē selues in to the londe, to go thorow it. Achab departed the one waye alone, and Abdia y other waye alone.

Now whan Abdia was on y waye, Elias met him. And whan he knewe him, he fell downe vpon his face, ⁊ sayde: Art not thou my lorde Elias? He sayde: yee, go thy waye, and tell thy lorde: beholde. Elias is here. But he sayde: What haue I offended, that thou wilt deluyer thy seruauit in to the handes of Achab, that he maye slaye me? As truly as the LORDE thy God lyueth, there is no people ner kingdome, but my lorde hath sent thither to seke the. And whan they sayde: He is not here, he toke an ooth of the same kyngdome and nacion, that they had not founde the. And now thou sayest: Go tell thy lorde: beholde, Elias is here. Now whan I were gone from the, the sprete of the LORDE shulde take y awaye, I cannot tell whither: and yf I then came and tolde Achab, and founde the not, he shulde slaye me: But thy seruauit feareth the LORDE from his youth vp. Hath it not bene tolde my lorde what I dyd, whan Iesabel slewe the prophetes of the LORDE, how that I hyd an hundreth of the LORDES prophetes, here fiftye, and there fiftye in the caues, and prouyded for them with bred and water? And thou sayest now: Go thy waye, tell thy lorde: Elias is here, that he maye slaye me. Elias saide: As truly as y LORDE Zebaoth lyueth, before whom I stōde, I wil shewe my selfe vnto him this daye. Then wēte Abdia to mete Achab, ⁊ tolde him. And Achab wēte for to mete Elias.

And whan Achab sawe Elias, Achab sayde vnto him: Art thou he that troublest Israel? He sayde: I trouble not Israel, †but it is thou and thy fathers house, because ye haue forsaken the commaundementes of the LORDE, and walke after Baal. Go to, sende forth now, and gather me all Israel together vnto mount Carmell, and the foure hundreth and fiftye prophetes of Baal, and the foure hundredreth prophetes of y groue, which eate of Iesabels table. So Achab sent vnto all the children of Israel, ⁊ gathered the prophetes together vnto mount Carmell.

Then stepte Elias vnto all the people, ⁊ sayde: How longe halte ye on both y sydes? Yf the LORDE be God, thē walke after him: but yf Baal be he, thē folowe him. And the people gaue him no answer. Thē sayde Elias vnto the people: I onely am lefte a prophet of y LORDE: but Baals prophetes are foure C. and fiftie mē. Geue vs now two bullockes, ⁊ let them chose one bullocke, ⁊ hewe him in peces, ⁊ laye him vpō the wod, ⁊ put no fyre theron: so wil I take y other

And all the people answered & sayde: That is righte. And Elias sayde vnto Baals prophetes: Chose ye one bullock, and do ye it first (for ye are many) and call ye vpon the name of youre god, & laye no fyre theron.

And they toke the bullock which he gaue them, & prepared it, & called vpon the name of Baal from the mornynge vntyll the noone daye, and sayde: O Baal heare vs. But there was nether voyce ner answer. And they hopped aboute the altare, as their vse was to do. Now whan it was noone daye, Elias mocked them, and sayde: Crye loude. For he is a god, peraduenture he is musynge, or hath somwhat to do, or is gone some iourneye, or happlye he slepeth, so that he wolde be waked vp. And they cried loude, and prouoked thē selues with knyues & botkens, (as their maner was) tyll ſ̄y bloude folowed. But whan ſ̄y noone daye was past, they prophesied vntyll the tyme that the meatofferynge shulde be offered, & there was nether voyce ner answer, ner one to regarde them.

Then sayde Elias vnto all the people: Come hither all ye people vnto me. And whan all ſ̄y people came to him, he repayed ſ̄y *altare of the LORDE ſ̄y was broken, & †toke twolue stones acordinge to the nombre of ſ̄y trybes of the childrē of Iacob (vnto whom the worde of the LORDE spake, and sayde: †Thy name shal be Israel) and of ſ̄y stones he buylded an altare in the name of the LORDE, & made a pytt rounde aboute the altare, like two forowes in the corne londe, & prepared the wod, & hewed ſ̄y bullock in peces, and layed him vpon the wod, & sayde: Fetch foure pitchers full of water, and poured it vpō the burntofferynge, and vpon the wod. And he sayde: Do it yet once. And they dyd it once agayne. And he sayde: Do it ſ̄y thirde tyme. And they dyd it the thirde tyme. And ſ̄y water ranne aboute the altare, and ſ̄y pytt was full of water also.

And whan the tyme was to offer ſ̄y meatofferynge, Elias stepte forth, and sayde: O LORDE God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Israel, let it be knowne this daye, that thou art God in Israel, and I thy seruauant, and that I haue done all this acordinge vnto thy worde. Heare me O LORDE, O heare me, ſ̄y this people maye knowe, how that thou art the LORDE God, that thou mayest afterwarde turne their hertes. §Then fell downe the fyre of the LORDE, and consumed the burntofferynge, the wodde, the stones and the earth, and licked vp the water that was in the pytt. Whan all the people sawe that, they fell vpon their faces, and sayde: The LORDE is God, ſ̄y LORDE is God. Elias sayde vnto them: †Laye handes vpon Baals prophetes, ſ̄y none of them escape. And they toke them. And Elias broughte them downe vnto ſ̄y broke Cyson, & slewe thē there.

And Elias sayde vnto Achab: Go vp, eate & drynke, for it soundeth as though it wolde rayne sore. And whan Achab wete vp to eate & drinke, Elias ascēded vp to the toppe of Carmel, & bowed him selfe downe to the earth, & put his heade betwene his knees, & sayde vnto his lad: Go vp, and loke toward the See. He wente vp & loked, & sayde: There is nothinge. He sayde: Go agayne seuen tymes. And at the seuēth tyme he sayde: Beholde, there goeth vp a litle cloude out of the see, like a mans hande. He sayde: Go vp, and saie vnto Achab: Bynde thy charēt, & go downe, ſ̄y the rayne ouertake the not. And or a mā coulede turne him, the heauen was blacke with cloudes & wynde, & there came a greate rayne. But Achab rode his waie, & departed vnto Iesrael. And the hāde of ſ̄y LORDE came vpō Elias, and he gyrded his loynes, & ranne before Achab, tyll he came vnto Iesrael.

Then was he afraied, & gat him vp, & wente where he wolde, & came vnto Berseba in Iuda, and lefte his lad there. And beholde the worde of the LORDE came to him, and sayde vnto him: What doest thou here Elias? He sayde: I haue bene zelous for the LORDE God Zebaoth: for the children of Israel haue forsaken thy couenaunt, and broken downe thine altares, and slayne thy prophetes with the swerde, and I am lefte onely, & they seke to take awaye my life. He sayde: Go forth, and stonde vpon the mount before the LORDE. And beholde, the LORDE wēte ouer: and a greате mightie wynde, which roue the mountaynes, and brake the harde stones, came before the LORDE, but the LORDE was not in the wynde. After the wynde came there an earthquake, but the LORDE was not in the earthquake.

C And after the earth quake there came a fyre, but the LORDE was not in the fyre. And after the fyre came there a styll softe hyssinge. Whan Elias herde that, he couered his face with his cloke, and wente forth, and stode in the dore of the caue. And beholde, there came a voyce vnto him, and sayde: What hast thou here to do Elias?

And Elias wēte vnto him, & cast his cloke vpon him. And he lefte the oxen, & ranne after Elias, & sayde: ¶ Let me kysse my father & my mother, and so wil I folowe the. And he sayde vnto him: Go thy waye, & come agayne, for I haue some what to do with the. And he ranne agayne from him, and toke a yocke of oxen, and offred it, and sod  $\hat{y}$  flesh with the wod of the oxen plowes, and gaue it vnto the people to eate, and gat him vp, & folowed Elias, and mynistred vnto him.

The rr. Chapter.

A ND \*\*Benadab  $\hat{y}$  kyngye of Siria gathered all his power, & there were two & thirtie kynges with him, & horses & charettes, and he wente vp, and layed sege vnto Samaria, & foughte agaynst it. And he sent messaungers vnto Achab  $\hat{y}$  kyngye of Israel in to  $\hat{y}$  cite, & caused to saye vnto him: Thus sayeth Benadab: Thy syluer & thy golde is myne, and thy wyues & thy best children are myne also. The kyngye of Israel answered, & sayde: My lorde O kyngye, euen as thou hast sayde, I am thine, and all that I haue.

And the messaungers came agayne, & sayde: Thus sayeth Benadab: For so moch as I haue sent vnto the, sayenge: Thy syluer & thy golde, thy wyues & thy childrē shalt thou geue me, tomorow aboute this tyme wil I sende my seruantes vnto the,  $\hat{y}$  they maye serch thyne house and the houses of thy subiectes: & loke what pleasant thinge thou hast,  $\hat{y}$  shal they take in their handes, and cary it awaye. 35 So the kyngye of Israel called all  $\hat{y}$  Elders of the lōde, & sayde: Mark well & se, what myschefe this mā seketh: He sent vnto me for my wyues & children, for syluer & golde, & I haue not sayde him naye. Then sayde all the Elders and all the people vnto him: Thou shalt not cōsente ner agree vnto him. And he spake vnto Benadabs messāgers, Saye vnto my lordē y kynge: All y thynges wherfore thou dydest sende vnto me thy seruauant at y first, wil I do, but this can I not do. And y messāgers wēte, and tolde this againe. Thē sent Benadab vnto him sayēge: The goddes do this and y vnto me, yf the dust of Samaria shalbe ynough, for euery one of my people to brynge me an handfull therof. But y kynge of Israel answered, ⁊ sayde: Tell him, Let not him y putteth on y harnes, make his boast like him y hath put it of. Whā Benadab herde y (euē as he was drynkinge with the kynges in y payllion) he sayde vnto his seruauētes: Set youre selues in araye. And they set thē selues in arāie against y cite.

And beholde, there came a prophet vnto Achab y kynge of Israel, ⁊ saide: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Hast thou sene all this greate multitudine? Beholde, this daie wil I delyuer thē in to thy hande, so y thou shalt knowe, how y I am y LORDE. Achab sayde: By whom? He sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Euen by the yonge men of the rulers of the londe. He sayde: Who shal order the battayl? He sayde: Thou. Then mustered he the yonge men of the rulers of the londe, ⁊ there were two hūdreth and two and thirtie of them: ⁊ after thē mustured he of the whole people of all the childrē of Israel, seuē thousande men, and they wente out in the noone daye. As for Benadab, he dranke and was dronken in the payllion with the two ⁊ thirtie kynges which were come to helpe him. And the yonge men of the rulers of the londe wente forth first.

Benadab sent forth, ⁊ they brought him worde, ⁊ sayde: There come men out of Samaria. He sayde: Take them alyue, whether they be come forth for peace, or for warre. But whan the londe rulers yonge men were gone forth, and the hoost behynde them, euery one smote him y came in his waye. And the Sirians fled, and Israel folowed after them. And Benadab the kynge of Syria escaped with horses and horsmē. And the kynge of Israel wente forth, and smote horses and charettes, and dyd a greate slaughter on the Syrians.

Then came there a prophet vnto the kynge of Israel, and sayde vnto him: Go thy waye and strength the, and take hede, and loke well what thou doest: for whan the yeare is aboute, the kynge of Syria shall come agaynst the of the new. For the kynge of y Syrians seruauētes sayde vnto him: Their goddes are goddes of the mountaynes, therfore haue they gotten the victory.

But let vs fyghte with them on the playne, and thou shalt se that we shal ouercome them. Do thus, put awaye the kynges euery one from his place, and set dukes in their steades, and appoynte the an hoost as was that which thou hast lost, ⁊ horses ⁊ charettes as the other were, and let vs fight agaynst thē in the plaine, and thou shalt se that we shal haue the victory. He cōsented vnto their voyce, and dyd so.

Now whan the yeare was gone aboute, Benadab appoynted the Sirians, and wente vp towarde Aphek, to fighte agaynst Israel, and the childrē of Israel mustured, and prouyded them selues with vytailes, and wēte to mete them, and pitched their tētes ouer against them, like two litle flockes of goates but the londe was full of the Syrians.

And there came a man of God, and sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Because the Syrians haue sayde, that the LORDE is a God of the moūtaynes and not a God of the valleys, therfore haue I geuen all this greate heape in to thy handes, that ye maye knowe how that I am y LORDE. And they pitched their tentes right ouer agaynst them seuē dayes. But vpon y seuenth daye they wente together in to the battayll: and the children of Israel smote of the Sirians an hūdreth thousande fote men in one daye, and the remnaunt fled to Aphek in to the cite, and the wall fell vpon the other seuē and twenty thousande men. And Benadab fled also vnto the cite in to a litle chamber.

Then sayde his seruauētes vnto him: Beholde, we haue herde that the kynges of the house of Israel are mercifull kinges, Let vs therfore put sack cloth aboute oure loynes, and halters aboute oure neckes, ⁊ go forth to the kynge of Israel, peraduenture he shal let thy soule lyue.

And they put sack cloth aboute their loynes, and halters aboute their neckes, and came to the kynge of Israel, and sayde: Benadab thy seruauant sayeth vnto the: O let my soule lyue. He sayde: yf he be yet alyue, he is my brother. And the men toke him shortly at his worde, and expounded it for them selues and sayde: Yee Benadab is thy brother. He sayde: Come and brynge him. Thē wente Benadab forth vnto him, and he caused him to syt vpon the charet, and sayde vnto him: The cities that my father toke from thy father, wyl I geue the agayne. And make thou stretes for thyselfe at Damascō, as my father did at Samaria, so wyl I let the go with a bonde of peace. And he made a couenaunt with him, and let him go.

Then spake there a man amonge the children of the prophetes vnto his neyghboure by the worde of the LORDE: I praye the smite me. But he refused to smite him. Then saide he vnto him, because thou hast not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE, beholde, therefore shall there a lyon smyte the, whan thou goest fro me. * And whan he wente frō him, a lyon founde him, and slewe him.

And he founde another man, and sayde: I praye the smyte me. And the man smote him, and wounded him. Then wente the prophet, and stepte vnto the kynge by the waye syde, and altered his face with aszshes. And whan the kynge wente by, he cried vpon ſ kynge, and sayde: Thy seruauant wente forth in to the battayll, and beholde, there wente one asyde, and broughte a man vnto me, and sayde: Kepe this mā: yf he be myssed, thy soule shall be in steade of his soule, or els thou shalt weye downe an hundredth weighte of syluer. And whyle thy seruauant had here & there to do, he was awaye. The kynge of Israel sayde vnto him: It is thine owne iudgment, thou hast geuen it thyselfe.

Then put he the aszshes from his face in all the haist. And the kynge of Israel knewe him, that he was one of the prophetes. And he sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Because thou hast let the damned man go, therefore shall thy soule be for his soule, and thy people for his people. And the kynge of Israel departed vnto his house, beinge troubled in his mynde and full indignacion, and came to Samaria.

The xxi. Chapter.

AFTER these actes it fortunēd, that Naboth the Iesraelite had a vynyarde at Iesreel besyde the palace of Achab kynge of Samaria. And Achab spake to Naboth, and sayde: Geue me thy vynyarde, I wyl make me an herbgarden therof, because it is so nye my house: I wyl geue the a better vynyarde for it: or yf it please the, I wyl geue the syluer for it, as moch as it is worth. But Naboth sayde vnto Achab: † The LORDE let that be farre fro me, that I shulde geue ſ my fathers heretage. Then came Achab home, beinge moued and full of indignacion, because of the worde that Naboth the Iesraelite had spoken vnto him, & sayde: I wyl not geue the my fathers inheritance. And he laied him downe vpon his bed, and turned his face asyde, and ate no bred. Then Iesabel his wyfe came in to him and sayde vnto him: What is ſ ynatter, that thy sprete is so cōbred, and that thou eatest no bred? He sayde vnto her: I haue spokē vnto Naboth the Iesraelite, and sayde: Geue me thy vynyarde for money: or yf it please ſ, I wyl geue the another for it. But he sayde: I wyl not geue the my vynyarde.

Then sayde Iesabel his wyfe vnto him: What kingdom were in Israel, yf thou diddest it? Stonde vp, and eate bred, I wyl get the the vynyarde of Naboth the Iesraelite. And she wrote a letter vnder Achabs name, and sealed it with his signet, and sent it vnto ſ Elders and rulers in his cite, which dwelt aboute Naboth, and wrote thus in ſ letter: Proclame a fast, and set Naboth aboue in the people, and set two men of Belial before him, to testifye and saye: Thou hast blasphemed God and the kynge. And brynge him forth, and stone him to death.

And the Elders and rulers of his cyte, which dwelt in his cite, dyd as Iesabel had commaunded them, acordynge as she had wrytten in the letter that she sent vnto them and they proclaimed a fast, and caused Naboth to syt aboue amonge the people. Then came the two men of Belial, and stode before him, and testyfyed agaynst Naboth in ſ presence of the people, and sayde: Naboth hath blasphemed God and the kynge.

Then broughte they him out of the cite, and stoned him to death. And they sent Iesabel worde, sayenge: Naboth is stoned & put to death. Whā Iesabel herde that Naboth was stoned and deed, she sayde vnto Achab:

¶ Vp, and take possession of the vynyarde of Naboth the Iesraelite, which he denyed to geue the for money: for Naboth lyueth no more but is deed. And whan Achab herde y Naboth was deed, he rose to go downe vnto the vynyarde of Naboth the Iesraelite, and to take possession of it.

But the worde of the LORDE came to Elias the Thesbite, and sayde: Get the vp, and go downe to mete Achab the kynge of Israel, which is at Samaria: beholde, he is in Naboths vynyarde, in to the which he is gone downe to take possession of it, and talke thou with him, and speake: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Thou hast slayne, and taken in possession. And thou shalt talke morouer vnto him, and saye: Thus sayeth the LORDE: * Euen in the place where the dogges licked vp Naboths bloude, shall the dogges licke thy bloude also. And Achab sayde vnto Elias: Hast thou euer founde me thine enemye? He saide: Yee, I haue founde the, because thou art euen solde to do euell in the sighte of the LORDE. Beholde, † I wyll brynge mysfortune vpon the, and take awaye thy posterite, and wil rote out from Achab, euen him that maketh water agaynst the wall, and him that is shut vp and left behynde in Israel: and thy house wyll I make as the house of Ieroboam y sonne of Nebat, and as the house of Baesa the sonne of Ahia, because of y prouocation wherwith thou hast prouoked me vnto wrath, and made Israel to synne.

¶ And ouer Iesabel spake the LORDE also and sayde: ‡ The dogges shal deuoure Iesabel in y felde of Iesrael. § Who so of Achab dyeth in y cite, him shal the dogges eate vp: and who so dyeth in the felde, the foules vnder the heauen shall eate him vp. So cleane ¶ solde to do myschefe in y sighte of the LORDE hath no man bene, as Achab: for his Iesabel hath so disceaue him, and he maketh him selfe a greate abhominacion, that he goeth after Idols, acordige vnto all as dyd the Amorites, ¶ whom the LORDE expelled before the children of Israel.

But whan Achab herde these wordes, he rete his clothes, ¶ put a sack cloth on his body, ¶ fasted, and slepte in sack cloth, and wente aboute hanginge downe his heade. And the worde of the LORDE came to Elias the Thesbite, ¶ sayde: Hast thou not sene how Achab humbleth him selfe before me? For so much now as he hūbleth him selfe in my sighte, I wil not brynge that plague whyle he lyueth: but by his sonnes life wil I brynge mysfortune vpon his house.

The xxij. Chapter.

AND there passed ouer thre yeares, that ¶ there was no warre betwene the Sirians ¶ Israel. ** But in the thirde yeare wente Iosaphat the kynge of Iuda downe to the kynge of Israel. And the kynge of Israel sayde vnto his seruantes: Knowe ye not y Ramoth in Gilead is oures? and we syt styll, and take it not out of the hande of the kynge of Syria. And he sayde vnto Iosaphat: Wilt thou go with me to the battaill vnto Ramoth in Gilead? Iosaphat sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: I wyll be as thou, my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses. And Iosaphat sayde vnto y kynge of Israel: † Axe this daye at the worde of the LORDE. Then the kynge of Israel gathered the prophetes aboute a ‡ foure hundreth men, and sayde vnto them: Shal I go vnto Ramoth in Gilead to fighte, or shal I let it alone? They sayde: Go vp, y LORDE shal delyuer it in to y kinges hande. But Iosaphat sayde: Is there not one prophet here more of y LORDE, that we maye axe at him?

The kinge of Israel saide vnto Iosaphat: ¶ Here is yet a man, one Micheas the sonne of Iemla, at whom we maye axe of the LORDE: but I hate him, for he prophecieth me no good, but euell. Iosaphat sayde: Let not the kynge saye so. Then called the kynge of Israel a chamberlayne, and sayde: Brynge hither soone Micheas the sonne of Iemla. As for the kynge of Israel and Iosaphat y kinge of Iuda, they sat ether of them vpon his seate, arayed in their garmentes in the place at y dore of the porte of Samaria, and all y prophetes prophecied before thē. And Sedechias the sonne of Cnaena had made him hornes of yron, and sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: With these shalt thou puszhe at y Syrians, tyll thou brynge them to naughte. And all the prophetes prophecied likewyse, and sayde: Go vp vnto Ramoth in Gilead, thou shalt prospere right well, ¶ the LORDE shal delyuer it in to the kynges hande. And the messaunger that wente to call Micheas sayde vnto him: Beholde, The wordes of  $\text{ȝ}$  prophetes are with one acorde good before the kyng, let thy worde therefore be as their worde, and speake thou good also.

C Micheas sayde: As truly as the LORDE liueth, loke what the LORDE sayeth vnto me,  $\text{ȝ}$  wyl I speake. And whan he came to the kyng, the kyng sayde vnto him: Micheas, shal we go vnto Ramoth in Gilead to fight or shall we let it alone? He sayde vnto him: Yee, go vp, thou shalt prospere righte well, the LORDE shall geue it in to the kynges hande. But the kyng sayde vnto him agayne: I charge  $\text{ȝ}$  that thou saye no other thinge vnto me but the truth, in the name of  $\text{ȝ}$  LORDE. He sayde: I sawe all Israel scaured abrode vpon the mountaynes, as the shepe that haue no shepherde. And the LORDE saide: Haue these no lorde? Let euery one turne home agayne in peace. Then sayde  $\text{ȝ}$  kyng of Israel vnto Iosaphat: Tolde not I  $\text{ȝ}$  that he wolde prophecie me no good, but euell?

D He sayde: Heare now therfore the worde of the LORDE: \* I sawe the LORDE syt vpon his seate, and all the hoost of heauen stōdinge by him at his righte hande  $\tau$  at his lefte. And the LORDE saide: Who wil disceauē Achab to go vp,  $\tau$  fall at Ramoth in Gilead. And one sayde this, another that. Then wēte there forth a sprete,  $\tau$  stode before the LORDE, and sayde: I wyl disceauē him. The LORDE sayde vnto him: Wherwith? He sayde vnto him: I wyll go forth, and be a false sprete in the mouth of all his prophetes. He saide: Thou shalt disceauē him, and shalt be able: go forth and do so. Beholde now, the LORDE hath geuē a false sprete in  $\text{ȝ}$  mouth of all these thy prophetes, and the LORDE hath spoken euell ouer the. Then stepte forth Sedechias the sonne of Cnaena, and smote Micheas vpon the cheke, and sayde: What, is the sprete of the LORDE departed fro me, to speake with the? Micheas sayde: Beholde, thou shalt se it in  $\text{ȝ}$  daye, whan thou shalt go frō one chamberto another to hyde the.

E The kyng of Israel sayde: Take Micheas, and let him remayne with Amon the ruler of the cite, and with Ioas the kynges sonne, and saye: Thus sayeth the kyng: Put this man in preson, and fede him with bred and water of trouble, tyll I come agayne in peace. Micheas sayde: Yf thou comest agayne in peace, then hath not the LORDE spoken thorow me. And he sayde: herken to all ye people.

So the kyng of Israel and Iosaphat  $\text{ȝ}$  kyng of Iuda wente vp vnto Ramoth in Gilead. And the kyng of Israel sayde vnto Iosaphat: Chaunge thy clothes, and come in to  $\text{ȝ}$  battayll in thine araie. The kyng of Israel chaunged his clothes also, and wēte in to the battayll. But the kyng of Siria commaunded the rulers of his charettes (of whom there were two and thirtie) and saide: Ye shal fight nether agaynst small ner greate, but onely agaynst the kyng of Israel. And whan the rulers of the charettes sawe Iosaphat, they thought it had bene the kyng of Israel, and fell vpon him with fightinge. But Iosaphat cried. So whan the rulers of the charettes sawe that it was not  $\text{ȝ}$  kyng of Israel, they turned back frō him.

A certayne man bended his bowe harde, and shott the kyng of Israel betwene the mawe and  $\text{ȝ}$  longes. And he sayde vnto his charetman: Turne thine hāde, and cary me out of the hoost, for I am wounded. And  $\text{ȝ}$  battayll was sore the same daie. And the kyng stode vpō his charet, agaynst the Syriās and dyed in the eueninge, and the bloude ranne from the wounde in to the myddes of the charet. And whan the Sonne wente downe there was a proclamacion made in the hoost, and sayde: Euery one gett him in to his cite, and to his countre. Thus the kyng dyed, and was broughte vnto Samaria, and they buryed him in Samaria. And whan they waszshed the charet in the pole of Samaria,  $\text{ȝ}$  dogges licked his bloude (but the harlottes waszshed him) acordinge to the worde of  $\text{ȝ}$  LORDE which he spake.

What more there is to saye of Achab,  $\tau$  all  $\text{ȝ}$  he dyd, and of the Yuery house which he buylded, beholde, it is wryten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. So Achab slepte with his fathers, and his sonne Ahasia was kyng in his steade.

F And Iosaphat the sonne of Asa was kyng ouer Iuda in the fourth yeare of Achab kyng of Israel, and was fyue and thirtie yeare olde whan he was made kyng, and reigned fyue and twenty yeare at Ierusalē. His mothers

And Iosaphat had caused to make shippes vpon the See, which shulde go to fetch golde in Ophir, but they wente not: for they were broken at Ezeon Gaber. At that tyme sayde Ahasia the sonne of Achab vnto Iosaphat: Let my seruantes passe with thy seruantes in the shippes. But Iosaphat wolde not. And Iosaphat slepte with his fathers, and was buried in ſ cite of Dauid. And Ioram his sonne was kyng in his steade.

The fyrst Chapter.

A HASIA the sonne off Achab was kyng ouer Israel at Samaria in ƿ seuententh yere of Iosaphat kige of Iuda, & reigned ouer Israel two yeaues, & dyd ƿ which was euell in ƿ sight of the LORDE, and walked in the waye of his father and of his mother, & in the waie of Ieroboam ƿ soune of Nebat, which made Israel for to synne. And serued Baal, and worshipped him, and displeased the LORDE God of Israel, euē as his father dyd. The Moabites also fell awaye from Israel, whan Achab was deed.

And Ochiasias fell thorow ƿ grate in his chāber at Samaria, and was deed sicke, and sent messaungers, and sayde vnto them: Go youre waye, and axe counsell at Beelzebub the god of Ekron, whether I shall recouer from this sicknesse. But the angell of ƿ LORDE sayde vnto Elias the Theszbite: Vp, & go mete the messaungers of the kyng of Samaria, and saie vnto them: Is there no God in Israel, that ye go to axe counsell at ƿ god of Ekron? Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: Thou shalt not come from the bed wheron thou lvest, but shalt dye the death.

And Elias wente his waye. And whā ƿ messaungers came to Ochosias agayne, he sayde vnto thē: Why come ye agayne? They sayde vnto him: There came vp a man in oure waye, and sayde vnto vs: Go againe to the kinge that hath sent you, and saye vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE: Is there no God in Israel, ƿ thou sendest to axe coucel at Beelzebub ƿ god of Ekrō? Therefore shalt thou not come from y bed wheron thou lvest, but shalt dye the death. He sayde vnto them: What maner of man was it that mett you, and sayde this vnto you? They sayde vnto him: He had a rough heer vpon him, and a letheren gyrdell aboute his loynes. He sayde: It is Elias the Theszbite.

And he sent vnto him a captayne ouer fyfye, with the same fyfye. And whan he came vnto him, beholde, he sat aboue vpon the moit. He sayde vnto him: Thou mā of God, the kynges sayeth: Thou shalt come downe. Elias answered the captayne ouer fyfye, and sayde vnto him: Yf I be a man of God, the fyre fall downe then from heauen, and cōsume the and thy fyfye. *Then fell there fire from heauen, and consumed him and his fyfye. And agayne he sent another captayne ouer fyfye vnto him, with his fyfye, which answered, and sayde vnto him: Thou man of God, thus sayeth the kynges: Come downe in all the haist. Elias answered, and saide: Yf I be a mā of God, y fire fall downe from heauen, and consume the and thy fyfye. Then fell the fyre of God from heauen, and consumed him, and his fyfye. Agayne, he sent vnto him the thirde captayne ouer fyfye, with his fyfye.

Now whan he came to him, he kneled to Elias, and besought him, and sayde vnto him: Thou man of God, let my soule and y soules of thy seruantes these fyfye, be somewhat worth in thy syghte. Beholde, the fyre fell downe from heauen, and hath consumed the fyrst two captaynes ouer fyfye with their fyfyes. But now let my soule be somewhat worth in thy sighte. Then saide the angel of the LORDE vnto Elias: Go downe with him, and feare him not. And he gatt him vp, and wente downe with him vnto y kynges.

And he sayde vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE: Because thou hast sent forth messaungers, and caused to axe counsell at Beelzebub the god of Ekron, as though there were no God in Israel to axe coucell at his worde, therefore shalt thou not come from the bed wheron thou hast layed the, but shalt dye y death. So he dyed, acordynge to the worde of the LORDE which Elias sayde. And Ioram (his brother) was kyng in his steade in the seconde yere of Ioram the sonne of Iosaphat kyng of Iuda: for he had no sonne.

What more there is to saye of Ochosias, what he dyd, beholde, it is wrytē in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel.

The ij. Chapter.

WHAN the LORDE was mynded to take vp Elias in the tempest, Elias and Eliseus wente from Gilgall. And Elias sayde to Eliseus: Tary thou here I praye the, for the LORDE hath sent me vnto Bethel. But Eliseus sayde: As truly as the LORDE liueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wyl not forsake the. And whan they came downe vnto Bethel, the prophetes children that were at Bethel, wete forth to Eliseus, and sayde vnto him: Knowest thou not, that the LORDE wyl take thy lorde awaye from thy heade this daye? He saide: I knowe it well, holde ye youre peace.

And Elias sayde vnto him: Eliseus, tary thou here I praye the, for the LORDE hath sent me vnto Iericho. Neuerthesse he sayde: as truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wyl not forsake the.

And whan they came vnto Iericho, the prophetes children which were at Iericho, stepte forth to Eliseus and sayde vnto him: Knowest thou not that the LORDE wyl take thy lorde awaye from thy heade this daie? He sayde: I knowe it well, holde ye youre peace. And Elias sayde vnto him: I praie the tary here, for y LORDE hath sent me vnto Iordane. But he sayde: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wil not forsake the. And they wente both together. But fyfye men of y prophetes children wete forth, and stode ouer agaynst the a farre of: but they both stode by Iordane. Then toke Elias his cloke, and wrapped it together, and smote the water, which deuoyd it selfe on both the sydes, so that they wete dry shod thorow it. And whan they were come ouer, Elias sayde vnto Eliseus: Axe what I shall do for the, afore I be taken awaye from the. Eliseus saide: That thy sprete maye be vpō me to speake twyse as moch.

He sayde: Thou hast desyred an harde thinge: neuerthes yf thou shalt se me whā I am taken awaye from the, it shal be so: Yf no, the shal it not be. And as they were goinge together, and he talked, there came a fyrie charet with horses of fyre, and parted the both asunder. †And so wente Elias vp to heauen in the storme. But Eliseus sawe it, & cryed: My father, my father, the charetman of Israel and his horsmē. And he sawe him nomore.

And he toke holde of his clothes, and rente them in two peces, and toke vp Elias cloke that was fallen from him, and turned backe, and stode by the shore of Iordane, and toke the same cloke of Elias which was fallen from him, and smote it in the water, and saide: Where is now the LORDE God of Elias? And he smote it in to the water, and then parted it asunder on both the sydes, and Eliseus wente thorow.

D And whan the prophetes children which were at Iericho ouer agaynst him, sawe him, they sayde: The sprete of Elias resteth vpō Eliseus, and so they wēte forth to mete him, and worshipped him to the grounde, and sayde vnto him: Beholde, there are fiftye valeaunt mē amonge thy seruantes, let them go and seke thy lorde, peraduenture the sprete of the LORDE hath taken him, and cast him vpon some mountaine or in some valley. But he saide: Sende them not. Neuertheles they constrayned him, tyll he was ashamed, and sayde: Let them go. And they sent fiftye men, which soughte him thre dayes: but they founde him not, and came agayne vnto him. And he abode at Iericho, and sayde vnto them: Tolde not I you, that ye shulde not go? And the men of the cite sayde vnto Eliseus: Beholde, there is good dwellynge in this cite, as my lorde seyth, but the water is euell, and the londe vnfrutefull.

E He sayde: Bring me hither a new vessell, & put salt in it. And they broughte it him. Then wēte he forth vnto the well of water, and cast the salt therin, & sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I haue healed this water: from hence forth shal there no deed ner vnfrutefulnes come of it. So the water was healed vnto this daye, accordinge to the worde of Eliseus which he spake.

And he wēte vp towarde Bethel. And as he was goynge vp by the waye, there came litle boyes out of the cite, and mocked him, & sayde: Come vp here thou balde heade, come vp here thou balde heade. And he turned him aboute. And whā he sawe them, he cursed them in the name of the LORDE. Then came there two Beeres out of the wod, and rente two and fortye of the children. From thence wēte he vp vnto mount Carmel, and from it turned he backe to Samaria.

The iij. Chapter.

IORAM the sonne of Achab was kynge A ouer Israel at Samaria in ƿ eighteenth yere of Iosaphat kynge of Iuda, & reigned xij. yeaues, & dyd ƿ which was euell in ƿ sighte of ƿ LORDE, but not as his father & his mother: for he put awaye ƿ pilers of Baal, which his father caused to make. Neuertheles he cleued vnto ƿ synnes of Ieroboā ƿ sonne of Nebat, which made Israel for to synne, & departed not there frō.

Mesa ƿ kynge of the Moabites had many shepe, & payed tribute vnto the kynge of Israel with the woll of an hundreth thousande lābes, & of an hidreth thousande rāmes. *But whan Achab was deed, the kynge of ƿ Moabites fell awaye frō the kynge of Israel. At ƿ same tyme wēte kynge Ioram frō Samaria, & mustered all Israel, & sent vnto Iosaphat kynge of Iuda, sayenge: The kynge of the Moabites is fallen awaye fro me, come thou with me to fighte agaynst ƿ Moabites. He sayde: I wil come vp, † I am euen as thou, and my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses. And sayde morouer: Which waye wil we go vp? He sayde: by the waye in the wylder-nesse of Edom.

So the kynge of Israel, the kynge of Iuda, B & the kynge of Edom wente forth. And whan they had gone aboute seuē dayes iourney, ƿ hoost & the catell ƿ were amonge thē had no water. Then sayde the kynge of Israel: Alas, the LORDE hath called these thre kynges, to delyuer thē in to the hande of the Moabites. But Iosaphat sayde: † Is here no prophet of ƿ LORDE, ƿ we maye axe coucell at ƿ LORDE by him? Then answered one of ƿ kynge of Israels seruantes, & saide: Here is Eliseus ƿ sonne of Saphat, which poured water vpon Elias handes. Iosaphat sayde: The worde of ƿ LORDE is with him. So the kynge of Israel & Iosaphat, and ƿ kynge of Edom wente downe vnto him.

But Eliseus sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: C What hast thou to do with me? go to the prophetes of thy father & to thy mothers prophetes. The kinge of Israel saide vnto him: No, for ƿ LORDE hath called these thre kynges, to delyuer them in to the handes of the Moabites. Eliseus sayde: As truly as the LORDE Zebaoth lyueth, before whom I stode, yf I regarded not Iosaphat the kyng of Iuda, I wolde not regarde the, ner set oughte by y. So bringe me now a mynstrell. And whan the mynstrell played vpō the instrument, the hande of the LORDE came vpō him. And he sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Make pittes by this broke. For thus sayeth the LORDE: Ye shal se nether wynde ner rayne, yet shall the broke be full of water, that ye and youre housholdes ⁊ youre catell maie drynke. Yee and that is but a small thinge in the sighte of the LORDE. And the Moabites shal he delyuer in to youre handes, so y ye shal smyte all the stronge cities, and all y chosen cities * ⁊ shal fell downe all the good trees, and stoppe all the welles of water and all the good felde shall ye make waist with stones.

On the morow, whan the meatofferynge is offered, beholde, there came water y waye from Edom, and fylled y londe with water. But whan the Moabites herde, y the kynges came vp to fighte agaynst thē, they called all y harnessed men, ⁊ their rulers, ⁊ stode on y border. And whan they rose early in y mornynge, ⁊ the Sonne wēte vp vpon y water, the Moabites thoughte the water ouer agaynst thē to be euē as reed as bloude, ⁊ they sayde: It is bloude, y kynges haue destroyed them selues with the swerde, ⁊ one hath smytten another. Now Moab get the vp to the spoyles. But whan they came to the tentes of Israel, the Israelites gat vp, ⁊ smote the Moabites, ⁊ they fled before them.

Neuertheles they came in, ⁊ smote Moab, ⁊ brake downe the cities, ⁊ euery one cast his stone vpon all the good felde, and made them full, and stopped all y welles of water, and felled downe all the good trees, tyll there remayned but the stones in the brickwall, and they compased them aboute with slynges, and smote them.

But whā the kyng of y Moabites sawe y the battayll was to strōge for him, he toke to him seuen C. men, which drue y swerde, to fall vpon the kyng of Edom: neuertheles they were not able. Then toke he his first sonne, which shulde haue bene kyng in his steade, and offred him for a burntofferynge vpon the wall. Then came there a greate wrath ouer Israel, that they departed from him, and turned agayne in to their londe.

The iiii. Chapter.

AND there cried a woman amōge the wyues of the prophetes children vnto Eliseus, and sayde: Thy seruauit my husbāde is deed, and thou knowest that thy seruauit feared the LORDE. Now commeth the man that he was detter vnto, and wyll take awaye both my children to be bonde seruauantes. Eliseus sayde vnto her: What shal I do for the? Tell me, what hast thou in the house? She sayde: Thy handmayden hath nothinge in the house but a pitcher with oyle. He sayde: Go thy waye, borowe without of all thy neighboures emptye vessels, ⁊ that not a fewe, and go in, and shut y dore behynde the with thy sonnes, and poure of it in to all y vessels: ⁊ whan thou hast fylled them, delyuer them forth.

She wente, and shut the dore vnto her with hir sonnes, which broughte her the vessels, and so she poured in. And whan the vessels were full, she sayde vnto hir sonne: Brynge me yet one vessell. He sayde vnto her: There is not one vessell more here. Then stode y oyle styll. And she sent, and tolde the man of God. He sayde: Go thy waye, sell the oyle, and paye the creditour: but lyue thou and thy sonnes of the resydue.

And it fortunēd at y same tyme, that Eliseus wente vnto Sunem. And there was a riche woman, which helde him to eate with her: ⁊ as he passed oft thorow y waye, he wēte in vnto her: ⁊ ate with her. And she sayde vnto hir huszbande: Beholde, I perceaue that this is an holy man of God, which goeth euer thorow this waye, let vs make hi a litle chamber of boordes, ⁊ set a bed, a table, a stole ⁊ a candelsticke therin, that whan he commeth vnto vs, he maye resorte thither.

And it fortunēd vpon a tyme, that he came in, ⁊ layed him downe in the chamber, ⁊ slepte therin. And he saide vnto Gehasi his childe: Call this womā of Sunem. And whā he had called her, she stode before him. He sayde vnto him: Speake thou vnto her, beholde, thou hast mynistrēd vnto vs in all these thinges, what shal I do for the? Hast thou eny matter to be spoken for to the kyng, or to the chefe captayne of the hoost? She sayde: I dwell amonge my people. He sayde: What hast thou then to do? Gehasi sayde: Alas, she hath no sonne, and hir husbāde is olde. He sayde: Call her. And whā he had called her, she stode at the dore. And he sayde: *Aboute this tyme yf ſ̄ frute can lyue, thou shalt embrace a sonne. She sayde: Alas, no my lorde, thou man of God, lye not vnto thy handmayden. And the woman conceaued, and bare a sonne aboute the same tyme, whā the frute coulde lyue, acordynge as Eliseus had sayde vnto her.

Ⓒ But whan ſ̄ childe was growne, it fortunēd, ſ̄ he wente forth to his father vnto the reapers, and sayde vnto his father: Oh my heade, my heade. He saide vnto his seruāūt: Bringē him to his mother. And he toke him, and broughte him to his mother: and she set him vpon hir lappe vntyll ſ̄ noone daye, and thē he dyed. And she wente vp, and layed him vpō the bed of the man of God, and shut the dore, and wēte forth, and called hir huszbande, and sayde vnto him: Take me one of the seruāutes, and an Asse, I wyl go quykly vnto the man of God, and come agayne. He sayde: Why wilt thou go vnto him? To daye is it nether new moone ner Sabbath. She sayde: Well. And she saddled the asse, and sayde to the yongman: dryue forth, and kepe me not bak with rydinge, and do as I byd the.

So she wente, and came to the man of God vnto mount Carmell. Whā the man of God sawe her ouer agaynst him, he sayde vnto his childe Gehasi: Beholde, the Sunamitisse is there, runne now and mete her, and axe her yf it go well with her, and hir huszbande and hir sonne. She sayde: Well. But whan she came to the man of God vpon ſ̄ mount, she helde him by his fete. And Gehasi stepte to her, to put her awaye. But ſ̄ man of God sayde: Let her alone, for hir soule is in heuynes, and the LORDE hath hyd it fro me, and not shewed it me. She sayde: Whan desyred I a sonne of my lorde? Sayde I not, ſ̄ thou shuldest not mocke me?

Ⓓ He sayde vnto Gehasi: Girde vp thy loynes, and take my staffe in thy hande, and go thy waye. †Yf eny man mete the, salute him not: and yf eny man salute the, thanke him not, and laye thou my staffe vpon ſ̄ childes face. But the childes mother sayde: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wyll not leaue the. Then gat he vp, and wente after her. As for Gehasi, he wente before them, and layed the staffe vpon the childes face, but there was nether voyce ner felynge. And he wente agayne to mete him, and shewed him, and sayde: The childe is not rysen vp.

And whan Eliseus came in to the house, beholde, ſ̄ childe laye deed vpō his bed. And he wēte in, and shut the dore on thē both, and made his prayer vnto the LORDE, and wente vp, and layed him selfe vpon the childe, and layed his mouth vpon the childes mouth, and his eyes vpon his eyes, and his handes vpon his handes, and so stretched him selfe forth vpon him, so ſ̄ the childes body was warme. And he rose vp, and wente in to the house once hither and thither, and wente vp, and layed him selfe a longe vpon him. Then neded the childe seuē tymes, and afterwarde the childe opened his eyes. And he cried vpon Gehasi, and sayde: Call the Sunamitisse. And whan he had called her, she came in vnto him. He sayde: Take there thy sonne. Then came she, and fell at his fete, and worshipped vnto the grounde, and toke hir sonne, and wente forth.

Ⓔ But whā Eliseus came againe vnto Gilgal, there was a dert in the londe, and the prophetes children dwelt before him, and he sayde vnto his seruāūt: Set on a greate pot, and make potage for the children of the prophetes. Then wente there one in to the fælde, to gather herbes, and founde a Cucumbers stalke, and gathered wyld Cucumbers therof his cotefull. And whan he came, he chopped it small for potage to the pott, for they knewe it not. And whā they poured it forth for the mē to eate, and they ate of ſ̄ potage, they cried and sayde: O thou man of God, death is in the pot: for they mighte not eate it. Neuertheles he sayde: Brynge meel hither. And he put it in the pot, and sayde: Poure it out for the people, that they maye eate. And then was it not bytter in the pot.

There came a man from Baal Salisa, and broughte the man of God bred of the first frutes, namely twentye barleye loaues, and new corne in his garment. But he sayde: Geue it vnto ſ̄ people, that they maye eate. His mynister sayde: †How shall I geue an hūdreth men of this? He sayde: Geue it vnto the people, that they maye eate. For thus sayeth the LORDE: They shal eate, and there shall be lefte ouer. And he set it before them, so that they ate, and there lefte ouer, accordinge to þy worde of the LORDE.

The b. Chapter.

NAAMAN the chefe captayne of the kyng of Syria, was an excellēt mā in the sighte of his lorde, and moch set by (for thorow him the LORDE gaue health vnto Syria) and he was a mightie man, but a leper. And there had men of warre fallen out of Syria, and caried awaye a litle damsel out of the londe of Israel: the same was in seruyce with Naamās wife, and sayde vnto hir mas-tresse: O that my master were with the prophet at Samaria, he wolde heale him from his leprosy.

Then wente he in to his lorde, and tolde him, and sayde: Thus and thus hath the damsel of the londe of Israel spoken. The kyng of Syria sayde: Go thy waye then, & I wil wrytte a letter vnto the kyng of Israel.

B And he wente, and toke with him ten hundred weighte of syluer, and sixe thousande gulden, & ten change of rayment, & broughte the letter vnto the kyng of Israel, with these wordes:

When this letter commeth vnto the, beholde, thou shalt vnderstonde þy I haue sent my seruauant Naaman vnto the, that thou mayest heale him of his leprosy.

And when the kyng of Israel red the letter, he rente his clothes, & sayde: Am I God then, that I can kyll and quykē agayne, þy he sendeth vnto me, to heale the man fro his leprosy? Considre and se, how he seketh an occasion vnto me.

When Eliseus the man of God herde, þy the kyng of Israel had rente his clothes, he sent vnto him, sayenge: Why hast thou rente thy clothes? Let him come to me, that he maye knowe, þy there is a prophet in Israel.

C So Naaman came with horses and charettes, and helde still at the dore of Eliseus house. Then sent Eliseus a messaunger vnto him, sayenge: Go thy waye, and waszshe the seven tymes in Iordane, so shal thy flesh be restored the agayne, & be censed. Then was Naaman wroth, & wente his waye, & sayde: I thoughte he shulde haue come forth vnto me, & to haue stōde here & to haue called vpō the name of the LORDE his God, & to haue touched the place with his hande, & so to haue put awaye the leprosy. Are not þy waters of Amara and Pharphar at Damascon better then all the waters in Israel, þy I might waszshe me therin & be cleded? and he turned him, and wētē his waye in displeasure. Then his seruauentes gat thē to him, and sayde: Father, yf the prophet had cōmaunded the eny greate thinge, shuldest thou not haue done it? moch more thē yf he saye vnto the: Waszshe the, & thou shalt be cleane. Then wētē he downe, & waszshed him selfe in Iordane seuē tymes (as the man of God sayde) & his flesh was restored him agayne, euen as the flesh of a yonge childe * and he was censed.

And he turned agayne to þy man of God D with all his armye. And whan he came in, he stode before him, and sayde: Beholde, I knowe that in all londes there is no God, but in Israel. Take now therfore this blessinge I praye the of thy seruauant. Neuertheles he sayde: †As truly as the LORDE lyueth, before whom I stonde, I wil not take it. And he wolde nedes haue him to take it, but he wolde not. Then sayde Naaman: Mighte there not a burthē of this earth be geuē vnto thy seruauant, as moch as two Mules maye beare? For thy seruauant wyll nomore do sacrifice and offer burntofferynges vnto other goddes, but vnto the LORDE, That the LORDE maye be gracious vnto thy seruauant, yf I worshippe in the house of Rimmon, whā my lorde goeth there in to þy house to worshippe, & leaneth vpon my hande. He sayde vnto him: Go thy waye in peace.

And as he was gone from him a felde bredth in the londe, Gehasi the seruauant of Eliseus þy man of God thoughte: beholde, my lorde hath spared Naamā this Syrian, so that he hath not taken from him þy which he broughte: As truly as þy LORDE lyueth, I wil rūne after him, & take somthinge of him.

E So Gehasi folowed Naaman. And whā Naaman sawe þy he ranne after him, he lighte downe from the charet to mete him, & sayde: Are all thinges well? He sayde: Yee. But my lorde hath sent me, & caused to saye vnto the: Beholde, there are now come to me fro mount Ephraim two yonge men of the prophetes childrē, geue them a talēte of siluer (I praye the) & two change of rayment. Naamā saide: Go to, take two talētes. And he cōpelled him, ⁊ bande two talentes in two bagges, and two chaunge of rayment, and delyuered it vnto two of his seruantes, which bare it before him. And whan he came in ſ̄ darcke, he toke it from their handes, ⁊ layed it a syde in the house, ⁊ let the men go.

And whan they were gone their waye, he stode before his lorde. And Eliseus sayde vnto him: Whence comest thou Gehazi? He sayde: Thy seruaunt wente nether hither ner thither. But he sayde vnto him: Wente not my hert with the, whan the man turned backe from his charet to mete the? Now thou hast takē the syluer ⁊ the rayment, olyue trees, vynyardes, shepe, oxen, seruantes ⁊ maydens. But the leprosy of Naaman shal cleue vnto the ⁊ to thy sede for euer. *Then wēte he forth from him leporous as snowe.

The vi. Chapter.

THE children of ſ̄ prophetes sayde vnto Eliseus: Beholde, the place where we dwell before ſ̄, is to narrow for vs, let vs go vnto Iordane, ⁊ euery one fetch tymbre there, ſ̄ we maye there buylde vs a place to dwell in. He saide: Go youre waye. And one sayde: Go to then, ⁊ come with thy seruantes. He sayde: I wil go with you. And he wēte with them. And whan they came to Iordane, they hewed downe tymbre. And as one was fellynge downe a tre, the yron fell in to the water, and he cried and sayde: Alas my lorde, ⁊ it is burowed. But the man of God sayde: Where fell it in? And whan he had shewed him the place, he cut downe a sticke, and thrust it in there. Then swāme the yron. And he sayde: Take it vp. So he put forth his hande, and toke it.

B And the kyng of Syria warred agaynst Israel, and toke counsell at his seruantes, and sayde: There ⁊ there will we lye. But the man of God sent to ſ̄ kyng of Israel, sayenge: Bewarre ſ̄ thou go not vnto that place, for the Syrians rest there. So the kyng of Israel sent vnto ſ̄ place wherof ſ̄ man of God tolde him, ⁊ kepte it, ⁊ helde watch there, ⁊ dyd that not once or twyse only.

C Thē was ſ̄ kyng of Syrias herte vexed therefore, and called his seruantes, and sayde vnto them: Wyll ye not tell me, which of oure men is fled vnto the kyng of Israel?

Then sayde one of his seruantes: Not so my lorde O kyng, but Eliseus the prophet in Israel telleth the kyng of Israel all that thou speakest in thy chamber where thou lyst. He sayde: Go youre waye thē and loke where he is, that I maye sende, and cause him be fetched. And they shewed him and sayde: Beholde, he is at Dothan. Thē sent he thither horses ⁊ charettes, ⁊ a greate power. And whā they came thither by nighte, they compassed the cite aboute. And the mynister of the mā of God arose early to get him vp. And as he wēte forth, beholde, there laye an hoost of men aboute ſ̄ cite with horses and charettes.

Then saide his childe vnto him: Alas syr, how wyll we now do? He sayde: †Feare not, for there are mo of them ſ̄ are with vs, then of those that are with them. And Eliseus prayed ⁊ sayde: LORDE open his eyes, ſ̄ he maye se. Then the LORDE opened ſ̄ childes eyes, ſ̄ he sawe, ⁊ beholde, ſ̄ mount was full of fyrie horses ⁊ charettes rōude aboute Eliseus. And whā they came downe vnto him, Eliseus made his prayer, ⁊ sayde: LORDE smyte this people with blyndnes. †And he smote thē with blyndnes accordinge to the worde of Eliseus. And Eliseus saide vnto them: This is not ſ̄ waye nor the cite, folowe me, I wil brynge you to the man whom ye seke. And he broughte them vnto Samaria.

And whan they came to Samaria, Eliseus sayde: LORDE open these mens eyes, ſ̄ they maye se. And the LORDE opened their eyes, ſ̄ they sawe, ⁊ beholde, they were in the myddes of Samaria. And whan the kyng of Israel sawe them, he saide vnto Eliseus: My father, shal I smyte thē? He saide: Thou shalt not smyte thē: loke whom thou takest with thy swerde and bowe, smyte those. Set bred and water before them, that they maye eate and drynke, and let them departe vnto their lorde. Thē was there a greate dyner prepared. And whan they had eaten and drunken, he let them go to departe vnto their lorde. From that tyme forth came the men of warre of the Syrians nomore in to the londe of Israel.

After this it fortuneth, that Benadab the kyng of Syria gathered all his hoost, and wēte vp, ⁊ layed sege vnto Samaria: ⁊ there was a greate derth at Samaria. But they layed sege to the cite so longe, tyll an Asses heade was worth foure score syluer pēs, and the fourth parte of a *Cab of doues donge worth fyue syluer pens. And whan the kyng of Israel wente vnto the wall, a woman cried vnto him and sayde: Helpe me my lorde O kyng. He sayde: Yf the LORDE helpe the not, wherwith shal I helpe the? with fy barne or with the wyne presse? And the kyng sayde vnto her: What ayleth y? She sayde: This woman sayde vnto me: Geue vs thy sonne, that we maye eate him, tomorrow wyll we eate my sonne. So we sod my sonne, & haue eaten him, and I sayde vnto her on fy thirde daye: Geue vs thy sonne and let vs eate him, but she hath hyd him awaye.

Whan the kyng herde the womans wordes, he rente his clothes, whyle he was goynge to the wall. Thē sawe all the people, that he had a sack cloth vnder vpon his body. And he sayde: † God do this and that vnto me, yf the heade of Eliseus the sonne of Saphat shal this daye stonde vpon him. As for Eliseus, he sat in his house, & the Elders sat by him. And he sent a man before him, but or euer the messaunger came to him, he sayde vnto fy Elders: Haue ye not sene how this childe of murthure hath sent hither, to take awaye my heade? Take hede, whan the messaunger cometh, y ye holde him at the dore. Beholde, fy noyse of his lordes fete foloweth him. Whyle he was thus talkynge with them, beholde, fy messaunger came to him, & sayde: Beholde, this euell cometh of fy LORDE, and what more shal I loke for of the LORDE?

The viij. Chapter.

ELISEUS sayde: Heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: † Tomorrow aboute this tyme shal a buszshel of fyne meel be solde for one Sycele, and two buszshels of barley for one Sycele vnder the porte of Samaria. Then a knyghte (vpon whose hande the kyng leaned) answered the mā of God, and sayde: And though the LORDE made wyndowes in heauē, how coulde soch a thinge come to passe? He saide: Beholde, thou shalt se it with thine eyes, & shalt not eate thereof.

And there were foure leporous men at fy dore before the porte, and one sayde vnto another: Why tary we here whyle we dye? Though we thoughte to come in to the cite, yet is there derth in fy cite, and there shulde we be fayne to dye. And yf we tary here, we must dye also. Let vs go now, and flye vnto the hoost of the Syrians. Yf they let vs lyue, we shall lyue: yf they slaye vs, then are we deed. And so they gat them vp early, to come vnto the hoost of the Syrians. And whan they came to the vttemost ende of fy tentes, beholde, there was no body.

§ For the LORDE had made the Syrians to heare a noyse of horses, charettes, and of a mightie greate hoost, so that they sayde one to another amonge thē selues: Beholde, the kyng of Israel hath hyred the kyng of the Hethites, and the kyng of the Egipcians agaynst vs, to come vpō vs. And they gat them vp, and fled early in the twylyght, and lefte their bothes, and horses and Asses in the tentes as they stode, & fled euery man where he mighte saue his life.

Now whan the lepers came to the place of the tentes, they wente in to the tentes, ate and dronke, and toke syluer, golde and rayment, and wente and hyd it: & came agayne & entred in to another tent, and toke therout, and wente and hyd it. But one of them saide vnto another: Let vs not do thus, this daye is a daye of good tidynges. Yf we kepe this secrete and byde tyll the lighte mornynge, oure trespace wyl be founde out. Let vs go now therfore, that we maye come, & tell the kynges house.

And whan they came, they cried at the porte of the cite, and tolde them, and sayde: We came to the tentes of the Sirians, and beholde, there is no mā there, nether yet eny mans voyce, but horses and asses bounde, and the bothes as they stonde. Then cried fy porters and tolde it within in fy kynges house. And the kyng arose in the nighte, & sayde vnto his seruantes: I will tell you how fy Syrians deale with vs: they knowe y we suffer hunger, and are gone out of the tētes, to hyde them selues in the felde, and thynke thus: whan they go out of the cite, we wyll take them alyue, & come in to the cite. Then answered one of his seruantes, and sayde: Let vs take the fyue horses that remayne, which yet are lefte in the cite (beholde, these are left therein for all fy multitude in Israel, which is destroyed) let vs sende these and se. Thē toke they two charettes with y horses. And the kynge sent them vnto the tentes of the Syrians, and sayde: Go youre waye and se.

D And when they wente after thē vnto Iordane, beholde, the waye laye full of garments and vessels, which the Syrians had cast from thē, whyle they made haist. And whan the messaungers came agayne, and tolde the kynge, the people wente forth, and spoyled the tentes of the Syrians. And a buszshel of fyne meell was solde for a Sycele, and two buszshels of barlye for a Sycele also, *acordinge to the worde of the LORDE. But the kynge appoynted the knyghte (vpon whose hande he leened) to be at the gate, & the people trode vpon him, so that he dyed, euen as the man of God sayde, whan the kynge came downe vnto him. And it came to passe euen as y man of God tolde the kynge, whā he sayde: Tomorrow aboute this tyme shall two buszshels of barlye be solde for one Sycele, and a buszshel of fyne meel for one Sycele vnder the gate at Samaria. And the knyghte answered the man of God, and sayde: Beholde, though y LORDE made wyndowes in heauen, how coulede soch a thinge come to passe? Neuertheles he sayde: Beholde, with thine eyes shalt thou se it, and shalt not eate therof. And euen so fortunēd it vnto him, for the people trode vpon him in the gate, y he dyed.

The viij. Chapter.

A ELISEUS spake vnto the womā, † whose sonne he had restored vnto life agayne, and saide: Get the vp, & go with thine housholde, and be a straunger where thou canst: for the LORDE shall call for a derth, which shal come in to the londe seuen yere lōge. The woman gat her vp, and dyd as the man of God sayde, & wente with hir housholde, and was a straunger in the londe of the Philistynes seuen yere. But whan the seuen yeaues were ended, the woman came agayne out of the Philistynes lōde, and wente forth to crye vpon the kynge for hir house and londe. The kynge spake vnto Gehasi the seruaunt of the man of God, & sayde: Tell me all the greates actes that Eliseus hath done. And whyle he was tellynge the kynge how he had made one that was deed, to lyue agayne, beholde, the woman whose sonne he had caused to reuyue, came euen in the meane season, and cried vnto the kynge for hir house and londe. Then sayde Gehasi: My lord O kynge, this same is the womā, and this is hir sonne, whom Eliseus restored vnto life agayne. And the kynge axed y woman, and she tolde him. Then the kynge delyuered her a chamberlayne, & saide: Restore her agayne all that is hers, and all the increase of the londe, sence the tyme that she lefte the londe vntyll now.

† And Eliseus came to Damascon, & Benadab the kynge of Syria laye sicke. And it was tolde him, and sayde: The man of God is come hither. Then sayde the kynge vnto Hasael: Take giftes with the, & go mete the man of God, and axe counsell at y LORDE by him, and saye: Maye I recouer from this sicknesse? Hasael wente for to mete him, and toke rewardes with him, and of all the goodes at Damascon, as moch as fortye Camels might beare. And whan he came, he stode before him, and sayde: Thy sonne Benadab the kynge of Syria hath sent me vnto the, sayenge: Maye I recouer from this sicknes?

Eliseus sayde vnto him: Go thy waye and tell him: Thou shalt recouer. But the LORDE hath shewed me, y he shal dye y death. And the man of God loked earnestly, & made a troublous countenance, & wepte. Thē sayde Hasael: Wherefore wepeth my lord? He sayde: I knowe what euell thou shalt do vnto the children of Israel. Thou shalt burne their stronge cities with fyre, and slaye their yonge men with the swerde, and kylle their yonge children, and ryppe vp their women with childe.

Hasael sayde: How so, is thy seruauant a dogg, that he shulde do soch a greates thyng? Eliseus saide: y The LORDE hath shewed me, y thou shalt be kynge of Syria. And he wēte his waye from Eliseus, & came to his lord, which saide vnto him: What saieth Eliseus vnto the? He sayde: He tolde me, Thou shalt recouer. But on the nexte daye he toke y bed couerynge, and dypte it in water, and spred it ouer hin, and he dyed, & Hasael was kynge in his steade.

In the fyfth yere of Ioram the sonne of Achab kynge of Israel, was Ioram y sonne of Iosaphat kynge of Iuda. ¶ Two & thirtie Neuertheles the LORDE wolde not destroye Iuda for his seruauunt Dauids sake, *as he promysed him, to geue him euer a lanterne amōge his childrē.

What more there is to saye of Ioram, †all †ſ he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And Ioram fell on slepe with his fathers, †was buried with his fathers in †ſ cite of Dauid, †† Ochosias his sonne was kyngye in his steade.

In the twolueth yeare of Ioram the sonne of Achab kyngye of Israel, was Ochosias †ſ sonne of Ioram kyngye in Iuda. Two and twenty yeare olde was Ochosias whan he was made kyngye, and reigned one yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Atalia the daughter of Amri kyngye of Israel, †he walked in the waye of the house of Achab, †dyd that which was euell in the syght of †ſ LORDE, euen as dyd the house of Achab: for he was sonne in lawe in the house of Achab. And he wente with Ioram the sonne of Achab in to the battayll agaynst Hasael †ſ kyngye of Syria vnto Ramoth in Gilead, but †ſ Syrians smote Ioram. †Then Ioram the kyngye turned backe, to be healed at Iesreel of †ſ woundes, wherwith the Syrians had wounded him at Ramoth, whā he foughte with Hasael kyngye of Syria. And Ochosyas †ſ sonne of Iorā kyngye of Iuda, came downe to viset Ioram the sonne of Achab at Iesreel, for he laye sicke.

The ix. Chapter.

oyle with the, and go vnto Ramoth in Gilead: and whā thou comest thither, thou shalt se there one Iehu, †ſ sonne of Iosaphat the sonne of Nimsi, and go in, and byd him stonde vp amonge his brethren, and bryngye him in to the ynnmost chamber, †take thou †ſ cruse of oyle, and poure it vpon his heade, †saye: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I haue anointed the to be kyngye ouer Israel: †thou shalt open the dore, and flye, and not tary. And the prophetes yonge man, the childe wente his waye vnto Ramoth in Gilead. And whan he came in, beholde, the captaynes of the hoost sat there, and he sayde: I haue somewhat to saye vnto the O captayne. Iehu saide: Vnto whom amonge vs all? He sayde: Euen vnto the o captayne.

Then stode he vp, and wente in. B So he poured the oyle vpon his heade, and sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: I haue anoynted †ſ to be kyngye ouer the LORDES people of Israel, †and thou shalt synyte thy lorde Achabs house, that I maye auenge the bloude of my seruauentes the prophetes, and the bloude of all the LORDES seruauentes, from the hande of Iesabel, that all the house of Achab maye periszshe. And I wyl rote out from Achab, †euen him that maketh water agaynst the wall, and the closed vp and the desolate in Israel: and the house of Achab wyl I make euen as the house of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, and as the house of Baesa the sonne of Ahia, and †ſ dogges †shall eate vp Iesabel vpon the felde at Iesrael, and noman shall burye her. And he opened the dore, and fled.

And whā Iehu came forth to his lordes C seruauentes, they saide vnto him: Are all things well? Wherefore came this madd felowe vnto the? He saide vnto them: Ye knowe the man well, †what he hath spoken. They sayde: That is not true, but tell thou vs. He sayde: Thus and thus hath he spoken vnto me, and sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I haue anoynted the to be kyngye ouer Israel. Then made they haist, and euery one toke his garment and laied them vnder him in maner of a iudges seate, and blew the trompet, and sayde: Iehu is made kyngye. So Iehu the sonne of Iosaphat the sonne of Nimsi, made a confederacion agaynst Ioram. As for Iorā he laye before Ramoth in Gilcad with all Israel agaynst Hasael the kynge of Syria. *But Ioram the kynge was turned backe, y he might be healed of the woundes wherewith the Syrians had wounded him, whā he foughte with Hasael the kynge of the Syrians.

D And Iehu sayde: Yf it be youre mynde, there shall noman escape out of the cite, to go and tell it at Iesrael. And he rode, and departed vnto Iesrael: for Ioram laye there, and Ochosias the kinge of Iuda was come downe to vyset Ioram. But the watchman that stode vpon the tower at Iesrael, sawe the company of Iehu commynge, and sayde: I se a company. Then sayde Ioram: Take a charet, and sende to mete thē, and saye: Is it peace? And the charetman rode to mete them, and sayde: Thus sayeth the kynge: Is it peace? Iehu sayde: What hast thou to do with peace? Turne the behynde me. The watchman tolde it, and sayde: The messaunger is come vnto them, and cometh not agayne. Then sent he another charetman, which whan he came to them, saide: Thus sayeth the kynge: Is it peace? Iehu sayde: What hast thou to do with peace? Turne y behynde me.

35 And the watchman tolde it, and sayde: He is come to them: and commeth not agayne, and the goynge is as it were the goynge of Iehu the sonne of Nimsi: for he dryueth on as he were mad. Then sayde Ioram: Binde the charet fast. And they bounde the charet, and so they wente forth, Ioram the kynge of Israel, and Ochosias the kynge of Iuda, euery one vpon his charet, to mete Iehu. And they founde him vpon the felde of Naboth the Iesraelite. And whan Ioram sawe Iehu, he sayde: Iehu, is it peace? But he sayde: What peace? The whordome and witchcraft of thy mother Iesabel is not yet come to an ende.

Then turned Ioram his hande and fled, and sayde vnto Ochosias: There is treason Ochosias. But Iehu toke his bowe, and shot Ioram betwene the armes, that the arrowe wente thorow his hert, and he fell downe in his charet. And Iehu sayde vnto Bidekar the knyghte: Take and cast him in the pece of londe of Naboth the Iesraelite: for I remembre sence thou rodest with me in a charet after Achab his father, that the LORDE JF wolde laye this heuy burthen vpon him. I holde (sayde the LORDE) I wyl recompence the y bloude of Naboth and of his childrē, euen in this pece of londe. Take him now and cast him in to that pece of londe, †acordynge to the worde of the LORDE.

Whan Ochosias the kinge of Iuda sawe this, he fled by the waie vnto y garden house. But Iehu folowed after him, and commaunded to smyte him also vpon his charet in the goynge vp towarde Gur, which lieth by Ieblaam: and he fled vnto Megiddo, and dyed there. And his seruantes caused him to be caried vnto Ierusalem, and there they buryed him in his awne graue with his fathers in the cite of Dauid. Ochosias reigned ouer Iuda in y eleuenth yere of Iorā y sonne of Achab. And whan Iehu came to Iesrael, and Iesabel herde therof, she coloured hir face, and decked hir head, and lokod out at the wyndowe. And whan Iehu came vnder the gate, she sayde: †Prospered Symri well that slewe his lorde?

And he lifte vp his face to the wyndow, and sayde: Who is with me? Then resorted there two or thre chamberlaynes vnto him. He sayde: Cast her downe headlinges. And they cast her downe headlynges, so that y wall and the horses were sprenkled with hir bloude, and she was troddē vnder fete. And whan he came in, and had eaten and drunken, he sayde: Loke vpon yonder cursed woman, and burye her, y for she is a kynges daughter. Neuertheles whan they wente in to burye her, they founde nothings of her, but the szkull and the fete, and the palmes of her handes. And they came agayne and broughte him worde. He saide: This is euen it that the LORDE spake by his seruauant Elias the Thesbite, and sayde: †In the felde of Iesrael shal the dogges eate Iesabels flesh. So the deed carcase of Iesabel became euen as donge in the felde of Iesrael, so y a man coule not saye: This is Iesabel.

The x. Chapter.

A CHAB had thre score and ten sonnes A at Samaria. †And Iehu wrote a letter, and sent it to Samaria, vnto the rulers of the cite Iesrael, euen vnto the Elders, and to Achabs tuters, sayenge these wordes: Whan this letter commeth vnto you with whom are youre lordes sonnes, charettes, horses, stronge cities, ⁊ ordynance, loke which is the best and most righteous amonge youre lordes sonnes, ⁊ set him vpon his fathers seate, and fighte for youre lordes house.

Neuertheles they were sore afrayed, and sayde: Beholde, two kynges were not able to stonde before him, how wyl we then endure? And they that were ouer the house and ouer the cite, and the Elders and tuters sent vnto Iehu, sayge: We are thy seruantes, we wyl do all that thou sayest vnto vs: We wil make no man kyng, do thou what pleaseth the. Then wrote he the seconde letter vnto them with these wordes: Yf ye be myne, and herken vnto my voyce, then take the heades of the men youre lordes sonnes, and brynge me them tomorow by this tyme vnto Iesrael.

B The kynges sonnes were thre score men and ten, and fy chiefe men of the cite broughte the v. Now when this letter came they toke the kynges sonnes, and slewe them euen thre score men and ten, and layed their heades in baszkettes, and sent them to him vnto Iesrael. And whan the messaunger came, ⁊ tolde him, and sayde: They haue broughte the heades of the kynges children, he sayde: Laye them vpon two heapes at the dore of the porte tyll tomorow.

And on the morow whan he wente forth, he stode, and sayde vnto all the people: Are ye righteous? Beholde, I haue made an apoyntmēt against my lorde, and slayne him, who hath slayne all these then? Vnderstonde ye now therfore, that there is not fallen vpon the earth one worde of the LORDE, which he spake agaynst the house of Achab: and the LORDE hath done, euen * as he sayde by his seruauant Elias. So Iehu smote all the remnaunt of the house of Achab at Iesrael, all his greate men, his kynfolkes, and his prestes, tyll there was not one lefte ouer. And he gat him vp, wente his waye, and came to Samaria.

C By the waye there was a shepherdes house, where Iehu founde the brethren of Ochosias kyng of Iuda, and sayde: Whence are ye? They sayde: We are Ochosias brethren, and are gonyng downe to salute the kynges children, and the quenes children. He sayde: Take them alyue. And they toke them alyue, and slewe them by the welles syde at the shepherdes house, euen two and fortye men, and let not one of them remayne.

* 3 Re. 21. c.    † Ier. 35. a.

And whan he wente from thence, he foude Ionadab fy sonne of Rechab, which met him, ⁊ saluted him. And he sayde vnto him: Is thyne hert righte, as myne hert is with thyne hert? Ionadab sayde: Yee. Yf it be so (sayde he) then geue me thy hande. And he gaue him his hande. And so he caused him to syt besyde him in the charet, and saide: Come with me, and se my zele for the LORDE. And they caryed him with him vpon his charet. And whan he came to Samaria, he smote all that remayned of Achab at Samaria, tyll he had destroyed him, acordynge to the worde of the LORDE, ⁊ which he spake vnto Elias.

And Iehu gathered all the people together, and saide vnto them: Achab did Baal but litle seruyce, Iehu wyl serue him better. Call vnto me now therfore all Baals prophetes, all his seruantes and all his prestes, that there be none wantynge, for I haue a greate sacrifice to do vnto Baal. Who so euer is myssed, shal not lyue. But Iehu dyd it craftely, that he mighte destroye all the mynisters of Baal. And Iehu sayde: Sanctifie fy feast vnto Baal, and proclame it. And Iehu sent in to all Iesrael, and caused all Baals ministers to come, so that there was nomā lefte behynde, which came not. And they came in to Baals house, so that the house of Baal was full from one corner to another.

Then sayde he vnto him that had the rule of the vestrye: Brynge forth rayment for all Baals mynisters. And he broughte forth the rayment. And Iehu wente in to Baals house with Ionadab the sonne of Rechab, and sayde vnto Baals mynisters: Search and se that there be not here anōge you eny mynyster of the LORDE, but onely Baals mynisters.

And whan they came in to offer sacrifices and burntofferynges, Iehu appoynted him foure score men without, ⁊ sayde: Yf eny of these men escape whom I delyuer vnder youre handes, then shal the same mans soule be for his soule. Now whā he had made an ende of the burntofferynge, Iehu sayde vnto the fote-men and knyghtes: Go in, ⁊ smyte euery man, let noman go forth. And they smote thē with the edge of the swerde. And the fote men and knyghtes threw thē awaie and wēte vnto the cite of Baals house, and brought forth the piler in fy house of Baal, and brent it, and brake downe Baals pyler with the house of Baal, and made a preuy house therof vnto this daie. Thus Iehu destroyed Baal out of Israel. But Iehu lefte not of from the synnes of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat (which caused Israel to synne) namely, from the golden calues at Bethel and at Dan. And the LORDE sayde vnto Iehu: Because thou hast bene wyllinge to do that which was righte in my sighte, & hast done vnto Achabs house all that was in my hert, *therfore shall thy children syt vpon y seate of Israel vnto the fourth generacion.

f Neuerthelesse Iehu was not diligent to walke in the lawe of the LORDE God of Israel with all his hert: for he lefte not of fro the synnes of Ieroboam which made Israel to synne. At the same tyme beganne the LORDE to be greued at Israel. †For Hasael smote them in all the borders of Israel from Iordane Eastwarde, and all the londe Gilead of the Gaddites, Rubenites and Manassytes, from Aroer that lyeth on the ryuer by Arnon, and Gilead and Basan.

What more there is to saye of Iehu, and all that he dyd, and all his power, beholde, it is wryten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Iehu fell on slepe with his fathers, & they buried him in Samaria. And Ioahas his sonne was kyng in his steade. The tyme that Iehu reigned ouer Israel, is eight and twentye yeares at Samaria.

The xi. Chapter.

ATHALIA the mother of Ochosias, whā she sawe that hir sonne was deed, *gat her vp, and destroyed all the kynges sede. But Ioseba kynges Iorams doughter the syster of Ochosias, toke Ioas the sonne of Ochosias and stale him awaye with his nurse in the chamber from amonge the kynges children which were slayne, and she hyd him from Athalia, so that he was not slayne. And he was hyd with her in the house of the LORDE sixe yeares. But Athalia was quene in the londe.

Neuertheles in the seuenth yeare sent Ioiada, and toke the rulers ouer hūdrds with the captaynes and fote men, and caused thē to come to him in to the house of the LORDE and made a couenaunt with them, and toke an oath of them in the house of the LORDE, and shewed them the kynges sonne, and comāunded them, and sayde: This is it that ye shall do: One thirde parte of you which enter on the Sabbath, shall kepe the watch in the kynges house, and one thyrd part shall be at the porte of Sur, and one thirde parte shall be at y porte which is behynde the fote men, and ye shal kepe the watch at the house of Massa. But two partes of you all that go of on the Sabbath, shal kepe the watch in the house of the LORDE aboute the kinge and ye shall get you rounde aboute y kyng and euery one with his weapen in his hande: and who so euer cōmeth within y wall, let him die, so that ye be with the kinge, whā he goeth out and in.

And the rulers ouer the hundreds dyd all as Ioiada the prest had comāunded them, and toke vnto them their men which entred vpon the Sabbath, with those that wente of on the Sabbath, and came to Ioiada y prest. And the prest gaue the captaynes speares and shyldes which had bene kynges Dauids, and were in the house of the LORDE. And the fote men stode aboute the kyng, euery one with his weapen in his hande, fro the corner on the righte syde of the house vnto the corner of the lefte syde, euen vnto the altare and to the house. And he broughte forth the kynges sonne, and set a crowne vpon his heade, and toke the † witnes, and made him kyng, and they were glad, and clapped their handes together, and sayde: God saue the kyng.

And whan Athalia herde the noyse of the people that ranne together, she came to the people in to the house of the LORDE, and loked, and beholde, the kyng stode by the piler, as the vse was, and the syngers and trōpettes by the kyng: and all the people of y lōde were glad, and blew with trompettes. But Athalia rente hir clothes, & sayde: Vproure, vproure. Neuertheles Ioiada y prest comāunded y rulers ouer hundreds, which were appointed ouer the hoost, and saide vnto them: Brynge her without the wall, and whosoever foloweth hir, let him dye of the swerde (for the prest had sayde, that she shulde not dye in the house of the LORDE.) And they layde handes vpo her, and she wente in by the waye where the horses go in to y kynges house, and there was she slayne.

Then made Ioiada a couenaunt betwene the LORDE and the kyng, and the people, y they shulde be the people of the LORDE. Likewyse also betwixte the kyng and þe people. Then wente all the people of the londe in to the house of Baal, and brake downe his altares, and destroyed his ymages right well. And Mathan the prest of Baal slewe they before the altare: And the prest appoynted the officers in the house of the LORDE, and toke the rulers ouer hundreds, and the captaynes, and the fote men, and all þe people of the londe, and broughte the kyng downe from the house of the LORDE, and came the waye from the porte of the fote men vnto the kynges house, and he sat vpon the kynges seate. And all the people of the lode were glad, and the cite was at rest. As for Athalia, they slewe her with the swerde in þe kynges house. And Ioas was seuen yeare olde, whan he was made kyng.

The xij. Chapter.

IN the seuēth yeare of Iehu, was Ioas made kyng,* and reigned fortye yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Zibea of Bersaba. And Ioas dyd that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE, as long as Ioiaa þe prest taught him. But they put not downe þe hye places: for the people offred and brent incense yet vpon the hye places.

And Ioas sayde vnto the prestes: All the money that is sanctified to be bestowed vpon þe house of the LORDE, namely the money þe euery man geueth vnto the treasury, and þe money that euery man geueth for his soule, and all the money that euery man geueth of a fre hert, to be bestowed on the house of the LORDE, let the prestes take it vnto them, euery one his porcion: with that shall they repayre the decaye in the house of the LORDE, where they fynde that there is eny decaye.

But whan þe prestes repayed not the decaye in the house vnto the thre and twētieth yeare of kyng Ioas, Ioas the kyng called Ioiaa the prest with the other prestes, and sayde vnto them: Wherefore do ye not repayre the decaye in the house?

33 Therefore shall ye not take the money vnto you now euery one his porcion, but shall geue it to the decaye of the house. And the prestes agreed to take no money of the people, and to repayre the decaye of the house.

Then Ioiaa the prest toke a chest, and bored an hole aboue therin, and set it on the righte hande besyde the altare, at the entrynge in to the house of the LORDE. And the prestes that kepte the thresholde, put all the money therin that was broughte vnto the house of the LORDE. Whan they sawe then that there was moch money in the chest,* þe kynges scribe came vp with the hye prest, and bounde the money together, and tolde it as moch as was founde in the house of the LORDE. And so the ready money was geuen vnto them that wrought and were appoynted to the house of the LORDE, and they gaue it forth to the carpenters and to the that buylded and wroughte in the house of the LORDE, namely, to the dawbers and masons, and to them that boughte tymber and fre stone, to repayre the decaye in the house of the LORDE and all that they founde to haue nede of repayinge in the house.

Howbeit there were no syluer chargers, flat peces, basens, trompettes, ner eny other vessell of golde and syluer made on the house of the LORDE, of the money that was brought vnto the LORDES house: but it was geuen vnto the workmen to repayre the decaye in the house of the LORDE therewith. The men also that the money was deliuered vnto, for to geue the workmen, neded not to make eny acomptes, but did their busynes vpon credence. But the money of trespass offerynges and synneofferynges was not broughte vnto the house of the LORDE: for it was the prestes.

At the same tyme wente Hasael the kyng of Syria vp, and foughte agaynst Gath, and wanne it. And whan Hasael set his face to go vp to Ierusalem, kyng Ioas toke all that was sanctified, which his fathers Iosaphat, Ioram and Ochosias the kynges of Iuda had halowed, and what he himselfe had sanctified, and all the golde that was founde in the treasures of the house of the LORDE, and in the kynges house, and sent it vnto Hasael the kyng of Syria. And so he departed from Ierusalem.

What more there is to saye of Ioas, and all that he dyd, it is written in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And his seruantes made insurreccion and conspyred, and smote him in the house of Millo, at the goynge

The xiiij. Chapter.

IN  $\bar{\text{y}}$  XXXIII. yeare of Ioas the sonne of Ochosias kyng of Iuda, was Ioahas the sonne of Iehu kyng ouer Israel at Samaria, seuentene yeare:  $\bar{\alpha}$  dyd  $\bar{\text{y}}$  which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE, and walked after the synnes of Ieroboam  $\bar{\text{y}}$  sonne of Nebat (which caused Israel to synne) and leste not of from them. And  $\bar{\text{y}}$  wrath of the LORDE waxed whote vpon Israel,  $\bar{\alpha}$  he deliuered them ouer vnder the hande of Hasael kyng of Syria, and vnder the hande of Benadad the sonne of Hasael, as long as they lyued.

And Ioahas besoughte the face of the LORDE. And the LORDE herde him, for he considered the myserie of Israel, how the kyng of Syria oppressed them. And  $\bar{\text{y}}$  LORDE gaue Israel a sauoure, which broughte them out of the power of the Syrians, so  $\bar{\text{y}}$  the children of Israel dwelt in their tentes, like as afore tyme.

Yet leste they not from the synnes of the house of Ieroboam, which caused Israel to synne, but walked in them. The groue at Samaria stode styll also. For of the people of Ioahas there were no mo leste, but fyfte horsmen, ten charettes, and ten thousande fote men: * for the kyng of Syria had destroyed them, and made them as the dust in the barne.

What more there is to saye of Ioahas, and all that he dyd, and his power, beholde, it is written in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Ioahas fell on slepe with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria,  $\bar{\alpha}$  Ioas his sonne was kyng in his steade.

In the seven and thirtieth yeare of Ioas kyng of Iuda, was Ioas the sonne of Ioahas kyng ouer Israel at Samaria sixtene yeare. And he dyd that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE, and departed not from all the synnes of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, which made Israel for to synne, but walked in them. What more there is to saye of Ioas, and what he dyd,  $\bar{\alpha}$  his power, how he foughte with Amasias kyng of Iuda, beholde, it is written in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Ioas fell on slepe with his fathers, and Ieroboam sat vpō his seate. And Ioas was buried in Samaria with the kynges of Israel.

As for Eliseus, he fell in to a sicknes, wherof he dyed. And Ioas the kyng of Israel came downe vnto him, and wepte for him, and saide: † My father, my father, the charet man of Israel, and his horsmen. Eliseus sayde vnto him: Take the bowe and the arowes. And whan he had taken the bowe and the arowes, he sayde vnto the kyng of Israel: Bende the bowe with thine hande. And he bent it with his hāde. And Eliseus layed his hande vpon the kynges hande, and sayde: Open that wyndowe towarde the East. And he opened it. And Eliseus saide: Shute. And he shot. He sayde: one arowe of the saluacion of the LORDE, one arowe of saluaciō agaynst the Syrians: and thou shalt smyte the Syrians at Aphek, tyll they be brought to naughte.

And he sayde: Take  $\bar{\text{y}}$  arowes. And whā he had taken them, he sayde vnto the kyng of Israel: Smyte the earth. And he smote thre tymes and stode still. Then was the mā of God wroth at him, and sayde: Yf thou haddest smytten fyue or sixe times, thou shuldest haue smytten  $\bar{\text{y}}$  Syrians, tyll thou haddest vtterly brought them to naughte. But now shalt thou smyte them thre tymes.

Whan Eliseus was deead and buried, the men of warre of the Moabites fell in to the londe the same yeare. And it fortunēd  $\bar{\text{y}}$  they buryed a certaine man. But whā they sawe the men of warre, they cast the man in to Eliseus graue. † And whan he was therin, and touched Eliseus bones, he reuyued, and stode vpon his fete.

So Hasael the kyng of Syria oppressed Israel, as long as Ioahas lyued. But the LORDE was gracious vnto them, and had mercy vpon them, and turned him to them for his couenauntes sake, with Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, and wolde not destroye thā  $\bar{\text{y}}$  nether dyd he cast them out from his presence vnto this houre.

And Hasael the kyng of Syria dyed, and Benadad his sonne was kyng in his steade. But Ioas turned backe, and toke out of the hande of Benadad the sonne of Hasael the cyties which he had takē in battaill out of the

The xiiij. Chapter.

A IN the seconde yere of Ioas ¶ sonne of Ioahas kyng of Israel, was Amasias the sonne of Ioas kyng of Iuda made kyng: *fyue and twenty yere olde was he, when he was made kyng, ¶ reigned nyne and twenty yere at Ierusalē. His mothers name was Ioadan of Ierusalem. And he dyd that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE: yet not as his father Dauid, but euen as his father Ioas did so dyd he also: for ¶ hye places were not put downe, but the people offered and brent incēse yet vpon the hye places. Now when he had gotten the power of the kyngdome, he smote his seruauantes † which had smyttē the kyng his father: but the children of ¶ deed slayers slewe he not, accordinge to ¶ which is wryttē in the boke of the lawe of Moses, where the LORDE hath cōmaunded ¶ sayde: † The fathers shal not dye for the children, ¶ the children shal not dye for the fathers: but euery one shal dye for his awne synne.

B Ten thousande of the Edomites smote he also in the Salt valley, and wanne Sela in battayll, and called it Iatheel vnto this daye. ¶ Then sent Amasias messaungers vnto Ioas the sonne of Ioahas the sonne of Iehu kyng of Israel, sayenge: Come hither, let vs se one another. But Ioas ¶ kyng of Israel sent vnto Amasias the kyng of Iuda, sayenge: The hawthorne that is in Libanus, sent to the Cedar tre in Libanus, sayenge: Gene thy doughter vnto my sonne to wife. But a wylde beest of the felde ranne ouer ¶ hawthorne, and trode it downe. Thou hast smyttē the Edomites, therefore is thine hert waxen proude: Take the prayse, and byde at home: why stryuest thou for mysfortune, ¶ thou mayest fall, and Iuda with the? Howbeit Amasias consented not.

C Then wēte Ioas the kyng of Israel vp, and they sawe one another, he and Amasias the kyng of Iuda at Beth Semes which lyeth in Iuda. But Iuda was smytten before Israel, so that euery one fled in to his tente. And Ioas the kyng of Israel toke Amasias the kyng of Iuda, the sonne of Ioas the sonne of Ochiasias at Beth Semes, and came to Ierusalem, and brake downe ¶ wall of Ierusalem from ¶ porte of Ephraim vnto the corner porte, euen foure hundred cubites lōge: and toke all the golde and syluer, and ornaments that were founde in the house of the LORDE, and in ¶ treasures of the kynges house, ¶ the children also to pledge, ¶ departed agayne to Samaria.

What more there is to saie of Ioas, what he dyd, and of his power, ¶ how he foughte with Amasias the kyng of Iuda, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Ioas fell on slepe with his fathers, and was buried at Samaria amonge ¶ kynges of Israel. And Ieroboam his sonne was kyng in his steade.

But Amasias the sonne of Ioas kyng of Iuda, lyued after the death of Ioas the sonne of Ioahas kyng of Israel, fiftene yere. What more there is to saie of Amasias, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And they conspyred agaynst him at Ierusalem, but he fled vnto Lachis. And they sent after him vnto Lachis, and slewe him there. And they broughte him vpon horses, ¶ he was buried at Ierusalem with his fathers in ¶ cite of Dauid. ¶ And all the people of Iuda toke Asarias in his sixtenth yere, and made him kyng in steade of Amasias his father. He buylded ¶ Eloth, and broughte it agayne vnto Iuda, after that the kyng was fallen on slepe with his fathers.

In the fyfth yere of Amasias the sonne of Ioas kyng of Iuda, was Ieroboam the sonne of Ioas kyng ouer Israel at Samaria, one and forty yere. And he dyd that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE, and departed not from all the synnes of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, which caused Israel for to synne.

But the borders of Israel broughte he ¶ agayne from Hemath vnto ¶ see that lyeth in the playne feld, accordinge to the worde of the LORDE God of Israel, which he spake by his seruauant ¶ Ionas ¶ sonne of Amithai the prophete, which was of ¶ Gath Epher. For the LORDE considered the myserable affliction of Israel, how that euen they which were shut vp and desolate, were awaye, and that there was no helper in Israel. ¶ And the LORDE sayde not that he wolde destroye the

What more there is to saye of Ieroboam, and all that he dyd, and of his power, how he foughte, and how broughte Damascon and Hemath agayne vnto Iuda in Israel, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Ieroboam fell on slepe with his fathers, with the kynges of Israel. And Zacharias his sonne was kyng in his steade.

IN the seuen & twentieth yeare of Ieroboam kyng of Israel, reigned Asarias the sonne of Amasias kyng of Iuda: and * was sixtene yeare olde when he was made kyng, and reigned two and fiftie yeare at Ierusalem. For the people dyd sacrifice and brent incense yet vpon the hye places. Howbeit the LORDE smote the kyng, so that he was leper vnto his death, & and dwelt in a frye house. But Iotham the kynges sonne ruled the house, and iudged the people in the londe.

What more there is to saye of Asarias, & all ŷ he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And Asarias fell on slepe with his fathers, & was buried with his fathers in the cite of Dauid, & Iotham his sonne was kyng in his steade.

In the eight and thirtieth yeare of Asarias kyng of Iuda, was Zacharias the sonne of Ieroboam kyng ouer Israel at Samaria sixe monethes. And he dyd ŷ which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE, euen as his fathers dyd. He departed not from ŷ synnes of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, which caused Israel for to synne. And Sellum the sonne of Iabes conspyred agaynst him, and smote him in the presence of ŷ people, and slewe him, & was kyng in his steade. What more there is to saie of Zacharias, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. † And this is it, ŷ the LORDE sayde vnto Iehu: Thy children shall syt vpō the seate of Israel vntyll the fourth generacion. And euen so came it to passe.

Sellum the sonne of Iabes reigned in ŷ nyne & thirtieth yeare of ŷ Asarias kyng of Iuda, & reigned one moneth at Samaria. For Menahem the sonne of Gadi wēte vp from Thirza, & came to Samaria, and smote Sellum the sonne of Iabes at Samaria, & slewe him, and was kyng in his steade.

What more there is to saye of Sellum, & of his sedicion which he stered vp, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. At the same tyme dyd Manahem smyte Tiphsa, & all ŷ were therin, & the coastes therof from Thirza, because they wolde not let him in, and smote all their women with childe, and rypete them vp.

In the nyne & thirtieth yeare of Asarias kyng of Iuda, beganne Manahem the sonne of Gad to reigne ouer Israel ten yeares at Samaria, and dyd that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE. As longe as he lyued, departed he not from ŷ synnes of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, which caused Israel for to synne. And Phul the kyng of Assiria came in to the lōde. And Manahem gaue vnto Phul a thousande talentes of syluer to holde with him, and to cōfirme him in the kyngdome. And Manahem rayssed vp a taxe in Israel vpon the richest, fiftie Sycles of syluer vpon euery man, to geue vnto ŷ kyng of Assiria. So the kyng of Assiria wēte home agayne, and taried not in the londe.

What more there is to saye of Manahem, & all ŷ he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Manahem fell on slepe with his fathers. And Pecahia his sonne was kyng in his steade.

In the fiftieth yeare of Asarias kyng of Iuda, beganne Pecahia the sonne of Manahem to reigne ouer Israel at Samaria two yeare, and dyd that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE: for he departed not fro the synnes of Ieroboam ŷ sonne of Nebat, which caused Israel for to synne. And Osea the sonne of Ela conspyred agaynst Pecah the sonne of Romelia, & slue him, and was kyngye in his steade in the twētieth yere of Iotham the sonne of *Osiās. What more there is to saye of Pecah, & all that he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel.

And he dyd ȝ which was righte in ȝ sighte of the LORDE, acordinge vnto all as dyd Osiās his father, sauynge that he put not downe the hye places: for the people offred & brent incense yet vpon the hye places. ### The xvi. Chapter.

A IN the seuententh yere of Pecah ȝ sonne of Romelia, was Achas the sonne of Iotham kyngye of Iuda. Twētye yere olde was Achas whā he was made kyngye, & reigned sixtene yere at Ierusalem, & dyd not ȝ which was righte in the sighte of ȝ LORDE his God, as dyd Dauid his father: for he walked in the waye of the kynges of Israel, † Yee and caused his sonne to go thorow the fyre, after the maner of the abominacions of the Heythen, whom the LORDE droue awaye before the childrē of Israel. And he dyd sacrifice, and brent incense vpon the hye places, & vpon all hilles, and amonge all grene trees. ‡ Then wente Rezin the kyngye of Syria, and Pecha the sonne of Romelia kyngye of Israel vp to Ierusalem to fighte agaynst it, and layed sege to Achas: but they coulde not wyne it. And Achas toke the syluer & golde ȝ was founde in ȝ house of ȝ LORDE, & in the treasures of ȝ kynges house, & sent a present to ȝ kyngye of Assiria. ¶ And ȝ kinge of Assiria cōsented vnto him, & wente vp to Damascon, & wanne it, & caried them awaye vnto Cira, & slewe Rezin. And whan ȝ kyngye came from Damascon, and sawe the altare, he offred theron, & kyndled his burntofferynges and meatofferynges vpon it, and poured his drynkofferynges theron, & caused the bloude of ȝ deedofferynges which he offred, to be sprenkled vpon the altare. And Achas the kyngye cōmaunded Vrias ȝ prest, & sayde: Vpō the greate altare shalt thou kyndle ȝ burntoffrynge in the mornynge, & the meatoffrynge in the euenynge, & the kynges burntoffrynge & his meatoffrynge, & the burntoffrynge of all the people in the londe, with their meatoffrynge & drynkoffrynge. And kyngre Achas brake downe the seates, and put awaye the *ketell from aboue, and toke the lauer from the brasen bullockes that were there vnder, and set it vpon y pauement of stone. And the pulpit for the Sabbath which they had buylded in the house, and y entrey of the kynges house turned he vnto the house of the LORDE, for the kyngre of Assirias sake.

What more there is to saye of Achas, what he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in y Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And Achas fell on slepe with his fathers, ⁊ was buried with his fathers in the cite of Dauid. And Ezechias his sonne was kyngre in his steade.

IN the twolueth yere of Achas the kyngre of Iuda, begane Oseas y sonne of Ela to reigne ouer Israel at Samaria nyne yere, and dyd y which was euell in y sighte of the LORDE, but not as y kynges of Israel y were before him. Agaynst him dyd Salmanasar y kyngre of Assiria come vp. And Oseas was subiecte vnto him, ⁊ gaue him trybutes. But whā y kyngre of Assiria perceaued y Oseas had conspyred ⁊ sent messaungers to Sua y kyngre of Egipte, ⁊ payed not trybute yearly to y kyngre of y Assirians, he beseged him ⁊ put him in preson. † And the kyngre of Assiria wente vp in to all the londe and to Samaria, and layed sege vnto it thre yere. ‡ And in the nyenth yere of Oseas dyd y kyngre of Assiria wyne Samaria, § and caried Israel awaye in to Assiria, and set them at Halah and at Habor by the water Gosan, and in the cities of the Meedes.

J For whan the childre of Israel synned agaynst y LORDE their God (y broughte thē out of y londe of Egipte, from the hāde of Pharaō kyngre of Egipte) and serued other goddes: and walked after the customes of the Heythē, whom the LORDE had dryuen out before the children of Israel, and dyd as the kynges of Israel, and prouoked y LORDE their God, and dyd secretly the thynges that were not righte in the sighte of y LORDE their God: namely in that they buylded them hye places in all cities, both in castels and stronge cities, and set vp pilers and groues, vpon all hye hilles, and amonge all grene trees, and brent incense there in all y hye places, euen as dyd the Heythen, whom the LORDE had cast out before them, ⁊ wroughte wicked thynges, wherwith they prouoked the LORDE vnto wrath, ⁊ serued the Idols, wherof the LORDE sayde vnto them: ¶ Ye shal not do such a thyngre.

And whan the LORDE testified in Israel C and Iuda by all the prophetes and Seers, sayenge: ¶ O turne agayne from youre euell wayes, and kepe my commaudemētes and ordynaunces, accordinge to all y lawe which I gaue vnto youre fathers, and that I sent vnto you by my seruantes the prophetes: they wolde not herken, ** but herdened their neckes, accordinge to the hardneck of their fathers, which beleued not on the LORDE their God. Yee they despyed his ordynaunces and his couenant which he made with their fathers, and his testimonies which he witnessed amonge them, and walked in their awne vanities, and became wayne folowinge the Heythen, which dwelt rounde aboute them, concernyng whom the LORDE had commaunded them, that they shulde not do as they dyd. Neuertheles they forsoke all the commaundementes of the LORDE their God †† and made them two molten calues and groues, and worshipped all the hoost of heauen, ⁊ serued Baal, and ‡‡ caused their sonnes and daughters to go thorow the fyre, and medled with soithsayers and witches, and gaue them selues ouer to do that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE, to prouoke him vnto wrath.

D Then was the LORDE very wroth at Israel, and put them awaye frō his presence, so y there remainyd nomō §§ but onely y trybe of Iuda. Nether dyd Iuda kepe the commaudemētes of the LORDE their God, but walked after the customes of Israel, which they dyd. Therefore dyd y LORDE cast awaye all y sede of Israel, and troubled them, and de-lyuered them in to the handes of the spoylers, tyll he had cast them out of his presence: for Israel was deuyded from the house of Dauid. And they made thē a kyngre, one Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, which turned Israel back from  $\text{f}$  LORDE,  $\text{a}$  caused thē to synne so sore. Thus walked the childrē of Israel in all  $\text{f}$  synnes of Ieroboam, which he had done,  $\text{a}$  departed not frō them, vntyll  $\text{f}$  LORDE put Israel out of his presence, ¶ accordinge as he had spokē by all his seruantes  $\text{f}$  prophetes. \* So Israel was caried awaye out of their awne londe to Assiria vnto this daye.

The kynge of Assiria caused men to come frō Babilon, from Cutha, frō Aua, from Hemath  $\text{a}$  Sepharuain,  $\text{a}$  caused thē to inhabite  $\text{f}$  cities in Samaria in steade of the children of Israel. And they toke possession of Samaria,  $\text{a}$  dwelt in  $\text{f}$  same cities. But whā they begāne to dwell there,  $\text{a}$  feared not  $\text{f}$  LORDE, the LORDE sent lyons amōge thē, which slewe them. And they caused it be sayde vnto  $\text{f}$  kynge of Assiria: The Heythē whom thou hast broughte hither,  $\text{a}$  caused them to inhabite the cities of Samaria, knowe not the lawe of  $\text{f}$  God of the londe. Therefore hath he sent lyons amōge them,  $\text{a}$  beholde, they slaye thē, because they knowe not the ordinance of the God of the londe.

¶ The kinge of Assiria cōmaunded  $\text{a}$  saide: Bringe thither one of  $\text{f}$  prestes  $\text{f}$  were caried awaye frō thence  $\text{a}$  let him go thither,  $\text{a}$  dwell there,  $\text{a}$  teach thē the ordinance of the God of  $\text{f}$  londe. Then came one of  $\text{f}$  prestes which were caried awaye from Samaria,  $\text{a}$  dwelt at Bethel,  $\text{a}$  taughte them how they shulde feare  $\text{f}$  LORDE. But euery people made thē goddes,  $\text{a}$  put thē in the houses vpon  $\text{f}$  hie places, which the Samaritanes had made, euery people i their cities wherin they dwelt. They of Babilō made Sochoth Benoth. They of Chut made Nergel. They of Hemath made Asima. They of Aua made Nibehas  $\text{a}$  Tharthak. They of Sepharuain burnt their sonnes vnto Adramelech and Anamelech  $\text{f}$  goddes of thē of Sepharuain.

¶ And whyle they feared  $\text{f}$  LORDE, they made prestes in  $\text{f}$  hie places of  $\text{f}$  lowest amonge them,  $\text{a}$  put them in  $\text{f}$  houses of  $\text{f}$  hie places: thus they feared  $\text{f}$  LORDE,  $\text{a}$  serued  $\text{f}$  goddes also, accordinge to  $\text{f}$  custome of euery nacion, from whence they were broughte. And vnto this daye do they after  $\text{f}$  olde fashion, so  $\text{f}$  they nether feare  $\text{f}$  LORDE, ner yet kepe their awne ordi-

naunces and lawes, after the lawe and commaundement that the LORDE cōmaunded the childrē of Jacob,  $\text{†}$  vnto whom he gaue  $\text{f}$  name of Israel, and made a couenaunt with them, and commaunded them, and sayde:  $\text{†}$  Feare none other goddes, and worshipe them not, and serue them not, and offer not vnto them: but the LORDE which broughte you out of the lōde of Egipte, with greate power and outstretched arme, Him feare, him worshippe,  $\text{a}$  vnto him do sacrifice: and the statutes, ordinaunces, lawe  $\text{a}$  cōmaundement which he hath caused to be wrytten vnto you, those se that ye kepe, that ye allwaye do therafter, and feare none other goddes. And forget not the couenaunt which he hath made with you, lest ye feare other goddes. But feare  $\text{f}$  LORDE youre God, he shall deluyer you from all youre enemies. Neuertheles they wolde not herken, but dyd after their olde custome.

Thus these Heythen feared the LORDE, and serued their Idols also, and so dyd their children and childers childrē likewyse. Euē as their fathers haue done before them, so do they vnto this daye.

The xviij. Chapter.

IN the thirde yere of Oseas  $\text{f}$  sonne of Elakynge of Israel,  $\text{†}$  reigned Ezechias  $\text{f}$  sonne of Achas kynge of Iuda. And he was fyue and twentie yere olde whan he was made kynge,  $\text{a}$  reigned nyne  $\text{a}$  twentye yere at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Abi the daughter of Zachary. And he dyd that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE, accordinge vnto all as dyd Dauid his father. ¶ He put awaye the hie places, and brake downe the pilers,  $\text{a}$  roted out the groues, and brake the brasen serpente  $\text{¶}$  which Moses had made. For vnto that tyme had the children of Israel brent incēse vnto it. And it was called Nehusthan. He put his trust in the LORDE God of Israel, so that after him there was not his like amōge all the kynges of Iuda nether had bene before him. He cleued vnto the LORDE, and departed not backe from him, and kepte his commaundementes, which the LORDE had cōmaunded Moses. And the LORDE was with him. And whither so euer he wēt forth, he behaued him selfe wysely. He resisted the kynge of Assiria, and was not subdued vnto him.

* He smote the Philistynes also vnto Gasa, and their borders, from the castels vnto the stronge cities.

In the fourth yere of Ezechias kynge of Iuda<sup>a</sup> (y was the seuenth yere of Oseas the sonne of Ela kynge of Israel) came Salmanasar the kynge of Assiria vp agaynst Samaria, and layed sege vnto it, and wanne it after thre yeaues in the sixte yere of Ezechias, that is in the nyenth yere of Oseas kynge of Israel, thē was Samaria wonne. And the kynge of Assiria caried Israel awaye vnto Assiria, and set them at Halah and Habor by the water Gosan, and in the cities of the Meedes. And all because they herkened not vnto the voyce of the LORDE their God, and had transgressed his couenaunt: And as for all that Moses the seruauant of the LORDE had commaunded thē, they had nether herkened vnto eny of those, ner done them.

C In the fourtēth yere of kynge Ezechias dyd Sennacherib y kynge of Assiria<sup>b</sup> come vp agaynst all the stronge cities of Iuda, and cōquered thē. Then sent Ezechias the kynge of Iuda to y kynge of Assiria vnto Lachis, sayenge: I haue offended, turne back for me: loke what thou layest vnto me, I wil beare it. Thē the kynge of Assiria layed vnto Ezechias the kynge of Iuda, thre hundreth talentes of syluer, and thirtie talentes of golde. + So Ezechias gaue all y syluer y was foude in y house of the LORDE, and in the treasures of y kynges house. At y same tyme brake Ezechias the kynge of Iuda the dores of the tēple of y LORDE, and the plates of golde which he him selfe had caused to laye ouer thē, and gaue thē vnto the kynge of Assiria.

And the kynge of Assiria sent Thartan, and the chefe chamberlayne, and the chefe butler from Lachis to kynge Ezechias with a greate power vnto Ierusalem. And they wēte vp: and whan they came there, they stode styll at the condyte by the ouer pole, which lyeth in the waye vpō the fullers londe, and called vnto the kynge. Thē came there forth vnto them Eliachim the sonne of Helchias the stewarde, and Sobna the scribe, and Ioah the sonne of Assaph the Secretary.

D And the chefe butler sayde vnto thē: Tell kynge Ezechias: Thus sayeth y greate kynge, euē the kynge of Assiria: What presumption is this y thou trustest vnto? Thinkest thou, y thou hast yet counsell and power to fighte? Where vnto trustest thou then, that thou art fallen of fro me? Beholde, puttest thou thy trust in this broken staffe of rede, in Egipte? which who leaneth vpon, it shall go in to his hande, and pearse it thorow. Euen so is Pharao the kynge of Egipte vnto all them that put their trust in him. But yf ye wolde saye vnto me: We put oure trust in y LORDE oure God. Is not that he, whose hye places and altares Ezechias hath takē downe, and sayde vnto Iuda and Ierusalē: Before this altare which is at Ierusalē, shal ye worshippe?

Make a multitude now therfore vnto my lorde the kynge of Assiria, and I wil geue y two thousande horses, let se yf thou be able to man them: how wilt thou then endure before the smallest prynce of my lordes subiectes? And trustest thou vnto Egipte because of the charettes and horsmen? But thinkest thou that I came vp hither without y LORDE to destroye these cities? The LORDE hath commaunded me: Go vp in to that londe and destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim the sonne of Helchia<sup>c</sup> and Sobna and Ioah vnto the chefe butler: Speake to thy seruantes in the Syriās language, for we vnderstonde it, and speake not vnto vs in the Iewes speche before the eares of the people that are vpon the wall. Neuertheles y chefe butler sayde vnto thē: Hath my lorde then sent me vnto thy lorde, or to the, to speake these wordes? Yee euen vnto the men, which syt vpon the wall, that they maye eat their owne donge and drynke their owne stale with you. So the chefe butler stode and cried with loude voyce in the Iewes language, and spake and sayde: Heare the worde of the greate kynge the kynge of Assiria. Thus sayeth the kynge: Let not Ezechias disceaue you, for he is not able to delyuer you fro my hāde: and let not Ezechias make you to trust in the LORDE, sayenge: The LORDE shall delyuer vs, and this cite shal not be geuen in to the handes of y kynge of Assiria. Folowe not ye Ezechias, for thus sayeth the kynge of Assiria:

F Do me this blessinge, and come forth vnto me, so shal euery man eate of his vyne and of his fygge tre, and drynke of his well, tyll I come my selfe and fetch you in to a londe, which is like youre awne lōde, wherin is come, wyne, bred, vynyardes, oyle trees, oyle and hony, so shal ye lyue, and not dye. Folowe not ye Ezechias, for he disceaueth you, when he sayeth: The LORDE shal delyuer vs. * Haue the goddes of the Heythen delyuered euery one his londe from the hande of the kyng of Assiria? Where are the goddes of Hemath and Arphad? Where are the goddes of Sepharuaim Hena and Iua? Haue they delyuered Samaria fro my hande? Where is there one god amonge the goddes of all londes, which hath delyuered his londe fro my hande? that the LORDE shulde delyuer Ierusalem fro my hande.

As for the people, they helde their peace, and gaue him no answer: for the kyng had commaunded and sayde: Answer me nothinge. Then came Eliachim the sonne of Helchia † stewarde, and Sobna the scribe, and ioah the sonne of Assaph the Secretary vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, and tolde him the wordes of the chefe butler.

The xii. Chapter.

WHAN Ezechias † kyng herde this, * he rente his clothes, † put on a sackcloth, † wente in to † house of the LORDE, † sent Eliachim the stewarde † Sobna the Scribe with the Eldest prestes, clothed in sack cloth, vnto the prophet Esay † sonne of Amos, † they saide vnto him: Thus sayeth Ezechias: This is a daye of trouble, † of defiaunce † blasphemy. The childre are come to the byrth, † there is no strength to be delyuered of them. Yf happily the LORDE thy God wil heare all the wordes of † chefe butler, whom his lorde the kyng of Assiria hath sent, to blasphemie † lyuyng God, † to defye him with soch wordes as the LORDE thy God hath herde, therefore lifte thou vp thy prayer for the remnaunt, which are yet lefte behynde.

And whā kyng Ezechias seruauntes came to Esay, Esay sayde vnto them: Speake thus vnto youre lorde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Feare not thou the wordes † thou hast herde, wherwith the kyng of Assiria seruauntes haue blasphemed me. Beholde, I wil put him in another mynde, so † he shall heare tydings, † go agayne in to his awne countre, † and in his awne londe wil I cause him to fall thorow the swerde.

And whan † chefe butlar came agayne, he founde the kyng of Assiria fightinge agaynst Libna: for he had herde that he was departed from Lachis. And he herde of Taracha the kyng of the Morians: Beholde, he is gone forth to fighte with the. Then turned he back, † sent messaungers to Ezechias, † caused to saye vnto him: Let not thy God disceau the, on whom thou trustest † sayest: Ierusalem shal not be geuē in to the hāde of the kyng of Assiria. Beholde, thou hast herde what the kynges of Assiria haue done vnto all londes, † how they dāned them, † shalt thou be delyuered? Haue † goddes of † Heithen delyuered thē, whom my father destroyed, as Gosan, Haran, Reseph, † the childre of Eden which were at Thalassar? Where is † kyng of Hemath, † kyng of Arphad, † † kyng of † cite Sepharuaim, Hena † Iua?

And whan Ezechias had receaued the letters of the messaungers and had red them, he wente vp vnto the house of the LORDE, and layed them abrode before the LORDE, † made his prayer before the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, thou that syttest vpō the Cherubins, thou onely art God amonge all † kyngdomes of the earth, thou hast made heauen and earth. Enelyne thine eare O LORDE, and heare: open thine eyes, and beholde, and heare the wordes of Sennacherib, which hath sent hither to blaspheme the lyuyng God. It is true (O LORDE) that the kynges of Assiria haue destroyed the Heythen and their londe with the swerde, and haue cast their goddes in the fyre: for they were not Goddes, but † worke of mēs hondes, wodd and stone, therefore haue they destroyed them. But now O LORDE helpe thou vs out of his hande, that all the kyngdomes vpon earth maye knowe, that thou LORDE art God alone.

Then sent Esay the sonne of Amos vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me concernyng Sennacherib † kyng of Assiria, I haue herde it. This is it that the LORDE hath spoken agaynst him: He hath despyed † and mocked the O virgin thou doughter Sion: he hath shakē his heade at the O doughter Ierusalem. † Whom hast thou despyed † blasphemed? holy one in Israel hast thou lifte vp thine eyes: thou hast blasphemed  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE by thy messangers, and sayde: Thorow the multitude of my charettes haue I gone vp to the toppes of the mountaynes, vpon the sydes of Libanus. I haue hewen downe his hye Ceders and his chosen Pyne trees, and am come to the vttemost habitation of the wod of Carmel that belongeth vnto it. I haue dygged and dronke vp the straunge waters, and with  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  soles of my fete haue I dried vp the See.

$\text{\textcircled{E}}$  But hast thou not herde how that I haue done this longe agoo, and haue prepared it from the begynnyng? Now haue I caused it for to come, that contencious stronge cities mighte fall in to a waiste heape of stones,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  they that dwell therein, shal be faynte, and fearfull and a shamed, \*and shal be as the grasse vpon the felde, and as  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  grene herbe and hay vpon the house toppes, that wythereth afore it be growne vp. I knowe thy habitation, thy out and ingoynge, and that thou ragest agaynst me. For so much then as thou ragest agaynst me, and seynge thy presumption is come vp to myne eares, therefore wyll I put a rynge in thy nose, and a byrdle bytt in thy lippes, and wyll brynge the agayne, euen the same waye thou camest.

$\text{\textcircled{f}}$  And let this be a token vnto the O Ezechias. In this yere eate  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  which is fallen, in the seconde yere soch as groweth of it selfe: In  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  thirde yere sowe and reape, and plante vynyardes, and eate the frute therof. And the doughter Iuda which is escaped  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  remayneth, shall from hence forth take rote beneth, and beare frute aboue. For the remnaunt shal go forth from Ierusalem,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  they  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  are escaped, shall go out fro mount Sion. The gelousy of the LORDE Zebaoth shal brynge this to passe.

Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE concernynge  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  kynge of the Assyrians: He shall not come in to this cite, and shall shute no arowe therein, nether shal there come eny shyld before it, nether shall he dygge eny bakke aboute it, but shal go agayne the waye that he came, and shall not come in to this cite, sayeth the LORDE: and I wyll defende this cite, to helpe it for myne awne sake, and for my seruauit Dauids sake.

$\text{\textcircled{B}}$  And in the same nighte wente the angell of the LORDE, and smote in the hoost of the Assyrians, an hundreth and fyue and foure score thousande men. And whan they gatt them vp in the mornyng, beholde, all laye full of deed coarses.  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  So Sennacherib the kinge of Assyria brake vp, and departed, and returned, and abode at Ninieue. And as he worshipped in  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  house of Nesrach his god, his awne sonnes Adramalech and Sarazer smote him with the swerde, and fled in to  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  londe of Ararat. And Asarhadon his sonne was kynge in his steade.

The rr. Chapter.

$\text{\textcircled{A}}$  T that tyme was Ezechias deedsicke.  $\text{\textcircled{a}}$  And the prophet Esay  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  sonne of Amos, came to him,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE: Set thine house in ordre for thou shalt dye  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  not lyue. And he turned, his face to the wall, and prayed vnto  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE, and sayde: Remembre (O LORDE) that I haue walked faithfully before the,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  with a perfecte hert, and haue done  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  which is good in thy syghte. And Ezechias wepte sore. But whan Esay was not gone out of halfe the cite,  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  worde of  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE came to him,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  sayde: Turne back,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  tell Ezechias  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  prynce of my people: Thus sayeth  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE God of thy father Dauid: I haue herde thy praiser,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  considered thy teares. Beholde, I wil heale  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ : on the thirde daye shalt thou go in to  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  house of the LORDE,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  fiftene yeres wil I adde vnto thy life,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  wyll deliuer the  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  this cite from the kynge of Assyria,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  this cite wil I defende for myne awne sake, and for my seruauit Dauids sake. And Esay sayde: Bringe hither a quantite of fygges. And whan they broughte them, they layed them vpon the sore, and it was healed.

Ezechias sayde vnto Esay: Which is  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  token, that the LORDE wyll heale me, and that I shal go vp in to the house of  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  LORDE on the thirde daye? Esay sayde: This token shalt thou haue of the LORDE, that the LORDE shal do acordinge as he hath sayde. Shall the shadowe go ten degrees forwarde, or shal it turne ten degrees backwarde? Ezechias sayde: It is an easy thinge for the shadowe to go ten degrees downewarde,  $\text{\textcircled{f}}$  is not my mynde: but that it go ten degrees backwarde. Then cryed the prophet Esay vnto the LORDE,  $\text{\textcircled{t}}$  and the shadowe wente backe ten degrees in Achas Dyall, which he was descended afore.

sonne of Baladan kynge of Babilon, sent letters and presentes vnto Ezechias, for he had herde that Ezechias had bene sicke. And Ezechias reioysed with them, & shewed them all the house of rotes, the syluer, golde, spyes, and the best oyle, and the house of ordinaunce, and all that was founde in his treasures. There was nothinge in his house and in all his domynion, but Ezechias shewed it them.

Then came Esay the prophet vnto kynge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue these men sayde? and whence came they vnto the? Ezechias sayde: They came to me out of a farre countre, euen from Babilon. He sayde: What haue they sene in thyne house? Ezechias sayde: They haue sene all that is in my house, and there is nothyng in my treasures but I haue shewed it them. Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: Heare the worde of the LORDE: Beholde, *the tyme commeth, that it shall all be caryed awaye vnto Babilon, and whatsoever thy fathers haue layed vp vnto this daye, and there shall nothinge be lefte, sayeth the LORDE. †Yee and the children which come of the, whom thou shalt beget, shalbe taken awaye, to be chamberlaynes in the kynge of Babilons palace. Ezechias sayde vnto Esay: It is good that the LORDE hath spoken. And he sayde morouer: Let there be peace yet and faithfulness in my tyme.

What more there is to saye of Ezechias, and all his power, and what he dyd, and of the pole and water condyte, wher by he conueyed water in to the cite, beholde, it is written in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. ‡ And Ezechias fell on slepe with his fathers, and Manasses his sonne was kynge in his steade.

The xxi. Chapter.

MANASSES was twolue yeare olde, when he was made kinge, and reigned fyue and fyfthe yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Hephziba. And he dyd that which was euell in ¶ sight of the LORDE (euen after the abhominaciōs of the Heithen, whom the LORDE expelled before the children of Israel) and waxed frowarde, and builded vp the hye places which his father Ezechias had destroyed,<sup>a</sup> and sett vp Baals altares, and made groues (as Achab the kynge of Israel dyd) and worshipped all the hoost of heauen, and serued them. And buylded altares in the LORDES house, wherof the LORDE sayde: I wyl set my name at Ierusalem. And in both the courtes of the house of the LORDE buylded he altares vnto all the hoost of heauē. And § caused his sonne to go thorow the fyre, and regarded byrdescreyng and tokens, and maynteyned soithsayers, and expounders of tokens, and so moch dyd he of this which was euell in the sight of the LORDE, that he prouoked him vnto wrath.

A groue Idol also which he had made, set he in the house, wherof the LORDE sayde vnto Dauid and to Salomon his sonne: In this house, and at Ierusalem (¶ which I haue chosen out of all the trybes of Israel) wil I set my name for euer, and wyl not cause ¶ fote of Israel to be remoued eny more from the londe, which I gaue vnto their fathers, yee so that they obserue and do accordyng vnto all that I haue charged them, and after all the lawe that my seruauit Moses cōmaunded them. Neuertheles they wolde not herken, but Manasses disceaued them, so ¶ they dyd worse then the Heithen, whom the LORDE expelled before ¶ children of Israel.

Then spake the LORDE by his seruauentes the prophetes, and saide: Because that Manasse the kynge of Iuda hath gone these abhominacions, which are worse then all ¶ abhominacions that the Amorites haue done which were before them, and hath caused Iuda also to synne agaynst their God, therefore thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: ¶ Beholde, I wyl brynge soch a plage vpon Ierusalem and Iuda, that who so euer heareth it, both his eares shal glowe, and ouer Ierusalem wyl I stretch forth the lyne of Samaria, and the weighte of the house of Achab, and wyl wype out Ierusalem, euen as one wytheth a platter, and I wyl ouerthrowe it. And ¶ remnaunt of myne inheritance wil I cast out, & scatter them abrode, & wil deluyen them in to the hādes of their enemies, to be spoyled and rent of all their enemies: because they haue done ¶ which is euell in my sighte, & haue prouoked me vnto wrath, sence the daye that I broughte their fathers out of Egipte, vnto this daye. What more there is to saie of Manasses, and all that he dyd, and his synnes which he commytted, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And Manasses fell on slepe with his fathers, and was buried in the garden besyde his house, namely, in the garden of Vsa, and Amon his sonne was kynge in his steade.

Two and twentye yeare olde was Amon whan he was made kynge, ⁊ he reigned two yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Mesumneleth, y doughter of Harus of Iatba, and he dyd euell in the sighte of the LORDE, as Manasses his father had done, and walked in all the waye which his father walked, and serued the Idols which his father had serued, and worshipped them, and forsoke the LORDE the God of his father, and walked not in the waye of the LORDE.

And his seruantes conspyred agaynst Amon, ⁊ slewe the kynge in his house. But the people of the londe slewe all them y had cōspyred agaynst kynge Amon. And the people of the londe made Iosias his sonne kynge in his steade. As for other thinges that Amon dyd, beholde, they are wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And he was buried in his graue in Vsas gardē. And Iosias his sonne was kynge in his steade.

IOSIAS <sup>a</sup>was eight yeare olde whā he was made kynge, ⁊ reigned one and thirtie yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Iedida the doughter of Adaia of Bascath, and he dyd that which was righte in y sighte of the LORDE, and walked in all y waye of Dauid his father, ⁊ turned not asyde, nether to the righte hande ner to the lefte.

<sup>c</sup>And in the eighteenth yeare of kynge Iosias, the kynge sent Saphan y sonne of Asaia the sonne of Mesulam the scribe, in to y house of the LORDE, and sayde: *Go vp to Helchias the hye prest, that the money that is brought vnto y house of y LORDE (which the tresholde keepers haue gathered of y people) maye be deluyered vnto them, that they maye geue it to the workmen which are appoynted in the house of the LORDE, ⁊ to

geue it vnto the labourers in the house (y they maye repayre the decaye of the house) namely, vnto the carpenters, and buylders, ⁊ masons, and to them y bie timber ⁊ fre stone for the repaireinge of the house: but so y there be no accomptes taken of them concernynge the money, that is vnder their hande, but y they deale withall vpon credence.

And Helchias y prest sayde vnto Saphā the scribe: *I haue founde the boke of the lawe in the house of the LORDE. And Helchias gaue the boke vnto Saphan, that he might reade it. And Saphan the scribe bare it vnto the kynge, and brought him worde agayne, ⁊ sayde: Thy seruantes haue gathered together y money y was founde in the house, ⁊ haue deluyered it vnto the workmē, which are appoynted in y house of the LORDE. And Saphan the scribe tolde the kynge and sayde: Helchias the prest hath deluyered me a boke, and Saphan red it before the kynge.

But whan the kinge herde the wordes of the boke of lawe, he rente his clothes. And the kynge cōmaunded Helchias the prest, ⁊ Ahicam the sonne of Saphan, ⁊ Achbor the sonne of Michaia, and Saphan the scribe, ⁊ Asaia y kynges seruaut, and sayde: *Go youre waye and axe counsell at the LORDE for me, for the people, and for all Iuda, concernynge the wordes of this boke that is founde: for greate is the wrath of the LORDE that is kyndled ouer vs, because oure fathers haue not herkened vnto the wordes of this boke, to do all that is wrytten vnto vs therin.

Then wente Helchias the prest, and Ahicam, Achbor, Saphan ⁊ Asaia vnto Hulda the prophetisse y wife of Sellū the sonne of Thecua the sonne of Harham the keeper of y clothes, and she dwelt at Ierusalem in the seconde porte, and they spake vnto her. And she sayde vnto them: Thus sayeth y LORDE God of Israel: Tell the man that sent you vnto me, Thus sayeth the LORDE: Beholde, I wil brynge euell vpon this place, and the inhabitors therof, euen all the wordes of y lawe which the kynge hath caused to be red, because they haue forsaken me, and brent incense vnto other goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath with all the workes of their handes. AND the kynges sent forth, and "all the Elders in Iuda and Ierusalem resorted vnto him, and the kynges wente vp in to the house of the LORDE, and all the men of Iuda, and all the inhabiteres of Ierusalem with him, the prestes and prophetes and all the people both small and greate, †and all the wordes of the boke of the couenaunt that was founde in the house of the LORDE, were red in their eares. And the kynges stode vpon a piler, †and made a couenaunt before the LORDE, that they shulde walke after the LORDE, and to kepe his commaundementes, witnesses, and ordinaunces with all their hert and with all their soule, y they shulde set vp the wordes of this couenaunt, which are wrytten in this boke. And all the people entred in to the couenaunt.

And the kynges cōmaunded Helchias the hye prest, and the prestes of the secōde course, and the keepers of the threshold, y they shulde put out of the temple all the vessels which were made for Baal, and for the groue, and for all the hoost of heauen, ⁊ he brent them without Ierusalem in the valley of Cedron, and the dust of them was caryed vnto Bethel.

B And he put downe the †Kemurims, whō the kynges of Iuda had founded, to burne incense vpon the hye places, in the cities of Iuda, and aboute Ierusalem. He put downe also them that brent incense vnto Baal, to the Sonne, and the Mone, and the twelue tokens, and to all y hoost of heauen. And the groue caused he to be caryed from the house of the LORDE out of Ierusalem in to y valley of Cedron, and brent it in the valley of Cedron, and made it to dust, and cast the dust vpon the graues of y comen people. And he brake downe the whorekeepers houses which were by the house of the LORDE, wherin the women made mansions for the groue.

And he caused all the prestes for to come out of the cities of Iuda, and suspended y hye places, where the prestes brent incense, from Geba vnto Berseba. And brake downe the hye places in the portes, that were at y dore of the gate of Iosua y shreue of the cite, at the lefte hande as one goeth to the cite porte. Yet had not the prestes of the hye places offred vpon the altare of the LORDE at Ierusalem, but ate vniuendred bred amonge their brethren.

He suspended y Tophet also in the valley of the children of Ennon, that noman shulde cause his sonne or his daughter to go thorow y fyre vnto Moloch. And he put downe the horses, which y kynges of Iuda had set vnto the Sonne, at the intringe in to the house of the LORDE, besyde the chest of Netham Melech the chamberlayne which was at Paruarim, and the charettes of the Sonne brent he with fyre, and the altares vpon the rofe of Achabs perler, which the kynges of Iuda had made. And the altares ¶which Manasses had made in the two courtes of the house of the LORDE, dyd the kynges breake downe. And ranne from thence, and cast the dust of them in to the broke Cedron.

And the hye places that were before Ierusalem on the righte hande of Mount Mashith ¶which Salomon the kyng of Israel had buylded vnto Astaroth the abhominacion of Sidon, and to Camos the abhominacion of Moab, and to Malcom the abhominacion of the children of Ammon, those did the kynges suspende, and brake the pilers, and roted out the groues, and fylled their places with mens bones.

And he sayde: What titell is this, that I se here? And the men of the cite sayde vnto him: It is the graue of the man of God, which came from Iuda, and cryed out this that thou hast done agaynst ſ̄ altare of Bethel. And he sayde: Let him lye, no man touche his bones. Thus were his bones deliuered with the bones of the prophet that came from Samaria.

¶ He put away also all the houses of the hye places in the cities of Samaria (which the kynges of Israel had made to prouoke ſ̄ LORDE vnto wrath) and dyd with them accordinge to all as he had done at Bethel. And all ſ̄ prestes of the hye places that were there, offred he vp vpon the altares, and †so brent he mens bones thereon, and came agayne to Ierusalem.

¶ And the kynge commaūded the people, and sayde: Kepe Easter vnto the LORDE youre God, †as it is wyrtten in the boke of this couenaut. For there was no Easter so kepte as this, sence the tyme of the Iudges which iudged Israel, and in all the tymes of the kynges of Israel, and of the kynges of Iuda: but in the eighteenth yere of kynge Iosias, was this Easter kepte vnto the LORDE at Ierusalem.

¶ His like was no kynge before him, which so cōuerted vnto ſ̄ LORDE with all his hert, with all his soule, and with all his strength, accordinge to all the lawe of Moses. And after him came there not vp soch another. Yet turned not the LORDE from the indignacion of his greate wrath, wherwith he was displeased ouer Iuda, because of all the prouocacion wherwith Manasses had prouoked him. And ſ̄ LORDE sayde: †I wil put Iuda out of my presence also, euen as I haue

And the people of the londe toke † Ioaas the sonne of Iosias, and anoynted him, and made him kynge in his fathers steade.

¶ Thre and twentye yere olde was Ioaas whā he was made kynge, and reigned thre monethes at Ierusalē. His mothers name was Hamutal ſ̄ daughter of Ieremia of Libna. And he dyd ſ̄ which was euell in ſ̄ sight of ſ̄ LORDE, euen as his fathers had done. And Pharaο Necho made Eliachim ſ̄ sonne of Iosias kynge in his father Iosias steade, and turned his name I Joachim. ¶ But Ioaas toke he, and brought him in to Egipte where he dyed. And Joachim gaue the siluer and golde vnto Pharaο, yet taxed he the londe, ſ̄ he might geue ſ̄ syluer acordinge to Pharaοs cōmaundement. Euery one amonge the people in ſ̄ londe taxed he after his abillite in siluer and golde, to geue it vnto Pharaο. And he fylled Ierusalem with innocent bloude, therefore wolde not the LORDE be reconcyled.

What more there is to saye of Ioachim, and all that he dyd, beholde, it is written in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And Ioachim fell on slepe with his fathers. And †Ioachim his sonne was kynge in his steade. And the kynge of Egipte came nomore out of his londe: for the kynge of Babilon had conquered all that was the kynge of Egyp̄tes, from the ryuer of Egipte vnto y<sup>e</sup> water Enphrates. Eightene yere olde was Ioachim whan he was made kynge, and reigned thre monethes at Ierusalē. His mothers name was Nebustha the daughter of Elnathan of Ierusalem. And he dyd euell in the sighte of the LORDE, euen as his father had done.

At the same tyme wente the seruantes of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon vp to Ierusalem, and came vpon the cyte with ordinance of warre. And whan Nabuchodonosor and his seruantes came to the cite they layed sege vnto it. But Ioachim y<sup>e</sup> kynge of Iuda wente forth to the kynge of Babilon with his mother, with his seruantes, with his rulers and chamberlaynes. And the kynge of Babilon receaued him in the eight yere of his reigne.

†And he toke forth frō thence all the treasure in the house of the LORDE, and in y<sup>e</sup> kynges house, and brake all the golden vessell y<sup>e</sup> Salomon the kynge of Israel had made in the house of the LORDE (acordynge as the LORDE had sayde) and caryed awaye all Ierusalem, all the rulers, all the mightie men, euen ten thousande presoners, and all the carpenters, and all the smithes, and lefte none behynde but the poore people of the londe.

§And he caryed Ioachim awaye vnto Babilon, and the kynges mother, the kynges wyues, and his chamberlaynes: and y<sup>e</sup> mightie men of the londe led he awaye presoners also from Ierusalem vnto Babilon, and seuen thousande of the best men, and a thousande carpenters and smythes, and all the stronge men of warre. ¶And the kynge of Babilon made Matania his vnle kynge in his steade, and turned his name Sedechias.

¶One and twentye yere olde was Sedechias, whan he was made kynge, and reigned eleuen yere at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Amithal the daughter of Ieremia of Libna. And he dyd euell in the sight of the LORDE, euē as Ioachim dyd: for thus fortunēd it vnto Ierusalē thorow the wrath of the LORDE, tyll he had cast them out frō his presence. And Sedechias fell awaye frō the kynge of Babilon.

The xrb. Chapter.

AND it fortunēd, that in y<sup>e</sup> nyenth yere of his reigne, vpon the tenth daye of the tenth moneth, Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon came with all his power agaynst Ierusalem. And they laied sege vnto it, and buylded stronge holdes rounde aboute it. Thus was the cite beseged vnto the eleuenth yere of kynge Sedechias. But on y<sup>e</sup> nyenth daye of the fourth moneth was the hongre so stronge in the cite, that the people of the londe had nothinge to eate. And the cite was broken vp, ⁊ all the men of warre fled in the night by the waye of the porte betwene the two walles, which goeth to the kynges gardē. But the Caldees laye aboute the cite. And he fled by the waye to the playne felde. Neuertheles the power of the Caldees folowed after the kynge, and toke him in the plaine felde of Iericho: and all the men of warre that were with him, were scatered abroad from him. And they toke the kynge, and led him vp to the kynge of Babilon vnto Reblatha. ¶And he gaue iudgmēt vpon him. And they slewe Sedechias children before his eyes, and put out Sedechias eyes, and bounde him with cheynes, and caryed him vnto Babilon.

Vpon the seuenth daye of the fyfth moneth, that is the ninetenth yere of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, came Nabusaradan the chefe captayne the kynge of Babilons seruaūt, vnto Ierusalem, and brent y<sup>e</sup> house of the LORDE, and the kynges house, ⁊ all the houses at Ierusalem, and all the greates houses brent he with fyre. As for the other people that yet were lefte in the cite, and were fallē vnto the kinge of Babilon, and the other comen people, Nabusaradan the chefe captayne caryed them awaye. And of the poorest people dyd the chefe capitaine leaue in ſ̄ londe to be wynegardeners and plowmen.

But the brasen pilers in the house of the LORDE, and the seates, and the brasen lauer that was in the house of the LORDE, dyd ſ̄ Caldees breake downe, and caried the metall vnto Babilon. And the pottes, shouels, fleshokes, spones, ⁊ all ſ̄ brasen vessel that was occupied in the seruyce, caried they awaye. And ſ̄ chefe captayne toke awaye ſ̄ censors and basens ſ̄ were of golde and syluer, two pilers, one lauer, and the seates ſ̄ Salomon had made for ſ̄ house of the LORDE. The metall of all these ornamentes coulde not be weyed. *Eightene cubytes hye was one piler, and ſ̄ knoppe theron was of brasse also, ⁊ thre cubytes hye: ⁊ the rope and the pomgranates vpon the knoppe rounde aboute, were all of brasse. After the same maner was the other piler also with the rope.

C And the chefe captayne toke Seraia the prest of the first course, ⁊ Sophony the prest of the seconde course, and thre dorekeepers, and one chamberlayne out of the cite, which was appoynted ouer ſ̄ men of warre: and fyue men that were euer before the kynge, which were founde in the cite: and Sophar the captayne, which taught the people of ſ̄ londe to fight: and thre score men of ſ̄ people of the londe, that were founde in the cite: these dyd Nabusaradan ſ̄ chefe captayne take, and broughte them to the kynge of Babilon vnto Reblatha. And the kynge of Babilon slewe them at Reblatha in ſ̄ londe of Hemath. Thus was Iuda caried awaye out of his awne londe. † But ouer the remnaunt of the people in the londe of Iuda, whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon lefte behynde, he set Godolias ſ̄ sonne of Ahicam ſ̄ sonne of Saphan. Now whā all the captaynes of the soudyers, ⁊ the men herde, that the kynge of Babilon had made Godolias gouernoure, they came to Godolias vnto † Mispa, namely, Ismael ſ̄ sonne of Nathaniās, ⁊ Iohanna ſ̄ sonne Carea, ⁊ Seraia ſ̄ sonne of Tanhometh the Netophatite, ⁊ Iesaniās ſ̄ sonne of Macchati with their men. And Godolias sware vnto them ⁊ to their men, ⁊ sayde vnto them: ‡ Feare not ye ſ̄ officers of the Caldees, tary in the londe, ⁊ submytte youre selues vnto the kynge of Babilon, ⁊ ye shal prospere. ¶ But

D ¶ But in the seueñth moneth came Ismael the sonne of Nathaniās the sonne of Elisama (of the kynges kynred) and ten men with him, and slewe Godolias, and the Lewes and Caldees that were with him at Mispa. Then all the people gat them vp, both small and greates, and the captaynes of the hoost, and came in to Egipte, for they were afrayed of ſ̄ Caldees. Howbeit in the seuen and thirtieth yeare after that Ioachim the kynge of Iuda was caried awaye on the seuen and twenty daye of the twolueth moneth, Euilmerodach the kynge of Babilon in the first yeare of his reigne, lifte vp the heade of Ioachim ſ̄ kynge of Iuda out of preson, and spake loungly vnto him, and set his trone aboue ſ̄ trones of ſ̄ kynges that were with him at Babilon, and chaunged the clothes of his captiuyte. And he ate allwaye before him as longe as he lyued. And he appoynted him his porcion, which was euer geuē him daylie of the kynge, as longe as he lyued.

From beyonde Iordane, of the Rubenites, Gaddites and the halfe trybe of Manasses, with all maner of weapens to the battayll, an hundreth and twentye thousande.

All these men of warre, ready harnessed to the battayll,* came with a whole hert vnto Hebron, to make Dauid kynge ouer all Israel. And all Israel besyde were of one hert, that Dauid shulde be made kynge. And there were they with Dauid thre dayes, eatyng and drynkynge: for their brethren had prepared for them. And soch neighbours as were aboute them vntyll Isachar, Zabulon and Nephtali, brought bred vpon Asses, Camels,

The xiii. Chapter.

AND Dauid helde a counsell<sup>a</sup> with the captaines ouer thousandes and ouer hundreds, and with all the pryuces, and sayde vnto all the congregation of Israel: Yf it lyke you, and yf it be of the LORDE oure God, let vs sende forth on euery syde to oure other brethren in all the countrees of Israel, and to the prestes and Leuites in the cities where they haue suburbs, y<sup>e</sup> they maye be gathered together vnto vs, and let vs fetch the Arke of oure God agayne vnto vs: for by Sauls tyme we axed after it. Thē sayde the whole cōgregation, that the same shulde be done, for it pleased all the people well.

So Dauid gathered all Israel together from Sihor of Egipte, tyll a man come vnto Hemath, to fetch the Arke of God from Kiriath Iearim. And Dauid wente vp with all Israel to Kiriath Iearim, which lieth in Iuda, to brynge from thence the Arke of God the LORDE, that sytteth vpō the Cherubins, where the name is named: and they caused the Arke of God to be caried vpō a new cart from the house of Abinadab.

Vsa and his brethren droue the cart. As for Dauid and all Israel, they played with all their strength before God, with songes, with harpes, with psalteries, with tabrettes, with Cymbales and trompes.

But whan they came to the barne floore of Chidon, Vsa stretched out his hande to holde the Arke: for the oxen wente out asyde. Then waxed the wrath of the LORDE fearece ouer Vsa, and smote him, because he stretched out his hāde to the Arke, so y<sup>e</sup> he dyed there before God. Thē was Dauid sorry, because y<sup>e</sup> LORDE had made soch a rente vpō Vsa, and called the place Perez Vsa, vnto this daye. And Dauid stode in feare of God the same daye, and sayde: How shal I brynge y<sup>e</sup> Arke of God vnto me? Therefore wolde he not let y<sup>e</sup> Arke of God be broughte vnto him in to y<sup>e</sup> cite of Dauid, but caried it in to y<sup>e</sup> house of Obed Edom the Gathite. So the Arke of God abode with Obed Edom in his house three monethes. And y<sup>e</sup> LORDE blessed Obed Edoms house and all that he had.

The xiv. Chapter.

AND Hiram y<sup>e</sup> kynge of Tyre<sup>a</sup> sent messengers vnto Dauid and Cedre tymber, and masons and carpenters, to buylde him an house. And Dauid perceaued, that the LORDE had confirmed him kynge ouer Israel: for his kyngdome increased for his people of Israels sake. And Dauid toke yet mo wyues at Ierusalem, and begat yet mo sonnes and daughters. And the names of them y<sup>e</sup> were borne vnto him at Ierusalem, are these: Sammua, Sobab, Nathan, Salomon, Iebegar, Elisua, Elipalet, Noga, Nepheg, Iaphia, Elisamma, Baal Iada, Elipalet.

And whan the Philistynes herde that Dauid was anoynted kynge ouer all Israel, they wente vp all to seke Dauid. Whan Dauid herde that, he wente forth agaynst them. And the Philistynes came, and scattered thē selues beneth in y<sup>e</sup> valley of Rephaim. And Dauid axed counsell at God, and sayde: Shal I go vp agaynst the Philistynes? and wilt thou delyuer them in to my hande? The LORDE sayde vnto him: Go vp, and I wil delyuer them in to thy hande. And whan they were gone vp to Baal Prasim, Dauid smote them there. And Dauid sayde: God hath deuyded myne enemies thorow my hande, euen as the water parteth asunder: therfore called they the place Baal Prasim. And there lefte they their goddes. Then *commaunded Dauid to burne them with fyre.

But the Philistynes gat them thither agayne, and scattered them selues beneth in y<sup>e</sup> valley. And Dauid axed counsell at God agayne. And God sayde vnto him: Thou shalt not go vp bebynde them, but turne the from them, that thou mayest come vpon thē ouer agaynst the Peertrees. So whan thou hearest aboue vpon the Peertrees the noyse of the goynge, go thou forth then to the batayll: for God is gone forth then before the to smyte the hoost of the Philistynes. And Dauid dyd as God commaunded him. And they smote the hoost of the Philistynes from Gibeon forth vnto Gaser. And Dauids name was noysed out in all londes. And the LORDE caused y<sup>e</sup> feare of him to come vpō all the Heythen.

Arke of God, & pitched a Tabernacle for it. At that tyme sayde Dauid: The Arke of God is not to be borne, but onely of ſ Leuites: *for them hath the LORDE chosen to beare the Arke of the LORDE, and to mynister vnto him for euer. Therefore gathered Dauid all Israel together vnto Ierusalem, to brynge vp the Arke of the LORDE vnto the place which he had prepared for it.

And Dauid broughte the children of Aaron & the Leuites together. Of the children of Kahath: Vriël the chefe with his brethren, an C. and twentye. Of the children of Merari: Asaia the chefe with his brethrē, two C. and twentye. Of the childrē of Gerson: Ioel the chefe with his brethren, an C. and thirtie. Of ſ childrē of Elizaphan: Semaia the chefe with his brethren, two hundreth. Of the childrē of Hebron: Eliel the chefe, with his brethrē, foure score. Of the children of Vsiel: Amminadab the chefe, with his brethren, an hūdreth and twolue.

And Dauid called Sadoc and Abiathar the prestes, and the Leuites, namely Vriël, Asaia, Ioeli, Semaia, Eliel, Aminadab, and sayde vnto them: Ye are the heades of ſ fathers amonge the Leuites: sanctiſye youre selues therefore & youre brethrē, ſ ye maye brynge vp the Arke of the LORDE God of Israel, to the place ſ I haue prepared for it. †For afore whan ye were not there, the LORDE oure God made a rent amonge vs, because we soughte him not, as we shulde haue done. So ſ prestes & the Leuites halowed thē selues, ſ they mighte brynge vp the Arke of the LORDE God of Israel. And the children of Leui bare the Arke of God the LORDE vpon their shulders with the stauēs theron, ‡as Moses cōmaunded accordinge to ſ worde of the LORDE.

And Dauid spake vnto ſ rulers of ſ Leuites, that they shulde ordeyne some of their brethren to be syngers with psalteries, harpes and loude instrumentes, and Cimbales, to syng loude with ioie.

Then the Leuites appoynted Heman ſ sonne of Ioel: and of his brethren Assaph the sonne of Barachias: and of the children of Merari their brethren, Ethan the sonne of Cusaia: and with them their brethren of the seconde course, namely Zacharias, Iaesiël, Semiramoth, Iehiël, Vnni, Eliab, Benaia, Maeseia, Mathithia, Elipheleia, Mikneia, Obed Edom, Ieiel, the dore keepers. For Heman, Assaph and Ethan were syngers, with brasen belles makynge a loude noyse: but Zacharias, Iaesiël, Semiramoth, Iehiël, Vnni, Eliab, Maeseia & Benaia with Phalteries to Alamothe: Mathithia, Elipheleia, Mikneia, Obed Edom, Ieiel & Asasia with harpes to syng aboute them on hye. Chenania the ruler of the Leuites was the master of Musick to teach them for to syng, for he was a man of vnderstandinge.

And Barachias and Elcana were the dorekeepers of the Arke. But Sachania, Iosaphat, Nathaneel, Amasai, Zacharias, Benaia, Elieser the prestes, blew the trompettes before ſ Arke of God. And Obed Edom and Iehia were dorekeepers of the Arke.

So Dauid and the Elders of Israel, and the captaynes ouer thousandes wente vp to fetch the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE out of the house of Obed Edom with ioie. And whan God had helped the Leuites ſ bare the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt, there were offred seuen bullockes & seuen rāmes. And Dauid had a lynnē garment vpō him, and so had all the Leuites ſ bare the Arke, and ſ syngers, and Chenania the master of Musick with the syngers. Dauid had an ouerbody cote of lynnē vpon him also.

Thus all Israel brought vp the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE with myrth, with trompettes, tabrettes, & loude Cymbales, with psalteries and harpes. Now whan the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE came in to the cite of Dauid, Michol ſ daughter of Saul lokod out at a wyndowe: & whā she sawe kynge Dauid daunsynge & playenge, she despyed him in hir hert.

The xviij. Chapter.

AND whā they brought in the Arke of God, *they set it in ſ Tabernacle, that Dauid had pitched for it, and offred burnt-offerynges & thankofferynges before God. And whā Dauid had ended the burnt-offerynges and thankofferynges, he blessed the people in the name of the LORDE, & distributed vnto euery man in Israel (both vnto man and woman) a cake of bred, and a pece of flesh and a meece of potage.

And he appoynted before the Arke of ſ LORDE certayne Leuites to mynister, that they shulde geue prayse, thankes and louinges vnto the LORDE God of Israel: namely Assaph the first, Zacharias the seconde, Ieiel, Semiramoth, Iehiel, Mathithia, Eliab, Benaia, Obed Edom and Iehiel, with psalteries and harpes. But Assaph with loude Cymbales. Benaia and Ichasiel the prestes with tabrettes, allwaye before the Arke of y couenaunt of God.

33 At the same tyme ordeyned Dauid first of all to geue thākes vnto the LORDE by Assaph and his brethren.

“O geue thankes vnto the LORDE, call vpon his name, tell the people what thinges he hath done.

O let youre songes be of him: prayse him, and let youre talkynge be of all his wonderous workes.

Geue his holy name a good reporte: let y hert of them reioyce, that seke the LORDE.

O seke the LORDE and his strength, seke his face euermore.

Remēbre his maruelous workes that he hath done, his wonders, and the iudgmētes of his mouth.

Ye sede of Israel his seruauant, ye children of Iacob his chosen.

He is the LORDE oure God, his iudgmētes are in all londes.

And sayde: Vnto the wyl I geue y loude of Canaan, y metelyne of youre inheritaunce.

And they wente from one nacion to another, ⁊ from one realme to another people.

He suffred no man to hurte them, and reprocued euen kynges for their sakes.

§ Touch not myne anyoynted, ⁊ do my prophetes no harme.

¶ O synge vnto y LORDE, let all y earth be tellynge of his saluacion from daye to daye.

Declare his hollynes amōge the Heythē, ⁊ his wonderous workes amōge y people.

For the LORDE is greate, and can not worthely be prayed, and more to be had in awe then all goddes.

As for all the goddes of the Heythē, they are but Idols: ¶ but it is the LORDE that made the heauens.

Thankesgeuyng and worshipe are before him, strength and ioye is in his place. D

Ascrybe vnto the LORDE ye kynreds of nacions: ascrybe vnto the LORDE worshipe and strength.

Ascrybe vnto the LORDE the honoure of his name: brynge presentes, and come before him, and worshipe y LORDE in y bewtye of hollynes.

Let the whole earth stōde in awe of him: he hath made the compase of the worlde so fast, that it can not be moued.

Let the heauens reioyse, and let the earth be glad: and let it be tolde amōge the Heythen, that the LORDE reigneth.

Let the See make a noyse, and the fulnesse thereof: let the felde be ioyfull, and all that therein is.

Let all the trees in the wod leape for ioye before the LORDE, for he commeth to iudge the earth.

O geue thankes vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious: and his mercy endureth for euer.

And saye: Helpe vs O God oure Sauoure, and gather vs together, and delyuer vs from the Heythen, that we maye geue thankes vnto thy holy name, and synge prayses vnto the in thy Psalmes.

Praysed be the LORDE God of Israel from euerlastinge to euerlastinge: and let all people saye, Amen, And: Prayse be vnto the LORDE.

So he lefte Assaph and his brethren there before the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE, to mynister allwaye before the Arke, euery daye his daye worke. But Obed Edom and their brethren, eight and thre score, and Obed Edom the sonne of Iedithun, and Hossa, to be dore keepers. The xviij. Chapter.

A T fortunēd whā Dauid dwelt in his house, he sayde vnto ȝ prophet Nathan: Beholde, I dwell in a house of Cedar, and the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE is amonge the curtaynes.

Nathan saide vnto Dauid: What so euer is in thine hert, that do: for God is with ȝ. But the same night came ȝ worde of God vnto Nathan, and sayde: Go and speake to Dauid my seruauēt: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Thou shalt not buylde me an house to be an habitaciō: for I haue dwelt in no house sence the daye that I broughte forth the children of Israel, vnto this daye: But where the Tabernacle and habitation hath bene, there haue I bene where so euer I haue walked in all Israel. Spake I euer to eny of the Iudges in Israel (whom I commaunded to kepe my people) and sayde: Wherfore do ye not buylde me an house of Cedre tymber?

B So shalt thou speake now vnto my seruauēt Dauid: Thus sayeth the LORDE Zebaoth: I toke the from the pasture behynde the shepe, that thou shuldest be the pryncē ouer my people, and haue bene with the whither so euer thou wētest, and haue roted out all thine enemies before the, and haue made the a name, accordinge to the name of the greate men that are vpō earth. And for my people of Israel, I wyl appoynte them a place, and wyl plante them, that they maye dwell there, and nomore to be remoued. And the childrē of wickednes shal oppresse them nomore, like as afore tyme, whā I cōmaunded the Iudges ouer my people of Israel. And I wyl subdue all thine enemies, and do declare vnto the, that the LORDE wyl buylde the an house.

* But whā thy dayes are fulfilled, that thou departest hence with thy fathers, I wyl after the rayse vp thy sede, which shall be euē one of thy sonnes: his kyngdome wyl I stabliszhe, he shal buylde me an house, ⁊ I wyl make his seate sure for euer. I wyl be his father, and he shal be my sonne. And I wyl not withdrawe my mercy from him, as I haue withdrawn it frō him that was before the: But I wyl set him in my house and in my kyngdome for euer, so that his seate shalbe sure for euermore.

And whā Nathan had spoken vnto Dauid C accordinge to all these wordes ⁊ all this vision, kyngē Dauid came and sat him downe before the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE God, who am I? and what is my house, ȝ thou hast broughte me thus farre? And this (O God) hast thou thoughte yet to litle, but hast spoken of thy seruauētes house yet longe for to come. And thou LORDE God hast lokēd downe vpon me from aboue, euen as one man loketh vpon another. What more shal Dauid saye vnto the, ȝ thou bryngest thy seruauēt to soch honoure? Thou knowest thy seruauēt O LORDE, for thy seruauētes sake and accordinge to thy hert hast thou done all these greate thinges, that thou mightest shewe all greate thinges vnto thy seruauēt. LORDE † there is none lyke the, and there is no God but thou, of whom we haue herde with oure eares. And † where is there a people vpon earth as thy people of Israel, where God wente to delyuer him a people, and to make him selfe a name thorow greate ⁊ terrible thinges, to cast out the Heythen before thy people, whom thou hast delyuered out of Egipte? and ȝ people of Israel hast thou made thy people for euer, and thou LORDE art become their God.

Now LORDE, let the worde be verified D for euer, that thou hast spoken ouer thy seruauēt and ouer his house, ⁊ do as thou hast spoken: and let thy name endure and be magnified for euer, that it maye be sayde: The LORDE Zebaoth, the God of Israel is the God in Israel, and that the house of thy seruauēt Dauid maye be stablyszhed before the: for thou LORDE hast opened the eare of thy seruauēt, that thou wilt buylde him an house. Therefore hath thy seruauēt founde (confydence) to make his prayer before the. Now LORDE, thou art God, and hast promysed soch good vnto thy seruauēt. Begynne now to blesse the house of thy seruauēt, that it maye be euermore before the: for loke what thou blestest (O LORDE) the same is blessed for euer.

The xii. Chapter.

AFTER this smote Dauid the Philistynes, and subdued them, and toke Gath and the villages therof out of the hande of the Philistynes. He smote the Moabites likewise, so that the Moabites were subdued vnto Dauid, and gaue him trybute. He smote Hadad Eser also the kyng of Zoba in Hemath, whan he wente to set vp his power by the water Euphrates.

And Dauid toke from him a thousande charettes, seven thousande horsmen, and twēty thousande fote men. And Dauid lamed all the charettes, and kepte an hundred charettes ouer. And the Syriās came from Damascō, to helpe Hadad Eser the kyng of Zoba. Howbeit Dauid smote two and twentie thousande of the same Syrians, and layed men of warre at Damascō in Syria, so that the Syrians were subdued vnto Dauid, and brought him trybute. For the LORDE helped Dauid, whither so euer he wente.

B And Dauid toke the shyldes of golde, the Hadad Esers seruantes had, and broughte the to Ierusalē. And out of Tibeath and Chun the cities of Hadad Eser, toke Dauid very moch brasse, wherof Salomon made the brassen lauer, and pilers, and brassen vessels.

And whā Thogu the kyng of Hemath herde, the Dauid had smytten all the power of Hadad Eser, he sent his sonne Hadorā vnto kyng Dauid, to salute him and to blesse him, because he had fought with Hadad Eser, and smytted him (for Thogu had warre with Hadad Eser) and all the same vessels of golde, syluer and of brasse, dyd kyng Dauid consecrate vnto the LORDE, with the syluer and golde that he had taken from the Heythē, namely, from the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, Philistynes, and Amalechites.

C And Abisai the sonne of Zeru Ia smote eightene thousande of the Edomites in the Salt valley, and layed men of warre in Edomea, so that all the Edomites were subdued vnto Dauid: for the LORDE helped Dauid, whither so euer he wente.

Thus Dauid reigned ouer all Israel, and executed iudgment and righteousnes vnto all the people. Ioab the sonne of Zeru Ia was captayne ouer the hoost. Iosaphat the sonne of Ahilud was Chaunceler. Sadoc the sonne of Achitob, and Ahimelech the sonne of Abiathar, were prestes. Sauesa was Scribe. Benaiā the sonne of Ioiada was ouer the Chrethians and Plethians. And Dauids sonnes were chefe at the kynges hande.

The xii. Chapter.

AND after this dyed Nahas the kyng of the childre of Ammon, and his sonne was kyng in his steade. Then sayde Dauid: I wil do mercy vpon Hanun the sonne of Nahas, for his father dyd mercy vpon me: and so he sent messangers to comforte him ouer his father. And whā Dauids seruantes came in to the londe of the children of Ammon vnto Hanun to comforte him, the prynces of the children of Ammon sayde vnto Hanun: Thinkest thou that Dauid honoureth thy father in thy sighte, that he hath sent comforters vnto the? Yee his seruantes are come vnto the, to search and to ouerthrowe, and to spye out the londe. Then toke Hanun the seruantes of Dauid, and shoue them, and cut the halfe of their garments of, euē by the loynes, so let the go. And they wente their waye, and sent men to tell Dauid. Neuertheles he sent to mete them (for the men were put to greate shame) and the kyng sayde: Abyde at Iericho, tyll youre beerdes be growne, and then come agayne.

B Whan the childre of Ammon sawe, that they stynked in the sighte of Dauid, both Hanun and the children of Ammon sent a thousande talētes of syluer, to hyre charettes and horsmen out of Mesopotamia, out of Maecha and out of Zoba: and hyred two and thirtie thousande charettes, and the kyng of Maecha with his people, which came and pitched their tentes before Medba. And the children of Ammon gathered them selues together out of their cities, and came to the battayll. Whan Dauid herde that, he sent Ioab thither with all the hoost of the men of armes. And the childre of Ammon were gone forth, and prepared them selues to the battayll before the gate of the cite. But the kynges were come, kepte them asyde in the felde.

And whan the children of Ammon sawe ſ the Syrians fled, they fled also before Abisai his brother, and wente in to the cite. And Ioab came to Ierusalem.

And Sophach the chefe captayne of Hadad Eser wente before them. Whā this was tolde Dauid, he gathered all Israel together, and wente ouer Iordane. And whan he came at them, he set ſ battayll in araye agaynst them. And Dauid prepared him selfe to ſ battayll agaynst ſ syrians, ⁊ they foughte with him: but ſ syrians fled before Israel. And Dauid slewe of the Syrians seuē thousande charettes, ⁊ fortye thousande fote men. And Sophach the chefe captayne slewe he also. And whan Hadad Esers seruantes sawe that they were smyttē before Israel, they made peace with Dauid ⁊ his seruantes. And the Syrians wolde helpe the childre of Ammon nomore.

Afterwarde arose there warre at Gasar with the Philistynes. Then Sibechai ſ Husathite smote Sibai, which was one of the children of Rephaim, and he subdued him. And there arose warre agayne with the Philistynes. Thē Elhanah ſ sonne of Iair smote Lahemi ſ brother of Goliath ſ Gathite, whose speares staff was like a weeuers lome. Afterwarde was there a battayll at Gath, where there was a man of a greate stature, ſ had sixe fyngers and sixe toes, which make foure and twentye. seruaunt: for I haue done very vnwisely. And the LORDE spake vnto Gad Dauid's Seer, and sayde: Go speake to Dauid, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE: Three things laye I before the, chouse of one of them, if I maye do it vnto the. And whā Gad came to Dauid, he spake vnto him: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Chouse of either thre yere derth, or thre monethes to flye before thine aduersaries, or before the swerde of thine enemies, if it maye ouertake the: or thre dayes of swerde of the LORDE, and pestilence in the londe, if the angell of the LORDE maye destroye in all the coastes of Israel. Loke now what answer I shal geue vnto him if sent me. Dauid sayde vnto Gad: I am in greate trouble: yet wyl I rather fall in to the hande of the LORDE, for his mercy is exceedynge greate, and I wil not fall in to the handes of men.

Then dyd the LORDE cause pestilence to come in to Israel, so that there fell of Israel thre score and ten thousande men. And God sent the angell to Ierusalem to destroye it. And euen in the destruccion the LORDE considered, and he repented of the euell, and sayde vnto the angell if destroyer: It is ynough, holde now thy hande.

The angell of the LORDE stode besyde the barne of Arnan if Iebusite. And Dauid lifte vp his eyes, and sawe the angell of the LORDE stondinge betwene heauē and earth, and a naked swerde in his hande stretched out ouer Ierusalem. Then Dauid and the Elders beyng clothed with sack cloth, fell vpon their faces. And Dauid sayde vnto God: Am not I he that caused the people to be nombred? I am he that hath synned and done euell: as for these shepe, what haue they done? LORDE my God, let thine hande be agaynst me and agaynst my fathers house, and not agaynst thy people to plage them.

And the angell sayde vnto Gad, that he shulde speake vnto Dauid, that Dauid shulde go vp, and set vp an altare in the barne of Arnan the Iebusite. So Dauid wente vp accordinge to the worde of Gad, which he spake in the name of the LORDE. But whan Arnan turned him, and sawe the angell (and his foure sonnes with him) they hyd the selues: for Arnan throszshed wheate.

Now whan Dauid came to Arnan, Arnan looked, and was aware of Dauid, and wete forth out of the barne, and worshipped Dauid with his face to the grounde. And Dauid sayde vnto Arnan: Geue me rowme in the barne, to buylde an altare vnto the LORDE therin: for if full money shalt thou geue it me, that the plage maye cease from the people.

But Arnan sayde vnto Dauid: Take it vnto the, and let my lorde the kynge do as pleaseth him. Beholde, that oxen geue I for a burnt-offerynge, and those vessels to the oxen, and wheate for the meat-offerynge, I geue it all. Neuertheles the kynge sayde vnto Arnan: Not so: but for if full money wyl I bye it: for that which is thine wyl not I take for the LORDE, and offre a burnt-offerynge for naughte.

So Dauid gaue Arnan for if rowme, sixe hundred Sycles of golde in weight. And there buylde Dauid an altare vnto the LORDE, and offered burnt-offerynges and slayn-offerynges. And whan he called vpon the LORDE, he herde him thorow the fyre from heauē vpon the altare of the burnt-offerynge. And the LORDE sayde vnto the angell, that he shulde put his swerde in to his sheeth.

At the same tyme whā Dauid sawe, that the LORDE had herde him vpon the corne floore of Arnan if Iebusite, he dyd sacrifice there. For if habitacion of the LORDE which Moses had made in the wyldernes, and the altare of burnt-offerynges, was at that tyme in the hye place at Gibeon. But Dauid coule not go thither to seke God before it, for he feared the swerde of the LORDES angell. And Dauid sayde: * Here shal be if house of God if LORDE, and this the altare of burnt-offerynges for Israel.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND Dauid commaunded to gather together the straungers that were in the londe of Israel, and appoynted masons to hewe stone for the buyldinge of the house of God. And Dauid prepared moch yron for nales in the dores of the portes, and for soch thinges as were to be naled together, and so moch brasse, that it was not to be weyed: and Cedre trees innumerable: for they of Zidon and Tyre brought Dauid moch Cedre tymbre: for Dauid thoughte, Salomō my sonne is but a childe and tender: But the house that shal be buylde vnto the LORDE, shal be greate, that his name and prayse maye be exalted in all londes, therfore wyl I prouyde for him. So Dauid made greate prouysion before his death.

B And he called Salomon his sonne, & commaunded him to buylde the house of the LORDE God of Israel, and sayde vnto him: My sonne, \*I was minded to buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE my God, but the worde of  $\text{f}$  LORDE came vnto me, and sayde: Thou hast shed moch bloude, and strycken many battayls, therfore shalt thou not buylde an house vnto my name, for as moch as thou hast shed so moch bloude vpon the earth before me. Beholde, the sonne which shal be borne vnto the, shal be a quyetie man: and I wyl cause him to be in rest from al his enemies on euery syde, for his name shalbe Salomon: for I wyl geue peace and rest vpon Israel as longe as he lyueth. He shal buylde an house vnto my name. He shal be my sonne, and I wyl be his father. And I wyl stablyshe  $\text{f}$  seate of his kyngdome vpō Israel for euer.

C Now my sonne, the LORDE shal be wyth the, and thou shalt prospere, that thou mayest buylde an house vnto the LORDE thy God, acordynge as he hath spoken of the. The LORDE also shal geue the wyszdomme & vnderstandynge, and shal commytte Israel vnto the, that thou mayest kepe the lawe of the LORDE thy God. But then shal thou prospere, yf thou take hede to do after the ordynaunces and lawes which the LORDE commaunded Moses vnto Israel. Be stronge, and take a good corage vnto the, feare not, and be not faynt harted. Beholde, I haue in my pouerte prouyded for the house of the LORDE, an hundreth thousande talentes of golde, and a thousande tymes a thousande talentes of syluer, and brasse and yron without nombre: for there is so moch of it.

And tymbre and stone haue I prepared, thou mayest get more therof. Thou hast many workmen also, mesons and carpenters in stone and tymber, and all maner of men that haue vnderstandinge in all worke off golde, syluer, brasse, and yron without nombre. Yet get the vp, and be doynge, and the LORDE shal be with the.

B And Dauid commaunded all the rulers of Israel, to helpe Salomon his sonne, and sayde: Is not the LORDE youre God with you, and hath geuen you rest on euery syde? for he hath deluyered the inhabitors of the londe in to youre handes, and the londe is subdued before the LORDE and before his people. Geue ouer youre hert now therfore and youre soule, to seke the LORDE youre God, and get you vp, and buylde a Sanctuary vnto the LORDE God, that the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE and the holy vessels of God, maye be brought in to the house, which shalbe buylded vnto the name of the LORDE. So Dauid made Salomon his sonne kynge ouer Israel, whan he himselfe was olde, and had lyued ynough.

The xxiij. Chapter.

A ND Dauid gathered vnto Ierusalem all A the rulers of Israel, namely † prynces of the trybes, the rulers ouer the courses, which wayted vpon the kynge, the captaynes ouer thousandes and ouer hundreds, the rulers ouer the goodes and catell of the kyng and of his sonnes, with the chāberlaines, warryers and valeaunt men. And Dauid the kyng stode vp vpon his fete, and saide: Heare me my brethren and my people: *I was mynded to buylde an house, where the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE shulde rest, and a fote stole for the fete of oure God, and prepared my selfe for to buylde, But God sayde vnto me: "Thou shalt not buylde an house vnto my name, for thou art a man of warre, and hast shed bloude.

3 †Now hath the LORDE God of Israel chosen me out of all my fathers house, ‡I shulde be kyng ouer Israel: for †Iuda hath he chosen to be the Prynce, and in the house of Iuda amonge my fathers children hath he had pleasure vnto me, to make me kyng ouer all Israel: and amōge all my sonnes (for the LORDE hath geuen me many sonnes) he hath chosen Salomon my sonne, to syt vpon the seate of the kyngdome of the LORDE ouer Israel, and hath sayde vnto me: § Salomon thy sonne shall buylde me an house and my courtes: for I haue chosen him to be my sonne, ¶ I wil be his father, ¶ wyll stabilishe his kyngdome for euer, yf he be constant to do after my commaundementes and lawes, as it is this daye. Now in the sight of all Israel the congregacion of the LORDE, and in the eares of oure God, se that ye obserue and seke all the commaudemētes of the LORDE youre God, that ye maye possesse this good londe and that ye and youre children maie haue ¶ inheritance therof for euer.

C And thou my sonne Salomō, knowe thou the God of thy father, and serue him with all thy hert, and with the desyre of thy soule: for the LORDE searcheth all hertes, and vnderstandeth all thoughtes ¶ ymaginacions. Yf thou seke him, thou shalt fynde him: but yf thou forsake him, he shall refuse the for euer. Take hede now, for the LORDE hath chosen the, to buylde an house to be the Sactuary: be stronge, and make it.

And Dauid gaue Salomon his sonne a patrone of the Porche, and of his house, and of the celles and perlers and ynnerner chābers, and of the house of the Mercyseate, ¶ of all that he had in his mynde, namely of the courte of the LORDES house, and of all the oratories rounde aboute the treasures in ¶ house of God, and of the treasures of such thinges as were halowed, of the ordinaunces of the prestes, and Leuites, and of all ¶ busynesse of the offyces in the house of the LORDE.

D Golde (gaue he him) after ¶ golde weight for all maner of vessels of euery offyce, and all siluer ornamentes after the weight for all maner of vessell of euery offyce: and weight for the golden candilstickes and golden lampes, for euery candilstycke and his lampes his weight: likewise for the siluer candilstickes gaue he the weight to the candilstickes ¶ his lampes, acordynge as was required for euery candilstycke. He gaue golde also for ¶ tables of the shewbred, for euery table his weight: and syluer lykewise for the syluer tables. And pure golde for the fleshokes, basens and censors: and for the golden cuppes, vnto euery cuppe his weight: and for the siluer cuppes, vnto euery cuppe his weight: and for the altare of incense his weight, of the most pure golde.

E And a patrone of the charett of the golden Cherubins, that they mighte sprede out them selues, and couer the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE. All this is geuen me in wrytinge of the hande of the LORDE, to make me vnderstonde all the workes of the patrone.

And Dauid sayde vnto Salomō his sonne: Be thou manly and stronge, and make it, feare not, and be not fayntharted, the LORDE God my God shal be with the, and shall not withdrawe his hande, ner fayle the, tyll thou haue fynished euery worke for the seruyce in the house of the LORDE. Beholde, the courses of the prestes and Leuites to all the offyces in the house of God are with the in euery worke, and are willinge, and haue wisdom to all the offyces: and so haue the prynces and all the people for euery thinge that thou hast to do.

The xij. Chapter.

A ND kyng Dauid sayde vnto all the congregacion: God hath chosen Salomon one of my sonnes, which yet is yonge and tender. But the worke is greate: for it is not a mans palace, but the LORDE Gods. Yet haue I after all my abilitie prepared vnto the house of God, golde for the vessels of golde, syluer for them of syluer, brasse for them of brasse, yron for the of yron, wod for them of wod, Onix stones, set Rubyes, ¶ stones of dyuerse coloures, ¶ all precious stones, ¶

Marble stones in multitude. Besydes this, for the good wyl y I haue to the house of God, I haue of myne awne proper good thre M. talētes of golde of Ophir, ⁊ seuen M. talētes of pure syluer, which I geue vnto the holy house of God, besyde all y I haue prepared, to ouerlaye y walles of the house, y the same which ought to be of golde, maye be of golde: ⁊ that it which ought to be of syluer, maye be of syluer: and for all maner of worke by the hande of the craftesmen. And who is now fre wyllinge, to fyll his hande this daye vnto the LORDE?

Then were the prynces of the fathers, y prynces of the trybes of Israel, the captaynes ouer thousandes ⁊ ouer hundredes, the rulers ouer the kynges busynes, fre wyllinge, ⁊ gaue to y mynistracion in the house of God fyue M. talētes of golde, and ten M. guldens, and ten M. talētes of syluer, eightene M. talētes of brasse, and an hundred M. talētes of yron. And by whom so euer were fōūde stones, they gaue them to the treasure of the house of the LORDE, vnder the hāde of Iehiel the Gersonite.

And y people were glad that they were fre wyllinge: for they gaue it with a good wyl (euen with all their hert) vnto the LORDE. And Dauid also y kyng reioysed greatly, and prayed God, and sayde before the whole congregacion: Praysed be thou O LORDE God of Israel oure father, vnto the belongeth worshippe and power, glory, victory ⁊ thanks: for all that is in heauen and earth, is thine: thine is y kyngdome, and thou art exalted aboue all prynces. Thine are riches and honoure before y, thou reigest ouer all, in thy hande consisteth power and might, in thy hāde is it to make euery man greate and stronge.

Now thāke we the oure God, and prayse y name of thy glory: For who am I? What is my people? that we shulde be able with a fre wyl to offre, as this is done? For of the cometh all, and of thy hande haue we geuen it the: * For we are but pilgrims ⁊ straungers before the, as were all oure fathers. Oure life vpon earth is as a shadowe, and here is no abydinge. O LORDE oure God, all this abundaunce that we haue prepared to buylde the an house vnto thy name, came of thy hande, and is thine altogether. I knowe my God, that thou tryest the hert, and that vnfaynednes is acceptable vnto the: therfore haue I geuē all this with an vnfayned hert, euē with a good wyl, and now haue I had ioye to se thy people (which here are present) offre with a fre wyl vnto the. O LORDE God of oure fathers Abraham, Isaac, ⁊ Israel, kepe thou euermore soch purposes and thoughtes in y hertes of thy people, ⁊ prepare thou their hertes vnto the. And graunte my sonne Salomon a perfecte hert, that he maye kepe thy cōmaundementes, thy testimonies, ⁊ thy statutes, that he maye do all, ⁊ buylde this palace, which I haue prepared.

And Dauid sayde vnto the whole cōgregacion: O prayse the LORDE youre God. And all the cōgregacion prayed y LORDE God of their fathers, ⁊ bowed them selues, ⁊ worshipped the LORDE ⁊ then the kyng, and offred sacrifices vnto the LORDE. And on y nexte morow offred they burnt offerynges, a M. bullockes, a M. rāmes, a M. lābes with their drynk offerynges, ⁊ plenteously offred they amonge all Israel. And they ate and dranke y same daie before the LORDE with greate ioye, and made Salomon the sonne of Dauid kyng y seconde tyme, and anoynted him to be y pryncce for the LORDE, ⁊ ⁊ Sadoc to be the prest.

Thus sat Salomon vpon the seate of y LORDE, kyng in his fathers steade, ⁊ prospered. And all Israel obeyed him, ⁊ all y rulers ⁊ mightie men, ⁊ all kyngs Dauids children submytted themselues vnto kyngs Salomon. And y LORDE made Salomon excellent ⁊ greate in y sighte of all Israel, ⁊ gaue him soch a glorious kyngdome, as none had before him ouer Israel.

So had Dauid now bene kyng ouer all Israel. And y tyme that he was kyng ouer Israel, is fortye yeares: At Hebron reigned he seuen yeare, and at Ierusalem thre ⁊ thirtie yeare, ⁊ dyed in a good age, full of dayes, riches and honoure. And Salomon his sonne was kyng in his steade.

These actes of kyngs Dauid (both y first and last) beholde, they are wyrtten amonge the actes of Samuel the Seer, and amonge the actes of the prophet Nathan, and amōge the actes of Gad the Seer, with all his kyngdome, power and tymes which passed vnder him, both vpon Israel ⁊ vpon all the kyngdomes of the earth.

The first Chapter.

AND Salomon the sonne of Dauid was established in his kyngdome, and the LORDE his God was with him, & made him exceedinge greate. And Salomon spake vnto all Israel, to the captaynes ouer thousandes and ouer hundreds, to the Iudges, and to all y prynces in Israel, and to the chefest fathers, so that they wente (Salomon and the whole congregacion with him) vnto the hye place which was at Gibeā: *for there was y Tabernacle of y witness of God, †which Moses the seruauent of the LORDE had made in y wyldernes. ‡For Dauid had brought vp the Arke of God from Kiriath Iarim, whan he had prepared for it: for he had pitched a tent for it at Ierusalem. As for y brasen altare § which Bezaleel the sonne of Vri the sonne of Hur had made, it was there before the habita-of the LORDE: and Salomon and the con-gregation soughte God. And Salomon offred a thousande burntofferynges vpō the brasen altare that stode before the Tabernacle of witnesse.

In the same night appeared God vnto Salomon, and sayde vnto him: Axe, what shal I geue the? And Salomon sayde vnto God: Thou hast done greate mercy vnto my father Dauid, and hast made me kynge in his steade. Now LORDE God, let thy worde that thou hast promysed vnto my father Dauid, be verified, *for thou hast made me kynge ouer a people, which is as many in nōbre as the dust vpon the earth. Graunte me wyszdome therfore and knowlege, † I maye go out and in before this people: for who is able to iudge this greate people of thine?

Then sayde God vnto Salomon: For so moch as thou art so mynded, and hast not desyred riches ner good, ner honoure, ner the soules of thine enemies, ner longe life, but hast requyred wyszdome and knowlege, to iudge my people, ouer whom I haue made the kynge, wyszdome therfore and knowlege be geuen the. Morouer, riches & good and honoure wyl I geue the, so that soch one as thou hath not bene before the amōge the kynges, nether shal be after the.

So came Salomon from the hye place (which was at Gibeon) vnto Ierusalē from † Tabernacle of witnessse, and reigned ouer Israel. And Salomon gathered him charettes and horsmen, so that he had a thousande and foure hundreth charettes, & twolue thousande horsmen: and those appoynted he to be in the charet cities, and with the kynge at Ierusalem. And the kynge broughte it so to passe, that there was as moch syluer & golde at Ierusalē as stones: and as many Ceders, as the Molberyes trees, that are in the valleys. And there were horses broughte vnto Salomon out of Egipte, & the kynges marchautes fetched them from Kena for moneye. And they came vp, and broughte out of Egipte a charet for sixe hūdreth syluer pēs, and an horse for an hundreth and fiftye. Thus broughte they also vnto all the kynges of the Hethites, and to the kynges of † Syrians.

The ij. Chapter.

AND Salomon thoughte to buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE, & an house for his kyngdome: and tolde out thre score and ten thousande men to beare burthens, and foure score thousande that hewed tymber vpo the mount, and thre thousande and sixe hundreth officers ouer them. † And Salomon sent vnto Hiram the kynge of Tyre, sayenge: As † thou dydest with my father, & sendest him Cedar trees, to builde an house for to dwell in (euen so do thou with me also.) Beholde, I wyl buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE my God, to sanctifie it, for to burne good incense before him, and allwaye to prepare † shewbred, and burntofferynge in the mornyng and in the euenyng, on the Sabbathes & New mones, and solempne feastes of † LORDE oure God euermore for Israel.

And the house that I wyl buylde, shal be greate: for oure God is greater then all goddes. But who is able to buylde him an house? For heauen & the heauens of all heauens maye not cōprehende him. Who am I then, that I shulde buylde him an house? But onely for this intent to burne incense before him?

Sēde me now therfore a wyse mā to worke with golde, syluer, brasse, yron, scarlet, purple, yalow sylke and soch one as can graue carued worke with the wyse men that are with me in Iewry and Ierusalem, whom my father Dauid ordeyned. And sende me tymber of Cedar, pyne tre and costly wodd from Libanus: for I knowe that thy seruantes can hewe tymber vpon Libanus. And beholde, my seruantes shalbe with thy seruantes, to prepare me moch tymber: for the house that I wyl buylde, shalbe greate & maruelous goodly.

And beholde, I wyl geue vnto the carpenters thy seruantes which hewe the tymber, twētye thousande quarters, of beaten wheate, and twētye thousande quarters of barleye, and twētye thousande Batthes of wyne, and twētye thousande Batthes of oyle.

Then sayde Hiram the kynge of Tyre by wrytinge, and sent it vnto Salomon: Because the LORDE loueth his people, therfore hath he made † to be kynge ouer them. And Hiram sayde morouer: Prayed be † LORDE God of Israel, which made heauen & earth, that he hath geuē kynge Dauid a wyse and prudent sonne, and soch one as hath vnderstandinge to buylde an house vnto the LORDE, & an house for his realme. Therfore sende I now a wyse man that hath vnderstandyng, † euen Hiram Abi (which is the sonne of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his father was of Tyre) which can worke in golde, syluer, brasse, yron, stone, tymber, scarlet, yalowe sylke, lynnē, purple and to carue all maner of thinges, and to make what cōnyng thinge so euer is geuen him, with thy wyse men, and with the wyse men of my lorde kynge Dauid thy father. And Salomon nombred all the straungers in the londe of Israel, accordinge to the nombre whan Dauid his father nombred them: and there were founde an hundreth & fiftye thousande, thre thousande and sixe hūdreth. And of the same he made thre score and ten thousande bearers of burthens, and foure score thousande hewers vpō  $\frac{1}{2}$  mount, and thre thousande and sixe hundreth ouerseers, which helde  $\frac{1}{2}$  people at their worke.

The iij. Chapter.

AND Salomon beganne to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem vpon the mount Moria, * that was shewed vnto Dauid his father, which Dauid had prepared for the rowme, vpon the corne floore of Arnan the Iebusite. In the seconde daye of the seconde moneth in the fourth yeare of his reigne begāne he to buylde. And so layed Salomon the foundation to buylde the house of God: first the length thre score cubytes, the bredth twentye cubites: and the Porche before the wydenes of the house, was twentye cubites longe, but the height was an hundreth and twentye, and he ouerlayed it on the ynsyde with pure golde.

But the greате house sylde he with Pyne tre, and ouerlayed it with the best golde, and made palme trees and throwne worke thereon, and ouerlayed the house with precious stones to beutifye it. As for the golde, it was golde of Paruaim. And the balkes and postes aboue, and the walles, and the dores of it ouerlayed he with golde, and caused Cherubins to be carued on the walles.

He made also the house of the Most holy, whose length was twentye cubites accordinge to the wydenesse of the house: and the bredth of it was twentye cubites likewise, and he ouerlayed it with the best golde by sixe hundreth talentes. And for nales he gaue fiftye Sicles of golde in weight, and ouerlayed the chambers with golde. He made also in the house of the most holy, two Cherubins of carued worke, and ouerlayed them with golde: and the length on the wynges of the Cherubins, so that one wyng had fyue cubytes, and touched the wall of the house: and the other wyng had fyue cubytes also, and touched the wyng of the other Cherub.

Euen so had one wyng of the other Cherub fyue cubites likewise, and touched the wall of the house: and his other wyng had fyue cubites also, and touched the wyng of the other Cherub: so that these wynges of the Cherubins were spred out twentye cubites wyde. And they stode vpō their fete, and their face was turned to the house warde.

He made a vayle also of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple and linnenworke, and made Cherubins thereon. And before the house he made two pilers fyue and thirtie cubites longe, and the knoppes aboue thereon, fyue cubytes. And he made throwne worke for the quere, and put it aboue vpon the pilers: and made an hundreth pomgranates, and put them on the wrythren worke. And he set vp the pilers before the temple, the one on the righte honde, and the other on the lefte: and that on the righte honde called he Iachin, and it on the lefte honde called he Boos.

The iiii. Chapter.

HE made a brasen altare also, twentye cubytes longe, and twentye cubytes brode, and ten cubites hye. † And he made a molten lauer ten cubites wyde frō the one syde to the other rounde aboute, and fyue cubytes hye. And a metelyne of thirtie cubites mighte comprehend it aboute. And ymages of Bullockes were vnder it. And aboute the lauer (which was ten cubites wyde) there were two rowes of knoppes,  $\frac{1}{2}$  were molten withall.

It stode so vpon the bullockes, that thre were turned towarde the north, thre towarde the west, thre towarde the south, and thre towarde the east, and the lauer aboue vpon them, and all their hynder partes were on the ynsyde. The thicknesse of it was an hand bredth, and the edge of it was like the edge of a cuppe, and as a floured rose. And it conteyned thre thousande Batthes.

And he made ten kettels, wherof he set fyue on the righte hande and fyue on the lefte, to waszshe in them soch thinges as belonged to the burntofferynge, that they mighte thrust them therein: but  $\frac{1}{2}$  lauer (made he) for the prestes to wash in.

B Ten golden candelstickes made he also as they ought to be, and set them in the temple: fyue on the righte hande, and fyue on the lefte. And made ten tables, and set them in the temple: fyue on the righte hande, and fyue on the lefte. And made an hundreth basens of golde. He made a courte likewyse for the prestes, and a greate courte, and dores in the courte, and ouerlayed  $\text{f}$  dores with brasse. And the lauer set he on the righte syde towarde the south east. And Hiram made cauldrons, shouels and basens.

So Hiram fynished the worke which he made for kynge Salomon in the house of God: namely the two pilers with the roundels and knoppes aboue vpon both the pilers, and both the wrythen ropes to couer both the roundels of  $\text{f}$  knoppes aboue vpon the pilers, and the four hundreth pomgranates on both the wrythē ropes, two rowes of pomgranates on euery rope, to couer the roundels of the knoppes that were aboue vpon the pilers.

C He made the stoles also and  $\text{f}$  kettels vpon the stoles, and a lauer, and twolue bullockes there vnder. And pottes, shouels, fleshokes, and all their vessels made Hiram Abif of pure metall for kynge Salomon vnto the house of the LORDE. In the coaste of Iordane dyd the kynge cause them to be molten in thicke earth betwene Suchoth and Zaredatha.

And Salomon made all these vessels which were so many, that the weight of  $\text{f}$  metall was not to be soughte out. And Salomon made all the ornamentes for the house of God: namely, the golden altare, the tables and the shewbreds thereon, the candelstickes with their lampes of pure golde, to burne before the Quere accordinge to the maner: and the floures and the lampes and the snoffers were of golde, all these were of pure golde.

And the knyues, basens, spones and pottes, were of pure golde. And the intraunce and his dores within vnto the Most holy, and the dores of the house of the temple were of golde. Thus was all  $\text{f}$  worke fynished, which Salomon made in the house of the LORDE.

The b. Chapter

A ND Salomon broughte in all  $\text{f}$  his father Dauid had sanctified,\* namely, syluer and golde, and all maner of ornamentes, and layed them in the treasures of the house of God. \*The gathered Salomon all the Elders in Israel together, all  $\text{f}$  heades of the trybes, prynces of the fathers amoge the childrē of Israel vnto Ierusalē, to brynge vp the Arke of the couenant of the LORDE out of the cite of Dauid, that is Sion. And there resorted vnto the kynge all the men in Israel at the feast, that is in the seuenth moneth, and all  $\text{f}$  Elders in Israel came.

And  $\text{f}$  Leuites toke the Arke,  $\text{t}$  broughte it vp with the Tabernacle of witnessse, and all the holy vessels that were in the Tabernacle: and  $\text{f}$  prestes and Leuites broughte them vp. As for kynge Salomon and all the cōgregacion of Israel that was gathered vnto him before the Arke, they offred shepe and oxen, so many, that no man coulede nombre ner reken them.

Thus the prestes broughte the Arke of  $\text{f}$  couenant of the LORDE vnto hir place in to the quere of the house, euen in to  $\text{f}$  Most holy vnder the wynges of the Cherubins, so that the Cherubins spred out their wynges ouer the place of the Arke: and the Cherubins couered the Arke and the stauers therof from aboue. And the stauers were so longe,  $\text{f}$  the knoppes of them were sene from the Arke before the quere, but on the outsyde were they not sene. And it was there vnto this daye. And there was nothinge in the Arke, saue the two tables, which Moses put therin at Horeb, whan the LORDE made a couenant with the childrē of Israel, what tyme as they were departed out of Egipte.

And whan the prestes wente out of the Sanctuary (for all  $\text{f}$  prestes that were founde, sanctified them selues, because the courses were not kepte) the Leuites with all those that were vnder Asaph, Heman, Iedithun and their children and brethren, beyng clothed in linnen, songe with Cymbales, psalteries and harpes, and stode towarde the east parte of the altare, and an hundreth  $\text{t}$  twentye prestes with them, which blewe with trompettes. And it was, as yf one dyd trompet and synge, as though a voyce had bene herde of praysinge and geuyng thanks vnto the LORDE.

And whan the voyce arose from  $\text{f}$  trompettes, cymbales and other instrumentes of musick, and from praysinge the LORDE (because he is gracious, and because his mercy endureth for euer) the house of the LORDE was fylled on the ynside with a cloude, so y<sup>e</sup> the prestes coulde not stonde to mynister for the cloude: for the glory of the LORDE fylled the house of God.

The vi. Chapter.

THEN sayde Salomon: The LORDE sayde, "that he wolde dwell in a darck cloude: I haue buylde an house to be an habitacion vnto the: ¶ a seate, y<sup>e</sup> thou mayest dwell there for euer. And the kyng turned his face, and blessed all the congregacion of Israel: for the whole cōgregacion of Israel stode, ¶ he sayde: Prysed be the LORDE God of Israel, which promysed by his mouth vnto my father Dauid, and with his hande hath fulfilled it, whā he sayde: * Sēce the tyme that I broughte my people out of the lond of Egipte, I haue chosen no cite in all y<sup>e</sup> trybes of Israel, to buylde an house for my name to be there, nether haue I chosen eny man to be prynce ouer my people of Israel. † But Ierusalem haue I chosen, for my name to be there: ¶ Dauid haue I electe, to be prynce ouer my people of Israel.

B And whan my father Dauid was mynded to buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE God of Israel, the LORDE sayde vnto Dauid my father: Where as thou wast mynded to buylde an house vnto my name, thou hast done well: howbeit thou shalt not buylde the house, but thy sonne which shall come out of thy loynes, shal buylde the house vnto my name.

Thus hath y<sup>e</sup> LORDE now performed his worde, that he spake: for I am come vp in my father Dauids steade, and syt vpon the seate of Israel, euen as the LORDE sayde, ¶ haue buylde an house vnto the name of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God of Israel, ¶ in it haue I put y<sup>e</sup> Arke, wherin is the couenaunt of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, which he made with the childrē of Israel.

C And he stode before the altare of the LORDE in the presence of the whole congregacion of Israel, and spred out his handes: for Salomon had made a brasen pulpit, and set it in the myddes of the courte, fyue cubites longe, and fyue cubites brode, and thre cubites hye: vpon the same stode he, and fell downe vpon his knees in the presence of the whole cōgregacion of Israel, and helde out his handes towarde heauē and sayde: † O LORDE God of Israel, there is no god like the, nether in heauen ner vpon earth, thou that kepest couenaunt and mercy for thy seruantes, that walke before the with all their hert. Thou hast kepte promes with my father Dauid thy seruauant: With thy mouth thou saydest it, and with thy hande hast thou fulfilled it, as it is come to passe this daye. Now LORDE God of Israel, make good vnto my father Dauid thy seruauant, that which thou hast promysed him, ¶ sayde: Thou shalt not want a man before me, to syt vpon the seate of Israel: yf thy children kepe their waye, so y<sup>e</sup> they walke in my lawe, like as thou hast walked before me: Now LORDE God of Israel, let thy worde be verified, which thou hast promysed vnto Dauid thy seruauant.

For thinkest thou that God in very dede dwelleth amonge men vpon earth? § Beholde, the heauen and y<sup>e</sup> heauens of all heauens maye not cōteyne the: how shulde then this house do it, which I haue buylde? But turne the vnto the prayer of thy seruauant, and to his supplicaciō (O LORDE my God) that thou mayest heare the thankesgeuyng and prayer, which thy seruauant maketh before the, so that thine eyes be open ouer this house daye and night, euen ouer this place (wherin thou saydest thou woldest set thy name) that thou mayest heare the prayer, which thy seruauant shall make in this place. Heare now therfore the intercession of thy seruauant and of thy people of Israel, what so euer they shall desyre in this place: heare thou it from the place of thy habitacion, euē from heauen: and whan thou hearest it, be mercifull.

¶ Whan eny mā synneth agaynst his neigboure, and an ooth be put vpon him which he ought to sweare, and the ooth cometh before thine altare in this house, then heare thou from heauen, and se y<sup>e</sup> thy seruauant haue righte, so that thou rewarde the vngodly, and recōpence him his waye vpon his awne heade, and to iustifie the righteous, and to geue him accordinge to his righteounes.

¶ Whan thy people of Israel is smyttē before their enemies (whyle they haue synned agaynst the) and yf they turne vnto the, and knowlege thy name, and make their prayer and intercession before the in this house, then heare thou them from heauen, and be mercifull vnto the synne of thy people of Israel, & brynge them agayne in to the londe, y thou hast geuen them and their fathers.

* Whan the heauen is shut vp, so that it rayne not (for so moch as they haue synned agaynst the) and yf they make their prayer in this place, and knowlege thy name, and turne from their synnes (whan thou hast brought them lowe) heare thou them then in heauen, and be mercifull vnto the synne of thy seruantes, and of thy people of Israel, that thou mayest teach them the good waye wherin they shulde walke, and let it rayne vpon thy londe which thou hast geuen thy people to possesse.

Whan a dert, or pestilence, or drouth, or blastinge, or greshopper or catipiller, is in the londe: Or whan their enemye layeth sege to their portes in the lode, or whan any other plage or disease happeneth, who so euer the maketh his prayer or petition amonge eny maner of men, or amonge all thy people of Israel, yf eny man fele his plage and disease, and spredeth out his handes vnto this house, heare thou then from heauen, euen from y<sup>e</sup> seate of thy habitacion, and be mercifull: and geue euery man accordinge to all his wayes, in so moch as thou knowest his hert (for thou onely knowest the hert of the children of men) that they maye feare the, and allwaye walke in thy wayes, as longe as they lyue in the londe, which thou hast geuen vnto oure fathers.

And whan eny straunger which is not of thy people of Israel, commeth out of a farre cowntre because of thy greate name, and mightie hande, and out stretched arme, and commeth to make his prayer in this house, heare thou him then from heaue, euen from the seate of thy habitacion: and do all for y<sup>e</sup> which that straunger calleth vpō the, that all the nacions vpon earth maye knowe thy name, and feare the, as thy people of Israel do: and that they maye knowe, how y<sup>e</sup> this house which I haue buylded, is named after thy name.

Whan thy people go forth to y<sup>e</sup> battayll agaynst their enemies, the waye that thou shalt sende them, and shall praye vnto the † toward the waye of this cite which thou hast chosen, and toward the house that I haue buylded vnto thy name, heare thou the their prayer and petition from heauen, and helpe them to their righte.

Whan they synne agaynst the (§ for there is no man that synneth not) and thou be wroth at them, and geue them ouer before their enemyes, so that they cary them awaye captiue in to a cowntre farre or nye, and yf they turne within their hertes in the londe where they are presoners, and so conuerte, and make their intercession vnto the in the londe of their captiuyte, and saye: We haue synned, and done amysse, and haue bene vngodly: and so turne them selues vnto y<sup>e</sup> with all their hert and with all their soule in the londe of their captiuyte, wherin they are presoners: and make their prayer toward the waye of their owne londe, which thou gauest vnto their fathers, and toward the cite which thou hast chosen, and toward the house that I haue buylded vnto thy name: then heare thou their prayer and supplicacion from heauen, euen from the seate of thy dwellynge, and helpe them to their righte, and be mercifull vnto thy people that haue synned agaynst the. My God, let thine eyes now be open, and let thine eares heede vnto prayer in this place. ¶ Aryse now O LORDE God vnto thy restinge place, thou and the Arke of thy strength. Let thy prestes O LORDE God be clothed with health, and let thy sayentes reioyse ouer this good. LORDE God, turne not awaye the face of thine anoynted: thinke vpon the mercies of thy seruauent David.

The vij. Chapter.

AND whā Salomō had ended his praier, there fell a fyre from heauen, and cōsumed the burntofferynge and the other offerings. And the glory of the LORDE fylled the house, so that y<sup>e</sup> prestes coule not go in to the house of the LORDE, while y<sup>e</sup> glory of the LORDE filled y<sup>e</sup> LORDES house. And all the children of Israel sawe the fyre fall downe, and the glory of the LORDE ouer the house: and they fell on their knees with their faces to the grounde vpon the pavement, and worshipped, and gaue thanks vnto the LORDE, because he is gracious, and because his mercy endureth for euer. As for the kynge and all the people, they offred before the LORDE.

¶ Psal. 131. a.

For kynge Salomon offred two and twetye thousand bullockes, and an hundred thousande and twentye thousand shepe, ⁊ so both the kynge and all the people dedicated the house of God.

But the prestes stode in their watches, ⁊ the Leuites with the musically instrumentes of the LORDE, which kynge Dauid had caused to make for to geue thanks vnto the LORDE, (because his mercy endureth for euer) with psalmes of Dauid thorow their hande. And the prestes blew trumpettes ouer agaynst them, and all Israel stode.

And Salomon halowed the myddelmost courte, which was before the house of the LORDE, for there prepared he the burnt-offerynges and the fat of the slayne offeringes: for the brasen altare that Salomon made, might not conteyne all the burnt-offerynges, meat-offerynges, and the fat.

* And at the same tyme helde Salomon a feast seuen daies longe, and all Israel with him a very greate congregacion, from Hemath vnto the ryuer of Egipte, and on the eight daye helde he a conuocacion. For the dedication of the altare helde they seuen daies, and the feast seuen dayes also.

But on the thre and twentyeth daye of the seuenth moneth he let the people go vnto their tentes ioyfull and with mery hertes because of all the good, that the LORDE had done vnto Dauid, vnto Salomō, and to his people of Israel.

Thus fynished Salomō the house of ⁊ LORDE, and the kinges house, and all ⁊ came in his hert to make in the house of the LORDE, and in his awne house, prosperously. And the LORDE appeared vnto Salomon in the nighte season, and sayde vnto him: I haue herde thy prayer ⁊ chosen this place vnto my selfe for an house of sacrifice.

Beholde, whan I shut the heauē so ⁊ it raine not, or commaunde the greshopper to cōsume the londe, or cause a pestilence to come amonge my people, to humble my people, which is named after my name: and yf they praye, and seke my face, and turne from their euell wayes, thē wyl I heare them from heauen, and wyl forgeue their sinne, and heale their londe. So shal myne eyes now be open, and myne eares shal be attente vnto prayer in this place. Thus haue I now chosen this house, and sanctified it, that my name maye be there for euer: and myne eyes and my hert shal allwaye be there.

And yf thou walke before me, as thy father Dauid walked, so that thou do all that I commaunde the, and kepe myne ordinaūces and lawes, then wyl I stablishe the seate of thy kyngdome, acordinge as I promysed thy father Dauid, and sayde: Thou shalt not wante a man to be lord ouer Israel. But yf ye turne backe, and forsake myne ordynaunces and commaudemētes which I haue layed before you, and so go youre waye, and serue other goddes, and worshippe them, thē wyl I rote ⁊ you out of my londe that I haue geuen you: and this house which I haue sanctified vnto my name, wil I cast awaye out of my presence, and geue it ouer to be a byworde and fabell amoge all nacions. And euery one that goeth by, shall be astonnyed at this hye house, and shall hyse at it, and saye: § Wherefore hath the LORDE dealte thus with this londe and with this house? Then shall it be sayde: Euen because they haue forsaken the LORDE God of their fathers (which brought them out of the londe of Egipte) ⁊ haue cleued vnto other goddes, ⁊ worshipped them, and serued thē: therefore hath he brought all this euell vpon thē.

The biij. Chapter.

AND after twentye yeares (wherin Salomon buylded the house of the LORDE and his awne house) he buylded the cyties also which Hiram gaue vnto Salomon, and caused the children of Israel to dwell therein. And Salomon wente vnto Hemath Zoba, and made it stronge, and buylded Thadmor in the wyldernes, and all the cornecities which he buylded in Hemath. He buylded the vpper and lower Bethoron likewise, so that they were stronge cities with walles, portes and barres. And Baelath, and all the cornecities which Salomon had, and all the cities of the charettes and of the horse men, and all that Salomon had lust to buylde, both at Ierusalem and vpon Libanus, and in all the londe of his domynion.

All the remnaunt of the people of the Hethites, Amorites, Pheresites, Heuites and Iebusites, which were not of the children of Israel, and their children which they had lefte beynde them in the londe, (whom the children of Israel had not vtterly destroyed) those dyd Salomon make trybutaries vnto this daye. As for the children of Israel, Salomon made no bondmen of them vnto his worke, but they were men of warre, and chefe captaines, and ouer his charettes & horsmen. And the chefe of kynge Salomons officers were two hundreth and fyttye, which ruled the people.

And Salomon caused Pharaos daughter to be fetched vp out of the cite of Dauid, in to the house that he had buylded for her: for he sayde: My wyfe shall not dwell in the house of Dauid the kynge of Israel, for it is sanctified, in as moch as y<sup>e</sup> Arke of the LORDE is come in to it.

Then offered Salomon burnt offerynges vnto the LORDE vpon the LORDES altare, which he had buylded before the porche, euery one vpon his daye to offre after the cōmaundemente of Moses, on the Sabbathes, Newmones & at the appoynted seasons of the yeaere, euen thre tymes, namely in y<sup>e</sup> feast of vneleuended bred, in the feast of wekes, & in the feast of Tabernacles.

And he set the prestes in ordre to their ministracion *acordynge as Dauid his father had appoynted, and the Leuites in their offyces, to geue thanks and to mynister in the presence of the prestes, euery one vpon his daye. And the dorekeepers in their courses, euery one at his dore, for so had Dauid the mā of God commaunded.

And they departed not from the kynges commaundement ouer the prestes and Leuites in euery matter and in the treasures. Thus was all Salomons busynesse made ready, from the daye that the foundation of the LORDES house was layed, tyll it was fynished, so that the house of the LORDE was all prepared.

† Then wente Salomon vnto Ezeon Geber, and vnto Eloth by the See syde in the londe of Edomea. And Hiram sent him shippes by his seruauantes which had knowlege of the See, and they wente with Salomōs seruauantes vnto Ophir, and fetched from thence foure hundreth and fyfthe talentes of golde, and broughte it vnto kynge Salomon.

The ix. Chapter.

AND whan the <sup>a</sup>quene of rich Arabia herde the fame of Salomon, she came with a very greate tryne to Ierusalem (with Camels that bare spyces and golde, and precious stones) to proue Salomon with darke sentences. And whan she came vnto Salomon, she spake vnto him all that she had deuysed in hir mynde. And the kynge tolde her all hir matters, & Salomon had nothings in secrete, but he tolde it her.

And whan the Quene of riche Arabia sawe the wysdome of Salomon, and y<sup>e</sup> house that he had buylded, the meates of his table, the dwellinges of his seruauantes, y<sup>e</sup> offyces of his mynisters and their garmentes, & his butlers and their apparell, and his parler where he wente vp in to the house of the LORDE, she coulde no longer refrayne. And she sayde vnto the kynge: It is true that I haue herde in my londe of thy behaueoure and of thy wysdome: howbeit I wolde not beleue thy wordes, tyll I came my selfe, & sawe it with myne eyes: and beholde, the halfe of thy greate wysdome hath not bene tolde me: there is more in y<sup>e</sup> then the fame that I haue herde. Happye are thy men, and happie are these thy seruauantes, y<sup>e</sup> allwaye stonde before the, and heare thy wysdome. Prayed be the LORDE thy God, which had soch pleasure vnto the, that he hath set the vpon his seate to be kynge vnto the LORDE thy God. Because thy God loueth Israel, to set them vp for euer, therefore hath he ordeyned y<sup>e</sup> to be kynge ouer them, that thou shuldest mayntayne iustice and equyte.

And she gaue y<sup>e</sup> kynge an hundreth and twentye talentes of golde, & very moch spyce & precious stones. There were no mo soch spyces as these that the Quene of riche Arabia gaue vnto kynge Salomō. And Hiram's seruauantes and the seruantes of Salomon, which broughte golde from Ophir, broughte costely tymber also & precious stones.

And of the same costely tymber dyd Salomon cause to make staires in the house of the LORDE, and the kynges house, and harpes and psalteries for the Musicians. There was no soch tymber sene before in the londe of Iuda. But kynge Salomon gaue the Quene of riche Arabia all that she desyred and axed, & moch more then she had broughte vnto the kynge. And she returned, and departed in to hir londe with hir seruauantes.

The golde that was broughte vnto Salomon

* 1 Par. 10. d. † 3 Reg. 9. e.

* 3 Re. 10. a. Matt. 12. a.

in one yeaere, was sixe hundreth and sixe and thre score talentes, besydes that ȝ chapmen and marchautes broughte. And all the kynges of the Arabians, and the lordes in ȝ londe broughte golde and syluer vnto Salomon. Of the which kyng Salomon made two hundreth speares of beaten golde, so ȝ sixe hundreth peces of beaten golde came vpō one speare: ȝ thre hundreth shildes of beaten golde, so that thre hundreth peces of beaten golde came to one shyld: and the kyng put the in the house of the wod of Libanus.

And the kyng made a greate seate of Yuery, and ouerlaied it with pure golde: and the seate had sixe steppes, and a fotestole of golde festened vnto the seate, and it had two leanynges postes vpon both the sydes of the seate, and two lyons stode beside the leanynges postes, and there stode twolue Lions vpō the syxe steppes on both the sides. In all realmes hath not soch one bene made.

And all kyng Salomons drynkyng vessels were of golde, and all the vessels of the house of the wod of Libanus, were of pure golde: for syluer was rekened nothinge in Salomons tyme. For the kynges shippes wente vpon the See with the seruauantes of Hirā, ȝ came once in thre yeaere, and brought golde, syluer, Yuery, Apes and Pecoakes.

Thus was kyng Salomon greater then all the kynges vpon earth, in riches and wysdome. And all the kynges of ȝ earth desired (to se) Salomons face, and to heare his wysdome, which God had geuen him in his hert. And they brought him yearly euery mā his present: Jewels of siluer and golde, raymēt, harnesse, spyces, horses and Mules.

And Salomon had foure thousande charet-horses, and twolue thousande horsmen, and put them in the charet cities, and with the kyng at Ierusalem. And he was lorde ouer all the kynges from the water vnto the londe of the Philistynes, and to the coaste of Egipte. And the kyng brought it so to passe, that there was as moch syluer at Ierusalem as stones: and as many Ceders, as there were Molbery trees in the valleys. And there were horses broughte vnto him out of Egipte, and out of all countres.

What more there is to saye of Salomon, both of his first and of his last, beholde, it is writtē in the Cronicles of the prophet Nathan, and in the prophecies of Abia of Silo, ȝ in ȝ actes of Ieddi the Seer against Ieroboā ȝ sonne of Nebat. And Salomō reigned at Ierusalē ouer all Israel fortie yeaeres. And Salomon fell on slepe with his fathers, ȝ was buried in the eyte of Dauid his father. And Roboā his sonne was kīge ī his steade.

The x. Chapter.

ROBOAM wente vnto Sicheim: for all Israel was come vnto Sicheim: to make him kinge. And whan Ieroboā the sonne of Nebat herde that, which was in Egipte (*whither he was fled for kyng Salomon) he came agayne out of Egipte. And they sent for him and called him. And Ieroboam came with all Israel, and spake to Roboam, and sayde: Thy father made oure yocke greuous: make thou lighter now ȝ harde bondage of thy father, and ȝ heuy yocke that he layed vpon vs, and we wyl submytte oure selues vnto the. He sayde vnto them: Come to me agayne ouer thre dayes. And ȝ people wente their waye.

And Roboam the kyng axed coucell at the Elders, which had stonde before Salomon his father whyle he lyued, and he sayde: What is youre counsell, that I maye geue this people an answer? They spake vnto him, and sayde: Yf thou be louyng vnto this people, and deale gently with them, and geue them good wordes, then shal they allwaye be obedient vnto the. Neuerthelesse he forsoke the counsell of the Elders that they had geuen him, and toke counsell at ȝ yonge men which were growne vp with him, and stode before him. And he sayde vnto the: What is youre counsell, that we maye answer this people, which haue spoken vnto me, and saide: Make oure yock lighter, ȝ thy father layed vpon vs? The yongemen ȝ were growne vp with him, spake vnto him, and sayde: Thus shalt thou save vnto the people, that haue talked with the ȝ spoken: Thy father made oure yock to heuy, make thou oure yock lighter, Thus shalt thou saye vnto them: My litle finger shalbe thicker then my fathers loynes. Yf my father hath layed an heuy yock vpon you, I wyl make youre yock the more. My father chastened you with scourges, but I wyl beate you with scorpions.

Now whan Ieroboam and all the people came to Roboam on the thirde daye (acordyuge as  $\hat{y}$  kinge sayde: Come to me againe on the thirde daie) the kyng gaue the an harde answer. And Roboā the kyng forsoke  $\hat{y}$  counsell of the Elders,  $\tau$  spake vnto the after  $\hat{y}$  yonge mens counsell,  $\tau$  sayde: Yf my father haue made youre yock to heuy, I wil make it yet heuyer. My father chastened you with scourges, but I wyl beate you with scorpiōs. Thus the kyng folowed not  $\hat{y}$  peoples minde: for so was it determyned of God, $\hat{y}$   $\hat{y}$  LORDE might stablishe his worde,

\* which he spake by Ahia of Silo, vnto Ieroboā  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Nebat. But whan all Israel sawe that the kyng wolde not consente vnto them,  $\hat{y}$  people answered the kyng, and sayde:
What porcion haue we then in Dauid, or inheritaunce in the sonne of Isai? Let every man of Israel get him to his tent. Loke thou now to thy house Dauid. And all Israel wente vnto their tentes, so that Roboam reigned but ouer the children of Israel that dwelt in the cities of Iuda. And Roboam sent forth Adoram the rentgatherer, but the children of Israel stoned him to death. And kyng Roboā strengthened himselfe vpon his charet, to flye vnto Ierusalem. Thus fell Israel awaie fro the house of Dauid vnto this daye.

The ri. Chapter.

AND whan Roboam came to Ierusalem, he gathered together the house of Iuda and Ben Iamin (euen an hūdreth and foure score thousande chosen men of armes) to fyghte agaynst Israel, that they mighte brynge the kyngdome agayne vnto Roboam. But  $\hat{y}$ worde of the LORDE came to Semaia the man of God, and sayde: Speake to Roboam the sonne of Salomon kyng of Iuda, and to all Israel  $\hat{y}$  are in Iuda and Ben Iamin, and saye: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Ye shal not go vp, ner fyght agaynst youre brethren:
let every man go home agayne, for this is my dede. They herkened vnto the wordes of  $\hat{y}$
LORDE, and wēte not forth agaynst Ieroboā.
As for Roboā, he dwelt at Ierusalem, and buylded vp the stronge cities in Iuda, namely Bethleē, Etan, Tekoa, Bethzur, Socho, Adullā, Gath, Maresa, Siph, Adoraim, Laches, Aseka, Zarega, Aialon, and Hebron (which were the fensed cities in Iuda and Ben Iamin)  $\tau$  he made them stronge, and set prynces therein,  $\tau$ prouyded them of vytayles, oyle and wyne, and in all cities prepared he shildes and speares, and made them very stronge. And Iuda and Ben Iamin were vnder him.

The Prestes and Leuites also came vnto him out of Israel and from all the borders therof, And leste their suburbs  $\tau$  possession, and came to Iuda vnto Ierusalem: for Iero-boam and his sonnes expellēd them, that they shulde not execute the offyce of  $\hat{y}$  presthode vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE. But for himselfe he fouēd prestes to  $\hat{y}$  hye places,  $\tau$  to feldedeuēls  $\tau$ calues, which he caused to make. And after them came there men out of all the trybes of Israel, which gaue ouer their hertes to seke  $\hat{y}$
LORDE God of Israel,  $\tau$  came to Ierusalē for to offre vnto the LORDE God of their fathers. And so strengthened they  $\hat{y}$  kingdome of Iuda, and mātayned Roboam the sonne of Salomon thre yeare longe: for they walked in $\hat{y}$  waye of Dauid  $\tau$  Salomon thre yeares.

And Roboam toke Mahelath  $\hat{y}$  daughter of Ieremoth  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Dauid to wife,  $\tau$  Abihail the daughter of Eliab  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Isai, which bare him these sonnes: Ieus, Semaria  $\tau$  Sa-ham. After her toke he Maecha the daughter of Absalom, which bare him Abia, Athai Sisa and Selomith. But Roboam loued Maecha the daughter of Absalom better then all his wyues  $\tau$  concubynes: for he had eightene wyues and thre score cōcubynes, and begat eight  $\tau$  twentye sonnes, and thre score dought-ters. And Roboam set Abia the sonne of Maecha to be heade and prynce amonge his brethren: for he thoughte to make him kyng:
for he was wyse,  $\tau$  more mightie then all his sonnes in all the countrees of Iuda  $\tau$  Ben Iamin, and in all the stronge cities. And he gaue them plenteousnes of fode, and desyred many wyues

The rij. Chapter.

BUT whā the kyngdome of Roboam was confirmed and stablyshed, he forsoke the lawe of the LORDE  $\tau$  all Israel with him.
And in the fyfth yeare of Roboam wēte Sisack the kyng of Egipte vp agaynst Ierusalem (for they had transgressed agaynst the LORDE) with a thousande and two hundred charettes, and with thre score thousande horsmen, and the people were innumerable that came with him out of Egipte, Libya, Suchim  $\tau$  out of Ethiopia, and he wanne the strōge cities that were in Iuda, and came to Ierusalem.

Then came Semaia ꝑ prophet vnto Roboam and to ꝑ rulers of Iuda (which were gathered together at Ierusalem for Sisack) & sayde vnto them: Thus sayeth ꝑ LORDE: Ye haue leste me, therefore haue I leste you also in Sisacks hande. Thē the rulers in Israel with the kynge submytted them selues, and sayde: The LORDE is righteous.

But whā the LORDE sawe ꝑ they hūbled them selues, ꝑ worde of the LORDE came to Semaia, & sayde: They haue humbled them selues, therefore wyl I not destroye them, but I wyl geue them a litle delyueraunce, that my indignacion fall not vpon Ierusalem by Sisack: for they shalbe subdued vnto him, ꝑ they maye knowe what it is to serue me, & to serue the kyngdomes of the worlde.

Thus wēt Sisack the kynge of Egipte vp to Ierusalem, & toke the treasures in the house of the LORDE, & the treasures in the kynges house, and caried all awaye, and toke the shyldes of golde, *that Salomon caused to make: in steade wherof kynge Roboā made shyldes of stele, and commytted thē vnto the chefe fotemen, which kepte the dore of the kynges house. And as oft as the kynge wente in to the house of the LORDE, ꝑ fote men came & bare them, & brought them againe in to ꝑ fote mens chāber. And for so much as he submytted himselfe, ꝑ wrath of ꝑ LORDE turned frō him, so that all was not destroyed: for there was yet some good in Iuda.

Thus was Roboam the kinge stablished in Ierusalem, and reigned. One and fortye yeare olde was Roboam whā he was made kynge, and reigned seuentene yeare at Ierusalem in the cite, †which the LORDE had chosen out of all the trybes of Israel, to set his name there. His mothers name was Naema an Ammonitisse: and he did euell, and prepared not his hert to seke the LORDE.

These actes of Roboam, both fyrst and last, are wrytten in the actes of Semaia the prophet, & of Iddo the Seer, and are noted, & so are the warres that Roboam and Ieroboam had together as long as they lyued. And Roboam fell on slepe with his fathers and was buryed in the cite of Dauid, & Abia his sonne was kynge in his steade.

The xiiij. Chapter.

IN the eighteenth yeare of kynge Ieroboam. was Abia kynge in Iuda, & reigned thre yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Michaia the daughter of Vriell of Gibeā. And there was warre betwene Abia and Ieroboam. And Abia prepared himselfe to the battayll with foure hūdreth thousande stronge chosen men of warre. But Ieroboam made himselfe ready to fight agaynst him with eight hūdreth thousande chosen men of strength.

And Abia gatt him vp vpon the hyll Zemaraim, which lyeth vpon mount Ephraim and sayde: Herken vnto me thou Ieroboam and all Israel: Knowe ye not that the LORDE God of Israel hath geuen Dauid ꝑ kyngdome of Israel for euer, vnto him and his sonnes with a Salt couenant? But Ieroboā the sonne of Nebat, the seruauit of Salomon Dauids sonne, gat him vp & fell awaye from his lorde. And there resorted vnto him vagaboundes and children of Belial, and haue strengthened them selues against Roboā the sonne of Salomō: for Roboam was but yonge and of a fearfull hert, and coulde not resiste them.

Now thinke ye to set youre selues against the kyngdome of the LORDE amonge the sonnes of Dauid, for so much as there is so greate a multitude of you, & haue ꝑ golden calues †ꝑ Ieroboam made you for goddes. ꝑ Haue ye not expelled the prestes of the LORDE the children of Aaron and the Leuites? and haue made you prestes of youre awne, euen as the people of the londes? Who so euer commeth to fyll his hande with a yonge bullocke and seuen rammes, shal be preste vnto them that are not goddes.

But with vs is ꝑ LORDE oure God, whō we forsake not: and the prestes that minister vnto the LORDE, the children of Aaron and the Leuites in their busines, and euery mornyng and euery euenyng kyndle they the burntofferynges vnto the LORDE, and the swete incense, and prepare the shewbred vpō the pure table, and the golden candillicke with his lampes, to be kyndled euery euenyng: for we wayte vpō the LORDE oure God.

As for you, ye haue forsaken him. Beholde, God is the captayne of oure boost, and with vs are his prestes, and the †blowyng trompettes, to trompe agaynst you. Ye children of Israel, fight not agaynst the LORDE God of youre fathers: for ye shal not prospere.

Neuertheles Ieroboam made a preuy watch on euery syde, to come vpon them behynde, so that they were before Iuda, and y preuy watch behynde. Now whā Iuda turned them, beholde, there was battayll before the ⁊ behynde. Then cryed they vnto y LORDE, ⁊ the prestes tromped with the trompettes, ⁊ whā euery man in Iuda gaue a shoute, God played Ieroboam and Israel before Abia and Iuda. And the children of Israel fled before Iuda, and God gaue them in to their handes, so that Abia ⁊ his people dyd a greate slaughter vpon them, and there fell wounded of Israel fyue hundreth thousande chosen men.

D Thus were the children of Israel subdued at that tyme, but the children of Iuda were comforted, for they put their trust in y LORDE God of their fathers. And Abia folowed vpon Ieroboam, and wanne cities frō him, Bethel with the vyllages therof, Iesana with hir vyllages, and Ephron with the vyllages therof, so that Ieroboam came nomore to strength, as longe as Abia lyued. And the LORDE smote him that he dyed.

Now whan Abia was strengthened, he toke fourtene wyues, and begat two and twente sonnes and sixtene daughters. What more there is to saye of Abia, and of his wayes and his doynge, it is wyrtten in the storye of the prophet Iddo. And Abia fell on slepe with his fathers, and they buryed him in y cite of Dauid: and Asa his sonne was kynge in his steade. In his tyme was the londe in rest ten yeares.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A ND Asa dyd that which was good ⁊ right in the sighte of the LORDE his God, and put awaye the straunge altares, and the hye places, and brake the pilers, and hewed downe the groues, and sayde vnto Iuda, that they shulde seke the LORDE God of their fathers, and to do after y lawe and commaundementes. And the hye places and ymages put he awaye out of all the cities of Iuda: and the kyngdome had rest before him. And he builded strōge cities in Iuda, whyle the londe was in quietnes, ⁊ whyle there was no warre agaynst him in the same yeares: for y LORDE gaue him rest.

B And he sayde vnto Iuda: Let vs buylde vp these cities, and fense them rounde aboute with walles and towres, with portes and barres, while the londe is yet with vs: for we haue soughte the LORDE oure God, and he hath geuen vs rest on euery syde. So they buylded, and it wente prosperously with the. And Asa had an hoost of mē which bare shildes ⁊ speares, out of Iuda thre C. thousande, and out of Ben Iamin two hūdreth and foure score thousande, that bare shyldes ⁊ coulde shute with bowes, and all these were mightie stronge men.

But Serah the Moryan came out against the with an hoost of a thousande times a thousande, and with thre hundreth charettes, and came vnto Maresa. And Asa wente forth agaynst him. And they prepared them selues to the battayll in the valley Zephata beside Maresa. And Asa called vpon y LORDE his God and sayde: * LORDE, it is no differēce with y, to helpe by fewe or by many. Helpe vs O LORDE oure God: for oure trust is in the, ⁊ in thy name are we come forth against this multitude. LORDE oure God, let no man preuayle agaynst the.

And the LORDE smote the Moriās before Asa and before Iuda, so that they fled. And Asa with y people that was by him, folowed vpon them vnto Gerar. And the Moriās fell, so that none of them remained alyue, but were smytten before the LORDE and before his hoost. And they caried excedinge moch spoyle from thence. And he smote all the cyties aboute Gerar, for a fearfulness of the LORDE came vpon them. And they spoyled all the cities, for there was moch spoyle in them. They smote the tentes of the catell also, and toke many shepe and Camels, and came agayne to Ierusalem.

The xv. Chapter.

A ND the sprete of God came vpō Asarias the sonne of Obed, which wente forth to Asa, and sayde vnto him: Heare me Asa and all Iuda ⁊ Ben Iamin: The LORDE is with you, whyle ye are with him: and yf ye seke him, he wylbe founde of you. But yf ye forsake him, he shal forsake you also. Neuertheles there shal be many dayes in Israel, that †there shalbe no true God, no prest to teach, ⁊ no lawe. And whan they turne in their trouble vnto the LORDE God of Israel, and seke him, he shalbe founde.

At that tyme shall it not be well with him that goeth out and in: for there shal be greates vprours vpon all them  $\hat{y}$  dwell on the earth. For one people shall all to smyte another,  $\tau$  one cite another: for God shal vex them with all maner of trouble. But be ye stronge, and let not youre handes be feble: for youre worke hath his rewarde.

B Whan Asa herde these wordes, and the prophecię (of Asarias the sonne) of Obed the prophet, he toke a corage vnto him, and put away the abhominacions out of all  $\hat{y}$  londe of Iuda and Ben Iamin, and out of the cities that he had wonne vpon mount Ephraim: and renued the LORDES altare, which stode before the porche of the LORDE. And all Iuda and Ben Iamin gathered them selues together, and the straungers with them out of Ephraim, Manasses and Simeon: for there fell many vnto him out of Israel, whan they sawe that the LORDE his God was with him. And they resorted vnto Ierusalem in the thirde moneth of the fyfteenth yeare of the reigne of Asa, and the same daye offred they vnto the LORDE of the spoyle that they had broughte, seuen hūdreth oxen, and seuen thousande shepe.

C And they entred in to  $\hat{y}$  couenaut, that they wolde seke the LORDE God of their fathers, with all their hert and with all their soule. And who so euer wolde not seke  $\hat{y}$  LORDE God of Israel, shulde dye, both small  $\tau$  greates, both man and woman: and they sware vnto the LORDE with loude voyce, with shoutinge, with trompettes and with shawmes. And all Iuda were glad ouer the ooth: for they had sworne with all their hert, and they soughte him with a whole wyll: and he was founde of them, and the LORDE gaue them rest on euery syde.

D And Asa  $\hat{y}$  kynge put downe his mother from the mynistracion, that she had founded in the groue vnto Miplezeth. And Asa roted out hir Miplezeth, and beate it in sunder, and brent it by the broke Cedron. But the hye places were not put downe out of Israel. Yet was the hert of Asa perfecte as longe as he lyued. And loke what his father had halowed, and that he him selfe had halowed, he broughte it in to  $\hat{y}$  house of God, syluer, golde and ornamētes. And there was no warre vnto the fyne and thirtieth yeare of the reigne of Asa.

The xvi. Chapter.

IN the sixe and thirtieth yeare of  $\hat{y}$  reigne A of Asa,  $\tau$  wente Baesa the kynge of Israel vp agaynst Iuda, and buylded Rama, to let Asa the kynge of Iuda,  $\hat{y}$  he shulde not go out and in: But Asa toke forth the treasure in the house of the LORDE, and the syluer and golde in the kynges house, and sent it vnto Benadad  $\hat{y}$  kynge of Syria, which dwelt at Damascon, and caused to saye vnto him: There is a couenaut betwene me and the, betwene my father and thy father, therefore haue I sent  $\hat{y}$  syluer and golde, that thou mayest breake  $\hat{y}$  couenaut with Baesa the kynge of Israel, that he maye departe fro me.

Benadad berkened vnto kynge Asa, and sent his hoost agaynst the cities of Israel, which smote Eion, Dan and Abel Main, and all the corne cities of Nephtali. Whan Baesa herde that, he lefte of from buyldinge Rama, and ceased from his worke. But kynge Asa toke all Iuda vnto him, and caried away  $\hat{y}$  stones and tymber (wherwith Baesa buylded) and he buylded Geba  $\tau$  Mizpa withall.

At the same tyme came Hanani the Seer B vnto Asa the kynge of Iuda, and sayde vnto him: Because thou hast trusted vnto the kynge of Syria, and not put thy trust in the LORDE thy God, therefore is the power of the kynge of Syria escaped thy hāde. \*Were not the Moryans and Lybians a greates multitude with exceedinge many charettes and horsmen? Yet gaue the LORDE them in to thy hande, whan thou dydest put thy trust in him: for the eyes of the LORDE loke rounde aboute all londes, to strength them  $\hat{y}$  are in him with all their hert. Thou hast done vn-wysely, therefore shalt thou haue warre from hēce forth. But Asa was wroth at  $\hat{y}$  Seer, and put him in preson: for he murmured with him ouer this thinge. And Asa oppressed certayne of the people at  $\hat{y}$  same tyme.

These actes of Asa both first and last, C be-holde, they are wrytten in the boke of  $\hat{y}$  kynges of Iuda  $\tau$  Israel. And Asa was diseased in his fete in the nyne and thirtieth yeare of his reigne, and endured ther ouer. †Nether soughte he the LORDE in his sicknesse, but trusted vnto Phisicians. Thus fell Asa on slepe with his fathers,  $\tau$  dyed in the one and fortieth yeare of his reigne,  $\tau$  was buried in his awne sepulchre which he had caused to be grauen for him selfe in the cite of Dauid. And they layed him vpon his bed, which was fylled with swete odoures & all maner of spyes (made after  $\hat{y}$  Apotecaries craft) and made a very greate burnynge.

The xviij. Chapter.

AND Iosaphat his sonne was kynge in his steade, & waxed mightie against Israel. And he put men of warre in all the stronge cities of Iuda, and set officers in the londe of Iuda, and in the cities of Ephraim, which Asa his father had wonne. And the LORDE was with Iosaphat: for he walked in the olde wayes of his father Dauid, & soughte not Baalim, but the God of his father, & walked in his commaundementes, & not after the workes of Israel: therefore dyd the LORDE stablyshe the kyngdome in his hāde. And all Iuda gaue presentes vnto Iosaphat, & he had greate riches & worshippe. And whan his hert was coraged in the wayes of the LORDE, he put downe styll the hye places and groues out of Iuda.

In the thirde yere of his reigne sent he his prynces, Benhail, Obadia, Zacharias, Nethaneel & Michaia, to teach in the cities of Iuda: & with them the Leuites: Semaia, Nethania, Sebadia, Asahel, Semiramoth, Ionathan, Adonia, Tobia & Tob Adonia, & with them  $\hat{y}$  prestes Elisama & Ioram. And they taughte in Iuda, & had the boke of the lawe of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE with them, & wente aboute in all  $\hat{y}$  cities of Iuda, & taughte the people.

And the feare of the LORDE came vpon all  $\hat{y}$  kyngdomes in the countrees that laye aboute Iuda, so  $\hat{y}$  they foughte not agaynst Iosaphat. And the Philistynes broughte presentes and trybute of syluer vnto Iosaphat. And the Arabians broughte him seuē thousande and seuē hundred rammes, and seuē thousande and seuē hundred he goates. Thus increased Iosaphat, & grewe euer greater. And he buylded castels and corne cities in Iuda. And dyd moch in the cities of Iuda, and had valeaunt and mightie men at Ierusalem.

And this was  $\hat{y}$  ordinaunce thorow out the house of their fathers, which were rulers ouer the thousandes in Iuda. Adna a captayne, & with him were thre hūdreth thousande mightie men. Nexte vnto him was Iohanan  $\hat{y}$  chefe, and with him were two hundred and foure score thousande. Nexte him was Amasia the sonne of Sichri the fre wyllinge of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE, and with him were two hundred thousande valeaunt men. Of the children of Ben Iamin was Eliada a mightie man, and with him were two hundred thousande ready with bowes and shyldes. Nexte vnto him was Iosabad, and with him were an hundred and foure score thousande harnessed men of warre. All these wayted vpon the kynge, besides those that the kynge had layed in the strōge cities thorow out all Iuda.

The xviij. Chapter.

AND Iosaphat had greate riches and worshippe, and made frendshippe with Achab. \* And after two yeaes wente he downe to Achab vnto Samaria. And Achab caused many shepe and oxē to be slayne for him and for  $\hat{y}$  people that were with him. And he counceled him to go vp vnto Ramoth in Gilead. And Achab the kynge of Israel sayde vnto Iosaphat the kynge of Iuda: Go with me vnto Ramoth, in Gilead. He sayde vnto him: I am as thou, and my people as thy people, we wyll go with the vnto the battayll.

But Iosaphat sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: Axe counsell (I praye the) this daye at the worde of the LORDE. And the kynge of Israel gathered the prophetes together, euen foure hundred men, & saide vnto them: Shal we go to the battayll vnto Ramoth in Gilead, or shal I let it alone? They sayde: Go vp, God shal delyuer it in to the kynges hāde. But Iosaphat sayde: Is there not yet one prophet of the LORDE here,  $\hat{y}$  we maye axe at him? The kynge of Israel sayde vnto Iosaphat: There is yet one man, at whom we maye axe of  $\hat{y}$  LORDE: but I hate him, for he prophecieth me no good, but allwaye euell, namely Micheas the sonne of Iemla. Iosaphat sayde: Let not the kynge saye so. And the kynge of Israel called one of his chamberlaynes, & sayde: Brynge hither soone Micheas the sonne of Iemla.

And the kynge of Israel, and Iosaphat the kynge of Iuda, sat either of them vpon his seate, arayed in their garmentes. Euen in the place at the dore of the porte of Samaria sat they, and all  $\hat{y}$  prophetes prophecied before them. And Sedechias the sonne of Cnaena had made him hornes of yron, and sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: With these shalt thou puszshe at the Syrians, tyll thou brynge them to naughte. And all the prophetes prophced likewise, & sayde: Go vp vnto Ramoth in Gilead, and thou shalt prospere, and ȝ LORDEshal delyuer it in to the kynges hande.

And the messaunger that wente to call Micheas, spake vnto him, and sayde: Beholde, ȝ wordes of the prophetes are with one acorde good before the kyng: let thy worde (I praye the) be as one of theirs, and speake thou good also. But Micheas sayde: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, loke what my God sayeth vnto me, ȝ wyl I speake. And whan he came to the kyng, the kyng sayde vnto him: Micheas, shulde we go vnto Ramoth in Gilead to the battayll, or shulde we let it alone? He saide: Go vp, and ye shal prospere. It shal be geue you in youre handes. But ȝ kyng sayde vnto him: I charge ȝ yet agayne, that thou tell me nothinge but ȝ truth in the name of the LORDE.

C Then saide he: I sawe all Israel scattered abrode vpō the mountaynes, as the shepe ȝ haue no shepherde. And the LORDE sayde: Haue these no lorde? Let every one turne home agayne in peace. Thē sayde the kyng of Israel vnto Iosaphat: Dyd not I tell the, ȝ he wolde prophcie me no good, but euell?

And he sayde: Therefore heare ye the worde of the LORDE: *I sawe the LORDE syt vpon his seate, and all the hoost of heauen standinge at his righte hande & at his lefte. And the LORDE sayde: Who wyl disceaue Achab the kyng of Israel, that he maye go vp & fall at Ramoth in Gilead? And whan one sayde thus, another so, there came forth a sprete, and stode before ȝ LORDE, and sayde: I wyl disceaue him. The LORDE sayde vnto him: Wherwith? He sayde: I wyl go forth, and be a false sprete in the mouth of all his prophetes. And he sayde: Thou shalt disceaue him, and shalt be able: go thy waye, and do so. Beholde now, †the LORDE hath geuen a false sprete in the mouth of all these thy prophetes, and the LORDE hath spokē euell agaynst the.

D Then stepte forth Sedechias the sonne of Cnaena, and smote Micheas vpon the cheke, and sayde: Which waye is the sprete of ȝ LORDE departed from me, to speake thorow the? Micheas sayde: Beholde, thou shalt se it, whan thou comest in to ȝ ynnmost chamber to hyde the. But the kyng of Israel sayde: Take Micheas, and let him remayne with Amnon the ruler of the cite, and with Ioas the sonne of Melech, and saye: Thus sayeth the kyng: Put this man in preson, and fede him with bred and water of trouble, tyll I come agayne in peace. Micheas saide: Yf thou comest agayne in peace, then hath not the LORDE spoken thorow me. And he sayde: Herken to all ye people.

So the kyng of Israel, and Iosaphat ȝ E kyng of Iuda wente vp vnto Ramoth in Gilead. And ȝ kyng of Israel sayde vnto Iosaphat: Chaunge thy clothes, and come to the battayll in thine araye. And ȝ kyng of Israel chaunged his rayment, & came in to the battayll. But the kyng of Syria had commaunded the rulers of his charettes: Ye shal fighte nether agaynst small ner greate, but onely agaynst the kyng of Israel.

Now whan the rulers of the charrettes sawe Iosaphat, they thoughte: It is ȝ kyng of Israel, and they wēte aboute to fighte agaynst him. But Iosaphat cryed, and the LORDE helped him. And God turned them from him: for whan the rulers of the charettes sawe that it was not ȝ kyng of Israel, they turned back from him. But a certayne man bended his bowe harde, & shot the kyng of Israel betwene the mawe and the longes. Thē sayde he vnto his charet man: Turne thine hāde, and cary me out of the hoost, for I am wounded. And the battayll was sore the same daye. And the kyng of Israel stode vpon his charet agaynst the Syrians vntyll the euenynge, and dyed whā the Sonne wente downe.

The xix. Chapter.

BUT Iosaphat the kyng of Iuda came A home agayne in peace vnto Ierusalem. And Iehu ȝ sonne of Hanani the Seer wēte forth to mete him, & sayde vnto kyng Iosaphat: Shuldest thou so helpe the vngodly, and loue them that hate the LORDE? And for this cause is ȝ wrath vpō the from the LORDE: neuertheles there is some good founde in the, that thou hast put the groues out of the londe, and hast prepared thine hert to seke God. So Iosaphat abode at Ierusalem.

And sayde vnto the Iudges: Take hede what ye do: for ye execute not the iudgment of man, but of the LORDE, and he is with you in iudgmēt: therfore let the feare of the LORDE be with you, and bewarre, and do it: for with the LORDE oure God there is no vnrighteousnes, ner respecte of personnes, ner acceptinge of giftes.

C And at Ierusalem dyd Iosaphat ordeyne certayne of the Leuites and prestes, and of the awnciēt fathers of Israel for ſ iudgment of the LORDE, and ouer the matter of the lawe, and caused them to dwell at Ierusalem, and commaunded them, and sayde: Se that ye do thus in the feare of the LORDE, in faithfulness & in a perfect hert. In all causes that come vnto you from youre brethren (which dwell in their cities) betwene bloude and bloude, betwene lawe and commaundement, betwene statutes and ordinaunces ye shal enforme them, ſ they synne not against the LORDE, and so the wrath to come vpon you and youre brethren. #### The xx. Chapter.

A 3 AFTER this came the childrē of Moab, the children of Ammon, and certayne of Amanim with them, to fighte against Iosaphat. And they came and tolde Iosaphat, and sayde: There cometh a greate multitude agaynst the from beyonde the See of Syria, & beholde, they are at Hazezon Tamar, that is Engaddi.

And Iosaphat was afraied, & set his face to seke ſ LORDE, & caused a fast to be proclaimed in all Iuda. And Iuda came together to seke the LORDE. And out of all ſ cities of Iuda came they to seke the LORDE. And Iosaphat stode anōge ſ cōgregacion of Iuda & Ierusalem in the house of ſ LORDE before the new court, and sayde:

O LORDE God of oure fathers, art not thou God in heauen, and hast domynion in all the kyngdomes of the Heythen? And in thy hande is strength and power, and there is no man that can withstōde the. Hast not thou oure God expelled the inhabitants of this londe before thy people of Israel? and hast geuē it vnto the sede of Abraham thy louer for euer? so that they haue dwelt in it, & haue buylded the a Sanctuary vnto thy name therin, and sayde: Yf there come eny plague, swerde, iudgmēt, pestilence, or derth vpon vs, we wyll stonde before this house euen before the (for thy name is in this house) and wyll crye vnto the in oure trouble, and thou shalt heare, and shalt saue vs. Beholde now, the children of Ammon, of Moab, & they of mount Seir, vpon whom * thou woldest not suffre the children of Israel to go, whan they wente out of the londe of Egipte, but they were fayne to departe from thē, and not to destroye them: and beholde, they deale contrarely with vs, and come to thrust vs out of the inheritaunce, that thou hast geuen vs in possession. O oure God, wylt thou not iudge them? For in vs is no strength to withstōde this greate multitude that commeth agaynst vs. We knowe not what we shulde do, but oure eyes loke vnto the. And all Iuda stode before the LORDE, with their children, wyues and sonnes.

But vpon Iehasiel the sonne of Zacharias, C the sonne of Benaia, the sonne of Iehiel, the sonne of Mathania the Leuite of ſ children of Assaph, came the sprete of the LORDE in the myddes of the congregacion, and sayde: Geue hede all thou Iuda, and ye inhabitors of Ierusalem, and thou kyng Iosaphat: Thus sayeth the LORDE vnto you: Be not ye afraied, nether feare ye this greate multitude: for it is not ye that fighte, but God. Tomorrow shal ye go downe vnto thē. And beholde, they go vp by Sis, and ye shal fynde them at the reed see by the broke before the wyldernes of Ieruel: for ye shall not fighte in this cause. Do ye but steppe forth, and stonde, and se the health of the LORDE that is with you. Feare not O Iuda and Ierusalem, and be not afraied, tomorrow ge ye forth agaynst them, and the LORDE shal be with you.

Thē Iosaphat bowed him selfe with his face to the earth, & all Iuda, & the inhabitors of Ierusalem fell before the LORDE, ⁊ worshipped the LORDE. And the Leuites of ⁊ childrē of the Kahathites ⁊ of the children of the Corahites arose to prayse the LORDE God of Israel with loude voyce on hye. And they gat them vp early in ⁊ mornynge, and wēte forth by the wyldernesse of Thekoa.

And whan they were goynge out, Iosaphat stode, ⁊ sayde: Herkē vnto me O Iuda, ⁊ ye indwellers of Ierusalē: Put youre trust in the LORDE youre God, ⁊ ye shal be safe: and geue credence vnto his prophetes, ⁊ ye shall prospere. And he gaue counsell vnto ⁊ people, and appoynted the syngers vnto ⁊ LORDE, and them that gaue prayse in the bewtye of holynes, to go before the harnessed mē, ⁊ to saye: O geue thanks vnto the LORDE, for his mercy endureth for euer. And whan they beganne to geue thanks and prayse, * the LORDE caused the hynder watch that was come agaynst Iuda, to come vpon the childrē of Ammon, Moab ⁊ them of mount Seir, and they smote them. Then stode the children of Ammon ⁊ Moab agaynst them of mount Seir, to damne them, and to destroye them. And whan they had destroyed them of mount Seir, one helped another to destroye them selues also. And whan Iuda came to Mispa vnto the wyldernes, they turned them towarde the multitude, and beholde, the deed bodies laye vpō the earth, so that none was escaped.

And Iosaphat came with his people to deuyde the spoyle of them. And they founde amonge them so moch goodes and rayment and precious Iewels (which they toke from them) that they coulde not beare them. And thre dayes were they deuydinge the spoyle, for it was so moch. On the fourth daye came they together in to the valley of blessinge: for there blessed they the LORDE. Therefore is the place called the valley of blessinge vnto this daye.

So euery man of Iuda ⁊ Ierusalem turned back agayne, ⁊ Iosaphat before them, to go to Ierusalē with ioye: for ⁊ LORDE had geuen them gladnesse on their enemies. And they entred in to Ierusalem with psalteries, harpes ⁊ trompettes vnto the house of the LORDE. And there came a feare of God ouer all the kyngdomes in the londes, whan they herde that the LORDE had foughte agaynst ⁊ enemies of Israel. Thus was ⁊ kyngdome of Iosaphat in quyetnes, ⁊ God gaue him rest on euery syde.

And Iosaphat reigned ouer Iuda, ⁊ was fyue ⁊ thirtie yeare olde whan he was made kynge, ⁊ reigned fyue ⁊ twenty yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Asuba the daughter of Silhi. And he walked in the waye of his father Asa, ⁊ departed not asyde from doynge ⁊ which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE: sauynge that ⁊ hye places were not put downe, for the people had not yet prepared their hert to the God of their fathers. What more there is to saye of Iosaphat, both the first ⁊ the last, beholde, it is wrytten in the actes of Iehu ⁊ sonne of Hannani, which he noted vp in the boke of the kynges of Israel.

* Afterwarde dyd Iosaphat the kynge of Iuda agree with Ahasia the kynge of Israel, which was vngodly in his doynge. And he agreed with him to make shippes, for to go vpon the see. And they made the shippes at Ezion Gaber. But Elieser the sonne of Dodana of Maresa prophecied agaynst Iosaphat, and sayde: Because thou hast agreed with Ahasia, therefore hath the LORDE broken thy workes. And so ⁊ shippes were broken, ⁊ mighte not go vpon the See.

The xxi. Chapter.

AND Iosaphat fell on slepe<sup>b</sup> with his fathers, ⁊ was buried with his fathers in the cite of Dauid, ⁊ Ioram his sonne was kynge in his steade. And he had brethrē the sonnes of Iosaphat: Asaria, Iehiel, Zacharias, Asaria, Michael ⁊ Sephatia. All these were the children of Iosaphat kynge of Iuda. And their father gaue them many giftes of syluer, golde ⁊ Iewels, with stronge cities in Iuda. But the kyngdome gaue he vnto Ioram: for he was the first borne.

But whan Ioram came vp ouer his fathers kyngdome, ⁊ had gotten the power of it, he slewe all his brethrē with the swerde, ⁊ certayne rulers also in Israel. † Two ⁊ thirtie yeare olde was Ioram whan he was made kynge, ⁊ reigned eight yeare at Ierusalē, ⁊ walked in the waye of ⁊ kynges of Israel, euen as the house of Achab dyd (for Achabs daughter was his wife) ⁊ he dyd that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE.

B Neuertheles  $\S$  LORDE wolde not destroye the house of Dauid, for the couenauntes sake, \* which he made with Dauid, and accordinge as he had sayde,  $\S$  he wolde geue him and his children a lanterne for euermore.

At  $\S$  same tyme fell  $\S$  Edomites awaye from Iuda, and made a kynge ouer them selues: for Ioram had gone ouer with his captaynes and all the charettes with him,  $\tau$  had gotten him vp in the night season, and slayne the Edomites on euery syde, and the rulers of the charettes: therfore fell  $\S$  Edomites awaye from Iuda vnto this daye. At  $\S$  same tyme fell Lybna awaye from him also: because he forsoke the LORDE God of his fathers. He made hye places also on the mountaynes in Iuda, and caused them of Ierusalē to go awhorynge, and disceaued Iuda.

C But there came a wrytinge vnto him frō the prophet Elias, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE God of thy father Dauid: Because thou hast not walked in the wayes of thy father Iosaphat, nether in  $\S$  wayes of Asa the kynge of Iuda, but walkest in the waye of the kynges of Israel, and makest Iuda and them of Ierusalem to go awhorynge after the whordome of the house of Achab, and hast slayne thy brethren also of thy fathers house, which were better thē thou. Beholde, the LORDE shal smyte the with a greate plague on thy people, on thy children  $\tau$  thy wyues, and on all thy substance. But thou thy selfe shalt haue moch sicknesse in thy bowels, tyll thy bowels go forth from daye to daye for very disease.

D So  $\S$  LORDE raysed vp agaynst Ioram, the sprete of the Philistynes,  $\tau$  Arabians, which lye besyde the Morians, and they wente vp in to Iuda, and waysted it, and caried awaye all the substance that was founde in the kynges house,  $\tau$  his sonnes, and his wyues, so  $\S$  there was not one sonne lefte him, saue Ioahas his yōgest sonne. And after all this dyd  $\S$  LORDE smyte him in his bowels, with soch a sicknesse as coulde not be healed. And whyle that endured from daye to daye, whan the tyme of two yeares was expyred, his bowels wente from him with his sicknesse, and he dyed in euell diseases.

And they made not a burninge ouer him, as they dyd vnto his fathers. Two and thirtie yeare olde was he whā he was made kynge, and reigned eight yeare at Ierusalē, and walked not well. And they buried him in the cite of Dauid, but not amōge the sepulchres of the kynges.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND they of Ierusalem<sup>a</sup> made Ochosias<sup>a</sup> his yōgest sonne kynge in his steade: for the men of warre that came with the hoost of the Arabians, had slayne all  $\S$  first, therfore reigned Ochosias the sonne of Ioram kynge of Iuda. Two and fortye yeare olde was Ochosias whan he was made kynge, and reigned one yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Athalia the daughter of Amri. And he walked also in  $\S$  wayes of the house of Achab: for his mother entysed him so  $\S$  he was vngodly. Therfore dyd he euell in  $\S$  sighte of the LORDE, euen as  $\S$  house of Achab: for they were his counsell geuers after his fathers death, to destroye him, and he walked after their counsell.

And he wente with Ioram the sonne of Achab kynge of Israel, to the battayll vnto Ramoth in Gilead, agaynst Hasael the kynge of Syria. But the Syriās smote Ioram, so  $\S$  he turned back to be healed at Iesreel: for he had woundes that were geuen him at Rama, whan he foughte with Hasael the kynge of Syria. And  $\dagger$  Asarias the sonne of Ioram kynge of Iuda wēte downe to vyset Ioram  $\S$  sonne of Achab at Iesreel, which laye sicke: For it was ordeyned of God vnto Ochosias, that he shulde come to Ioram,  $\tau$  so to go forth with Ioram agaynst Iehu  $\S$  sonne of Nimsi,  $\dagger$  whom the LORDE had anoynted to rote out the house of Achab.

Now whan Iehu wolde be auēged of  $\S$  house of Achab, he founde certayne rulers of Iuda, and  $\S$  childrē of Ochosias brethren which serued Ochosias, and he slewe them.  $\S$  And he soughte Ochosias, and they ouertoke him, whā he had hyd him at Samaria:  $\tau$  he was broughte vnto Iehu, which slewe him, and they buried him, for they sayde: He is the sonne of Iosaphat, which soughte  $\S$  LORDE with all his hert. And there was no man more of the house of Ochosias that mighte be kynge.

Whan Athalia the mother of Ochosias sawe  $\S$  hir sonne was deed,<sup>b</sup> she gat hir vp,  $\tau$ destroyed all the kynges sede in the house of Iuda. But Iosabeath ꝑ kynges sister toke Ioas ꝑ sonne of Ochosias, and stale him awaye frō amonge the kynges childrē ꝑ were slayne, ⁊ put him with his nurse in a chamber. Thus Iosabeath kyng Iorams daughter, the wyfe of Ioiada the prest, hyd him from Athalia, so ꝑ he was not slayne: for she was Ochosias sister. And he was hyd with them in the house of God sixe yeares, for so moch as Athalia was quene in the londe.

The xxiij. Chapter.

BUT in the seuenth yere was Ioiada bolde, ⁊ toke the rulers ouer hundreds: namely Asaria ꝑ sonne of Ieraham, Ismael ꝑ sonne of Iohanan, Asaria ꝑ sonne of Obed, Maeseia ꝑ sonne of Adaia, and Elisaphat ꝑ sonne of Sichri with him, in to the couenaunt: and they wente aboute in Iuda, and broughte ꝑ Leuites together out of all the cities of Iuda, and the chefe fathers of Israel, to come vnto Ierusalem. And all the cōgregation made a couenaunt with the kyng in the house of God, and he sayde vnto them: Beholde, the kynges sonne shal be kyng, * euē as the LORDE spake cōcernynge the children of Dauid.

B This is it therfore ꝑ ye shal do: The thirde parte of you that entre on the Sabbath, shalbe amonge the prestes ⁊ Leuites, which are dore-keepers at the thresholdes: ⁊ one thirde parte in the kynges house, and one thirde parte at the grounde porte. But all the people shalbe in the courtes of the house of the LORDE, and that no man go in to the house of the LORDE, excepte the prestes and Leuites that mynister there, they shal go in: for they are halowed. And let all ꝑ people wayte vpon the LORDE. And the Leuites shal get them rounde aboute ꝑ kyng, euery one with his weapen in his hande. And who so els goeth in to ꝑ house, let him dye. And they shal be with the kyng whā he goeth out ⁊ in.

C And the Leuites ⁊ all Iuda dyd as Ioiada ꝑ prest had commaunded, and euery one toke his men that entred on the Sabbath, with those ꝑ wente of on the Sabbath: for Ioiada ꝑ prest suffred not those two compnies to parte asunder. And Ioiada ꝑ prest gaue the captaynes ouer hundreds speares ⁊ shyldes, and kyng Dauids weapens, which were in the house of God, and set all the people euery one with his weapen in his hande, from the righte corner of the house, vnto the lefte corner of the altare, and to the house warde aboute the kyng. And they broughte forth the kynges sonne, ⁊ set the crowne vpon his heade, and gaue them the † wytnesse, ⁊ made him kyng. And Ioiada with his sonnes anoynted him, ⁊ sayde: God saue the kyng.

But whan Athalia herde the noyse of ꝑ people ꝑ ranne together and prayed ꝑ kyng, she wente forth to the people in to ꝑ house of the LORDE, and loked: and beholde, ꝑ kyng stode in his place at ꝑ intraunce, and the rulers and trompettes aboute ꝑ kyng: and all the people of the londe were glad, ⁊ blewe the trompes, and there were syngers ꝑ coulde playe with all maner of muscally instruments. But she rēte hir clothes, ⁊ sayde: Sedicion, sedicion. Neuertheles Ioiada ꝑ prest gat him forth with the captaynes ouer hundreds and rulers of the hoost, and sayde vnto them: Brynge her forth betwene ꝑ walles, ⁊ who so euer foloweth her, shal be slayne with ꝑ swerde: for the prest had cōmaunded, that she shulde not be slayne in ꝑ house of the LORDE. And they layed handes on her. And whan she came at the intraunce of the horsgate of the kynges house, they put her to death there.

And Ioiada made a couenaunt betwene him and all the people, and the kyng, ꝑ they shulde be the people of the LORDE. Thē wēte all the people in to the house of Baal and destroyed it, ⁊ brake downe his altares ⁊ ymages, ⁊ slewe Mathan the prest of Baal before the altare. And Ioiada appoynted ꝑ officers in the house of the LORDE amōge the prestes ⁊ Leuites † whom Dauid had ordeyned for ꝑ house of the LORDE, to offere burnt sacrifices vnto ꝑ LORDE, as it is wrytten in the § lawe of Moses: with ioye ⁊ songes made by Dauid. And ꝑ porters set he at ꝑ gates of ꝑ house of ꝑ LORDE, ꝑ none shulde entre, which were defiled with eny inaner of thinge.

And he toke the captaynes ouer hūdrds and the mightie men and lordes of ꝑ people, and all the people of the londe, and brought the kinge downe from the house of the LORDE, and broughte him thorow the hye porte of the kynges house, and caused the kinge sit vpon the seate royall. And all the people of the lōde were glad, and the cite was at rest. But Athalia was slayne with the swerde.

The xxiij. Chapter.

A IOAS<sup>a</sup> was seuen yeare olde whan he was made kyng, and reigned fortie yeare at Ierusalē. His mothers name was Zibea of Berseba. And Ioas dyd that which was right in the sight of the LORDE, as longe as Ioiada the prest lyued. And Ioiada gaue him two wiues, & he begat sonnes & doughters. Afterwarde deuysed Ioas to renne the house of the LORDE, & gathered together the prestes and Leuites, & sayde vnto thē: Go forth vnto all the cities of Iuda, & gather the money of all Israel, to repayre ſ house of God yearly, and do it righte soone: but the Leuites made no haist.

Then the kyng called Ioiada the pryncipall, and sayde vnto him: Why lokest thou not vnto the Leuites, ſ they bringe in from Iuda and Ierusalem, *the colleccion which Moses the seruauent of the LORDE appointed to be gathered amōge Israel for the Tabernacle of witnes? For ſ vngodly Athalia & hir sonnes haue waisted the house of God: and all that was halowed for the house of the LORDE, haue they bestowed on Baalim.

B Then commaunded the kyng to make a chest, and to set it without at the intrance of the house of the LORDE: & caused it to be proclaimed in Iuda and Ierusalē, that they shulde bringe in to the LORDE, the collecciō, which Moses the seruauit of God appointed vnto Israel in ſ wilderness. Thē were all ſ rulers glad, & so were all ſ people, & brought it, and cast it in to the chest, tyll it was full.

And whan the tyme was ſ the Leuites shulde bryng the Arke at ſ kynges cōmaundement (whan they sawe ſ there was moch money therin) then came the kynges scribe, & he ſ was appoynted of the chefe prest, and emptyed the chest, and caried it againe in to his place. Thus dyd they euery daye, so that they gathered moch money together. And ſ kyng and Ioiada gaue it vnto ſ workmasters of ſ house of the LORDE, and they hired masons and carpenters to repayre the house of ſ LORDE, and men that coulde worke in yron and brasse, to repayre the house of ſ LORDE.

And the labourers wrought, so that ſ repaireing in ſ worke wente forwarde thorow their hande, and they set the house of God in his bewtye, and made it stronge. And whan they had performed this, they brought the resyde of the money, before the kyng and Ioiada, wherof there were made vessels for the house of the LORDE, vessels for the ministracion and burntofferinge, spones and ornamentes of golde and siluer. And they offred burntofferynges allwaye in the house of the LORDE, as longe as Ioiada lyued.

And Ioiada waxed olde, and had lyued longe ynough, and dyed, & was an hundreth and thirtie yeare olde whan he dyed: and they buried him in the cite of Dauid, amonge the kynges, because he had done good vnto Israel, and toward God & his house. And after the death of Ioiada, came the rulers in Iuda, and worshipped the kyng.

Then consented the kyng vnto thē. And they forsoke the house of the LORDE God of their fathers, and serued ſ groues and ymages. Then came ſ wrath of the LORDE vpo Iuda and Ierusalem because of this trespass of theirs. Yet sent he prophetes vnto thē, ſ they shulde turne vnto the LORDE, & they testified vnto thē: but they wolde not heare.

And the sprete of God came vpon † Zachary the sonne of Ioiada the prest, which stode ouer ſ people, & sayde vnto thē: Thus sayeth God: Wherefore do ye transgresse the cōmaundementes of the LORDE, which shall not be to youre prosperite: for ye haue forsaken ſ LORDE, therefore shal he forsake you. Neuertheles they conspyred agaynst him, & stoned him at ſ kynges cōmaundement in ſ courte of the house of the LORDE. And Ioas ſ kyng thought not on the mercy ſ Ioiada his father had done for him, but slewe his sonne. Notwithstandinge whā he dyed, he sayde: The LORDE shal loke vpon it, and requyre it.

And whan the yeare was gone aboute, ſ power of the Syrians wente vp, & came to Iuda & Ierusalem, and destroyed the rulers in the people, and sent all the spoiles of them vnto Damascō. For the power of the Syrians came but with a fewe men, yet gaue ſ LORDE a very greate power in to their hande: because they had forsaken ſ LORDE God of their fathers. They executed iudgment also vpon Ioas. And whan they departed frō him, they left him in greate sicknesses.

Neuertheles hisseruautes conspyred against him (because of the bloude of the childrē of Ioiaida the prest) ⁊ slewe him vpō his bed, ⁊ he dyed, and they buried him in the cite of Dauid, but not amonge the sepulcres of the kynges. They that conspyred against him, were these: Sabad ⁊ sonne of Simeath the Ammonitisse, and Iosabad the sonne of Simrith the Moabitisse. As for his sonnes, and the summe that was gathered vnder him, and the buyldinge of the house of God, beholde, they are wrytten in the storrye in the boke of the kynges. And Amasias his sonne was kyng in his steade.

The xrb. Chapter.

AFYUE and twentye yeare olde was Amasias whan he was made kyng, and reigned nyne and twentye yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Ioadan of Ierusalem. And he dyd ⁊ which was right in the sighte of the LORDE, but not with a whole hert. Now whan his kingdome was in strēth, he slewe his seruātes which had slayne the kinge his father. But their childrē slewe he not, for so is it wrytten in the boke of the lawe of Moses, *where the LORDE cōmaundeth, and sayeth: The fathers shal not dye for the children, nether shal the children dye for the fathers: but euery one shal die for his awne synne.

And Amasias broughte Iuda together, and set them after the fathers houses, after the rulers ouer thousandes ⁊ ouer hundreds amonge all Iuda and Ben Iamin, and nombred them from twentye yeare olde ⁊ aboue, and founde of thē thre hundredth thousande chosen men, which were able to go forth to the warre, and caryed speares and shyldes. And out of Israel appoynted he an hundredth thousande stronge men of warre for an hundredth talentes of siluer.

But there came a man of God vnto him, and sayde: O kyng, Let not the hoost of Israel come with the: for the LORDE is not with Israel, nether with all the childrē of Ephraim. For yf thou comest to shewe thy boldnes in the battaill, God shal make the fall before thine enemies. For God hath power to helpe, and to cause for to fall. Amasias sayde vnto the man of God: What shal be done then with ⁊ hundredth talentes ⁊ I haue geuē ⁊ souldyers of Israel? The mā of God sayde: The LORDE hath yet more thē this to geue the. So Amasias separated out the men of warre which were come to him out of Ephraim, ⁊ they shulde departe vnto their place. Then waxed their wrath very whote agaynst Iuda, and they wente agayne vnto their place in wrothfull displeasure. And Amasias strēghthed himselfe, and caried out his people, and wente forth in to the Salt valley, and smote ten thousande of the children of Seir.

And the childrē of Iuda toke ten thousande of thē alyue, whom they broughte vp to the toppe of a mountayne, and cast thē downe headlinges from the toppe of the mount, so that they all to barst in sunder. But ⁊ childrē of the men of warre whom Amasias had sent awaye agayne (that they shulde not go to the battayll with his people) fell in to the cities of Iuda, from Samaria vnto Beth Horon, and smote thre thousande of mē, and toke moch spoyle.

CAnd whan Amasias came agayne from the slaughter of the Edomites, he broughte the goddes of the children of Seir, and made them his goddes, and worshipped before them, ⁊ brent incense vnto them. Then was the LORDE very wroth at Amasias, ⁊ sent vnto him a prophet, which sayde vnto him: Why sekest thou the goddes of the people, which coule not deluyuer their folke from thy hande? And whan he talked with him, the kyng sayde vnto him: Hauē they made ⁊ of the kynges counsell? Ceasse, why wilt thou be smytten? Then the prophet ceased, ⁊ sayde: I perceaue, that the LORDE is mynded to destroye ⁊, because thou hast done this, and herkenest not vnto my counsell.

* And Amasias ⁊ kyng of Iuda toke coucell, ⁊ sent vnto Ioas the sonne of Ioahas ⁊ sonne of Iehu, kyng of Israel, sayēge: Come, let vs se one another. But Ioas the kyng of Israel sent vnto Amasias ⁊ kyng of Iuda, sayenge: The hawthorne in Libanus sent vnto ⁊ Cedre tre in Libanus, sayēge: Geue thy daughter vnto my sonne to wife. But a wyld beest in Libanus ranne ouer ⁊ hawthorne, ⁊ trode it downe. Thou thinkest: Beholde, I haue smytten the Edomites, therefore is thine hert proude to boaste. Now byde at home: why stryuest thou after mysfortune, that thou mayest fall ⁊ Iuda with the?

Neuertheles Amasias consented not: for so was it broughte to passe of God, y they mighte be geuen in to the handes of the enemies, because they soughte the goddesses of y Edomites. Then wente loas the kynge of Israel vp, ⁊ they sawe one another, he and Amasias the kynge of Iuda, at Beth Semes which lyeth in Iuda. But Iuda was smytē before Israel, and they fled euery one vnto his tent.

And loas the kynge of Israel toke Amasias y kynge of Iuda, the sonne of loas y sonne of loahas, at Beth Semes, ⁊ broughte him to Ierusalem, ⁊ brake downe the wall of Ierusalē, from y porte of Ephraim vnto the corner porte, eue foure hundreth cubites longe: and toke with him all the golde, and siluer, and all the ornamentes that were foude in y house of God with Obed Edom, and in the treasures in the kynges house, and the childrē to pledge vnto Samaria. And Amasias the sonne of loas kynge of Iuda, liued after the death of loas the sonne of loahas kynge of Israel fiftene year.

What more there is to saye of Amasias (both the first and last) beholde, it is written in y boke of the kynges of Iuda ⁊ Israel. And fro the tyme forth that Amasias departed from the LORDE, they conspyred against him at Ierusalem. But he fled vnto Lachis. Thē sent they after him vnto Lachis, ⁊ slewe him there. And they brought him vpō horses ⁊ buried him beside his fathers in the cite of Iuda.

The xxvi. Chapter.

THEN all the people of Iuda toke Osias, which was syxtene yeare olde, and made him kynge in steade of his father Amasias. He builded Eloth, ⁊ broughte it agayne vnto Iuda, after that the kynge was fallen on slepe with his fathers. Sixtene yeare olde was Osias when he was made kinge, and reigned two and fiftie yeare at Ierusalē. His mothers name was Iechalia of Ierusalem. And he did right in the syght of the LORDE, as his father Amasias had done, and soughte God as longe as Zacharias lyued, which taughte in the visyons of God: and as longe as he sought the LORDE, God made him to prospere.

For he wente forth, and foughte agaynst the Philistynes, and brake downe y walles of Gath, and the walles of Iabne, and the walles of Aszdod, and buylded cities aboute Aszdod, ⁊ amonge the Philistynes. For God helped him agaynst the Philistines, against the Arabians, agaynst them of Gur Baal, ⁊ agaynst the Meunites. And y Ammonites gaue Osias presentes, ⁊ his name came in to Egipte: for he was excedding stronge. And Osias buylded towres at Ierusalem vpon the cornerporte, and on the valley gate, and on other corners, and made them stronge. He buylded castels also in the wyldernes, and dygged many welles: for he had many catell, both in the medewes and in the playnes, huszbandmen also and wynegardeners on the mountaynes and on Carmel: for he delyted in huszbandrye.

And Osias had an hoost of men of warre goynge forth to the battaill, which were nōbred vnder the hande of Ieiel the scribe ⁊ of Maesa the offycer, vnder the hāde of Hanania of the kynges rulers. And the nombre of the chefe fathers amonge the stronge mē of warre, was two thousande and syxe hundreth. And vnder the hande of the hoost thre hundreth thousande, and seuen thousande and fyue hundreth mete for the battayll, in the strength of an armye to helpe the kinge agaynst the enemies. And Osias prepared for all the hoost, shyldes, speares, helmettes, brestplates, bowes and slyngstones. And at Ierusalē he made ordinaunce cōingly, to be vpon the towres and in the pynnacles, to shute arowes and greate stones. And the fame of him came farre abroad, because he was specially helped, tyll he became mightie.

And whan his power was greate, his hert arose to his awne destruccion: for he trespassed agaynst the LORDE his God, and wente in to the temple of the LORDE, to burne incense vpon the altare of incense. But Asarias the prest wente after him, and foure score prestes with him, valeaunt men, and withstode kynge Osias, and saide vnto him: *It belongeth not vnto thy offyce (Osias) to burne incense vnto the LORDE, but vnto the prestes belongeth it, euen vnto the children of Aaron, which are halowed to burne incense. Go forth out of the Sanctuary: for thou offendest, and it shall be no worshippe vnto the before God the LORDE.

And Osias was wroth, and had a censoure in his hande. And whyle he murmured with the prestes, the leprosy spronge out of his foreheade in the presence of the prestes in the house of the LORDE before the altare of incense. And Asarias the chefe prest turned his heade towarde him, and so dyd all the prestes, and beholde, he was leper in his foreheade. And they put him out from thence. Yee he made haist himselfe to go forth, for his plage came of the LORDE. Thus became Osias ⁊ kynge a leper vnto his death, and dwelt full of leprosy in a fre house: for he was put out of the house of the LORDE. But Ioram his sonne had the ouersight of the kynges house, and iudged the people in the londe.

What more there is to saie of Osias (both first and last) Esay the sonne of Amos hath wrytten it. And Osias fell on slepe with his fathers, and they buryed him with his fathers in the pece of grounde beside ⁊ kynges sepulchres: for they sayde: He is leporous. And Iotham his sonne was kynge in his steade.

The xxviii. Chapter.

IOTHAM was fyue and twentye yeare olde whan he was made kynge, and reigned sixtene yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Ierusa the daughter of Sadoc: ⁊ he dyd righte in the sighte of the LORDE as did Osias his father: sauynge ⁊ he wente not in to the temple of the LORDE, and the people yet marred them selues. He buylded the hye porte of the house of ⁊ LORDE, and on the wall of Ophel buylded he moch, and buylded the cities vpon the mountaynes of Iuda, and in the woddes buylded he castels and towres.

AND he fought with the kinge of the children of Ammon, and ouercame them, so that the childrē of Ammon gaue him ⁊ same yeare an hundreth talentes of siluer, ten thousande quarters of wheate, and ten thousande of barleye. So moch dyd the children of Ammon geue him also in ⁊ seconde ⁊ thirde yeare. Thus became Iotham mightye, for he gyded his wayes before the LORDE his God.

What more there is to saye of Iotham, ⁊ all his warres, and his waies, beholde, it is wrytten in ⁊ boke of the kinges of Israel ⁊ Iuda. Fyue and twentye yeare olde was he whan he was made kynge, ⁊ reigned sixtene yeare at Ierusalem. And Iothā fell on slepe with his fathers, ⁊ they buryed him in the cite of Dauid, and Achas his sonne was kynge in his steade.

The xxviii. Chapter.

ACHAS was twentye yeare olde whan he was made kynge, and reigned sixtene yeare at Ierusalem, and dyd not that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE, as did Dauid his father, but walked in the wayes of the kinges of Israel, and made molten ymages vnto Baalim, and brent incense in the valley of the children of Hennon, and brēt his awne sonnes in ⁊ fire, after the abhominacions of the Heithen, whō the LORDE expelled before the childrē of Israel. And he dyd sacrifice and brent incense vpon the hye places and vpon the hilles, and amonge all grene trees.

Therefore dyd the LORDE his God deluyur him in to the hande of the kynge of Syria, so that they smote him, and caryed awaye a greate multitude of his men presoners, and broughte them to Damascos. He was geuen also vnder the hande of the kynge of Israel, so ⁊ he dyd a greate slaughter vpon him. For Pecah the sonne of Romelia smote in Iuda an hundreth ⁊ twentye thousande in one daye (which all were valeaunt men) euē because they had forsaken ⁊ LORDE God of their fathers. And Sichri a mightie mā of Ephraim slewe Maeseia ⁊ kinges sonne, ⁊ Asrikam the prynce of the house, ⁊ Elkana the nexte vnto the kynge. And the children of Israel caried of their brethren presoners two hundreth thousande, women, sonnes and daughters, and toke a greate spoyle from them, and broughte the spoyle vnto Samaria.

BUT euē there was there a prophet of ⁊ LORDE, whose name was Obed, which wete out to mete ⁊ hoost that came to Samaria, and sayde vnto them: Beholde, because the LORDE God of youre fathers is wroth at Iuda, therefore hath he geuen them ouer in to youre handes: but ye haue slayne them so abhominably, that it is come vnto heauē. Now thinke ye to subdue the children of Iuda and Ierusalem, to be bondmen and bondmaydens vnto you. Is not this a trespace then with you agaynst the LORDE youre God? Herken now vnto me, and sende ⁊ presoners hence agayne, whom ye haue caried awaye from youre brethren: for the wrath of ⁊ LORDE is fearece ouer you.

Then gat vp certayne of the chefe of the children of Ephraim, Asarias the sonne of Iohanan, Barachias the sonne of Mesillemoth, Ezechias the sonne of Sallum, & Amasa ſonne of Hadlai, agaynst them ſe came from ſ battayll, & ſayde vnto them: Ye ſhal not brynge the preſoners in hither, for youre mynde is but to make vs trespae before the LORDE, to make oure synnes and offences the greater: for the trespae is to moch all-ready, & the wrath is fearece ouer Iſrael. So the hoost lefte the preſoners & the ſpoyle before ſ rulers and before the whole cōgregation.

C Then stode vp the men (which now were rehearced by name) and toke the preſoners, and as many as were naked amonge them, clothed they with ſ ſpoyles, & deckte them, and put shues vpon their fete, and gaue the to eate and drynke, and anoynted them, and caried them vpon asses (as many as were feble) and broughte them to Iericho to ſ Palme cite vnto their brethren, and came agayne to Samaria. * At the same tyme sent kynge Achas vnto the kynges of Assur, ſ they shulde helpe him. And the Edomites came agayne, and snote Iuda, and caried some awaye captiue. The Philistynes also fell in to the cities in the playne, & towarde ſ south parte of Iuda, & wanne Beth Semes, Aialon, Gederoth, and Socho with the vyllages therof, Timna with the vyllages therof, & Gimso with the vyllages therof, and dwelt therein. For ſ LORDE subdued Iuda for Achas sake ſ kynge of Iuda, because he made Iuda naked, and rebelled agaynst the LORDE. And Teglatpilnesser the kynge of Assur came agaynst him, and beseged him, & he was not mightie ynough for him.
